commandement of another. This ſervice is two-fold; abſolute, or in part. Abſolute ſervice is, when a man obeyes the commandement of another without any condition or exception; and that not onely in body outwardly, but in ſoule and conſcience, in thought, will, and affection. And this abſolute ſervice is proper to God alone: for we muſt never call his commandements into queſtion, but looke what God commands, and as he commands it, ſo muſt we ſimply and abſolutely yeeld obedience thereto, not onely outwardly in body, but inwardly in ſoule and ſpirit, with the powers and faculties therof, and in all the affections of our hearts. Service in part, is that which is due to governours and ſuperiours from their inferiours in the Lord: for God hath given power to Magiſtrates here on earth, to make lawes for the good of civill, eſtates; in yeelding obedience thereunto, their inferiours muſt doe them ſervice; yet not abſolutely, but with reſtraint, to wit, in the Lord, ſo farre forth as their commands agree with the will of God, and croſſe not his command. Againe, our obedience unto them is in body and outward converſation: indeed we muſt from the heart yeeld ſervice and obedience unto them: but yet the conſcience properly cannot be bound by mens lawes; they onely concerne the outward man in ſpeech, geſture, and behaviour. Now of theſe two kindes of ſervice, our Saviour Chriſt ſpeaketh here, of ſimple and abſolute ſervice, whereby both ſoule and bodie with all the powers and parts thereof yeeld abſolute obedience and ſubjection to the will and commandement of God.

Abſolute.

In part.

We ſee what worſhip and ſervice is here required: Now we muſt obſerve the perſon to whom the ſame is to be given, in theſe words, The Lord thy God. Divine worſhip, whether inward or outward, and abſolute ſervice of the whole man, muſt be given to no creature, Angel, nor man, be they never ſo excellent, but to the true God alone. The ſcope and drift of the firſt and ſecond commandements, is to binde every man to give ſo much to his God, and to beware of giving the ſame to any other beſides the Lord. And the practice of the good Angel that talked with Iohn, doth ſhew the ſame thing: for when Iohn fell before his feet to worſhip him, the Angel ſaid, ſee thou doe it not: --- worſhip God. Where we ſee the good Angels doe ſtrive for the furtherance of Gods right in theſe duties, howſoever this wicked ſpirit tempting Chriſt, doth herein ſeeke Gods great diſgrace. And thus we may perceive that Chriſts applying of this Text againſt Satans temptation is moſt pregnant; for Satan requiring of Chriſt the proſtrating of his body before the Devill, in token that he did worſhip him as the giver of thoſe kingdomes which he offered unto Chriſt, is juſtly repulſed by this Text, which bindeth every man to give outward divine worſhip, whereby the inward worſhip of the heart is ſignified, to God alone, and not to any creature.

Revel. 19. 10.

A Here then we may learne, that it is not lawfull to give to Saint or Angel, or any creature whatſoever, outward divine worſhip or adoration, whereby the inward devotion of the heart is teſtified. This Text is plaine to the contrary, and the reaſon we have heard, becauſe divine proſtrating of the body to any thing is a teſtification that wee aſcribe divinitie unto it ſome way; which without the guilt of idolatry cannot be done to any creature: for let a man worſhip Saint or Angel by prayer or thankſgiving, and therein he doth aſcribe unto them ſome proprietie of the divine nature; as, to know the heart, to be able to heare, to helpe, or ſuch like. The Papiſts here ſay, they doe not thinke the Saints to whom they pray, to be God, neither doe they worſhip them as God. But this will helpe them little; for the Devill moving Chriſt to yeeld unto him outward divine worſhip, never meant, that Chriſt ſhould adore him for God, but onely deſired, that by this outward adoration of proſtrating his body before him, Chriſt would acknowledge him to be the giver of theſe kingdomes (for he durſt not be ſo bold as abſolutely to deſire to bee worſhipped for God) and yet Chriſt tells him, that outward divine worſhip, even in reſpect of the acknowledgement of ſuch a gift, is proper to God alone.

B And yet the Church of Rome doe give unto Saints, that which the Devill demands, and Chriſt denies by appropriating it unto God: for they make ſeverall Saints deliverers and protectors from ſeverall diſeaſes and dangers: as the Virgin Mary from ſhipwracke; Saint Roch from the peſtilence; Raphael from ſore eyes; Apollonia from the tooth-ach; and Catharine for all manner of afflictions. Yea, they make them patrons and protectors of whole countries and kingdomes, as Saint Iames for Spaine, Saint Denis for France, Saint Patricke for Ireland, &c.

C Now ſith many a one may give a kingdome, that cannot defend it, let all men judge, whether they doe not give more unto Saints, than Satan demanded to bee acknowledged unto him by our Saviour Chriſt: yea, they make them interceſſors for the procuring of the favour of God, and life everlaſting: they call the Virgin Mary, the Queene of Heaven, and pray to her

D that by the authoritie of a mother, ſhe would command her ſonne to heare their prayers; which is to make Chriſt a punie and underling unto her; which are greater matters than the diſpoſing of earthly kingdomes. Here they ſay, that they may doe that to the glorious Saints in heaven, which is done to earthly Princes; for men adore them, and in their abſence fall downe before their chaires of eſtate. Anſ. The adoration given to Princes, is but a civill acknowledgement of their preheminence: and kneeling before the chaire of eſtate, is onely a teſtimonie of of loyaltie and ſubjection; it is not directed to the Princes perſon being abſent, but onely ſerveth to teſtifie his ſubjection to that authoritie and power which is ſet over him in the Lord;

Matth. 4. verſ. 10.

Vſe. No creature muſt have divine worſhip.

Matth. 4. verſ. 10.

Lord; there is no divine proprietie aſcribed by either of theſe unto the perſon or authoritie of the Prince. But now in bowing downe to pray to Saints, there is religious adoration given them: for therein be aſcribed unto them theſe divine properties, that they can know the heart, heare, and helpe a farre off, pray for them in particular, and ſuch like; by all which God is robbed of his honour.

And though we condemne the Papiſts for giving to Saints divine worſhip, yet we muſt beware of deſpiſing the Saints of God in Heaven: for there is due unto them a threefold honour; firſt, thankſgiving to God for them, who inabled them by his gifts and graces, to be in their times, ſpeciall inſtruments of good unto Gods Church. Secondly, we are to carry a reverent eſtimation of them being now in heaven, as of the friends of God, and temples of his holy Spirit. Thirdly, we are to follow the example of their godly converſations in the duties of godlineſſe. But from giving unto them divine worſhip we muſt carefully abſtaine.

Worſhip of reliques unlawfull.

Againe, if the divine worſhip of Saints be here condemned, then much more is the worſhipping of their reliques; then alſo is their inſtituting and obſerving faſting dayes and holy dayes unto their Saints here juſtly reproved. Neither can our Church herein bee condemned with them, though we retaine the names of ſuch dayes among us, becauſe it is for another end; our faſts are meerely civill on ſuch dayes; and our holy dayes turned from the adoration of Saints to the ſervice of God, whereon alſo our conſcience knowes her liberty given of God for honeſt labour in a lawfull calling as need requires.

Further, obſerve how Chriſt here joynes the worſhip of God, and the ſervice of God together: teaching us not to content our ſelves with doing the duties of Gods worſhip, but withall we muſt yeeld unto him abſolute ſervice and obedience. Men commonly thinke they have done enough, if on dayes appointed they come to the Church, and there performe outward worſhip unto God in hearing the word, in prayer, and receiving the Sacraments; theſe, I confeſſe, be worthy workes, if they be well performed: but herein is the common errour, that when they have performed this outward worſhip, they make no conſcience of abſolute ſervice, the thing which Chriſt here joynes to worſhip; they thinke that in their callings they may live as they liſt, either idlely or unjuſtly, by fraud and diſſembling: but ſever not thou ſervice from worſhip, which Chriſt hath joyned together, leſt God ſay unto thee for thy worſhip as he did once to the Jewes, My ſoule hateth your new moones, and your appointed feaſts, they are a burden unto me, &c. What, doth God hate that worſhip himſelfe appointed? No, but he hates the ſevering of it from ſervice and obedience, wherein they ſhould ſhew forth to their brethren, love, juſtice, and mercie; he rejects all ſervice at their hands, becauſe their hands were A full of blood, v. 15. Read Mich. 6. ver. 6, 7, 8. The offering of ſacrifice was a ſpeciall part of worſhip under the law, and yet though a man ſhould bring for his ſacrifice thouſands of Rams, or ten thouſand rivers of oyle: nay, though he brought his firſt borne, the fruit of his body for the ſinne of his ſoule, yet all is nothing without juſtice, mercie, humbling himſelfe, and walking with his God, verſe 8. Let us therefore ſerve God ſincerely in our converſations, as we ſeeme to honour him in duties of religion; let us ſhew the feare of God in our lives: for worſhip without ſervice, is like the cutting off of a dogges head, or offering ſwines fleſh, &c. as Iſay 66. 3. which is an abhomination to the Lord.

Thirdly, obſerve that Chriſt addeth onely to B Moſes words, for the better clearing of Moſes meaning; which may ſerve for our juſt defence againſt the Papiſts: they blame us greatly for teaching that a man is juſtified by faith onely, ſaying the word onely, is not in any place aſcribed to juſtification by faith. We anſwer, in all the Teſtament this word onely is not joyned to this Command, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and ſerve him; and yet Chriſt ſaith, it is written, him onely ſhalt thou ſerve, becauſe the reſtraint and inhibition annexed, from giving this worſhip and ſervice to any other, doth in effect include onely: even ſo, though in letters and ſyllables we doe not finde this word onely adjoyned to this ſentence, man is juſtified by faith; yet becauſe of the excluſion of workes uſually annexed to that phraſe, as that, We are juſtified by faith without the workes of the Law, Rom. 3. 28. and are juſtified freely by his grace, verſe 24. and that a man is not juſtified by the workes of the Law, but by faith, Galat. 2. 16. hereupon I ſay we may hold and teach, and that truly, according to the true ſenſe thereof, following Chriſts example in this place, that the Scripture ſaith, a man is juſtified by faith onely.

Laſtly, from this commandement wee muſt learne our duty touching Gods ſervice: in word wee will all acknowledge our ſelves to bee his ſervants, but if herein wee will approve our ſelves to be his ſervants, wee muſt reſolve and labour to yeeld unto him abſolute obedience, as well in heart, minde, will, and affection, as in outward converſation. The end of the miniſtery of the Word, is not onely to reforme the outward man, but to caſt down the inward holds of ſinne in the imagination; and to bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt. And this is done, when after true repentance a man endevoureth to yeeld unto God totall obedience, and that from the whole man, in ſoule, and body, and ſpirit, not for a time, but continually.

V. 11. *Then the deuill left him, and behold the Angels came and miniſtred unto him.

Christs happie issue in these temptations.

These words containe the third part of this description of Christs temptations; to wit, the happie event and issue thereof, in Christs glorious victorie over the Tempter; which is the principall part, wherein consists the maine comfort of Gods Church; for as in temptation Christ stood in our roome and stead, so is this victorie not his alone, but the victorie of his Church. This issue containes two parts. First, Satans departing from him. Secondly, the Ministerie of good Angels unto him.

For the first, then the devill left him: that is, after that by temptations he could nothing prevaile, then he betakes himselfe to flight. In this appeares the unspeakable mercie of God unto his Church, in mitigating, and in due time putting an end unto the afflictions and temptations thereof: for the case of Christ the head in this conflict, is the case and condition of all his members. Now here we see what a gracious issue the Lord put to these assaults of Satan; in due time his enemie flies: and so will the Lord deale in all the miseries of his Church, and children: God promiseth to David concerning Salomon, that if he sinne, he will chastise him with the rods of men, and with the plagues of the children of men: that is, with such punishments as he shall be able to beare, but his mercie he will not take from him. The Prophet Habacuck in his complaint against the wrong and violence of the wicked done to the just, is somewhat impatient towards God for his delay, Habac. 1.2,3. Therefore in the vision afterward shewed unto him, he is bid to wait for deliverance, for though it tarrie, yet it shall surely come, and shall not stay, Chap. 2.3. Thus Paul comforteth the Christians Corinthians; God is faithfull, and will not suffer you to be tempted above that which ye are able to beare, but will give an issue with the temptation, that ye may be able to beare it, 1 Cor. 10.13. The bodies of the two Prophets who were slaine for the testimonie of the Lord Iesus, are suffered to lie in the streets unburied, for three dayes and an halfe, that is, for some short time; which being expired, The spirit of life comming from God shall enter into them, and revive them; then feare shall take their enemies, but they shall ascend up to heaven, and their enemies shall see it. All these doe plainly manifest Gods great mercie, in giving a gracious issue to the troubles of his children; yea, by good experience we may see the truth hereof, in the happy issue that the Lord hath put to the most fearefull temptations of sundrie in our time, who have beene exercised therein, some for a yeare or two, other for longer time, even many yeares together, and yet in the end have sung the song of joyfull deliverance: it may be some of Gods children beare the crosse to their dying day, yet the Lord sustaines them in it by his grace, and in the end shewes them mercie and peace.

Secondly, in this departure of Satan from Christ, we may observe a notable difference betweene the first Adam, and the second. The first Adam was tempted and overcome therein; Satan prevailed in that conflict, and brings him captive into his kingdome, having spiritually taken possession of him. The second Adam is tempted also, but the devill can finde no meanes whereby to prevaile with him: the prince of this world commeth, but hath nought in me, saith Christ, John 14.30. but after his assault is faine to flie away.

Further in this departure from Christ, note two circumstances: when Satan departed, and for how long a time. First, when he departed is noted in this word then, that is, after the third temptation; when Christ in indignation for his blasphemie against God, had said, Avoid Satan, and withall had answered his temptation out of the written word; then he departs. Hence we learne,

First, that the best way to vanquish Satan is to give him no ground, but to withstand him manfully at the first: Jam. 4.7. Resist the devill, and he will flie. Now Satan is resisted, when from our hearts we cast our soules on the promises of God contained in his word, and in the whole course of our lives pray for strength of grace to stand against his assaults; whereby we may see the great error and deceit of those, who account of Satans temptations as of fits of melancholy, and thinke they may be removed by musique, merry company, and such like; but these are no weapons to drive away the Devill. Secondly, this also shewes their dangerous course who yeeld to Satans temptations for a time, taking their pleasure in their youth, purposing to resist him when they are old, and then to repent; too many take this course, but it is fearefull: for thus doing, they set open all the doores of their heart to the Devill, and suffer him to take quiet possession, little considering that it is beyond their power to dispossesse him at their pleasure: For indeed hereby they become like to a man that is sicke of the Dropsie, who the more he drinkes, the more he desires: so he that willingly gives place to Satans temptation, the more he sinnes, the more he may; for the longer he is tempted, the more by yeelding is he weakened, and the greater is the danger of his endlesse confusion: therefore learne of Christ to resist betime.

Secondly, in this circumstance note, that when Christ rebuketh Satan, and bids him avoid, he departs, and is presently gone. Was this any vertue in Satan that he doth thus readily depart at Christs command? No verily, though he obey, it is not praise-worthy; for obedience is two-fold, voluntarie, and constrained; voluntarie, when the creature doth Gods command without compulsion; thus Adam did before his fall, and all holy ones that are justified and sanctified doe thus in part in this life. Constrained obedience is, when the creature is made to obey God, will he nill he. This is like to the obedience of rebells, who being attached and arraigned for their treasons, in suffering are made to obey the Princes lawes. And such was this Matth. 4. vers. 11.

2 Sam. 7.14.

Revel. 11.8,9.

Give Satan no ground.

Satans obedience is not commendable.

Matth. 4. verse 11.

this obedience of Satan, forced upon him by the powerfull command of Christ, who is Prince and Lord of all creatures. And this is to be marked, that when Christ gives forth his powerfull command, then Satan must obey whether he will or not. This is evident by his manifold dispossessions of the uncleane spirits, who came forth at his command, though they accounted him as their tormenter. Now that which here befalls the devill, shall one day be verified of all wicked men; if they will not now obey God willingly, while in the ministerie of the word he bids them repent and beleeve the Gospel; they shall one day be compelled, even at the dreadfull day of judgement, will they nill they, to obey that wofull voyce of Christ, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, Matth. 25.41. In regard whereof, we must ever be carefull, now in the day of grace, to yeeld unto Christ voluntarie and cheerefull obedience, unto all his commandements both of the Law and Gospel, lest one day we be constrained to obey in going to our endlesse woe: Satan who is a thousand-fold stronger than man, could not resist his power; how then shall we that are but dust and ashes, stand before so great a God?

Luke 4.13.

This circumstance of time is more fully noted by Saint Luke, saying, and when the Devill had ended all the temptation, he departed from him: whereby thus much is signified, that looke what knowledge, craft, or power the devill had, that did he employ to the uttermost in these temptations before he left our Saviour Christ. Whereby it appeareth, that Christ was tempted in the highest degree and measure that Satan possibly could attaine unto: herein did the devill shew the extremitie of his fraud and malice against Christ; which further appeares by this, that the Angels of Heaven came and ministred unto him for his comfort; so as though Satan could not taint the sacred heart of our Saviour Christ with the least spot of sinne; yet in these temptations, Christ was troubled with the same sorrowes, griefes, and vexations which Gods children usually feele in their temptations: The consideration whereof serves for speciall use.

A good ground against despaire.

First, to keepe all Gods children from despaire in the greatest extremitie of their temptations, even when they shall feele their conscience (as it were) set on an iron racke, and the flashings of Hell fire already kindled in their soule: for Christ Jesus the head of the Church was tempted by Satan in the highest degree, so as the Angels came to minister comfort unto him, and yet he still remained the welbeloved sonne of God; and so may any of Gods children remaine Gods deere elect, even then when the violence of Satan shall seeme most to prevaile against them.

Secondly, this teacheth us to suppresse all rash judgement in our selves, of all such as shall be exercised by Satan in extreme temptations: for oft it will fall out that the conscience of Gods childe shall be exceedingly tormented in temptation, that hee shall crie out, hee is forsaken of God, and shall be damned; when as indeed hee still remaines the deere childe of God, as Christ our Saviour did Gods welbeloved in the deepest assaults of Satan. And therefore the relation published of Francis Spira his desperation, doth inconsiderately tax him for a castaway; considering that nothing befell him in the time of his desperation, but that which may befall the childe of God: yea, our owne land can affoord many examples which match Francis Spira, whether wee regard the matter of his temptation, or the deepnesse of his desperation, who yet through the mercie of God have received comfort. And therefore in this case, Christian charitie must ever binde us to thinke and speake the best.

Francis Spira.

Lastly, Satans departing upon the ending of these three temptations, gives us to understand, that howsoever the devill abound with temptations of all sorts, yet these three are the ground of all, and the most principall temptations that Satan hath: for in this combat he did his worst, and shewed the violence of his rage and wrath. And therefore it will be needfull for us to take speciall notice of them, as also of Christs repulses given unto them, that so we may be the better armed against them and the like. Thus much for the time when Satan departed.

The second circumstance touching his departure is, for how long the devill left him, noted by S. Luke, not for ever, but for a season. Some may say, we doe not finde that Satan tempted Christ ever after this, save onely upon the crosse, where he spoiled principalities and powers, Colos. 2.15. Ans. The devill tempts men two wayes; sometime by himselfe, as he did our Saviour Christ in this place, and upon the Crosse, and our first mother Eve in the garden, Gene. 3.1. sometime by men whom he useth as his instruments: thus he tempted Adam by Eve, and Iob by the Chaldeans and Sabeans that robbed him, and by his friends who sought to draw him from his integritie, Job 27.5. Now though Christ were not often after this tempted immediately by the devill, yet by Satans instruments he was many times sore assaulted to the griefe of his heart; as by the Jewes, the Scribes and Pharisies, Herod, and Pontius Pilate, who required signes of him, mocked and persecuted him.

Luke 4.13.

The state of Gods Church on earth.

Here we may see a notable patterne of the state of Gods Church & children in this world: for looke as Christ their head is sore tempted, and then let alone, and yet but for a season, being tempted againe by Satans instruments; so fareth it with them, one while they are exercised with outward temptations, and another while with inward assaults; then through Gods mercie they have freedome for a season; but afterward, Satan comes upon them againe, either by himselfe or by his instruments: which must teach us wisdome in regard of the state of our owne Church in particular, to wit, that we must not dreame of a perpetuall freedome from trialls and temptations, howsoever through Gods mercie we have injoyed admirable peace and tranquillitie for many yeares together; for being a part of Christs mysticall body, we must looke for the same condition with our head Christ Jesus, who being sore tempted of Satan, was left but for a season, and after tempted againe; and therefore we must resolve our selves undoubtedly that trialls will come; what way God onely knoweth; but the winter of affliction will follow our harvest of joy and peace: and the yearely visitations, by plagues and famines, are symtoms, that is, signes and forerunners of more heavy judgements, unlesse we prepare to meet our God in the practice of speedy and unfained repentance. And as this is the state of our Church in generall, so is it the particular condition of every Christian, whose life is a continuall intercourse of trouble and peace: and therefore every childe of God must be watchfull against securitie, and with the end of one assault, joyne his preparation for a new: This was the state of Christ, and the servant must not looke to be above his master. And thus much for the devills departure.

The second part of the Issue of this conflict, is the ministerie of the Angels unto Christ; And behold the Angels came and ministred unto him. In saying Behold, the Evangelist commends unto our consideration the view of a great wonder, to wit, that that person whom the devill would have had to have worshipped him, is here worshipped and served of the holy Angels of God. Let no man therefore judge of himselfe by that which Satan would perswade him to in temptation; Christs estate doth now appeare farre different from that which Satan would have brought him to; and so shall all Gods children finde it to be with them after temptation, if therein they fight manfully after the example of Christ.

Touching the ministerie of these Angels, here observe three points. First, the bond that causeth the good Angels to minister unto Christ. Secondly, their number. And thirdly, the time of their ministerie.

I. Point. The bond of their Ministerie, is Christs sovereigntie over the Angels, not onely as he is God their Creator, but as he is Mediator, God and Man, even the man Christ, (I say not the manhood of Christ) but Christ (as I may say) the man-God, is the Lord of all Angels, and they doe him homage and service. And though the manhood of Christ bee not Lord of Angels, yet being received into the unitie of the God-head, it is thereby exalted above all Angels by many degrees. Wherein we may behold the endlesse goodnesse of God, in advancing our nature, which by sinne was made more vile than all earthly creatures, farre above the Angels in degree, by reason of this conjunction which it hath with the nature of God in the person of Christ.

Now as by this bond the Angels are made ministers unto Christ, so by vertue of the same they become ministers to all the true members. Iacobs ladder is thus expounded by our Saviour Christ; Verily, verily, I say unto you, hereafter shall ye see heaven open, and the Angels of God ascending and descending upon the sonne of man. This sonne of man is Christ, who being God and man reacheth from heaven to earth, and from earth to heaven; to him the Angels minister, and by him they descend to minister to all the Saints of God here on earth. Iohn 1.51.

The use. I. This teacheth us to admire the endlesse goodnesse of God unto his Church and children, not onely in bestowing heaven and earth upon them; but even in giving his glorious Angels to become ministring spirits for their protection, defence, and comfort. II. This their ministerie, must admonish us to carrie our selves reverently and holily in all manner of conversation. If we were in the presence of an earthly Prince, Oh how carefull would we be to our behaviour both for words and actions? much more then should the presence and attendance of Gods glorious Angels, who pitch their tents about us, if we be Gods children, make us circumspect to all our wayes; and the rather, because their ministerie is for our comfort and protection, while we keepe our selves in the straitwayes of God.

II. Point. Their number. It is not said one Angel, but Angels came and ministred unto him. Indeed when he was in his Agonie in the garden a little before his passion, one Angel came and ministred comfort unto him: so that sometime one, sometime moe attended on him, even as the evill spirits come to tempt, sometime one alone, as Satan did here to Christ, and sometime moe, as they did when he was upon the Crosse. And as it befell Christ, so doth it to Gods children, they have sometime one good Angel to attend upon them, and sometime many: so likewise have they sometime one evill spirit to assault them, and sometimes many, as the man in whom the legion was. And hereby falleth to the ground this common opinion, that every man hath one good Angel, and one bad attending upon him, the one to protect him, the other to tempt him. But this opinion doth not well stand with the tenour of the Scripture, which thus sets out the state of man, in regard of his attendance by Angels, that there are sometimes moe about him, and sometimes fewer; whether wee speake of good Angels, or of evill spirits. Luke 22.43.

III. Point. The time when these good Angels came and ministred unto Christ, is noted in this word Then: that is, when the devill had done all he could against our Saviour Christ: they came not in the times of his assaults, but when Satan had ended his temptations and was gone. There is no doubt but the good Angels were alwayes about our Saviour Christ, attending on his blessed person, but at this time it is like they tooke upon them some visible shape, that that ſo their miniſterie might be the more comfortable unto him; as it is like the Devill appeared in ſome ſhape for Chriſts greater terrour in his temptations.

God will ſometime hide his mercie from his children.

In this circumſtance of time, we may obſerve a worke of Gods providence, which he pleaſeth to exerciſe in the time of temptation upon his owne children; to wit, for a time to hide his mercy from them, withdrawing the ſenſible feeling of his favour. Thus he dealt with his beloved Sonne Chriſt Jeſus; during the time of Satans violent temptations, he concealed from him the ſenſible aſſiſtance of the miniſterie of his Angels, they ſhew not themſelves till Satan is departed. And ſo fareth it many times with Gods deere children, upon whom he beſtowes the good graces of his Spirit: as a nurſing-mother to trie the affections of her childe, will ſometimes hide her ſelfe from it, leave it alone, and ſuffer it to take a knocke or a fall; ſo will the Lord leave his children to themſelves, and conceale from them the ſignes of his favour, ſuffering them to be buffeted in temptation for a time, that they may finde thereby what they are in themſelves without Gods grace, & by feeling the bitterneſſe of that eſtate, the more to hunger and thirſt after his grace and favour, the more joyfully and thankfully to embrace it when it is renewed, and the more carefully to keepe it all the dayes of their life. What made David to account ſo highly of the courts of Gods houſe, as that he eſteemed the ſilly birds happy that might build their neſts by Gods altar, but his baniſhment thence, by the perſecution of Saul, wherein he was conſtrained to remaine in Meſhech, and to dwell in the tents of Kedar? And ſo when the people of God were in Babel, remembring Zion they wept: Oh then, let my right hand forget to play, if I forget thee, O Ieruſalem; let my tongue cleave to the roofe of my mouth, if I preferre not Ieruſalem to my chiefe joy.

Pſal. 137. 1, 5, 6.

But unto many, this doctrine of temptations will ſeeme to ſmall purpoſe, nay altogether needleſſe, for that they never felt any ſuch conflicts with the devill, they defie him from their hearts, and they truſt to God never to be troubled with him: this is the common eſtate of moſt men (thoſe onely excepted who have felt how hard a thing it is truly to repent and beleeve) thus to bleſſe themſelves in a carnall peace; but ſilly ſoules, they know not their owne hearts, nor the fearefull caſe in which they ſtand; for all the true members of Chriſt muſt be made conformable unto their head; now he was conſecrated the Prince of their ſalvation through afflictions, Hebr. 2. 10. his ſoule was heavie unto the death, before he could finiſh the worke of our life: yea, he is tempted by Satan before he is comforted by the Angels; thoſe therefore that were never tempted, have yet no fellowſhip in his afflictions, they have not begun any conformitie with Chriſt, ſo as it is like, they are ſtill bond-ſlaves unto Satan, for if they had eſcaped out of his ſnare, they ſhould feele his aſſaults to get them in againe: in regard hereof, the childe of God is conſtrained to buckle hard with Satan in temptation, and to pray many a time to be delivered from his buffeting. And indeed howſoever for the preſent this be not joyous, yet they may count it exceeding great gladneſſe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, not onely for this triall of their faith which bringeth forth patience, but alſo becauſe herein they become like unto Chriſt in his humiliation, which may give them aſſurance that they ſhall be like him in glorie: for if we be dead with Chriſt, we ſhall alſo live with him: and if we ſuffer, we ſhall alſo reigne with him. Adde further, that theſe men that never felt the aſſaults of Satan, are as yet under a moſt fearefull judgement of God in hardneſſe of heart. When Chriſt fed five thouſand men with five loaves and two fiſhes, he diſtributed it by the hands of his Diſciples; but after it is ſaid, they perceived not this matter of the loaves; and this reaſon is rendred, becauſe their hearts were hardened, verſ. 52. And ſo it is with them that never feele the temptations of Satan: for he goeth about continually, like a roaring Lyon ſeeking whom he may devoure, as they whoſe hearts are not hardened doe well perceive. To conclude therefore, let theſe men who yet never felt in themſelves theſe aſſaults of Satan, unfeinedly endevour to change the courſe of their lives, by the practice of true repentance, in eſchewing evill and doing good; let them give themſelves ſincerely to the exerciſe of prayer for the removall of their ſtonie hearts, and the renuing unto them hearts of fleſh, let them heare the word, and doe the ſame; and then they will ſhortly ſing another ſong, to wit, that whoſoever will live godly in Chriſt Ieſus muſt ſuffer temptations, and be aſſaulted by the Devill; and then will they finde that this doctrine is needfull; yea, they will bleſſe God for this worke of his ſpirit, that cauſed theſe temptations of Chriſt to be ſo particularly recorded, with his happie iſſue and victory over them all, not onely for himſelfe, but for his members, that in their temptations they may looke unto Jeſus, leſt they ſhould faint in their mindes: for in that he ſuffered, and was tempted, he is able to ſuccour them that are tempted, Hebr. 2. 18.

TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFVLL, MY verie worthy and Christian friend,

Sir WILLIAM GEE, Knight,

One of his Majesties honourable Councell in the North, Recorder of the Townes of Beverly and Hull, and one of his Majesties Iustices of Peace in the East-riding of the Countie of Yorke, a true friend of learning, and pietie; and to the vertuous and religious Lady his Wife: Grace and Peace from God, &c.

AMongst the many reasons (Worshipfull Sir) which have perswaded me that Popery cannot be the true Religion, this is not the least: the insufficiencie of their doctrine of faith and repentance: which two things though they be the chiefe and principall points in Religion, and so necessarie, that he who doth not both know, and practise them aright, can never be saved: yet I dare avouch, that the faith and repentance of the Romish Church, as they are taught by many of the best approved Papists, are no better than such a repentance as an hypocrite and a very reprobate may attaine unto. Indeed, to insist upon repentance onely (they make many faire flourishes) they call it penance, they make it a Sacrament, and say it is a bord that saves a man after shipwracke, and write many great volumes of it, and of Confession, and of Cases of Conscience, (as you good Sir in your owne reading know better than I) and yet alas, when all is done, it is but a shadow of repentance: and indeed how can they teach aright the doctrine of repentance, which erre so foully in setting downe the justice of God, and the vilenesse of sinne? which two points a man must know, else he will never repent: but Poperie misconceiving the justice of God, teaching it not to be infinite, in as much as it needeth not an infinite satisfaction; and misconceiving the nature of sinne, teaching every sinne not to be damnable, nor to offend Gods infinite justice, erring (I say) in these two, how is it possible they should conceive aright the nature of repentance? by which a man seeing his sinnes, their foulenesse, their punishment, and his owne miserie by them, confesseth them, bewailes them, fearing Gods justice, flieth from it, and craves forgivenesse of his mercie, and lastly purposeth, and endevoureth to leave them all, and to lead a new life. The serious consideration hereof, hath often made me wonder, why many Popish treatises, being in some sort exhortations to repentance, should be so accounted of as they are by some: for though, I confesse, there are some of them, good and wholesome meditations, and many motives to mortification, and good life; yet would I gladly learne of any man but this one thing, how those exhortations can be pithy, or powerfull, sound, or any way sufficient to move a man to repentance, when as, not those bookes, nor all Poperie is able to teach a man sufficiently what true repentance is.

Canit. in Catechis. Costerus in Enchir.

Corradus. Navarrus. Loper Sairus. Hallus. Graffus, and many other.

If any man reply; I will therefore learne the doctrine out of the Protestants bookes, and use the Papists for Exhortation onely: I then answer, is it not a more compendious, and convenient, and a lesse scandalous course, to seeke exhortation out of such writers, as doe teach the doctrine aright? Nay, I doubt how it is possible to finde a powerfull exhortation to repentance in any Papist, who erres in the doctrine: the reason is manifest, because Doctrine is the ground of Exhortation: and if the doctrine be unsound, how can the exhortation be any better? Let us therefore leave these muddie puddles, puddles, and fet our water at the fountaine: the water of life, at the fountaine of life; I meane the doctrine of faith, and repentance, at the written word of God, and at ſuch mens writings as are grounded thereupon, and agreeable thereunto.

Deering, Greenham, Bradford, and many others.

Now amongſt thoſe many inſtruments of God, who have laboured with profit in this great point of Religion; namely repentance: drawing their doctrine out of the two breſts of the two Teſtaments of Gods booke; I may well ſay (to ſay no more) that this man of God, Maſter Perkins, deſerves to have his place: whoſe labours whileſt he lived, and his yet living labours, what they deſerve, I had rather others ſhould proclaime, than I once name; who profeſſe my ſelfe to be one of thoſe many, who may truly ſay, that by the grace of God, and his good meanes principally, I am that I am. But leaving him in that glorious manſion, which Chriſt the Lord of the harveſt hath prepared for him, and now given him, I returne to my ſelfe, and doe humbly praiſe the Lord of heaven, who gave me my time in the Vniverſitie, in thoſe happie dayes, wherein (beſides many worthy men of God, whereof ſome are fallen a ſleepe, and ſome remaine alive unto this day) this holy man did ſpend himſelfe like a Candle, to give light unto others.

The ſcope of all his godly endevours, was to teach Chriſt Ieſus, and him crucified, and much laboured to move all men to repentance, that as our knowledge hath made Poperie aſhamed of their ignorance; ſo our holy lives might honour our holy profeſſion. And as repentance was one of the principall ends, both of his continuall preaching and writing; ſo eſpecially and purpoſely hath he twice dealt in that Argument.

Firſt, in his Treatiſe of Repentance, publiſhed 1592. wherein briefly (as his manner was) but ſoundly, pithily, and feelingly, he layeth downe the doctrine, and the very nature of Repentance: and after the poſitive doctrine, he toucheth ſome of the principall controverſies and difficulties in that doctrine: but afterwards thinking with himſelfe, that he had not ſeriouſly and forcibly enough, urged ſo great and neceſſarie a leſſon as Repentance is; therefore ſhortly after, being deſired and called to the dutie of Preaching, in that great and generall aſſembly at Sturbridge Faire, he thought it a fit time, for this neceſſarie and generall exhortation to repentance: to the intent, that as we were taught the doctrine of repentance in the former Treatiſe; ſo in theſe Sermons we might be ſtirred up to the practice of it. And certainly (good Sir) I judge there could not have beene a matter more fit for that aſſembly, than an Exhortation to Repentance: for as the audience was great and generall, of all ſorts, ſexes, ages, and callings of men aſſembled out of many corners of this Kingdome; ſo is this doctrine generall for all: ſome doctrines are for Parents, ſome for children, ſome for ſchollers, ſome for trades-men, ſome for men, ſome for women; but repentance is for all: without which, it may be ſaid of all and every one of age, not one excepted; No Repentance, no Salvation.

These Sermons being in my hands, and not delivered to me from hand to hand, but taken with this hand of mine from his owne mouth, were thought worthy for the excellencie, and fit for the generalitie of the matter, to be offered to the publike view.

And now theſe firſt fruits of my labours in another mans vineyard, as alſo all that hereafter doe or may follow, I humbly conſecrate to the bleſſed Spouſe of Chriſt Ieſus, the holy Church of God on earth, and namely to the Church of England, our beloved Mother, who may rejoyce that ſhe was the Mother of ſuch a ſonne, who in few yeares did ſo much good to the publike cauſe of Religion, as the wickedneſſe of many yeares ſhall not be able to weare out. But firſt of all, and eſpecially, I preſent the ſame unto you (my verie Worſhipfull and Chriſtian friends) who (I muſt needs ſay) are verie worthy of it in many reſpects.

M. Perkins but fourtie yeares old at his death.

1. For the matter it ſelfe, which is repentance, my ſelfe being able to teſtifie, that you are not hearers but doers, ripe in knowledge, and rife in the practice of repentance: in ſo much as I dare from the teſtimonie of my conſcience, and in the word of a Miniſter pronounce of you, that as you have heard and knowne this doctrine of repentance, ſo bleſſed are you, for you doe it.

And 2. for him who was the Author hereof (whoſe mouth ſpake it from the feeling of his ſoule, and whoſe ſoule is now bound up in the bundle of life) I know, and cannot

in good conſcience conceale the great delight you have alwaies had in the reading of his bookes, the reverend opinion you had of him living, and how heavily and paſſionately you tooke his death and departure: therefore to cheare you up in want of him, I ſend you here this little Booke, his owne childe, begotten in his life time, but borne after his death: obſerve it well, and you ſhall finde it not unlike the Father: yea, you ſhall diſcerne in it the Fathers ſpirit; and it doubts not but to finde entertainment with them, of whom the Father was ſo well reſpected.

And for my ſelfe, I ſpare to rehearſe what intereſt you have in me, and all my labours, it is no more than you worthily deſerve, and ſhall have in me for ever: you are the faireſt flowers in this garden, which in this place I after others have planted for the Lord (or rather God by us:) And two principall pearles in that Crowne, which I hope for at the laſt day from the Lord my God; whoſe word at my mouth you have received with much reverence, and with ſuch profit, as if I had the like ſucceſſe of my labours in others, I ſhould then never have cauſe to ſay with the Prophet, I have laboured in vaine, and ſpent my ſtrength in vaine; but my judgement is with the Lord, and my worke with my God.

And if I knew you not to be ſuch, as take more delight in doing well, than in hearing of it, I would prove at large what I have ſpoken of you: yet give me leave to ſay that, which without open wrong I may not conceale, that beſide your rare knowledge, and godly zeale in Religion, and other duties of the firſt Table to God himſelfe; your charity and pity to the needy diſtreſſed Chriſtians at home and abroad, your mercifull dealing with them who are in your power, your benevolence to learning, and namely to ſome in the Vniverſity, doe all proclaime to the world thoſe your due praiſes: which I (well knowing your modeſties) doe ſpare once to name: neither would I have ſaid thus much, were it not for this cold and barren age wherein we live, that ſo when our preaching cannot move, yet your godly examples might ſtirre up. Pardon me therefore, I pray you, and thinke it no wrong to you, which is a benefit to Gods Church: but goe forward in the ſtrength of the Lord your God, and hold on in that happy courſe you have begunne: be faithfull unto the end, the Lord will give you the Crowne of life: faithfull is he which hath promiſed, who will alſo doe it: proceed (good Sir) to honour learning in your ſelfe and others; and Religion eſpecially, which is the principall learning; and proceed both of you, to practiſe Religion in your owne perſons, and in your family; hold on to ſhine before your family, and amongſt the people where you dwell, in zeale and holineſſe: hold on hereby ſtill to ſhame Popery, to ſtop your enemies mouthes, and to honour that holy Religion which you profeſſe, to gaine comfort of good conſcience to your ſelves, and aſſurance of eternall reward: and laſtly, to encourage mee in thoſe painfull duties which lie upon me: for I openly profeſſe that your religious zeale and love of the truth, with many other good helps, are principall encouragements in my Miniſtery, and eſpeciall motives unto me, to take the charge of publication of ſo many workes of this holy man deceaſed, as may not in better manner bee done by others. But I keepe you too long from this holy Exhortation following; I therefore ſend you to it, and it to you, and from you to the Church of God: for I dare not make it to be privatly yours and mine, wherein the whole Church hath intereſt as well as we. It was preached in the field, but it is worthy to be admitted into our hearts. I found it in the open field, but upon diligent view finding it to be Gods Corne, and a parcell of his holy and immortall ſeed, therefore I brought it home, as good Corne deſerves: And as it is Gods Corne, ſo in you, I deſire all holy Chriſtians to lay it up in Gods Garners, that is, in their hearts and ſoules.

And thus committing this little volume to your reading, the matter to your practice, you and yours to the bleſſed favour of that God whom you ſerve: and my ſelfe and my endevours to your hearty love and holy prayers, I take my leave: From my ſtudy, Auguſt. 7. 1605.

Yours in Chriſt Jeſus ever aſſured,

AN EXHORTATION TO REPENTANCE.

ZEPHANIAH 2. V. 1, 2.

Search your ſelves, even ſearch you, O Nation, not worthy to be beloved: before the Decree come forth, and you bee as chaffe that paſſeth on a day.

THE Prophet in the firſt Chapter of this Prophecie rebukes the Iewes of three notable crimes, Idolatrie, Fraud, and Cruelty. In this ſecond hee exhorts them to Repentance, and withall reproveth ſome of their ſpeciall ſinnes. In the three firſt verſes he propoundeth the doctrine of Repentance, and addeth ſome ſpeciall reaſons to move and ſtirre them up to the practice of it. In propounding the doctrine of Repentance, hee directs it to two ſorts of men: Firſt, to the obſtinate and impenitent Jewes, in the firſt and ſecond verſes. Secondly, to the better ſort of them, in the third: So that the ſumme and ſubſtance of theſe two firſt verſes, is a brieſe and ſummary propounding of the doctrine of Repentance to the obſtinate Jewes. The words containe in them five ſeverall points, touching the doctrine of Repentance.

First, the duty to be performed, Search: Secondly, who muſt be ſearched; your ſelves: Thirdly, who muſt doe it; the Iewes: who are further deſcribed to be a nation not worthy to be beloved of God: theſe are in the firſt verſe. Fourthly, in the ſecond verſe, the time limiting them, when to repent, before the Decree come forth; that is, before God hath put in execution the judgements which are already decreed and appointed for them. Fifthly, a forcible reaſon urging them to doe it, which lieth hid, and is neceſſarily implied in the fourth point, namely, that there is a Decree againſt them, which wants nothing but execution: which alſo ſhall come unleſſe they repent: whereby they ſhall be fanned: and if they ſhall bee found to bee chaffe, they ſhall flie away with the wind of Gods juſtice. Of all theſe points in order.

For the firſt, the holy Ghoſt ſaith, Search your ſelves. The words are commonly read thus; Gather your ſelves: which though it be good, for that in repentance a man gathereth himſelfe, and all his wits together, which afore were diſperſed, and wandered up and downe in vanity: yet I rather allow their tranſlation, who read thus, Search, or fanne your ſelves: but either of them may ſtand, becauſe the word in the originall doth comprehend both ſignifications; yet it ſeemeth that to ſearch or ſift fits the place better, conſidering the ſame manner of ſpeech is afterwards continued in the word chaffe: ſo that the meaning of the holy Ghoſt ſeemeth to bee this; Search, try, and fanne your ſelves, leſt you be found like chaffe, and ſo flye away, and be conſumed before the juſtice of God. Iunius.

Concerning this duty of ſearching, let us obſerve, firſt, that the holy Ghoſt urging the Jewes to repent, uſeth not the word Repentance, but bids them ſearch themſelves: yet meaning, he would have them to repent: giving us to underſtand, that no man can have true and ſound repentance, but he who hath firſt of all ſearched and examined himſelfe: and this ſtands with good reaſon; for no man can repent, who firſt of all doth not know himſelfe, and his owne wretchedneſſe; but no man can ſee into himſelfe, nor know himſelfe, but he that doth diligently ſearch himſelfe: ſo that the beginning of all grace, is for a man to ſearch, and try, and fanne himſelfe, that thereby he may know what is in himſelfe: that ſo upon the ſearch, ſeeing his fearefull and damnable eſtate, hee may forſake himſelfe, and his owne waies, and turne to the Lord. Thus ſpeaketh the holy Ghoſt in the hearts of holy men; Let us ſearch and try our waies: and marke what followeth; and turne againe to the Lord: as though there were no turning againe to the Lord, but after a ſearching of our ſelves. With this teſtimonie of the holy Ghoſt, agreeth the teſtimonie of all holy mens conſciences, who all know, that the firſt beginning of their turning unto the Lord, was a ſearching of themſelves. Let any repentant ſinner aske his conſcience, and call to minde his firſt calling and converſion, and he will remember that the firſt thing in his repentance was this; that he ſearched into himſelfe, and looked narrowly into his waies, and finding his waies dangerous, and his caſe fearefull, did thereupon reſolue to take a new courſe, and turne to the Lord for pardon and mercy, and for grace to enter into more holy, and more comfortable courſes.

The man that paſſeth upon ridges of Mountaines, and ſides of hills, or that goeth over a narrow bridge, or ſome dangerons and ſteepe rocks at midnight, feareth not, becauſe he ſeeth no danger: but bring the ſame man in the morning, and let him ſee the narrow bridge hee went over in the night, under which runnes a violent ſtreame, and a bottomleſſe gulfe, and the dangerous Mountaines and rocks he paſſed over, and he will wonder at his own boldneſſe, and ſhrinke for feare to thinke of it, and will by no meanes venture the ſame way againe: for now he ſeeth the height of the mountaines, the ſteepneſſe of the hills, the craggineſſe of the rocks, the fearefull downefall, and the furious violence of the ſtreame underneath, and thereby ſeeth the extreme danger, which afore hee ſaw not: therefore he wondreth and rejoyceth that he hath eſcaped ſo great a danger; and will by no meanes be drawne to goe that way in the day, which he went moſt careleſly in the darkneſſe of the night, but ſeeketh another way (though it ſhould be farre about:) So a ſinner in his firſt eſtate, which is naturall and corrupt (as we are bred and borne) hath a vaile before his face, ſo that he ſeeth nothing: The wrath of God, and the curſe due for ſinne, Hell and damnation ſeeking to devoure him, he ſeeth them not, although (living alwaies in ſinne) he walketh in the very jawes of hell it ſelfe; and becauſe hee ſeeth not this fearefull danger, therefore hee refuſeth no ſinne at all, but ruſheth ſecurely into all manner of ſinne; the night of impenitency, and the miſt of ignorance ſo blinding his eyes, that he ſeeth not the narrow bridge of this life, from which if he ſlide, he falls immediatly into the bottomleſſe pit of hell.

But when as Gods Spirit hath by the light of Gods Word opened his eyes, and touched his heart to conſider his eſtate, then he ſeeth the fraile bridge of this narrow life, and how little a ſtep there is betweene him and damnation, then he ſeeth hell open due for his ſins, and himſelfe in the high way unto it: ſinne being the craggy rocke, and hell the gaping gulfe under it; this life being the narrow bridge, and damnation the ſtreame which runneth under it; then he wondreth at his miſerable eſtate, admireth the mercy of God, in keeping him from falling into the bottome of hell, wondreth at the preſumptuous boldneſſe of his corruption, which ſo ſecurely plodded on towards deſtruction; and being aſhamed of himſelfe, and theſe his waies, he turnes his heart to the God that ſaved him from theſe dangers; and ſets himſelfe into more holy waies, and more conformable courſes, and confeſſeth that ignorance made him bold, and blindneſſe made him ſo preſumptuous; but now he ſeeth the danger, and will by no meanes goe the ſame way againe: and thus the ſearching and ſeeing into the foulneſſe of ſinne, and the danger thereof, is the firſt beginning of repentance, and the firſt ſtep into grace.

This doctrine teacheth us what faith and repentance is generall in the world. All men ſay, they beleeve, and have repented long agone; but try it well, and we ſhall finde in the body of our Nation, but a lip-faith, and a lip-repentance: for even when they ſay ſo, they are blinde and ignorant of their owne eſtate, and know not themſelves, but preſume of themſelves, that becauſe they are baptized and live in the Church, therefore they are in Gods favour, and in very good eſtate; when as they never yet were reconciled to God: and are ſo far from it, that they never yet ſaw any ſinnes in themſelves whereof they ſhould repent. As a man travelling in the night, ſeeth no danger, but plods on without feare: So the moſt part of our common people, in the night of their ignorance, thinke and preſume they love and feare God, and love their neighbour; and that they have ever done ſo: Nay, it is the common opinion, that a man may doe ſo by nature, and that he is not worthy to live, who doth not love God with his heart, and beleeve in Ieſus Chriſt: But alas poore ſimple ſoules, they never knew what ſin was, never ſearched nor ſaw into their owne hearts with the light of Gods Law: for if they had, they ſhould have ſeene ſuch a ſea of corruption, that then they ſhould confeſſe it to be the hardeſt thing in the world, to love God, and to beleeve in Chriſt, and to forſake ſinne: it is therefore manifeſt, that they have not yet begun to beleeve or repent, nor have entred into the firſt ſtep of grace, which leadeth to repentance, for that they have not learned this leſſon, which the Prophet teacheth, that is, to ſearch themſelves.

Furthermore, let us in the ſecond place obſerve better the ſignification of the word; it ſignifieth to ſearch narrowly, as a man would doe for a peece of gold, or a precious Jewell, which is loſt in a great houſe: or as a man may ſearch for gold in a Mine of the earth, and but very little gold Oare.

Hence we may learne, that in true Repentance and converſion, we muſt not ſearch ſo only, as to finde the groſſe and palpable ſinnes of our lives; but ſo as we may finde thoſe ſinnes which the world accounts leſſer ſinnes, and eſpy our ſecret faults and privy corruptions. Some corruptions ſeeme more neere a kinne to our nature, and therein men hope to be excuſed, cuſed, when they forſake many other greater ſinnes: But a true penitent ſinner muſt ſearch for ſuch, ſo as a good Magiſtrate ſearcheth for a lurking Traitor which is conveyed into ſome cloſe and ſecret corner, and he muſt ranſacke his heart for ſuch corruptions, as wherein his heart takes ſpeciall delight, and muſt thinke that no ſinne can be ſo ſmall, but it is too great to bee ſpared, and that every ſinne great or little, muſt be ſearched for, as being all Traitors to Gods Majeſtie.

But alas, the practice of the world is farre otherwiſe, great ſins are little ſins, little ſinnes are no ſinnes: Nay, after a little cuſtome, great ſinnes are alſo little or nothing: and ſo at laſt, men make no bones of groſſe and grievous ſins, and for the moſt part, men ſearch ſo ſuperficially, that they ſcarce finde any thing to be ſinne: ſuch excuſes are made, ſuch diſtinctions are deviſed, ſuch mitigations, ſuch qualifications, ſuch colours are caſt upon all ſinnes; as now up and downe the world, groſſe ſinnes are called into queſtion whether they be ſinnes or no: and the great tranſgreſſions of the Law are counted ſmall matters, neceſſary evills or inconveniences, tolerated to avoid other evils; and what is he counted but a curious and preciſe foole which ſtands upon them? Ignorance after five and thirty yeares preaching is counted no ſinne: blinde devotion in Gods ſervice no ſinne: lip-labour in praying, vaine and cuſtomable ſwearing, mocking of Religion, and the profeſſors thereof, no ſinne: prophaning of the Sabbath, contemning of Preachers, abuſing of parents, no ſinne: pride in apparell, ſuperfluitie in meats, beaſtly and ordinarily drunkenneſſe, fornication, no ſinnes: Nay, deceits, coſonages, oppreſſing uſury, notorious bribery, and covetouſneſſe, that mother ſin; theſe are counted no ſinnes: theſe beames are made but moats by prophane men; and they are ſo minced, and carved, or there is ſome ſuch neceſſity of them, or ſome ſuch other flouriſh or varniſh muſt bee caſt upon them, as that they are little or none at all. Alas, alas, is not that a ſimple and ſilly ſearch where ſuch blocks as theſe are lie unſpied? what are Mole-hils, when ſuch Mountaines are not ſeene? Moats will be little regarded, where ſuch beames are not diſcerned: but it is cleare, that therefore there is no true triall, nor diligent ſearch made: for a true convert will ſearch his heart for all, and will ſpare none: He deales in ſearching his owne heart, as a good Juſtice of Peace in ſearching for Traitors or Seminarie Prieſts. He ſeekes not ſuperficially, but moſt exactly, and leaveth never a corner unſought; and he thinkes great ſinnes to bee infinite, and little ſinnes great, and judgeth no ſinne ſo ſmall, but that it deſerveth the anger of God, and therefore hee wonders at the mercy of God, which throwes us not all down to hell in a moment: and he cryeth out with holy Ieremy, It is the Lords mercy that we are not all conſumed. Away then with this ſuperficiall and hypocriticall ſearch, where ſo many ſins are ſpared and not found out. It is Phariſaicall, for even ſo the Phariſie, when he came into the Temple to reckon with God, and to tell what Traitors hee had found, that is, what ſins upon good ſearch he had eſpied, he returnes his precept, all is wel, hee hath found never an one, but begimnes to thanke God that he was ſo good, and ſo good, and not ſo ill, and ſo ill, nor yet like the Publican. The world is full of Phariſies; not onely the Popiſh Church, but even our Church ſwarmes with theſe ſuperficiall ſearchers, who cannot (becauſe they will not,) finde any ſinne to preſent unto God. Men thinke in the Countrie, a Church-Officer hazards his Oath, if hee preſent all well, and findeth no fault in his Pariſh, to preſent as puniſhable to the Ordinary: for men thinke it unpoſſible, that there ſhould be none in a whole Pariſh: then how doth that man hazard his owne ſoule, who being made overſeer and ſearcher of his heart, findes nothing in it to preſent to the Lord. For it is not more eaſie to eſpy outward and actuall tranſgreſſions in a whole Pariſh, than it is to finde heapes of corruptions in a mans heart, if a man will ſearch into the bottome of it with the light of Gods Law. Therefore when the Lord comes and keeps his viſitation, what ſhall become of ſuch a man, but to undergoe the ſtrict and ſevere ſearch of the Almighty, becauſe he would not ſearch himſelfe?

Our bodies and lives are free from the Spaniſh Inquiſition, (which is one of the laſt props which Satan hath lent the Pope, wherewith to uphold his declining Kingdome) and the Lord grant we may be ever free from it. But in the meane time, that might put us in minde how to deale with our corrupt hearts, and unmortified affections, even to erect an Inquiſition over them, to lie in wait for them, to ſearch them narrowly, and to uſe them roughly: yea, to ſet our hearts upon the racke of Gods Law, that ſo it may confeſſe the ſecret wickedneſſe of it; for the Papiſts doe not thinke us Proteſtants greater enemies to their ſuperſtition, than the inward corruptions of our owne hearts are to our ſalvation: therefore it may be a godly policy for every man, even to erect an Inquiſition over his owne heart and conſcience, and not to ſpare his moſt ſecret and deareſt ſinnes, and ſuch as are neereſt allied to his owne nature: for that is the true ſearch here commanded by the Prophet, and practiſed by all godly and holy men, when a man purpoſeth to finde all that are, and to eſpy even all his ſinnes: for a godly man is never ſatisfied in his ſearch, but ſtill, the more he finds, he ſuſpects the more are ſtill behinde, and therefore he continueth ſearching his owne heart all his life long: Therefore let every profeſſor look to it betwixt God & his conſcience, that he dally not with himſelfe in this caſe: for if he doe, then when God comes with his privie ſearch, his hypocriſie ſhall bee diſcovered, and his nakedneſſe ſhall be laid open in the view of men and Angels, to his eternall confusion.

Thirdly, Search saith the Prophet; but not so content, he forceth it againe, Even search you. In thus repeating and urging this exhortation, the holy Ghost gives them and us to understand, that the true searching of a mans heart, and life, is a duty of great moment, and speciall necessity: therefore hee leaves it not after once naming it, but inforceth it the second time, as being no matter of indifferency, but of great necessitie: thereby shewing, that it is a principall duty in repentance, even the beginning and foundation of all true grace.

And further, it is a meanes also to prevent Gods judgements: for when men search not themselves, then God sends the fire of afflictions and crosses to try and search them: but when they search themselves, then God spareth to search them by his just judgements.

Now in that this duty of searching is both the beginning of all true grace, and the meanes to stay Gods judgements, and therefore is so pithily, and so forcibly urged by the holy Ghost, it must teach us all a necessary lesson, namely, to make great conscience of searching our selves. First, because God hath so commanded, and we are to make conscience of obedience to every Commandement. Secondly, because thereby we shal reape two so great commodities, as first thereby wee shall lay a sure foundation for the good worke of grace in us: and secondly, shall stay the hand of God, and his judgements from being executed upon us. Let us therefore hearken to this counsell of the holy Ghost, let us take the fan of the Law, and therewith search and winnow our hearts and lives. Our hearts for secret and hidden corruptions: Our lives, for committing of evill and omitting of good. Doe with your hearts as men doe with their Wheat: they will not suffer their Corne to lie long in the Chaffe, lest the Chaffe hurt it, but commit it to the fan, that the wind may separate them: So the graces of God in our hearts are pure Corne, our sinnes and corruptions are chaffe: looke well, and thou shalt finde in thy selfe much Chaffe, and but little Corne: let not then the Chaffe lie too long mingled with the Corne, lest it corrupt the Corne. Let not thy sinnes lie mingled with the grace of God in thee; if thou doe, they will choake it in the end, and so deprive thee of all grace: therefore rip up thy heart, and looke into thy life, and when thou hast sinned, enter into thy selfe, aske thy conscience what thou hast done, and bee not quiet till thou hast found out thy sinne, and the foulnesse of it; and never think that thou knoweest any thing in Religion, till thou knoweest what is in thine owne heart, and what are thy speciall and privieest corruptions; and look into thy owne faults, not with a partiall eye, but with a censorious and a straight judgement: spare sinne in no man, but especially condemne it in thy selfe.

But alas, these times of ours cry out of an other state, for even Ieremies case is ours: We may complaine as he did, No man repents him of his wickednesse, saying, What have I done? the same is the sore of our people, and the sicknesse of all Nations, that every man runs on in his sinnes, from sinne to sinne carelesly, even as the bard horse into the battell. But how rare a thing is it to finde a man that daily searcheth himselfe, and examines how he lives, and how the case standeth betwixt God and himselfe; and that when he hath done amisse, entreth into the closet of his heart, and strikes himselfe upon the brest, and disputes the case with himselfe, saying, What have I done? Oh what is this that I have done against God, against his Church, and against my owne soule!

The want of this is that which the Prophet complaineth of in that place: not as though it were sufficient thus to doe, in a mans owne conscience; but because it is a good beginning, and a step to further grace. For if a man did seriously thus deale with his conscience after his sinne, his conscience would shape him such an answer, and would tell him so roundly what he had done, that he would take heed how he did the same againe, and looke more narrowly and warily to himselfe all the daies of his life. Seeing therefore it is so necessary a duty, let every one of us endevour the practice of it, namely, to rip and ransacke our hearts, and to search our waies unto the bottome.

Now for your better instruction, and furtherance in the performance hereof; you must know, that this Search is to be made by the Law of God: for nothing else but Gods Law can helpe us, and let us see that which we must search for: for if we search by any other meanes, we may seeke and search long enough, ere wee find any thing that wil be matter of repentance. Aske the Devill, he will tell thee all is well, and that thou art in an excellent estate; and God loves thee, and thou art sure of Heaven: this song the Devill alwaies sings for the most part, till a man comes to die; for then he appeares in his colours; but till then, he labours to sing and lull all men asleepe in the cradle of security. Aske our owne flesh, and our owne hearts and natures, and they will answer and say, that all is well and safe, and that we have beleeved, and loved, and feared God all our daies. Aske the world, and men in the world; and they will answer, all is well; and they will say further, that thou art a right good fellow, and art worth twenty of those curious fooles, that sticke upon points, and stand upon circumstances, as swearing, and drinking, and good fellowship, and gaming, and such other nice and circumstantiall points: thus will worldly men answer: for thy prophane course is acceptable to them, because thereby thou approvest the same in them. Nay, goe further, and aske all humane learning in the world, and it cannot tell thee what one sinne is, nor what it is to offend God: so that there remaines onely the Law of God, the light whereof will diſcloſe the darkneſſe of our hearts, and the juſtice whereof will reveale the unrighteouſneſſe and the perverſeneſſe of our natures: therefore to the Law of God muſt wee flie to helpe us in this ſearch.

And yet for our better helpe in this duty, and that there may bee nothing wanting to that ſoule that ſeeketh God, therefore we are further to know, that if we will ſearch our ſelves by the Law profitably, wee muſt marke three rules, the truth whereof unleſſe wee know, acknowledge, and feele, wee ſhall never ſee our owne eſtate, nor profit by this Search, but plod on from ſinne to ſinne, untill wee plunge into Hell.

The firſt Rule is, that every man that came from Adam, ſinned in the ſinne of Adam: thou B muſt therefore know, that his ſinne in eating the forbidden fruit, was thy ſinne, and thou ſinnedſt therein as well as he, (though thou waſt then unborne) and that thou art guilty of it before God, and muſt anſwer for it to Gods juſtice, unleſſe Chriſt doe it for thee. The reaſon hereof is, becauſe we are his ſeed and his poſterity, we were then in his loines, he was the father of us all; and was not a private man as we are now, but a publike perſon, the pledge of all mankinde, and bare the perſon of us all at that time: therefore what he did then, hee did it for himſelfe, and for us: What Covenant God made with him, was made for himſelfe and us: what God promiſed him, and he to God, hee promiſed for himſelfe, and for us; what he received in his Creation, he received for himſelfe and for us; and what he gained or loſt by his fall, hee gained and loſt for us, as for himſelfe. He loſt the favour of God, and originall puritie; therefore hee loſt it for all his poſteritie: guiltineſſe, and Gods anger, and corruption of nature which he gained, he got for us all, as well as for himſelfe. If we doubt of this point, it is proved by the Apoſtle: where the holy Ghoſt ſaith, Sin entred by one man, and death by ſin, and that ſin went over all: and that it went over all them which ſinned not in the like tranſgreſſion with Adam: (that is, even our children) who as they are borne, are borne not onely tainted with originall corruption, but guilty alſo of Adams ſinne. This is a moſt certaine truth, though it ſeeme ſtrange; for few men thinke of it, that ever they ſhall anſwer for Adams ſinne: and therefore if any obiect, what reaſon is there that I anſwer for another mans ſinne? I anſwer, true, if it had beene Adams ſin alone, but it was his and thine alſo: for he was thy father, and ſtood in thy roome: and thou alſo ſince thou waſt borne, haſt confirmed what hee did. Now therefore though not one of many thinks ſeriouſly thereof; namely, that he ſhould ſtand guilty of a ſinne committed more than five thouſand yeares before he was borne, yet ſeeing it is moſt true, both in Scripture and good reaſon; let every man ſubſcribe in his conſcience to this truth. And let this be thy firſt A reſolution in this ſearch, that thou ſtandeſt guilty of Adams tranſgreſſion.

The ſecond rule to bee knowne is, that in every man are all ſinnes: more plainly, that in every man by nature are the ſeeds of all ſinnes; and that not in the worſt, but in the beſt natured men: make choice of the beſt man, and the greateſt ſinne, and that worſt ſin is to be found in that beſt man. If any doubt of this, let him conſider what originall ſinne is, namely, a corruption of the powers of our ſoules: and that not of ſome, or in part, but of all and wholly. This corruption hath two parts: Firſt, a want, not of ſome, but of all good inclination, a want of all goodneſſe. Secondly, a deprivation, and proneneſſe, not to ſome, but to all evill: and not a proneneſſe onely, but originall ſinne infuſeth into every mans heart the ſeed of all corruption.

Many men ſtand much upon their good meaning, and upright heart, and brag of a good nature; but they are foully deceived: for take the civilleſt man upon the earth, and the ſeeds of all ſinnes in the world are in him by nature. But to explaine this point fully, obſerve theſe two clauſes:

Firſt, I ſay not the practice of all ſinnes, but the ſeeds; for all men practiſe not all ſinne: the ſeeds are in their nature; but the practice is reſtrained, ſometime by education, ſometime by good and wholſome Laws; ſometime the conſtitution of mens bodies deny the practice of C ſome ſinnes; ſometime the Country a man dwells in, or calling a man lives in, keepes him from the practice of ſome ſinnes: and alwaies a generall and limiting grace of God reſtraines the natures of all men, from running into many ſinnes: which hand of God, if God ſhould take away, and leave every man to his nature, wee ſhould ſee that every man would practiſe any ſin in the world: yea, even the greateſt ſins that ever we heard to be done in the world. All men which know themſelves, know this to be true. And the more a man knowes his owne heart, the more he ſeeth that his heart is a ſea of all wickedneſſe: and that it is the mercy and grace of God, that he hath not fallen into the mightieſt and moſt monſtrous ſinnes in the world.

Secondly, I ſay, by nature. For I know by D good education, and by grace it is otherwiſe; grace rectifieth nature, but that is no thankes to nature: for it is as evill and corrupt ſtill, being ſevered from grace: and therefore nature muſt be fully aboliſhed, afore man come to heaven. And yet (though all this be true) I ſay not that ſin breakes out in all natures alike, though all natures bee alike corrupt: for the courſe of nature is reſtrained in ſome more than others, by the meanes aforeſaid; but this is the truth, that whereas ſome are not ſo angry, ſome not ſo wanton, ſome not ſo cruell, ſome not ſo covetous, ſome not ſo ambitious, &c. as others; that comes not from any goodneſſe of nature in them, above the other originall, but from

Gods

Rom. 5. 14.

Gods hand, which tempereth, restraineth, and moderates every mans nature as he seeth good.

And if God did not thus moderate and restraine the natures of men, but suffer them to breake out to the full: there would then be no order, but all confusion in the world; therefore (as especially for his Churches quietnesse, so also for the preservation of publike peace, and the upholding of societie in the world betweene man and man) the Lord holds a hand over every mans nature, and keeps every one in a certaine compasse limited by the wisdome of his power; which restraining hand of his, if the Lord should take away, all societies and common-wealths would be turned upside downe, because every man by the universall corruption of his nature, would breake out into every sin. I end this point with appealing to the testimony of the consciences of all men, and especially of the best and holiest men, of whom I would aske this question, whether they finde not in their natures an inclination, even to the foulest sinne in the world, if shame, or feare, or else the grace of God restrained them not; so that the best men doe know well enough, what a doe they have with their corrupt natures, to keep them within the compasse of Obedience.

Nay, I yet adde further, the nature of men, and of all men is so corrupt since Adam, that even the seed of the sinne against the holy Ghost, and a proneneſſe to it, is in the nature of every man (though not one man amongst many thousands doe commit that sin) for seeing in that sinne, there is a heape or sea of all sinnes gathered together, he therefore that hath in his nature the seed of all sinnes, hath also the seed of it. And againe, seeing all evill tends to a perfection, as well as grace doth; what reason therefore is there, but we may safely thinke that the Devill would hale every one to that height of sinne, if it were not that the powerfull hand of God did prevent him; who will neither suffer wicked men, nor the Devill himselfe to bee so wicked as they could and would be.

The use of this second Rule is notable. For in this searching of our selves, it sheweth us what we are, without all colours of deceit, and fully discovers the uglineſſe of our natures; and it may teach us all how to think & esteeme of our selves, when we heare of Cains unnaturall murther, Pharaohs unnaturall cruelty, the Sodomites unnaturall lusts, Achitophels devilish policy, Senacharibs horrible blasphemy, Iudas monstrous treason, Iulians fearefull Apostasie. When we heare of the fearefull murders, treasons, perjuries, sinnes against nature, blasphemies, Apostasies, witchcrafts, and other the horrible sinnes of the world; let us then returne into our selves, and looke homewards, even into our owne hearts, and confesse every one, that these should have beene even thy sins also, if Gods grace had not prevented thee.

This will humble thee, and make thee thinke vilely and basely of thy selfe, and so consequently bring thee to repentance and true amendment: and the very reason why men repent not, nor amend their waies, is because they are Pharisies by nature, & thinke highly of themselves, and of their owne natures, and their naturall inclinations: this will be a harsh and a strange Doctrine in them; Oh they have excellent natures, and they cannot endure such and such sinnes, and they thanke God, they are not as ill as others: but let all such men know, they must cease magnifying nature, and learne to magnifie Gods grace. Let them know that nature in them, is in the Root as much corrupt, as in the worst man in the world, and every mans heart is a bottomleſſe fountaine of all sinne; therefore praise not thy nature, but Gods grace and mercy in giving thee so good a nature; or rather so well restraining or rectifying thy nature; and stay not there, but desire of the Lord, that as he hath given thee a better tempered nature than to other men; so also he would bestow on thee his speciall and saving grace: and as he hath kept thee from the fearefull sinnes of others, (thou being as ill naturally as they) so he would also lead thee into the way of salvation, which else the best nature in the world can never attaine unto.

The third rule to be knowne and practised by him, who will truly search himselfe, is, that every man borne of Adam, is by nature the childe of wrath, and Gods enemy: this is true of all without exception; high and low, rich or poore, noble or simple, borne in the visible Church or without. And further, by being enemie of God, hé is therefore borne subject to hell, to damnation, and to all other curses; so that look as a Traitor convicted stands thereby in his Princes high displeasure, and is sure of death, without a special pardon; so stands every man when he is borne, convicted of high treason against God, in his high dis-favour; and is in danger of Hell, which is the fulfilling of the wrath of God. Thus David confesseth of himselfe; I was borne in iniquity, and in sin hath my mother conceived me. If in sinne, then in Gods wrath, and under the danger of damnation. If any aske, how, or why this is so: I answer, the truth, as also the equity of this third rule depends on the two former: for, because every man is borne guilty of Adams great sinne, and also tainted originally with all corruption, and a proneneſſe of all sinne; therefore it followeth in equity and justice, that every man is borne under the wrath and curse of God. This point is a plaine and evident truth; yet men in the world thinke not so, and it is the cause why men repent not of their sinnes; for most men thinke that by nature they are in Gods favour, and therefore they need not so sue for it in humiliation and repentance; but onely live civilly, and doe no open wrong, and all is well: whereas (alas) there is no condemned Traitor, more out of his Princes favour, nor more more ſure of death without a pardon, than all we are out of Gods favour, and ſure of damnation, unleſſe we procure Gods favour againe, by faith and repentance.

For the better opening of this third rule, and the manifeſting of the truth; let us know further that the curſe of God, under which we are all borne, is threefold:

The firſt is a bondage under Satan: It is a certaine truth, that every man as he is borne of his parents, and till he repent, is a ſlave of Satan; man or woman, high or low, Satan is his Lord and Maſter. He ſits as Judge in his heart; and in this ſenſe Satan is the King of the Nations, and god of the world. Men will in words defie Satan, and not name him without defiance, and ſpit at him; and yet (alas) hee is in their hearts; they ſpit him out of their mouths, but hee is lower, they ſhould alſo ſpit him out of their hearts; and that is true defiance indeed: for alas, he lodgeth in thy heart, and there he maketh his throne, and reignes untill the Spirit of regeneration diſpoſſeſſe him: and till then, no ſervant is ſo ſubject to his maſter, no ſlave to his Lord, as is the heart of man by nature unto Satan, the prince of darkneſſe. Nay, our bondage is more fearefull than the ſlavery of any poore Chriſtian, in the Spaniards, or in the Turkes Gallies: for their bodies are but in bondage, and at command, and under puniſhment, but our beſt part, our heart, our conſcience, our ſoule it ſelfe is captivated unto him, and under his command, who is the King of cruelty and confuſion, and Lord of hell, whoſe commandements are injuſtice, whoſe ſervice is ſinne, and whoſe hire is damnation.

The ſecond part of the Curſe, is the firſt death, or the death of the bodie: that is, a ſeparation of the ſoule and body aſunder for a time, namely, till the laſt judgement. This death is duly and juſtly the puniſhment of any one, for the leaſt ſinne: therefore how due and juſt a puniſhment upon that horrible heape of ſinfulneſſe, which is in every mans nature? and it is a moſt terrible curſe: For it is the very gate of hell, and the downfall of damnation unto all men, but ſuch as by faith and repentance doe get their death ſanctified by the death of Chriſt; unto ſuch men indeed it is no curſe, but a gracious and glorious bleſſing, for it is altered by Chriſt his death. But unto all men by nature, and which repent not, it is the heavy curſe of Gods wrath, and the very downfall into the gulfe of Hell.

The third part of the curſe, under which every man is born, is the ſecond death, the death of ſoule and body; which is the eternall want of Gods preſence, and the accompliſhment of his wrath; and an apprehenſion and feeling of that wrath, ſeazing on body, ſoule, and conſcience. The firſt curſe was a ſpirituall death, the death of the ſoule. The ſecond a temporary death, the death of the body. The third is an eternall death, a death both of ſoule and body together, and for ever. This eternall death is the curſe of all curſes, the miſery of all miſeries, and torment of all torments; and I ſhew it thus. Often when thy tooth aketh, and ſometime when thy head aketh, or in the paine of the ſtone or chollicke, thou wouldeſt give all that thou haſt in the world to be eaſed of that paine: Nay, in the extremity of ſome fits, many will wiſh themſelves even out of the world. Now if the paine of one tooth can ſo farre diſtemper minde and body, that it cannot be releeved with all the pleaſures of this life; O then, what a torment ſhall that be! when not one kinde of paine, but the whole violl of Gods wrath ſhall bee powred, not on one member, but on the whole ſoule, body, and conſcience; and that not for a time, under hope of better; but eternally without hope of releeſe: and that not in this world, where there are comforts, helps, and remedies; but in that ugly and darkſome place of torments: and that not amongſt living men, which might mitigate thy paine, or elſe bemone thee, and bewaile it with thee; but with the Devils and damned ſpirits, which will now laugh at thy deſtruction, and ſolace themſelves in this thy miſery, and will rejoyce, as thou didſt ſerve them in earth, ſo now in hell to bee thy tormenters. It may be therefore (by the way) good warning and wiſdome to us all, when we feele the extremity of ſome bodily paine, to conſider with our ſelves and ſay; Oh then, what ſhall be my miſery and torment if I repent not; when not one member, but ſoule, body, and conſcience, ſhall be racked and tormented in the feeling and apprehenſion of the anger of the Lord of hoſts.

In theſe three points ſtands that curſe and wrath of God, under which a man is borne. And theſe doe anſwer to the three degrees of ſinne, which are in us: for as the two firſt Rules taught us, there is in every man by nature, till he repent, a threefold guiltineſſe. Firſt, a guiltineſſe of Adams ſinne. Secondly, the taint of originall and univerſall corruption. Thirdly, a pollution by many outragious actuall ſinnes. In the firſt of theſe, every man is equally guilty. In the ſecond every one is equally corrupt. But in the third, every one keepes that compaſſe, within which the Lord will keepe them, by his limiting power.

Now as in our guiltineſſe of Adams ſinne, ſinne hath his beginning: in originall ſinne, his continuance: in actuall ſinne his perfection: ſo anſwerable hereunto, the wrath of God (which alwaies ſtandeth oppoſite to ſinne) is begun in leaving us by nature to the ſlavery of Satan, is continued by death, and accompliſhed in damnation.

And now theſe three Rules, I commend to the carefull and Chriſtian conſideration of you all: certifying you from God, that as you can never be ſaved, unleſſe you repent; nor repent, unleſſe you ſearch your ſelves (as here the Prophet biddeth;) ſo that you can never ſearch your your ſelves aright, till you be perſwaded, and reſolved of theſe three rules, and of the truth of them all, even in your heart and conſciences: namely, Firſt, that thou art guilty of Adams ſinne. Secondly, that thou art prone by nature to all evill in the world. Thirdly, that for theſe thou art ſubject to the wrath of God, and to all the curſes of his wrath: but when thou art in heart and conſcience reſolved that theſe are true, then thou art a ſcholler for this leſſon of the Prophet, Search thy ſelfe. For when thou goeſt thus prepared unto this Search, and eſteemeſt of thy ſelfe, as theſe three Rules have deſcribed thee: then if thou ſearch into thy ſelfe, thou wilt finde thy ſelfe and thy eſtate to bee ſuch, as will cauſe thee to repent, returne, and take a new courſe: therefore what the Prophet ſaid to thoſe Jewes, I ſay unto you alſo, my brethren of this Realme of England, who are here now gathered together out of many countries and quarters of this Realme; yea, in the name of the ſame God, I cry unto you, Search, O ſearch your ſelves: and thinke it not a matter indifferent to doe, or not to doe it: but know it, that God commands you, as ever you will come to ſalvation; Search your ſelves. And the rather becauſe by theſe three rules, you ſee how much chaffe of corruption is in your nature, and what need therefore it hath to be ſearched into, and fanned by Repentance. Be well aſſured thou man, whatſoever thou art, there is ſo much chaffe in thee, that if thou ſearch not, and fanne it not out, thou wilt prove nothing but chaffe at the laſt day, and ſo bee blowne away with the wind of Gods juſtice into hell. Take hold therefore of this exhortation, and deferre it not.

Thou wilt not ſuffer thy Wheat to lie too long in the chaffe, for feare of hurting it; Is it then ſafe to ſuffer the chaffe of thy ſinnes and corruptions to lie cankering and rotting in thy heart? Be ſure that that little portion of grace which thou attaineſt unto, by living in the Church, and under the Miniſtery of the Word of God, will be putrified and cleane corrupted with the chaffe of thy ſinnes: therefore againe and againe, I exhort you to make conſcience of this duty: Search into your ſelves, fan out this chaffe, this preſumption of ours, and high eſteeming of our owne nature, and conceits of Gods favour before we have it, that ſo this chaffe being blowne away, the Lord may then beſtow upon us ſoundneſſe of grace, and the foundation of all goodneſſe, which is a holy and humbled heart.

Salvation is ſuch a building, as the foundation thereof had need to be ſure and ſtrong: Ignorance, blindneſſe, and preſumption, are not ſufficient foundations for ſuch a building: therefore as no man will build a ſtrong houſe upon any earth, but will firſt ſearch it, leſt it prove ſandy, and ſo overthrow all: ſo a wiſe Chriſtian will not build his ſalvation upon fancies and conceits, and natural preſumption; but will Search, and looke into his heart: and finding theſe to be ſandy and rotten, and therefore too weake for the foundation of ſo glorious a building, will refuſe them all, and labour to furniſh his heart with ſuch ſound grace, as whereupon he may truſt ſo weighty a worke, as the ſalvation of his ſoule. Againe, if thou wilt ſtand in the day of triall, then ſearch thy heart betimes, and diſcerne betwixt chaffe and wheat: thou ſeeſt that chaffe flyeth away before the wind; but the good corne endures the fanne, and the fury of the wind: ſo in the day of triall, temptation, ſickneſſe, or open perſecution, the chaffe of naturall preſumption, and outward formality in religion will flie away; and it muſt be the penitent, humbled, and beleeving heart, which muſt then abide it out, and endure the fanne of temptations and perſecutions.

And to conclude: Let not the Devill deceive thee, in making thee imagine or hope to pleaſe God, and yet to let thy corruptions lie unſeene, and thy ſinnes unſearched out, leſt thereby thou marre all; for thou uſeſt not to lay up wheat in thy garners, untill it bee purged from the chaffe; ſo thinke not to ſtore up any ſaving knowledge, or any other grace of God in thy heart, untill the chaffe of vanity be firſt blowne away, that ſo the holy graces of God may be laid up in the garners of thy ſoule. And therefore queſtionleſſe (to ſpeake one word to touch our common profeſſors in the very ſore of their ſoules,) all knowledge that is ſtored up in theſe impure and unſearched hearts, is even as wheat laid up in the chaffe, which is a thouſand to one ſure to be eaten up by the chaffe, ſo that when the winnowing time of trialls and perſecutions comes, I feare that ſuch men will (for all their knowledge) ſhrinke aſide, and betray the truth; their knowledge then proving no better than chaffe, becauſe it was laid up in an unholy heart. If therefore thou wouldeſt ſtand and endure, when Popery, or perſecution, or temptations come, if thou wouldſt abide the fury of the fanne of temptations; now then exerciſe thy heart with the fanne of Gods Law, ſearch and ranſacke it, purge out the chaffe of corruption, and ſtore up knowledge in an holy heart and a good conſcience, and that will abide the violence of all temptations; yea, when God ſuffers the Devill to doe with us as he did with Peter, to winnow us like wheat, to ſift and try us as he did Iob, with the furious wind of all his malice; the knowledge will prove Wheat that will abide the wind, and gold that will abide the fire: thus glorious it will be in the end, if wee follow this holy Prophets counſell, and ſearch our hearts.

And thus much for the firſt point (namely) this duty of ſearching here commanded, in which wee have ſtayed the longer, becauſe it is the foundation of all the reſt: and this being well laid, the whole building will goe up the faſter.

Now we come to the ſecond generall point here here laid down: that is, whom we must search? the Prophet answereth, your selves; not other men, but your selves. This search so urged and inforced by the Prophet, must not be of other mens hearts and lives, but of our owne: our owne are our charge, and not other mens; and therein is the saying true, which else is most false; Every man for himselfe: for as every soule must be saved by it selfe, so must it beleeve, repent, and search it selfe.

The duty therefore here commanded, is for every man that would have his soule to bee saved, to Search it, and reforme it, and leave others to be searched by themselves. Here the holy Ghost meets with the common corruption of this world (and that is) that men are Eagle-eyed, to see into the lives of other men, but to looke into their owne hearts and lives, they are blinder than Moles: they can see moats in other mens lives, but discerne not beames in their owne; whereby it comes to passe, that they stumble and fal foully: for the eyes of most men are set upon others, and not upon themselves: and thereupon it is, that an evill man seeing other men, and not himselfe, thinks best of himselfe, and worst of other men; but contrariwise, a good man seeing himselfe, and not other men, thinks worst of himselfe, and better of other men: an evill man lookes outward, and judgeth other men; but a good man lookes homeward and judgeth himselfe: and in judging, condemnes himselfe, farre above other men: and that because by searching into his owne heart and waies, hee knowes that by himselfe, which he knowes not by any man in the world besides.

So then, we must search, not other men, but our selves: our owne hearts and our owne lives are our charge and burthen: the lives of other men concerne us not, being private men, further than either to follow them being good, or take heed of them being evill: but to search, or to bee inquisitive into them, is no duty commanded us, but rather a foule and a base vice forbidden of God. Indeed Magistrates in their people, Pastors in their congregations, and housholders in their families are to search: but they can search only for criminall causes, or open actuall sinnes: but this searching must be of our hearts, which no man can search, but our selves onely. Few men have a calling to enquire into other mens lives, but every man hath a calling to search into himselfe: but (alas) men doe farre otherwise, they suffer themselves to rot in their owne sinnes, and erect an Inquisition over other mens lives: and it is to bee seene in daily experience, that those men who are the great searchers and priers into other men, are the neglecters and forgetters of themselves. And contrariwise, they who doe narrowly search themselves, and their owne wayes, and looke into the corners of their owne hearts, doe finde so much worke to doe with themselves, that they little busie themselves with other men. And thus much may suffice for that point.

It followeth; O nation not worthy to be beloved.

The third point: Who must search? The Jewes who are here termed a Nation, not worthy to be beloved: and yet for all that, they are bid to search themselves, that so upon their Repentance they might be beloved. Where wee may see the unspeakable love of God, and his wonderfull mercy, offering grace unto such men as are altogether unworthy of it. Gods children are by nature like other men, and God findes nothing in them, why to respect them above others: but even of his owne mercy makes them worthy, who of themselves are not: therefore how worthy is that God, to have all the love of our hearts, who loved us when we were not worthy to be beloved.

But let us examine more particularly, why God doth call the Jewes a Nation not worthy to be beloved: I answer, God had blessed them above other Nations: He gave them his Covenant of grace, and thereby made them his people, and committed to their trust his holy Word and Oracles; but he dealt not so with other nations, neither had the Heathen knowledge of his lawes. Besides all this, they had a better land than others about them, it flowed with Milke and Honey (that is, with all commodities, and delights) and though their Country was but little, yet themselves so populous and so powerfull, that whilest they pleased God, no enemy durst set upon them.

Thus for soule and body, they were every way a Nation blessed of God, a people beloved of God above all others. Now how did this people (thus beloved of their God) requite this his love, which they had no more deserved than any other Nation? Certainly, as they deserved it not afore they had it: so they requited it not when they had it; but requited this love of God with sinne, with rebellion, and with disobedience. They tempted him, they provoked him to wrath, they presumed of his mercy, and proved a most stubborne and stif-necked people, a froward generation. Moses partly saw this in his owne experience, and better discerned it in the spirit of Prophesie: and therefore wondring at this their wickednesse, he cried out; Doe you thus requite the Lord, O foolish people, and unwise? thus, that is, with sinne and disobedience, which is the only meanes to displease the Lord, and to provoke him to wrath: for this cause, they are worthily called a foolish and unkinde people by Moses, and here by the Prophet, A Nation not worthy to be beloved: namely, for their unthankfulnesse and unkindnesse; which was such, as they not onely were slacke and careless in performance of such duties as God required, but even multiplied their sinnes, and committed those foule rebellions which his soule hated.

Chapter, noteth three of their great ſinnes; for which they were a Nation not worthy to bee beloved, Covetouſneſſe. Cruelty, and Deceit: all which were the more heinous and intolerable, becauſe they were the ſinnes of their Princes, their Rulers, and their Prieſts, who ſhould have beene lights and examples to the reſt.

Now though every ſinne in it ſelfe, is of that ill deſert, as it is able to caſt us out of Gods favour, and deprive us of his love; yet behold, here God complaines, not upon a little cauſe, but for wonderfull and exceeding unthankfulneſſe and unkindneſſe in them, who of all other ſhould have loved the Lord.

As a man cares not for hard uſage from him, whom he eſteemes not; but a little unkindneſſe doth greatly grieve a man, from him who is loved and reſpected: ſo is it with the Lord our God; he loved not the Gentiles, as he did the Jewes, neither was he ſo bountifull unto them: and therefore (as we may ſee) though they lived alwaies in ignorance, and continued alwaies in diſobedience, yet the Text ſaith, the time of that ignorance God regarded not: but when as the Jewes his owne people, whom he choſe out of all people, and beſtowed his love upon them, and made his Covenant of grace with them, when they became unkind, unthankfull, forgetfull, ſtubborne, and rebellious; that cauſed the Lord even to complaine of the indignitie, and to cry out by Moſes, Doe you thus requite the Lord, O fooliſh people and unwiſe? And here by the Prophet, O Nation not worthy to be beloved: and therefore there is no man, but if he be asked what he thinkes of this Nation of the Jewes; he will anſwer, that they are a moſt vile and wicked people, a froward generation, and that they are worthy to taſte deeply of all Gods plagues, who ſo farre abuſed his love and mercy.

Act. 17. 30.

But what, doth this belong to them alone? and is Iſrael only a Nation not worthy to bee beloved? Nay, I may cry out with as good cauſe, O England, a Nation not worthy to bee beloved. For God hath beene as good a God to us, as he was to them: and we have beene as unkinde a people to him, as they were to him. But that I may be free from diſcrediting our Nation, and from defiling my owne neſt, let us prove both theſe points, and lay them open to the view of the world.

1. Firſt therefore, the ſame mercies and far greater, have beene powred and heaped upon us: he hath called us out of the darkneſſe: Firſt of Heathenisme, and then of Popery: his covenant of grace and ſalvation he hath confirmed with us, his treaſures of his Word and Sacraments hee hath imparted unto us, his holy Word never better preached, and the myſteries thereof never more plainly opened ſince the time of the Apoſtles: and as we have Religion, ſo we have it under a religious Prince, whereby it comes to paſſe, that theſe bleſſings of ſalvation wee enjoy not in ſecret, or by ſtealth, but we have it countenanced by authority: ſo that Religion is not barely allowed, but even as it were thruſt upon men. Beſides all this, we have a land alſo that flowyeth with milke and hony, it is plentifull in all good things; we have liberty and peace under a peaceable Prince: and the companions of peace, proſperitie, plentie, health, wealth, corne, wooll, gold, ſilver, abundance of all things that may pleaſe the heart of man: thus hath God deſerved the love of England.

2. But now England, how haſt thou requited this kindneſſe of the Lord? certainly, even with a great meaſure of unkindneſſe: that is, with more and greater ſinnes than ever Iſrael did: ſo that if Moſes ſpake true of them, then may our Moſes much more truly cry out againſt England: Doeſt thou thus requite the Lord thou fooliſh people? And if this Prophet ſaid thus of Iſrael for three ſinnes, then may it be ſaid of England for three hundred ſinnes (O England) a Nation not worthy to be beloved: for thou haſt multiplied thy tranſgreſſions, above theirs of Iſrael, even as though thou hadſt reſolved with thy ſelfe, the more Gods kindnes is heaped on thee, the more to multiply thy ſinnes againſt him. For thou England, as thou haſt requited the Lord with ſinnes; ſo not with a few ſinnes, or ſmall ſinnes, or ſinnes which hardly could have beene prevented: for that had beene a matter of ſome excuſe, or not of ſo great complaint. But thy ſinnes are many, and grievous, and capitall. And which is worſt of all, wilfull and affected, even as though God had deſerved evill of us, and that therefore we ought maliciouſly to requite him.

If any man make doubt of this, and therefore thinke I ſpeake too hardly of our Church; I will then deale plainly and particularly, and rip up the ſores of our Nation, that ſo they may be healed to the bottome.

The common ſinnes of England, whereby the Lord is requited, are theſe: Firſt, ignorance of Gods will and worſhip, (I ſpeake not of that compelled ignorance in many corners of our Land, which is to be pitied becauſe they want the meanes) but wilfull and affected ignorance. Men are ignorant even becauſe they will be ignorant. Meanes of knowledge were never ſo plentifull, and yet never more groſſe ignorance; is not he wilfully blinde, who will not open his eyes in the light? and can there be any darkneſſe at noone day, but it muſt be wilfull? But our Nation is darke and blinde in the Sun-ſhine of the Goſpell, and groſſely ignorant when the Goſpell beats their eares, and light ſhines round about them: ſo as if they cloſed not their eyes, and ſtopped not their eares, they could not but both heare and ſee. Who would looke for ignorance after thirty five yeares preaching? and yet many are as ignorant, as if they had beene borne and brought up under Poperie: ſo that our people are as evill as thoſe in the dayes of Christ, of whom the holy Ghost saith; Light is come into the world, but men love darkenesse more than light. So knowledge is come into England, but many English men love ignorance better than knowledge. Alas, how many thousands have we in our Church, who know no more in religion, than they heare in common talke of all men; and which is worse, they thinke it sufficient also; and which is worst of all, whereas they might have more, they will not, but care not for it.

2. The second maine sinne of England, is Contempt of Christian Religion. Religion hath beene among us this five and thirtie yeares; but the more it is published, the more it is contemned, and reproached of many; in so much, as there is not the simplest fellow in a Countrey towne, who although he know not one point of religion, yet he can mocke, and scorne such as are more religious than himselfe is: this is one of the moths of England, that eats up religion: this is grievous in whomsoever, but most intolerable in two sorts of men. First, in them who are altogether ignorant, that they should mocke they know not what. A pitifull thing to heare one, who himselfe cannot give the meaning of one petition in the Lords Prayer, to upbraid other men, because they are so forward. But it is the worst of all, when men of knowledge, and such as live civilly, and would be counted good Christians, and indeed of the better sort, cannot abide to see others goe a little before them: but if they doe, presently they are hypocrites and dissemblers. Thus not prophanesse, nor wickednesse, but even Religion it selfe is a by-word, a mocking stocke, and matter of reproach; so that in England at this day, the man or woman that begins to professe religion, and to serve God, must resolve with himselfe to sustaine mockes and injuries, even as though he lived among the enemies of Religion, and not among professors; and as Religion increaseth and spreadeth it selfe, so doth the number of these mockers. O what a cursed sinne is this! To contemne the greatest favour that God can give us, that is, his holy Religion: for which we should rather praise him all the dayes of our lives. All that God can give a man in this World, is his Gospel; what then can God give to be regarded, when his Gospel is contemned?

This sinne was never amongst the Jewes; they indeed regarded it not so as it deserved, but who did ever make a mocke and scorne of it but England? O England, how canst thou answer this? God sends thee the most precious Jewell, that he can send to a Nation; and thou scornest it, and them that bring it, and them that receive it: even as though it were no blessing, but a curse: so that as Christ saith to the Iewes, for which of my good workes doe you stone me? So may the Lord say to England, I have given thee a fruitfull land, a blessed Prince, gold and silver, peace and libertie, plentie, and prosperitie: for which of these (O England) doest thou contemne my Religion? The least of these deserve love, but England hath a better than all these; that is, his Gospel, and Word of Salvation: and yet, that also is contemned (as being nothing worth) and those which confesse it, and those that bring it, and consequently God himselfe that gave it. If England had no more sinnes but this, this deserves that it should be said of us, that we are a Nation unworthy to be beloved above all Nations: for some Nations would have Religion, that they might love it, but they cannot have it: some have it and love it not: but in no Nation is it made a mocking-stocke, but in England. And where are those men but in England, who (like the dog in the manger) will neither entertaine religion themselves, nor suffer them that would? let us in time take heed of this sinne, as a sinne that crieth to God, to revenge so vile a dishonour done to his Majestie: neither is there any sinne that more certainly fore-shewes, and more forcibly hastens the removing of the Gospel from us. For high time it is to leave loving, where love procures disdaine: And to stay giving, where gifts are scorned.

Carie home this lesson to your great townes and Cities where you dwell; for in these populous places are these great mockers; for where God hath his professors, the Devill hath his mockers; and repent betimes of this sinne: for hold on in mocking, and be sure that God (who will not be mocked) will remove his Gospel from you; but if you leave this sinne, and entertaine the Gospel (as it worthily deserves) then be sure of it, God will continue his Gospel to you and your posteritie after you, in the face of all your enemies round about you.

There were then present inhabitants of the chiefe Cities and townes of the Land.

3. The third common sinne of England, is Blasphemie, many wayes; but especially in vaine swearing, false swearing, and forswearing, and the abuse of all the names and titles of the Lord God. This sinne is generall, even over the whole land, especially in Faires, and Markets, where men for a little gaine, will not care to call the Lord of Hosts to be witnesse to a lie, and the God of truth to testifie an untruth.

And which is worst of all, Gods holy name is used in vaine oathes, and ordinarie talke, when men have no cause to sweare at all: so that it is most lamentable to see and observe, that the name of any man of Honour, or Worship, is used more reverently, and lesse abused, than that fearefull and glorious name, the Lord our God.

4. The fourth generall and great sinne is, Prophanation of the Sabbath. A common sin every where; and yet so great a sinne, that where it reignes, in that Countrie, Congregation, family, man or woman, there is no feare of God, nor any true grace in them: for the keeping of the Sabbath, is the maintaining, increasing, and publishing of religion.

5. The fifth sinne of our Nation, is unjust dealing in bargaining betwixt man and man. How hard is it to finde an honest, simple, plaine-dealing man: and that even in such great assemblies as this is, I feare present experience will testifie: you are now many thousands gathered together, some to buy, some to sell, some to exchange: Remember that I have told you, an honest hearted, and plaine dealing man is hard to finde: therefore labour to approve your selves sincere hearted men: remember the counsell of the holy Ghost; Let no man oppresse nor defraud his brother in bargaining: for the Lord is the avenger of all such things. These sinnes are generall, and universall as a canker: and so are the sinnes of the 6. 7. and 8. Commandements, (though they be not altogether so common as these be) Murthers, Adulteries, Vsuries, Briberies, Extortions, Conzenages, they are a burthen under which our earth groanes; and they crie against us to heaven; so that upon as good, or much better cause may it be said to us, as to the Jewes, O Nation not worthy to be beloved.

Looke at the outward face of our Church, at the signes of Gods love, which are amongst us, and at Gods dealing with us; and behold, we are a most beautifull Church, a glorious Nation, a Nation to be admired and wondred at: but looke at the lives of our ordinarie professors, looke at our sinnes, and at our requiting of Gods love; and we are a people of Sodom, as full of iniquities as they were, whose sinnes are so many, so rife, and so ripe, that at the last they will even bring downe fire and brimstone, or some other strange judgement upon us, if repentance doe not prevent it, or the cries and prayers of holy men stay not Gods hand. So then let us all here assembled, grant and confesse, that wee are a Nation, so farre from being worthy to be beloved, as that wee are most worthy to bee hated, and to have all the wrath of God powred upon us.

Now then, are we so, and shall we continue so still? Nay, that is worse, and most wretched of all; then let every one of us learne this dutie; enter into our selves, search our hearts and lives, that they may lay open to our owne sight, to the confusion of us in our selves, that in God by repentance we may be raised up.

Our sinnes lie open before the face of God, and stinke in his presence, and crie for vengeance: and before the face of Gods Angels, who bewaile them; and before the face of the Devill, who rejoyceth in our confusions: and shall they lie hid onely to our selves? Now then, if we would have them hid from God, and stop the crie that they make against us, and keepe them from Satan, who accuseth us for them; we must so search our selves, that they may lie open to our owne hearts: Remember thou thy sinnes, and God will forget them: lay them open before thy owne face, and God will hide them from his: Write them up for thy owne selfe, and God will blot them out of his remembrance: but if contrariwise thou hidest them, then assure thy selfe, the more thou hidest, and buriest them, the more open doe they lie in the face of God; and then what will follow, but that they will all be disclosed at the last day, to thy eternall confusion. Therefore againe and againe, I exhort you in the name of God, Search your selves, finde out your sinnes, confesse them to God freely, and ingenuously; confesse their desert to be Hell and Damnation, humble your hearts to God, crie and call for pardon as for life and death, purpose and promise to leave them, begin a new course of life, beleeve stedfastly; and doubt not of pardon and forgivenesse in the blood of Christ, continue in that faith and that new course of life: So may England prevent Gods judgements, and quench that great action of unkindnesse, which God hath against them, and become a Nation as worthy (upon their faith and repentance) in CHRIST to be beloved, as for their peace and prosperitie, they have beene of all Nations of the earth admired.

Hitherto of the third generall point.

4. The fourth generall point in this exhortation, is the time limited them when they should search: Before the Decree come forth, &c. As though the Prophet should say, Israel repent, before God execute his judgements on thee, For behold the gracious dealing of God: Man sinneth, his sinnes deserve plagues, but God presently plagueth not, but deferres it, he puts a time betwixt the sinne and the punishment (ordinarily:) this he doth to shew his mercie unto mankinde, because he would not destroy them, if they would amend. Therefore after the sinne he smites not presently, but puts off his punishment, that in the meane time man may repent. Here the Prophet compares the Lord to a mother: for as she conceives the fruit in her wombe, and beares it a long time, ere she bring it out, so the Lord after a mans sinnes, or a peoples sinnes, conceives, that is, ordaines and decreeth a judgement for it, but he keeps it up, and all that while he beares it; But as she when her time is come, doth travaile and bring forth; so when the time that God hath appointed is come, and still sinne is not repented of, then his justice travels to bee delivered of that judgement, which Mercie hath kept up so long a time. Thus the old World had an hundred and twentie yeares given them for time of repentance; all that while God was in conceiving; at last when their sinnes were ripe, and no hope of amendment, then God travelled, and brought forth a fearefull birth, namely, the universall flood, to wash away, and take revenge upon the universall iniquities of those times. So many hundred yeares hee gave unto the Jewes, long he was in conceiving their destruction, and oftentimes he had it at the bringing forth, as in the captivitie of Babylon, and under Antiochus; yet his mercie stayed it, and still he travelled longer, tells them here by the Prophet, and yet the decree is not come forth, (though it bee conceived:) but at last when Israel would not repent, but grew worse and worse, (as in Christ his time) then he could containe no longer, but travelled indeed, though with griefe, yet hee hath brought forth: and what? a most fearefull birth, even an utter desolation of that Kingdome and Countrey, of their Citie, and Temple, and a dispersion of their Nation over all the world: but as a woman at last is delivered with danger and difficultie, with paine and sorrow; so the Lord long conceives, but at last brings forth his judgements: yet it is with griefe and unwillingnesse, and he is loth (as it were) and much grieved, to execute his most just judgements on those, who have professed his name: he often touched the Jewes a little, and as being unwilling to smite them, he drew backe his hand againe: but at last when their sinnes did so increase, and were so strong, that they even did wring out by violence his plagues from him; then with much bewailing of their great miserie (as we may see in Christ weeping for them) he executed his judgements on them. But as they are long a comming: so, when they come forth, they are the heavier; as a childe, the more fulnesse of time it hath, is the greater, the livelier, and the stronger; so Gods judgements, the longer God deferreth them, and is in conceiving them, the heavier are they when they come: that is manifest in the Jewes, once his owne people; for he hath destroyed their land with an irrecoverable destruction, and smitten their posteritie with a blindnesse of minde to this houre, so that to this day, when the old Testament is read, the vaile is over their eyes, that they cannot see the light of Christ Jesus, but plod on in fearefull and palpable blindnesse.

Israel

This Doctrine hath speciall use to this our Church, to teach us to looke to our selves betimes, and trie our owne wayes, and turne to the Lord; for wee cannot tell how farre off his judgements are: in reason they must needs be neere, they have beene so long deferred, and so justly deserved of us. Certainly, God hath long beene in conceiving judgements and plagues for the sinnes of England, and often hath Gods hand beene upon us, by warre, famine, pestilence, inundations; and yet it hath beene puld backe againe, and his sword hath beene put up into his sheath, and God hath stayed his birth even in the verie travell, and we have escaped; even as a man, whose necke hath beene upon the blocke, and the Axe holden up to strike: so then yet the day is not come, yet we have time: happie we that ever we saw this day, if now we have grace to repent, and search our hearts; for then we shall stay this judgement decreed, that it shall never come forth against us; but if we deferre to repent, and put off from day to day, and lie rotting still in our sinnes; then know, and beware, that as the decree is established, so it must needs come forth: and then when judgement is come forth, and the stroke striken, repentance is too late: therefore

A what he said to the Jewes, I say unto us, Search thy selfe, O England, (a Nation not worthy to be beloved) before the decree come forth, which is alreadie past against thee. Thus much for the fourth point.

5. Now followeth the last point; the reason of all. Why should we search our selves? The reason is included in the fourth point: For there is a decree come forth against thee. And though the execution be deferred, and though God be unwilling to take it out, yet without repentance, it is most certaine, it shall come forth, and be executed at the last. In one word, this is the reason. Repent, or else certainly God will take vengeance. But (will mans heart say) is this true? Or rather, these bee but words to feare men, and to keepe them in awe. I an-
B swer, for the proofe and experience hereof, never goe further than this place, and present example wee have in hand: the Prophet bids them Search, Search, and Repent: else as certainly as there was a judgement conceived, so certainly it should bee executed upon them: they would not heare, nor search, nor repent, but what followed; let all men judge whether God is not true of his word to them or no: yea, alas, who seeth not that God hath travelled indeed, and hath brought forth a fearefull judgement on them, and hath made them for these thousand yeares and a halfe, the gazing-stocke, the by-word, and the amazement of all the world.

C Thus was it threatned to the Jewes, and thus it is performed: and certainly thus hath it beene threatned, and thus shall it be performed to thee, O England, except thou prevent the judgements that are comming; O happie England, that I may say to thee, it is yet but comming. For as for the miserable Jewes, upon them (alas) it is come already: to those poore soules it can be said no more, Repent before the decree come forth, for it is now past: but thou art happie, for thy day is not yet come: yet I may say to thee, Repent before the decree come forth: and O happie England, that thou mayest heare this word (Before) sounding in thine eares. Therefore my beloved brethren, who are here assembled out (almost) of every corner of D this kingdome, heare my words, and carrie them home with you into all Countries. God is the same God still, as just, and as jealous, as ever he was; our sinnes are as ill, nay, much viler than the Jewes were; how can it be then, but that must fall to us that fell to them: therefore the zeale of Gods glorie, and my desire of your salvation makes me, that I dare not flatter, but tell you the truth: that is, that out of all question, if we search not our selves and repent, there is a generall judgement in preparing for us: certainly the Decree is out, and what can stop the execution of it, but Repentance; God hath long spared, and he hath beene long in travelling, therefore (though nothing can be said in way of prophecie) I am in my conscience perſwaded to feare, and that out of infallible grounds of the word of God, that a plague and a judgement, and that moſt fearefull, hangs over England: and that it is already pronounced upon this Nation, and ſhall be as certainly executed, without a viſible reformation: and becauſe I may ſeeme to ſpeake ſomewhat at large, give me leave to give you the reaſons inducing me hereunto.

1. Firſt, the Goſpell hath beene preached theſe five and thirtie yeares: and is daily more and more, ſo that the light thereof did never ſhine more gloriouſly, ſince the Primitive Church: yet for all this, there is a generall ignorance, generall of all people, generall of all points, yea, as though there were no preaching at all: yea, when Poperie was newly baniſhed, there was more knowledge in many, then is now in the body of our Nation: and the more it is preached, the more ignorant are many, the more blinde, and the more hardened (even as a ſtithie the more it is beaten upon, the harder it is,) ſo they, the more they heare the Goſpel, the leſſe they eſteeme it, and the more they contemne it: and the more God calls, the deafer they are; and the more they are commanded, the more they diſobey. We preachers may crie till our lungs flie out, or be ſpent within us, and men are moved no more than ſtones. O alas, what is this, or what can this be, but a fearefull ſigne of deſtruction? Will any man endure alwayes to be mocked? then how long hath God beene mocked? Will any man endure to ſtand knocking continually? If then God hath ſtood knocking at our hearts five and thirtie yeares, is it not now time to be gone, unleſſe we open preſently?

But if we will know what this argueth, to contemne the Goſpel, and not to repent when the word is ſo abundantly preached: reade the Storie of Eli his wicked ſonnes. He ſpake unto them, and gave them godly counſell, but they hearkened not unto the voyce of their Father. But will ſome ſay, that is no great matter, not to heare their father is a common thing: but marke what followeth; They would not heare their Father, becauſe the Lord would deſtroy them: a fearefull thing. Even ſo it is with a Nation or people: are they taught, and are they worſe and worſe? take heed: If Elies ſonnes obey not, it is becauſe God will deſtroy them.

1 Sam. 2. 13.

If therefore Eli, and many Elies have ſpoken to England, and England heares not, England obeyes not, England repents not: take heed the Lord in heaven ſay not. England will not heare the voyce of the Prophets, becauſe I will deſtroy it. Let no man ſay, we take upon us to prophecie; we onely give warning, and ſhew the danger by example of the like

2. My ſecond reaſon is this. One judgement executed, and not working repentance, is alwayes a forerunner of another: that Rule is certaine, and an evident truth, and needs no proving. Now we have beene viſited with Famines, A Earth-quakes, Peſtilence, Inundations, Thunder and lightnings in winter, and moſt ſtrange and unſeaſonable weather: but alas, all theſe have taken no effect: where is the humiliation, repentance, and reformation which they have wrought? therefore it muſt needs be, there remaines behinde a greater judgement. Men may be ſo mad to thinke theſe be ordinary things, and to come by courſe of Nature, and ordinary cauſes: but certainly they are the ſhaking of the Rod, and fore-runners of a greater judgement, unleſſe Repentance cut off their courſe. For looke as one cloud followeth another, till the Sunne conſume them; ſo one judgement haſtens after another, and repentance onely is the Sunne, which muſt diſpell them.

B 3. Thirdly, it ſtands with the juſtice of God, according as he hath revealed it in the Scripture, eſpecially in Deut. 28. out of the whole Chapter, it muſt needs be gathered as a Rule; I will curſe that people that breake my lawes: now we may not deny, but this land of ours, is for abundance of ſinne, a people of Sodom: all kindes of ſinnes, in all eſtates of men, rage and reigne every day more and more; therefore I conclude, that unleſſe we repent, and ſo diſſolve this cloud of judgement, that hangs over our heads; it cannot be but a moſt fearefull tempeſt is to come at the laſt, and when it is come, it will be too late to wiſh they had done it. Therefore in the bowells of Chriſt Jeſus, let this be to entreat and to exhort you all, to ſearch and looke into

C your ſelves, that ſo repenting and changing your wayes, you may get the ſword againe into his ſheath, which is already drawne out, but yet hath not ſtricken home; and may quench the wrath which is already kindled, but yet burnes not out as it will doe, if by repentance wee quench it not: and doe this everie one, as you tender the ſalvation of your owne ſoules, and the continuance of the Goſpel to this glorious Nation, and the peace and proſperous ſtate of this Church and Common-wealth. For let men make what cauſes they will, it is certainly ſinfulneſſe that overturneth kingdomes, and changeth ſtates, as all theſe kingdomes and ſtates have felt, who have continued finally to contemne the Goſpel.

The Prophet proceedeth, and deſcribeth more plainly the manner and ſtate of that plague, which God will ſend upon them; the meaning was partly opened before, to be in effect thus much; Search your ſelves, leſt God take his fanne and trie you, becauſe you would not trie your ſelves, and finding you upon the triall, not found wheat, but light chaffe, blow you to hell with the wind of his wrath. The Metaphor which the Prophet uſeth is this; he compares the Lord to a husbandman, great and rich, the whole world is his corne field; ſeverall nations, (as this of ours for one) are his heaps of corne: but theſe heaps of corne be full of chaffe, that that is, these particular Churches, are full of hypocrites; now a wise husbandman letteth corne and chaffe lie together no longer, than till the wind doth blow, and then he appoints his fanning time to sever his corne from his chaffe, and to blow away his chaffe, and lay up his corne: so God, the great and wise husbandman, will not let the chaffe lie for ever amongst the Wheat, he hath therefore appointed his fanning times, when to blow the chaffe into hell, and to gather his Wheat into heavenly garners.

Now Gods winnowing times are two; the one is at the last day, after this life, and that is Gods great winnowing day of all his corne, (that is, of all men) when the bad shall be severed from the good for ever, never to be mingled againe with them, but by the strong and powerfull fanne of his last and finall judgement to be blowne into hell: the wind of whose wrath, at that day, shall be stronger to blow them all away, than all the wind in the world to blow away one handfull of light chaffe.

2. Gods other fanning time, is in this world, and that is also double. The one is, when the word is preached: The preaching of the word is one of Gods fannes: For when the Gospel is preached to a Nation or Congregation, it fannes them, and tries them, and purgeth them, and so severs them, that a man may see a manifest difference of the chaffe and the wheat, that is, of the godly man and the wicked man: this preaching of the Gospel, doth Iohn the Baptist expressly call a fanne: where the holy Ghost pursueth this whole Metaphor most plainly; speaking of Christ, he saith, Whose fanne is in his hand, and he will throughly purge his floare, and gather his wheat into his garner, but the chaffe he will burne with fire unquenchable. The wind of this fanne of the Word preached is so strong, as that it severs the chaffe from the Wheat, that is, good professors from hypocrites in the visible Church, and blowes so strongly upon the wicked, that it brings them to the beginning of hell even in this world, for it so worketh upon the conscience, as if it cannot convert them, it strikes them with feare, terrour, and torment, either in life or at death, which torment of conscience is the very flashes of hell fire.

But when this first fanne of the Word will not serve to bring men to repentance, (for the Word preached doth not confound a man actually, but onely pronounce the sentence, and thereby strike the conscience) then God hath another fanne, and that is the fanne of his judgement: and that fanning or winnowing time is, when he executes his vengeance and his judgements on a Nation: this is his latter fanne, when the first will not prevaile, this is his powerfull and strong fanne driven about by the wind of his wrath: this fanne went over the old World, and swept them all away, and went over the Nation of the Jewes, and we see they are no more.

1. These three fannes of God, make a three-fold separation of the chaffe from the Wheat, that is, of the wicked from the Elect; with the fanne of his word, which is powerfull, he severs them in affection and disposition, and makes a distinction of them, so as generally the Wheat is knowne to be Wheat, and chaffe discerned to be chaffe, by the preaching of the word: but though the tares be knowne to be tares, yet both grow together, so that the word onely severs them in affection, and sets severall notes of distinction upon them both.

2. But then the second fanne of his judgements is more violent: for thereby he severeth them asunder in soule, gathering the soules of the godly as his Wheat into the heavens, and blowing the soules of the wicked into hell: but yet the bodies of them both lie together, as partakers of the same judgement, so subject to the same corruption, and are lodged in the same grave of the earth, and death hath like dominion over them all.

3. But afterwards at the last day, at Gods great harvest, and great winnowing time, he then with the wind of his power severs them asunder in soule and body: Wheat from the chaffe, Sheepe from the Goats: and separateth them, never to be mingled againe for ever and ever: and then with the wind of his wrath he blowes the chaffe into fire unquenchable, and with his loving favour gathereth his Wheat into the everlasting and glorious garners of heaven.

So then, the first severeth them in affection: The second, in soule for a time. The third, actually in soule and body for ever and ever.

Now of these three winnowing times, the holy Ghost speaketh here properly of the second: namely, the fanne of Gods judgement: so that the meaning of the Metaphor is this: search your selves and repent betimes, lest God come upon you with some fearefull Judgements, because you have so long contemned the fan of the word; and finding you too light to abide the triall, do take you away in the judgement, and cast you into hell: for as sure as the fan of the word hath made difference of you, which are chaffe, and which are Wheat, so sure shall the fanne of his judgements blow away the chaffe to hell and damnation. Thus much for the meaning.

Now for the use, for us in England, the case stands thus: Our Church doubtlesse is Gods corne field, and we are the corne-heape of God: and those Brownists and Sectaries are blind and besotted, who cannot see that the Church of England is a goodly heape of Gods corne: but withall we must confesse, we are full of chaffe; that is, of prophane and wicked Hypocrites, whose hearts and mindes abound in sinnes and rebellions: and many of our best professors are also too full of chaffe, that is, of corruption, and doe give themselves too much libertie in many sinnes; but alas, the pure Wheat, how thin is it scattered? how hard to finde a man, at least a family, which dedicate themselves to the Lord, in holy and ſincere obedience, and labour to make conſcience of all ſinnes: now therefore ſeeing we are Gods corne-field, and we have ſome pure Wheat amongſt much chaffe, therefore God will winnow us to finde out the corne: if he have but one corne of Wheat in a handfull of chaffe, but one good man of many, he will ſtirre all the heape for thoſe few cornes, he will not care to blow all the chaffe to hell, to finde out thoſe few cornes of Wheat, to lay them up in heaven: ſo that out of all queſtion, England being ſo full of chaffe, muſt looke to be winnowed.

Now for the firſt fanne of his word, it hath beene uſed in this land theſe five and thirtie yeares, and that as powerfully and as plentifully as any where in the world, and yet (alas) many are more God-leſſe, more ignorant, more prophane than ever they were, yea, wickedneſſe groweth, and the chaffe increaſeth above the Wheat; be ſure therefore, that God will bring his ſecond fanne upon us, becauſe we will not ſuffer the firſt, the milde and gentle fanne of his word to trie and ſearch us; therefore hee will bring the fearefull fanne of his judgements, and with it, he will blow ſoule and body into hell, with thoſe our ſinnes and corruptions, which we would not ſuffer the fanne of Gods word to blow from us. The firſt hath ſo long blowne in vaine, that the ſecond muſt needs come upon us, and it hath already begun to blow; three or foure blaſts have blowne over us, famine, peſtilence, earthquakes, fire, water, wind, theſe have ſo blowne ſome of us, that they have taken away a great number of us. For us that remaine, this onely remaines, that we ſtrengthen our ſelves by grace, to be able to ſtand againſt the next blaſt; for come it will, and when it comes, no wealth nor worldly thing can inable us to endure it, onely faith and repentance, and the grace of God will ſtand at that day. Now therefore, in that ſo fearefull a fanning abideth us; ſeeing it is ſo neere (as appeareth by the blaſt already paſt over us, which are nothing but the forerunners of a greater tempeſt:) what ſhould be our care (except we care not to be blowne body and ſoule into hell) but to labour to eſchew this fearefull fanne of Gods wrath: or at leaſt, if it come upon us, that it may not blow us to hell, but haſten us to heaven. If thy heart be touched to aske how this may be: I anſwer thee, onely to follow the Prophets advice in this place, by ſearching and trying our ſelves. The way to eſcape Gods triall, is to trie thy ſelfe: and to eſcape Gods judgement, to be judge to thine owne ſoule; and ſo the way to eſcape the fearefull fanne of God, is to fanne thine owne heart by the Law of God. For whomſoever the firſt fanne (that is, the word of God) doth worke upon, theſe men are never blowne away with the fanne of Gods judgements. O then, entertaine the Word of God into thy heart, ſubmit thy ſoule unto it, let it pierce, and trie, and ranſacke thy heart, and lay before thee thy wretched eſtate by thy ſinnes; and when thou ſeeſt thy nakedneſſe and miſerie, confeſſe it, bewaile it, be humbled for it, crie and call for mercie and forgiveneſſe; pray againſt thy ſpeciall ſinnes, ſtrive to purge them out, as the poiſon of thy ſoule, crave grace from God againſt thy ſinnes; and if thou ſeeſt any ſinnes more welcome to thy nature, more deere unto thee, and which more prevaile againſt thee, than others doe, pray againſt theſe ſinnes, and ſtrive againſt them above all: and endevour, that by the fanne of Gods word, they may be blowne away from thee. When thou haſt done this, then marke what will come of it; when thou haſt fanned thy ſelfe, God will not fanne thee: but when the fanne of his judgement comes, and blowes ſo ſtrongly upon the wicked, then the Lord finding thee already fanned, and cleanſed by his word, will ſpare thee, and his judgement ſhall either blow over thee, and paſſe by thee untouched (as over Lot in the deſtruction of Sodom) or elſe ſhall fanne out all thy corruptions, and blow thee up to heaven, to be laid up as pure Wheat in the heavenly garners and manſions of glory, which Chriſt aſcended to prepare for thee.

Now then amongſt thoſe many buſineſſes, with which this world doth cumber every one of us (all which ſhall periſh with the world it ſelfe) let us, good brethren, ſpare ſome time for this great buſineſſe. Martha may be cumbred about many things, but this is that one thing which is neceſſarie; therefore whatſoever is done, let this not be undone. Once a day put thy ſelfe and thy life under the fanne of Gods Law, trie thy ſelfe what thou art, and thy life, how thou liveſt. Once a day keepe a Court in thy conſcience, call thy thoughts, thy words, and deeds to their triall: let the ten Commandements paſſe upon them, and thy ſinnes and corruptions which thou findeſt to be chaffe, blow them away by repentance; ſo ſhalt thou remaine pure and cleane Wheat, fit for the houſe and Church of God in this world, and for his kingdome in heaven. But if we will not doe this, then alas, what will follow? my heart grieveth to utter: but I muſt, unleſſe I ſhould be a falſe Prophet: And therefore I will. Our long peace, plentie, and eaſe have bred great ſinnes, ſo great, that they reach to heaven, and provoke Gods Majeſtie to his face, and ſo ſtrong, that they will violently draw downe judgements from God upon us: which when they come, they will be ſo powerfull and ſo violent, that they will blow us away like chaffe, and bring this kingdome to ſome miſerable ruine. O therefore how happy are we, if we can entertaine this doctrine, and practiſe it: for in ſo doing, we ſhall prevent Gods judgements, we ſhall continue the Goſpel to this Land, and preſerve this glorious Nation from being deſtroyed or diſpeopled, by ſome fearefull judgement.

Beloved, you come hither to this place, purpoſely to buy and ſell, and thereby to better your eſtates in this world: how happy then are you,

In the plague at London, there died ſome weekes almoſt 2000. a weeke in 92. but in 1603. there died 3300. in a weeke.

At Sturbridge Faire.

you, if beſides the good markets you make for your bodies and eſtates, you learne alſo how to make your ſelves abide the triall of Gods judgements, and how to be made pure corne, fit to repleniſh the garners of heaven, and how to continue Gods favour and the Goſpel to this Nation. If thou goe away with this leſſon, thou haſt a Jewell more worth, than if thou ſhouldeſt goe home poſſeſſed of all the great riches of this Faire: you call this and ſuch like times, Faire times: but if thou learne this leſſon right, then thou mayeſt ſay, that this was the faireſt day indeed, that ever ſhone upon thee, ſince thou waſt borne. This precious Jewell which I have ſpoken of all this while, I here offer unto thee. Every one brings hither ſome-thing to be ſold, this is the merchandize that I bring, and ſet to ſale unto you: what ever commoditie any of you bring, it is from ſome quarter of this land, but all is from the earth; but this that I bring it is from heaven, and all the earth cannot yeeld it: and as it is from heaven, ſo it is of a heavenly vertue, and will worke that which all the wealth in this faire is not able to doe: therefore caſt not to buy the baſeſt and let paſſe the beſt of all; and never alleage that it is above thy compaſſe, and being a Jewell is too deare and coſtly for thee; for I offer it freely unto you, and to every one of you: I pronounce unto you from the Lord, that here this bleſſed doctrine is offered unto you all in his name freely, and that you may buy it without monie. Happy is that day, when thou comming ſo farre to buy things for thy body, and paying ſo deare for them, doeſt meet with ſo precious a Jewell, the vertue whereof will ſave thy ſoule, and payeſt nothing for it. Thou mayeſt hereafter rejoyce and ſay; I went to buy and ſell, and to helpe my body: but I have alſo learned to ſave my ſoule. I went thither to helpe to maintaine my owne eſtate: but I have learned to helpe to maintaine England in proſperitie: for aſſuredly, if we would all of us learne this leſſon, and practiſe it, we might aſſure our ſelves of the glorious proſperity of England, to continue from generation to generation: whereas alas, if we continue and goe forward in our ſinnes and impenitencie, it is greatly to be feared, that neither the Goſpel, nor this peace, will reach to our poſteritie. Therefore now to make an end; I once againe, and laſtly commend this doctrine to you all, and every one of you, (for this merchandize that I bring is of that nature, that though ſome take it, yet there is alſo enough for every one) and I commend it unto you, even from the mouth of God himſelfe: thinke of it I charge thee, as ever thou lookeſt to appeare before the face of Chriſt Jeſus the great Judge, at the laſt day; and if thou wouldeſt eſcape the rigor of that judgement, enter now into judgement with thy ſelfe, and ſearch thy ſelfe: if thou now wilt not receive this doctrine, then ſhall it at the laſt day be a bill of Enditement againſt thee: for if it ſave thee not, it ſhall condemne thee; thinke of it therefore ſeriouſly, as a matter that concernes thy ſoule and body; yea, and thy poſteritie, and this whole Realme, all which ſhall ſmart for it, if we repent not. And if the body of our people, and thoſe whoſe hearts are wedded to the world, will not entertaine this doctrine, then I turne unto you that feare the Lord, and to you I direct my laſt warning: Search, O ſearch, and trie your hearts and lives, renew and revive your faith and repentance, that if judgement doe come and blow upon this Nation, and drive the Goſpel from it, and it to hell; that yet you may have a teſtimonie to your conſciences, that you did not pull downe this generall calamitie, but for your parts laboured to have prevented it, by your earneſt prayers and heartie repentance: that ſo the poſteritie enſuing may not curſe you, but ſpeake reverently of you, and praiſe God for you, and wiſh that all had done as you did; for then they had enjoyed this goodly land, and all Gods bleſſings with it, as we their forefathers did afore them: and ſo ſhall our names not rot, but flouriſh amongſt the poſteritie to come, which ſhall be partakers of the deſolation: And when we have renued our repentance, let us then every one of us deale with the Lord by earneſt prayer for this Church and Nation, that the Lord would ſhew his mercie upon it, and continue unto it this peace and the Goſpel: it is nothing with the Lord to doe it, his powerfull hand is not ſhortned, he can continue our peace, when the Papiſts looke for hurli-burlies; he can continue the Goſpel, when they hope to ſet up their Idolatrie againe: let us therefore plie the Lord with our prayers, and with Moſes ſet our ſelves in the breach, and pray for the ignorance of the multitude, and bewaile their ſinnes, who bewaile not their owne. So did Noah, Daniel, and Iob, in their ages, and prayed for the people in generall calamities: let us all be Noahs, Daniels, and Iobs in our generations: If we doe thus, then when judgements come, we ſhall either turne them away from our Nation, or at the leaſt, we ſhall deliver our owne ſoules.

Ezech. 14. 13.

Let us now turne to the Lord in prayer, and becauſe it cannot be hoped, but that this our generall ſinfulneſſe muſt needs end with ſome heavie judgement; let us deſire the Lord ſtill to ſpare us, and give us time and leiſure to repent: that ſo we entring into our ſelves, and ſearching our hearts, and turning to the Lord; he may turne away his imminent judgements: and that when his wrath doth burne out indeed, we may then be counted worthy in Chriſt, to eſcape thoſe things which muſt needs come upon the world. Amen.

TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFVLL,

Sir EDVVARD COOKE, Knight,

His Majesties Atturney Generall;

AND

Sir THOMAS HESKITH, Knight,

Atturney of his Highnesse Court of Wards and Liveries, and one of his Majesties Honourable Counsell in the North,

Grace and Peace from Iesus Christ.

RIght Worshipfull, give me leave to put you both in one Epistle, whom one service, one place, one profession, one order, one Religion have so neerely combined: as you are Brethren many wayes, and especially in the profession and practice of one Religion; so vouchsafe to be joynt Patrons of this little after-birth, this fœtus posthumus, of that worthy man Master Perkins, now deceased. I send you here one of the shortest, and one of the sweetest of his Treatises: had it beene as well brought forth by me, as it was begot by him, it had beene a childe not unworthy of so great a Father: but seeing it is now a Fatherlesse childe, be you the Tutor to this Orphan, at whose hands Orphans and wards have beene well vsed. The Father whilest he lived was a shining light to this our Church; and being dead, is a shining starre in heaven: for he turned many to righteousnesse; and his doctrine will shine in Christian Churches, whilest the Sunne shineth upon the earth. The subject of this Treatise is the Ministerie, whereof are laid downe the duties and dignities. And well doth he couple these two together: for some can challenge the dignities of the Ministerie, and cunningly cast the duties from their shoulders: others performe the duties, but are kept from the dignities duly belonging to that calling: but as he that will doe the duties, may justly challenge the dignities; so he that will expect the dignities, must doe the duties of a Minister: therefore in this building, these two beames are in great wisdome well set together by this wise Master builder, and so closely coupled, as the idle or ambitious man cannot looke at the dignities, but he must withall behold the duties; nor the painfull and laborious man see his dutie, but withall shall see the dignitie thereto belonging.

And surely (Right Worshipfull) none might better have written of this subject than he: for who may more worthily describe the dignities of the Ministerie, than he, who neither by doctrine nor conversation, was ever the least disgrace unto his Ministerie? Or who may better challenge the honour of his calling, than he, who was ever an honour to his calling? And who might better teach the duties of the Ministerie, than he, who so discharged them, as Envie it selfe cannot justly reprove, and the Enemies themselves cannot but commend? And who may better teach them to others, than he that carefully practised them in his owne person? And as none could be a fitter

Author

* Answer to Perkins his reformed Catholike by E. a Priest.

Author of this diſcourſe than he, ſo not many fitter Patrons than your ſelves: not many in your profeſſion better Schollers, nor any that better love Schollers than your ſelves: and you are ſome of thoſe few in this wicked age, who willingly yeeld all dignities and due reverence to ſuch Miniſters, as you ſee willingly to diſcharge the duties of good Miniſters. Well would it be with the Miniſterie of England, (and the better with it, the better with England) if all as great as you, were as good friends to it as you. And if the Papiſts except, and ſay, how can this be, for that you have beene perſecuters of their Prieſts? Let me anſwer once for you, who often anſwer for many diſtreſſed men: they perſecute you with ſlander, that ſay you perſecuted them, (but be content to beare your part in Popiſh ſlanders, with our Prince and State, our Counſellors and Clergie, our Parliaments and Lawes; for none of theſe have eſcaped theſe viperous tongues) for though you have executed the Lawes upon ſome of them, in your ſeverall places, yet not with ſharpneſſe nor ſeveritie, but with mercifull juſtice, and that alſo not as they were Prieſts, but Plotters, Practicers, Subverters, and Seducers: and as they were Prieſts, you ſought their reformation, not their ruine. And if they, who can hardly diſcharge themſelves from being Prieſts of Baal, have had but Iuſtice, and that alſo tempered with Mercie, it ſhewes how good regard you have, and how much you eſteeme all good and faithfull Miniſters, which are Gods Interpreters. In a word, if all our Miniſters were ſuch as this Treatiſe deſcribeth; or came but as neere it as the Author hereof did; and if all our great ones did uſe and eſteeme good Miniſters as you doe, we ſhould then ſoone pull the Miniſterie from under that foot of contempt, with which this prophane age doth daily tread upon it. The Church of Rome, who are farre wiſer in their kinde, than the children of light, have taken other and ſtrange courſes to magnifie the Clergie. They teach, that the ſtate Eccleſiaſticall, is ſo farre more excellent than the Civill, as the Sunne is than the Moone; and that not in ſpirituall onely, (for that we denie not) but in temporall power, pompe, and eſtate: and that therefore the chiefe of their Clergie, is as farre above the mightieſt Emperour, as the Sunne is above the Moone: and as the Moone borroweth her light from the Sunne, ſo doth the Emperour his State and power from the Pope.

They teach, that the Clergie is a ſtate ſo diſtinct and abſolute of it ſelfe, as it hath not to doe with the Civill ſtate; yea, they exempt their Clergie, from being any way ſubject to the temporall Magiſtrate. And though their crimes be never ſo many or monſtrous, yet the Prince or Civill authoritie, hath nothing to doe to take notice thereof, much leſſe to puniſh them: and hereupon great volumes are written, and many Acts and Decrees are made in their Canon Law, De exemptione Clericorum. They extoll their Clergie above the Temporaltie, allowing the Prieſts both Bread and Wine in the Sacrament, but leaving the Laitie bread alone. They make them in their Maſſe mediators betwixt Chriſt and God the Father, and creators of their Creator and Redeemer, when and as often as themſelves liſt. And finally, they ſend for the moſt part, all their Clergie immediately to heaven without let, whereas all the Temporaltie (except Martyrs) muſt paſſe by Purgatorie. Here are great buildings, but on a ſandie foundation, goodly Caſtles, but built in the aire; if theſe deviſes were of God, they would certainly ſtand; but their long tottering, threatens a ſudden fall.

Contrariwiſe, our Church, or rather the corruption of our Church, by avoiding this Scilla, have fallen into Charybdis; by avoiding one extremitie, have fallen into the other, by taking too much dignitie and authoritie from our Miniſterie, and by laying too much povertie, contempt, and baſeneſſe upon it. It were a worke worth the labour of the wiſeſt heads, to put downe the true meane betweene both extremes, and worth the labour of our Noble King, to take order that the meane be kept, without riſing to the right hand or falling to the left. This ſhort Treatiſe may hap to give ſome light and directions therein, or at leaſt may incourage and ſtirre up their hearts, in whoſe hands it is to doe it. Vnder your worthy names would I have it ſee the world, not ſo much for that I am bound to you both in many private and particular reſpects, (though that be much) as for that I know you both to be of ſo right and reformed a judgement in this caſe, as you would have none Miniſters but of ſufficient gifts, and unblameable lives, lives, nor thoſe Miniſters put to their penſions, or uncertaine ſalaries, but to have certaine and ſufficient maintenance proportionable to their charge, and beſeeming the honour of a Chriſtian Church: God continue you both ſtill in that minde, and make many more of the ſame with you; ſo ſhould we have as flouriſhing a Church, as any Chriſtendome hath ſeene. Goe forward in that and other your religious reſolutions, it is the true way to honour both here and in a better world: ſtand firmely for the truth, and boldly againſt the Popiſh enemies thereof, as hitherto you have done: Religion had never more cauſe to thanke you, and all that doe ſo, than now it hath: for her enemies were never ſo inſolent ſince they were our enemies: but if you and others hold on, as in your ſeverall places you have well begun, and others take the like courſe, here is hope their inſolencies will be eaſily (if timely) repreſſed, and themſelves neereſt the fall, when they imagine they are in the full. The Lord bleſſe and aſſiſt you in your paineſull places, and make you on earth inſtruments of his glory, to the good of his Church; ſo ſhall you be veſſels of glorie in the kingdome of Heaven. And thus commending this little Treatiſe to your reading, and my ſelfe to your favour, I take leave; and will ever reſt, 1605.

lives, nor like Ministers put to their penifons, or mercenarie shifts; but to have certaine and sufficient maintenance proportionable to their charge, and deserving the honour of a Christian Church: God continue you both full in that minde, and make many more of the same with you; so should we have as flourishing a Church, as any Christendome hath beene. Goe forward in that and other your religious resolutions, it is the true way to honour both here and in a better world: stand firmely for the truth, and boldly against the Popish enemies thereof, as hitherto you have done: Religion had never more cause to thanke you, and all that doe so, than now it hath; for her enemies were never so insolent since they were our enemies: but if you and others hold on, as in your several places you have well begun, and others take the like course, here is hope their insolencies will be easily (at timely) repressed, and themselves neerest the fall, when they imagine they are in the full. The Lord blesse and stirre you in your painefull places, and make you on earth instruments of his glory, to the good of his Church; so shall you be vessels of glorie in the kingdome of Heaven. And thus commending this little Treatise to your reading, and my selfe to your favour, I take leave, and will ever rest, 1605.

If there be with him a Messenger, an Interpreter, one of a thousand to declare unto man his righteousnesse: Then will hee have mercie on him, and will say, Deliver him, that hee goe not downe into the pit: for I have received a reconciliation.

IN this Chapter, and the former, Elihu a holy, learned, noble, and wise young man, had conference with Iob in matters of high and excellent divinity: the points of his Conference are these: From the first verse of this Chapter, to the seventh verse, is a Preface to his speech. From thence to the thirteenth verse he repeateth certaine propositions of Iob, and reproveth them: from thence to these words, he instructeth Iob in certaine points touching Gods dealing with sinners; and those are two.

1. How God preserveth a sinner from falling.
2. How God restoreth a sinner being fallen.

The meanes whereby God preserveth a sinner, are set downe to be two principally.

1. By admonitions, in dreames and visions.
2. By scourges and chastisements, when the first will not prevaile. And these are laid downe from the thirteenth verse unto these words.

Then followeth the second point, namely, the restoring of a sinner, when both the meanes formerly spoken of, have not prevailed with him, but that through his corruption he is fallen: and concerning this point, hee handleth these particulars.

A 1. The remedie and meanes of his restoring.
2. The effect that followeth thereupon.

The remedie is laid downe in these words now read unto us; then followeth the effect, which is, that when a sinner is restored by repentance, then the graces of God are plentifully powred upon him, both for soule and body: from these words to the end of the Chapter.

The intent then of this Scripture, is, that God useth meanes in his mercie to preserve sinners from falling into sinne; but if they doe, then he in much greater mercie affordeth them meanes and helps to rise againe. And this is the summe and substance of the words. Now that meanes and remedie is the matter I purpose to speake of, out of these words: The meanes then to restore a sinner after a fall, is to raise him by repentance to a better estate than he was before: and that is inclusively, and by implication taught in this Text. But the instrument by whom that great worke is to be wrought, is here in plaine termes laid downe to be a Minister of God, lawfully called and sent by God, and appointed by his Church to that great dutie. So that these words containe a worthie description of a true Minister; and he is here described

1. By his titles, which are two, an Angel, an Interpreter.
2. By his rarenesse, One of a thousand.

The summe and scope of this Text, is a description of the instrument by whom God raiseth a sinner into the state of grace and salvation: namely, a Minister of his word, and he is described

First, by his titles.

3. By his office: which is, to declare unto man his righteouſneſſe.

4. By the bleſſing that God giveth upon the labours of this true Miniſter: which is, then God will haue mercie upon the ſinner.

5. By his Commiſſion and authoritie in the laſt words; God will ſay, Deliuer him, that he goe not downe into the pit: for I haue receiued a reconciliation. Let us ſpeake of them in order as they lie in the Text: and firſt of his titles.

1. Title an Angel.

1. The firſt title of a Miniſter of God is, he is called a Meſſenger, or an Angel: and not here alone, but elſewhere in the Scripture: Malac. 2. 7. He is the Meſſenger of the Lord of Hoſts. And in the Reuelation, the Miniſters of the ſeuen Churches are called the Angels of thoſe Churches. So that it is apparant, a true Miniſter is an Angel of God in one place, and in the other place the Angel of the Church. He is an Angel or Meſſenger, ſent from God to his Church.

Reuel. 2. & 3. chap.

He is Gods Angel and the Churches.

This conſideration affords matter of much uſe. And firſt for Miniſters themſelues.

Vſe 2. For Miniſters.

[a] The Sermon was preached in the Vniuerſitie Church, to the body of the Vniuerſitie.

The moſt of us in this place [a] are either Prophets, or the ſonnes of Prophets.

If thou be a Prophet, thou art Gods Angel: if a ſonne of the Prophets thou intendeſt to be; then marke thy duties. Prophets and Miniſters are Angels, in the very inſtitution of their calling. Therefore thou muſt preach Gods Word as Gods word, and deliuer it as thou receiueſt it: for Angels, Ambaſſadours, and Meſſengers, carrie not their owne meſſage, but the meſſage of their Lords and Maſters who ſent them: and Miniſters carrie the meſſage of the Lord of hoſts: therefore they are bound to deliuer it as the Lords, and not their owne.

Vſe 1. For Miniſters. They muſt preach Gods word, as Gods word.

For they carry not their owne meſſage but Gods.

In the firſt Epiſtle of Peter, 4. 11. we are bid, If any man ſpeake, let him ſpeake, not onely the word of God, but as the word of God. Gods word muſt be ſpoken, and as Gods word: then ſhew thy faithfulneſſe to the Lord, in diſcharging thy hands ſincerely of that meſſage, which he hath honoured thee to carrie: Gods Word is pure, therefore purely to be thought upon, and to be delivered. Then let all that are Gods Angels, and would be honoured as his Angels and Ambaſſadours, thinke it no leſſe reaſon to doe the duties of Gods Angels, leſt (as many men marre a good tale in the telling) ſo they take away the power and Majeſtie of Gods word, in the manner of delivering it.

Vſe 2. For Miniſters. They muſt preach Gods word in the evidence, and demonſtration of Gods Spirit.

The ſecond uſe concernes the Miniſters alſo: Are they Gods Angels? Therefore they muſt preach Gods word in evidence and demonſtration of the Spirit of God: for he that is Gods Angel, the Spirit of that God muſt ſpeake in him. Now to ſpeake in the demonſtration of Gods Spirit, is to ſpeake in ſuch a plainneſſe, and yet ſuch a powerfulneſſe, as that the capacities of the ſimpleſt may perceive, not man, but God teaching them in that plainneſſe, and the conſciences of the mightieſt may feele, not man, but God reproving them in that powerfulneſſe. That this is ſo, appeares by Saint Paul: If a man pro-

pheſie aright (ſaith the holy Ghoſt) the unlearned or unbeleeuing man comes in, hee thinkes his ſecret faults are diſcloſed and laid open, he thinkes all men ſee his nakednes, and doe reproue him for it, he therefore falls downe, and ſaith, Surely God ſpeakes in this man.

This is done: firſt, by teaching plainly.

In which words, obſerue an admirable plainneſſe, and an admirable powerfulneſſe (which a man would thinke, could not ſo well ſtand together.) Firſt, plainneſſe: for whereas the unlearned man perceiueth his faults diſcouered, it followes neceſſarily he muſt needs underſtand; and if an unlearned man underſtand it, then conſequently it muſt needs be plaine. Secondly, powerfulneſſe; in that his conſcience is ſo convinced, his ſecret faults ſo diſcloſed, and his very heart ſo ript up, that he ſaith, Certainly God ſpeakes in this man. This is the evidence and demonſtration of Gods Spirit. It is thought good commendation before the world, when men ſay of a Preacher; Surely, this man hath ſhowne himſelfe a proper Scholler, of good learning, great reading, ſtrong memorie, and good deliverie; and ſo it is, and ſuch commendation (if juſt) is not to be contemned: but that that commends a man to the Lord his God, and to his owne conſcience is, when he preacheth ſo plainly to the capacitie, and ſo powerfully to the conſcience of a wicked man, as that he thinkes, doubtleſſe God is within him. Art thou therefore an Angel of God? then magnifie the Spirit of God, and not thy ſelfe in the preaching of his Word.

Secondly, powerfully in that plainneſſe.

Miniſters muſt magnifie Gods Spirit, and not themſelues in preaching.

Vſe 2. For Hearers. They are to receiue them and their doctrine willingly and reuerently.

The next uſe is for the hearers; and they are here taught, that if their Miniſters be Angels ſent them from God, then they are to heare them gladly, willingly, reverently, and obediently: gladly and willingly, becauſe they are Ambaſſadours; reverently and obediently, becauſe they are ſent from the high God, the King of Kings, and doe deliver his Ambaſſage. God ſaith, the people muſt ſeeke the law at his mouth: and good reaſon, for if the Law be the revealed will of God, and the Miniſter the Angel of God, then where ſhould they ſeeke the will of God, but at the mouth of his Angel? The reaſon therefore followeth well in that place: they ſhould ſeeke the Law at his mouth, for he is the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts: and this muſt all Chriſtians doe, not onely if their doctrine be pleaſing unto them, but though it croſſe their corruption, and be quite contrarie to their diſpoſitions; yea, though it be never ſo unſavoury and hard unto nature, yet in as much as it is a meſſage from thy God and King, and the teacher the Angel or Meſſenger of that God, therefore both he and it muſt be received with all reverence, and with the very obedience of the heart and ſoule. And this is the cauſe why a convenient reverence and honour is to be given of all good Chriſtians, even to the perſons of Gods Miniſters (eſpecially when they adorne their high calling with a holy life:) even becauſe they are Angels of God. Saint Paul teacheth, that women ought to be modeſtly attired in the

Mal. 2. 7.

For it is Gods meſſage, though they be men that bring it.

1 Cor. 11. 11.

Congregation,

Congregation, because of the Angels: it is not onely because the holy Angels are present, and alwayes beholders of our service of God, but even because the Ministers which are Angels and Messengers sent from God, are there, delivering their Message and Ambassage received from God. And thus we have the first title given to the Minister; he is an Angel.

An Interpreter.

Secondly, he is an Interpreter, that is, one that is able to deliver aright the reconciliation made betwixt God and man: I say not the Author of that reconciliation, for that is the God-head it selfe; nor the Worker of this reconciliation, for that is the second person, Christ Jesus: nor the Assurer or Ratifier, for that is the holy Ghost: nor the Instrument of it, for that is the glad tidings of the Gospel: but I say, he is the Interpreter of it; that is, first one that can open and explaine the covenants of grace, and rightly lay downe the meanes how this reconciliation is wrought. Secondly, one that can rightly and justly apply meanes, for the working of it out. Thirdly, one that hath authoritie to publish and declare it when it is wrought: and by these three actions, hee is Gods Interpreter to the people.

Then he is also the peoples Interpreter to God, by being able to speake to God for them, to lay open their wants and nakednesses, to confesse their sinnes, to crave pardon and forgivenesse, to give thankes in their names for mercies received: and in a word, to offer up all their spirituall sacrifices unto God for them: and so every true Minister is a double Interpreter, Gods to the people, and the peoples to God. In which respects, he is properly called Gods mouth to the people, by preaching to them from God; and the peoples mouth to God, by praying for them to God: and this calling sheweth how great and glorious a calling this Ministerie is, if it be rightly conceived. Now then for the use of it.

Ministers must have the tongue of the learned.

First, if every true Minister must be Gods Interpreter to the people, and the peoples to God: then hence we learne, that every one, who either is or intends to be a Minister, must have that tongue of the learned, whereof is spoken in Esay 50.4. where the Prophet saith (first in the name of Christ, as he that is the great Prophet and Teacher of his Church; and secondarily, in the name of himselfe and all true Prophets, while the world endureth.) The Lord God hath given me a tongue of the learned, that I should know to speake a word in season to him that is wearie: where note the wearie soule, or troubled conscience, must have a word in season spoken to him for his comfort; and that cannot be spoken without the tongue of the learned. And lastly, that tongue of the learned must be given of God. Now to have this tongue of the learned, which Esay speakes of, what is it but to be this Interpreter which the holy Ghost here saith a Minister must be. But to be able to speake with this tongue is; first, to be furnished with humane learning: secondly, With divine knowledge, as it may by outward meanes be taught from man to man: but besides these, he that will speake this tongue aright, must be inwardly learned, and taught by the Spirit of God: the two first he must learne from men, but the third from God: a true Minister must be inwardly taught by the spirituall Schoole-master the holy Ghost. Saint John in the Revelation must take the booke, that is, the Scripture, and eat it; and when he had eaten it, then (saith the Angel) he must goe preach to Nations, tongues, people, and to Kings: which was done, not than Saint John had not eaten that booke, in the comming down of the holy Ghost, the very end of whose comming was to teach them spiritually; but that in him Christ might teach his Church forever: that no Minister is so fit to preach to Nations and to Kings, untill they have eaten the booke of God: that is, till after and besides all the learning that man can teach them, they be inlightned by the spirit of God himselfe: and this teaching is it that maketh a man a true Interpreter, and without this he cannot be: for how can a man be Gods Interpreter to his people, untill he know the minde of God himselfe? and how can he know the minde of God, but by the teaching of the spirit of God? For as no man knoweth the thoughts of a man, but the spirit of man that is in him: so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Indeed we may be mans Interpreter by humane teaching, and may interpret the Scriptures truly and soundly as a humane booke or storie, for the increase of knowledge; but the divine and spirituall Interpreter, which shall pierce the heart, and astonish the soule of man, must be taught by the inward teaching of the holy Ghost.

2. With divinitie.
3. He must be inwardly taught by Gods Spirit.

Revel. 10. 8.

Acts 2.

This is to eat the booke of God.

1 Corinth.

Let no man think I here give the least allowance to Anabaptisticall fancies, and revelations; which are nothing but either dreames of their owne, or illusions of the Devill: for they contemne both humane learning, and the study of the Scripture, and trust wholly to revelations of the spirit; but Gods Spirit worketh not but upon the foundation of the word: onely I teach this, that a Minister must be a divine Interpreter, an Interpreter of Gods meaning. And therefore he must not onely read the booke, but eat it; that is, not onely have the knowledge of divine things flowing in his braine, but ingraven in his heart, and printed in his soule by the spirituall finger of God: and therefore for this end, after all his owne study, meditation, conference, commentaries, and after all humane helps, he must pray with David, Open thou mine eyes that I may see the wonders of thy Law. The discerning of those wonders requires a spirituall illumination, and the opening of them requires the tongue of the learned. Therefore after all the study which flesh and blood, and humane reason can yeeld, pray with the Prophet, Lord give me the tongue of the learned, that I may be a right Interpreter of thy holy will.

This is no approbation to Anabaptists, who depend onely on revelations, and neglect all meanes.

For Miniſters. Eſay 13. They muſt be holy and ſanctified men: and ſo be firſt of all Interpreters to themſelves.

Furthermore, inaſmuch as Miniſters are Interpreters, they muſt labour for ſanctitie, and holineſſe of life. In Eſay, the kingdome of Aſſyria is ſaid to be ſanctified or ſet apart, to deſtroy Gods enemies. If there be a certaine kinde of ſanctification neceſſarie for the worke of deſtruction, then how much more is true ſanctification neceſſarie for this great and glorious worke of the edification of Gods Church? A Miniſter is to declare the reconciliation betwixt God and Man; and is he himſelfe not reconciled? Dare he preſent another man to Gods mercie for pardon, and never yet preſented himſelfe? Can he commend the ſtate of grace to another, and never felt the ſweetneſſe thereof in his owne ſoule? Dare he come to preach ſanctification with polluted lips, and out of an unſanctified heart? Moſes might not ſtand upon the Mount in Gods preſence, till he had put off his ſhooes from off his feet, Exod. 3. and dare any man preſume to come into this moſt high and holy preſence of the Lord, untill he have mortified his corruptions, and caſt off the unruline ſſe of his affections?

Exod. 19. 20. Levit. 10. 3.

In Exodus, the Prieſts are bid to ſanctifie the people, and in Leviticus it is ſaid, that God will be ſanctified in all that come neere him: but who come ſo neere unto him as the Miniſters doe? So that it is apparent, Miniſters doe ſanctifie the people; and in ſome conſtruction, God himſelfe. Now, ſhall they one way be ſanctifiers of the people, and no way of themſelves? Surely, if it be ſo, they are but lame Interpreters. And this is the reaſon doubtleſſe, why unſanctified Miniſters, and ſuch as are of looſe converſation, beſtow ſuch fruitleſſe labours in the Church: many want no learning, no abilitie to interpret, and yet how few ſoules doe they bring to God? Some it may be are converted by their Miniſterie, that God may ſhew the efficacie is not in the perſon of the man, but in the ordinance of God; but few doubtleſſe (for ought that we can ſee) to teach us, how God hateth him which will take in hand to reconcile others to God, himſelfe being unreconciled. Seeing then Miniſters are Gods Interpreters to the people, to declare and publiſh their reconciliation with God, and that they cannot be reconciled, unleſſe they be ſanctified, and can ſo hardly be ſanctified by the miniſterie of an unſanctified man; let therefore all true Miniſters of God, firſt, be Gods Interpreters to their owne conſciences, and their owne ſoules Interpreters to God, then ſhall they know more perfectly how to diſcharge the office of true Interpreters betwixt God and his people.

For elſe they will hardly doe good to others.

And thus we have the true titles of a true Miniſter.

Now it followeth in the Text, One of a thouſand.

2. Part of the deſcription is the rarenеſſe of a good Miniſter. He is one of a thouſand.

Here is the ſecond part of this deſcription, which is by the rarenеſſe or ſcarceneſſe of good Miniſters: which is laid downe in a very ſtrange phraſe; namely, that a true Miniſter, one that is a right Angel, and a true Interpreter, is no common or ordinarie man, but thin

The meaning.

The meaning hereof is to be conceived either properly, or figuratively: in the figurative ſenſe, it is ſpoken in relation to Miniſters themſelves: in the proper ſenſe it hath a compariſon with all men: the figurative and hyperbolicall ſenſe is, that of all the Miniſters in the world, not one of many is a right Angel, and a true Interpreter: the plaine and proper ſenſe is, that amongſt the men of this world, there is not one of a thouſand which proves a true Miniſter. For this point let us examine three points: the truth of it, the reaſon of it, and the uſe of it.

1. The truth hereof.

The truth hereof is manifeſt, by the experience of all ages, where in it is ſtrange to obſerve, how few men of any ſort, eſpecially of the better ſort, affect the calling of a Miniſter: and which is more ſtrange, how few of thoſe that are Miniſters in name and title, doe deſerve theſe honourable names of an Angel and an Interpreter; and the truth is too manifeſt in common practice, to inſiſt much upon it: rather therefore let us ſee the reaſons of it, and they be theſe principally.

2. The reaſons hereof. 1. Reaſon. The contempt of it, it being hated by wicked men.

First, the Contempt that lyeth on that calling, it being always hated by wicked and prophane men, becauſe it diſcovers their filthineſſe, and unmaskes their hypocriſie: and their doctrine oftimes is a fretting corraſive to their conſcience, that they cannot welter and wallow ſo quietly, and ſo ſecretly in their ſinnes, as otherwiſe they would; therefore is it that they ſpurne both againſt the calling, and the men, and watch them narrowly, and take hold of their leaſt infirmities, thereby to diſgrace them; judging that to caſt contempt on that calling, is to remove ſhame from their owne ſhamefull courſes: nor is it poſſible, but that they ſhould thus hate this calling, in as much as they hate ſo deadly both that Law and Ambaſſage which they bring, and that God whoſe Ambaſſadours they are.

This hatred and diſgrace in the wicked world, was that that cauſed Jeremie to crie, Woe is me, and made him in the ſcorning of his naturall reaſon, curſe the time that ever he was a Prophet: for ſaith he, I am a man of contention, every man is at ſtrife and at enmitie with me.

Jerem. 15. 10.

2. Reaſon. The difficultie of diſcharging the duties.

The next reaſon, The difficultie of diſcharging the duties of his calling: to ſtand in Gods preſence, to enter into the holy of holieſt, to goe betwixt God and his people, to be Gods mouth to the people, and the peoples to God: to be the Interpreter of the eternall law of the old Teſtament, and the everlaſting Goſpel of the new: to ſtand in the roome, and to beare the office of Chriſt himſelfe, to take the care and charge of ſoules: theſe conſiderations are ſo many amazements to the conſciences of ſuch men, who doe with reverence approach, and not with raſhneſſe ruſh unto this ſacred ſeate: this made S. Paul crie out, Who is ſufficient for theſe things? And if Paul ſaid, Who is? no marvell though many a man ſay, I am not ſufficient: and doe therefore draw their neckes from this yoake, and their hands from this plough, untill God himselfe or his Church doe presse them to it.

2. Cor. 2. 16.

2. Reason. Want of maintenance.

The last reason is more peculiar to this age of the new Testament; namely, want of maintenance and preferment, for them that labour in this calling: men are flesh and blood, and in that respect must be allured, and wonne to embrace this vocation, by some arguments, which may perswade flesh and blood: the world hath in all ages beene negligent herein, and therefore God in his law tooke such strict order for the maintenance of the Levites: but especially now under the Gospel, this calling is unprovided for, when it deserves best of all to be rewarded: certainly it were a worthy Christian policie, to propound good preferments to this calling, that thereby men of the worthiest gifts might be wonne unto it: and the want thereof is the cause why so many young men of speciall parts, and greatest hope, turne to other vocations, and especially to the Law, wherein at this day the greatest parts of the finest wits of our kingdome are imployed: and why? but because they have all the meanes to rise; whereas the Ministerie for the most part yeeldeth nothing, but a plaine way to beggery: this is a great blemish in our Church, and surely I wish the Papists, those children of this world, were not wiser in their kinde, (in this point) than the Church of God: the reformation hereof is a worke worth the labour of Prince and people: and speciall care is to be had in it, else it will not be reformed: for doubtlesse had not God himselfe in the old Testament, taken such straight orders for the livings of the Levits, they had beene put to no lesse extremities, than is the Ministerie of this age. And this reason added to the other, makes them perfect; and all put together make a reason infallible: for who will undergoe so vile a contempt, and undertake so great a charge for no reward: and where there is so great contempt, so heavie a burthen, and so meane a reward: what marvell, if a good Minister be one of a thousand?

Deut. 10.9 & 18.1. Numb. 18.26.

This makes many of our best wits runne from Divinitie to Law,

Now let us make use of this doctrine: The use is manifold, and yeelds instructions to many sorts of people: First, Rulers and Magistrats are here taught, if good Ministers be so scarce, therefore to maintaine and increase, and doe all good they can to the Schooles of the Prophets, to Universities, Colleges, and Schooles of good learning, which are the Seminaries of the Ministerie: herein the example of Samuel is very worthy to bee followed, in whose dayes the Schooles of the Prophets flourished; and even Saul himselfe, though hee did much hurt in Israel, yet when he came to the Schooles of the Prophets, his hard heart relented; he could doe them no hurt, nay, he put off his robes and prophecied amongst them. So should all Christian Princes and Magistrats advance their Schooles, and see them both well maintained, and well stored: the reason is evident and forcible.

3. The use of it. 1. To Rulers to maintaine Universities, Colleges, and Schooles of the Prophets.

1 Sam. 19.20, 21, 22, 23, 24.

A good Minister is one of 1000. If therefore they would have the number increased, let them maintaine the Seminaries. And againe, if Antichrist to uphold his kingdome, the kingdome of Satan, be so carefull herein, to erect Colleges, and indow them with living, to be Seminaries for his Synagogue, and use so great meanes to sowe his tares in the hearts of young men, that so they may sowe them in the hearts of the people abroad: shall not Christian Princes be as carefull, or rather much more zealous, for the increasing of the number of godly Ministers? shall Baal have his foure hundred Prophets, and God have but Elias alone? Great shame must it be to Ahab, or to any King, whose kingdome is in that estate.

1 Kings 18.22.

The Jesuites diligence is such in teaching, and the readinesse of some of their Novices such in learning, (the devill himselfe doubtlesse putting to his helpe withall) that in three yeares (as some of them say of themselves) they proceed in humane learning, and in the fourth, in Divinitie: which if it be so, then it may be a good Lesson, for these our Schooles of learning, and an inducement to move all that have the government thereof, to labour to advance learning by all good meanes, and to give it more speedy passage: And it may shame some that spend so many yeares in the Universitie, and yet alas for all that prove not one of a 1000. In these our Schooles are by Gods mercie, many young trees planted by the River side of this goodly Orchard, which by good ordering and dressing, may prove goodly Trees in the Temple of God, and strong Pillars in the Church: but they are like tender plants, and must be cherished. Princes and great men, by allowing maintenance, and the Governours by establishing good orders, and looking carefully to their execution, must see that these plants have sufficient moysture to grow speedily to perfect ripenesse; and that then they bee transplanted in due time, into the Church and Commonwealth: these be the trees spoken of in Ezekiel, which grow by the sides of the river, which floweth out of the Sanctuarie: Waters out of the Sanctuarie must nourish them, and so they grow unto their perfection: but take away these waters, take away the libertie of Princes, and good discipline from the Universities, and these Trees must needs decay and wither: which if they doe, then the small number of good Ministers will be fewer and fewer, and of one of a thousand there will not bee one of two thousand.

And the Jesuits to continue their late founded Hierarchie.

Ezech. 47.12, &c.

In the next place, Ministers themselves are here taught: First, if good Ministers be so scarce, then let every man feare to make them fewer than they be: every man therefore for himselfe, labour first for abilitie, then for conscience to discharge his dutie: namely, to be an Angel, to deliver faithfully Gods Ambassage, and a true Interpreter betwixt God and his people: thus if thou doest, then howsoever the number of good Ministers is small, yet it shall be nothing smaller for thee.

Vse 2. For Ministers. 1. Let every man feare to make them fewer.

2. If there be so few, labour to increase them, for

2. Labour to encrease them by winning others to it.

The rather because the Pope doth so to uphold his superstition. At Rome, Rhemes, Doway.

for the more they are, the lesse burthen lieth upon each particular man: therefore let every Minister by his teaching, and by his conversation labour so to honour his calling, that he may thereby allure and draw others to a love and liking thereof.

3. Let them one love another and joyne together. Galat. 2.9.

3. Are good Ministers too thin sowne? are there so few of them? then let all good and godly Ministers give the right hand of fellowship one to another, and joyne together in love; and by that meanes arme themselves against the scorne and contempt of the world. We see they that are of a kindred, or a brotherhood, or any kinde of societie, the fewer they are, the more closely doe they combine, the more firmely doe they hold together against forraine force: so ought Gods Ministers to doe, because their number is so small: if they were many, lesse danger in their dissunion. But seeing they are so few, the more it concerneth them to cut off contentions, and all occasions of debate, and to joyne hand in hand against these common adversaries.

Vse 3. For Students. 1. To consecrate themselves and their studies to that calling.

In the third place, young Students are here taught, seeing a true Minister is but one of a thousand, that therefore they bend their studies and their thoughts to the Ministerie: for they well know it is an old Proverbe, the best things are hard to come by: and certainly there are so few good Ministers, because the holy Ministerie in it selfe is so high and excellent a calling: and as it is a shame to the men that there are so few good Ministers, so it is a commendation to the calling: whose honour and excellencie is such, that as we see here scarce one of a thousand attaines unto it: therefore men of the most excellent gifts are here invited to dedicate themselves unto the most excellent vocation: yea, very reason it selfe would urge a man to be one of a thousand.

To furnish themselves with the true ornaments of a Minister.

2. And further, as they are to intend this calling as the most rare and excellent; so this must teach them likewise, to hasten to furnish themselves with all good helps and meanes, that they may become true Ministers and able Interpreters, and not too long to sticke in those studies, which keepe a man from the practice of this high function; for it is not to live in the Universitie, or in the College, and to studie, though a man never so fast devoure up learning; but to be a good Minister, is that that makes a man one of a thousand.

Vse 4. For hearers. 1. To reverence the person, and receive the doctrine

In the last place, Hearers are here taught their dutie, first to respect with reverence the person, and to receive with reverence the Message of every true Messenger, seeing it is so rare a thing to finde a true Minister: for as nothing is more vile and base than an evill and lewd Minister, (whom Christ compares to salt which hath lost his savour, which is good for nothing but to be cast out, and trodden downe of men:) so is there none worthy of more love and reverence than a holy Minister: for as Esay saith, their very feet are beautifull which bring glad tidings, and we should kisse their feet which bring newes

Matth. 5. 13.

A of peace: therefore all good Christians are to receive and use a good Minister, as S. Paul saith the Galatians did him, even as an Angel of God. Hast thou then a godly Pastor? runne to him for counsell, for comfort, for counsell, use his company, frequent his Sermons, account him worthy of double honour, thinke it no small or ordinarie blessing, for thou hast one of a thousand, and blesse God for bestowing his mercy on thee, which he had denied to so many others: for some have no Minister, some have a Minister, but yet alas, he is not one of a thousand.

Galat. 4. 16.

2. Fathers to dedicate their sonnes to the Ministerie.

And for thee, all men that are Fathers, may heare learne to consecrate their children to God in the service of the Ministerie, considering that it is so rare and excellent a thing to be a good B Minister: nay, that man should thinke himselfe happie, and honoured of God, who may be father to such a sonne, as shall prove one of a thousand.

Vse 5. For all men. Pray that God would increase the number.

In a word to conclude this point, all men must here learne, seeing good Ministers are so scarce, to pray the Lord of the harvest, to thrust out more labourers into the harvest: and for those that are called already, that God would make them faithfull in that high function. And as Elisha craveth of Elias, that the good Spirit may be doubled and trebled upon them, so that the number may be increased. And thus we have the truth, the reason, and the use of this, that a good Minister is one of a thousand.

1 Reg. 2. 9.

It followeth, To declare unto man his righteousnesse. C

3. Part of the description by his office, that is, to declare unto man his righteousnesse

Here is the third part of the description of a Minister, that is, by his office to declare unto man his righteousnesse: that is, when a poore sinner, by his sinnes (the foulenesse whereof he seeth, and the burthen whereof he feeleth) is brought downe, as it were to the very gates of Hell, when this sinner by the preaching of the Law is brought to a true sight of this miserie: and againe by preaching the Gospel, is brought to lay hold on Iesus Christ: Then it is the proper office of a Minister, to declare unto that man his righteousnesse; namely, that though in himselfe he be as ill, and as foule as sinne can make him, and as the law can discover him to be: yet in Christ he is righteous, and just, and by Christ so D justified, as he is no more a sinner in the presence and account of God: this is the righteousnesse of a Christian man, this is the justification of a sinner. And to declare this righteousnesse to him that repents and believes, is the proper dutie of a true Minister.

The meaning.

In the Acts Paul saith of himselfe, that he witnessed to the Iewes, and to the Gentiles, the repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Iesus Christ. In which words is laid downe the compleat dutie of a Minister (as he is a publike Angel or Interpreter) first, to preach repentance, which a man must performe to God, whom by his sinnes he hath grievously offended; secondly, to preach faith in Christ, and free forgivenesse, and perfect salvation through that faith in Chriſt, to all that ſhall truly beleeve in him. And after both theſe followeth that which is here ſpoken of, which comprehendeth both the former; namely, to declare unto man his righteouſneſſe. So that in theſe words, are inclufively laid downe, theſe points of a Miniſters calling: First, a true Miniſter may and muſt declare unto a ſinfull man where righteouſneſſe is to be found, namely, in Ieſus Chriſt the righteous. Secondly, how that righteouſneſſe may be obtained, namely, by doing two duties: First, by denying and diſclaiming his owne righteouſneſſe, and that is done by repentance: Secondly, by claiming and cleaving to Chriſts righteouſneſſe, and that is done by faith. Thirdly, a true Miniſter may and muſt declare this righteouſneſſe to him, that is, firſt, publiſh and proclaime, that it is ready to be beſtowed on every ſinner, which will thus apprehend it, and that it is able to juſtifie and ſave him: ſecondly, beſides a bare publication of this juſtification, he muſt (as Paul did) witneſſe and teſtifie it to the conſcience of the ſinner, that it is as certainly true, as God is true. For as a witneſſe in doubtfull caſes is called, that by his Teſtimonie he may cleere the truth; ſo when the conſciences of poore ſinners are wavering and doubtfull what to beleeve, when they doubt of this righteouſneſſe, then is a true Miniſter as a faithfull witneſſe of God to averre and teſtifie the truth, from his owne conſcience, knowledge, and feeling of the infallible certaintie of Gods promiſes, unto the doubtfull and diſtreſſed conſcience of the ſinner.

1. He muſt declare where true righteouſneſſe is. 1 John 2.

2. How it may be obtained.

3. He muſt declare him, that is, 1. Shew that him readie for him if he be-leave and repent,

2. He muſt teſtifie, and aſſure him of it.

Thirdly, beſides declaration and teſtification, he is to maintaine this truth, and this righteouſneſſe, (if the ſinners conſcience be not yet quiet) againſt all gaine-ſayers, againſt the power of darkneſſe, and all the gates of hell; that this is true and perfect righteouſneſſe to him that apprehends it, as afore is laid downe: and this is ſo infallible to every ſoule that repents and beleeveth, that the Miniſter may aſſure it to the conſcience of the ſinner in the word of truth, and in the name of God, and may call to witneſſe all Gods Saints, and all his holy Angels, and may pawne unto him his owne ſoule upon it, that it is moſt true, that this is true, perfect, and all-ſufficient righteouſneſſe.

3. He muſt maintaine it, and averre it againſt all doubts and temptations,

Thus we ſee in ſome meaſure, what it is to declare unto a man his righteouſneſſe. And this is the peculiar office of a Miniſter of God, and this is the height and excellencie of his office. In the want of godly Miniſters, I confeſſe that godly Chriſtian men may one helpe another in the performance of theſe duties, and that with profit; but it is the proper function of a godly Miniſter to doe it, and the promiſe and bleſſing belong properly to him; as the conſciences of all penitent ſinners will teſtifie in this caſe: let Davids ſerve for many, who when he was caſt downe even to the mouth of Hell, by that feareful diſcoverie of his two hideous ſinnes by Nathans preaching, and when the faith of his ſoule began to wreſtle againſt Hell, and ſtrive againſt deſpaire, and to apprehend the mercie of God in Chriſt: then I ſay, could not the teſtimonie of all the men in the world have given him that joy, comfort, and aſſurance, that Nathan did, when he ſaid in the word of a Prophet, and of a true Miniſter, God hath taken away thy ſinne, thou ſhalt not die: what did Nathan here, but declare unto man his righteouſneſſe? What did Nathan here but the dutie of every true Miniſter?

This duties is ordinarily peculiar to Miniſters.

2 Sam. 12.

Vſe 1. For Miniſters.

If this be the office and dutie of a Miniſter; and if ſuch be the height and excellencie of his office, let us ſee then what uſe we may make of it.

First, for the Popiſh Miniſterie, they doe inſufficiently declare it.

First, concerning the Miniſterie: It firſt diſcovereth how nakedly, weakely, and inſufficiently, the Popiſh Church doth declare unto man his righteouſneſſe, who will let a man ſeeke it in himſelfe, where alas it is not: for Paul himſelfe teſtifieth, that his deſire is, that he may be found out of himſelfe, and in Chriſt; and yet certainly, if ever man had righteouſneſſe of his owne worth truſting to, Paul had: this is the cauſe why ſo many of that religion finde not that righteouſneſſe, which will pacifie and ſatisfie their conſciences when they come to die; and why ſo many of them, when it comes to the pinch, doe then goe out of themſelves, and with us doe ſeeke for this righteouſneſſe in Chriſt, where both aſſuredly and ſufficiently it is to be found.

Philip. 3. 8, 9.

Secondly, our owne.

Then for our owne Miniſterie, here they are taught; firſt the true manner of teaching, and declaring righteouſneſſe: namely this, not to preach the Law alone, or the Goſpel alone, as ſome unadviſedly doe (but both without profit) but both the Law and the Goſpel; the Law to breed repentance, the Goſpel to worke faith: but in order; firſt the Law to breed repentance, and then the Goſpel to worke faith and forgiveneſſe, but never before.

Both the Law and the Goſpel.

2. To be holy men themſelves.

Secondly, they are taught to be holy, to be ſanctified and reconciled themſelves: for is it thy office to declare unto man his righteouſneſſe, and not thy owne to thy ſelfe? and how canſt thou be a true witneſſe to teſtifie betwixt God and the ſoule of a ſinner, when thy owne ſoule knoweth not, nor feeleth the truth of it? certainly ſuch men are lame witneſſes betwixt God and the ſinners ſoule. David ſaith to the ſinner, I will inſtruct thee in the way wherein thou ſhalt goe: but he firſt of all in the ſame, layes downe his owne experience in a large ſtorie of his owne repentance, and of Gods mercie on himſelfe. And although God ſometime doe ſatisfie and ſave the poore diſtreſſed ſoule of a ſinner, by the teſtimonie of ſuch men, to teach us that the vertue is not in the men, but in the truth of Gods covenant: yet alas, how few are they, to teach us how pleaſing it is unto him, when a Miniſter is a declarer of that righteouſneſſe to others, which he firſt hath himſelfe; and is a witneſſe of the truth to others, which he firſt knoweth in his owne experience.

Pſal. 32.

For elſe they will convert but few.

Vſe 3. To Miniſters, not to care for the contempt of the world.

Thirdly, the conſideration of this high excellencie colleucie of their calling, must arme all true Ministers against the scorne and contempt of the World, which by wicked men is cast like dust and mire in the face of Ministers; let this suffice them, they are the men that must declare unto man his righteousnesse, even he that scornes and contemnes the Ministerie, he hath no righteousnesse in him, unlesse it be by the meanes of a poore Minister: then doe thou thy dutie, and he that mockes thee, hath cause to honour thee. And let this encourage Students to consecrate themselves to the Ministerie: for what calling hath so high an office, as this, To declare unto man his righteousnesse? And assuredly how ever in this wicked world thou art little accounted of, (for if it did not so, it were not wicked:) yet thou art honoured in the hearts of all Gods children, and even in the consciences of some, whose tongues doe smite thee: and the soules of thousands, when they die shall blesse thee, who in their lives cared not for thee: and the devill himselfe doth envie, and the holy Angels themselves doe wonder at the excellencie of thy calling, in that thou hast power to declare unto man his righteousnesse.

Vse 2. For Students. To consecrate themselves to that high calling.

Vse 3. For hearers. Seeke righteousnesse both in the Law and the Gospel.

In the next place, hearers may here learne; first, if their righteousnesse be thus to be declared as afore, then if they will have it, they must seeke it as it may be found; namely, both in the Law, and in the Gospel, and not in the Gospel alone; and first in the Law, then in the Gospel: for he must never looke to taste the sweetnesse of the Gospel, which hath not first swallowed the bitter pills of the Law: if therefore thou wouldest be declared righteous by the Gospel, be content first to be pronounced miserable by the Law; if thou wouldest be declared righteous in Christ, then be content first to be pronounced sinfull and unrighteous in thy selfe. Secondly, all men may here learne, how they are to esteeme of Gods Ministers, and what reverence and obedience is due to their persons, and their doctrine: these are they which must declare unto thee thy righteousnesse, if thou hast any. Are thou beholding to him, who when thou hast lost a Iewell (which was all thy wealth) can tell thee where it is, and helpe thee to it againe? or to him who when thy cause is in triall at the barre, will plead it for thee? or to him, who when thy health is lost, can tell thee how to get it againe? then behold how thou art beholden to a godly Minister; who when Adam had lost both for himselfe and thee, that Iewell of righteousnesse, which was, & is the whole wealth of thy soule, can truly tell thee where it is, and how it is to be had againe: and who, when the Devill haleth thee to the barre of Gods justice, to receive triall for thy sinnes, can draw thee there such a declaration, as the devill himselfe shall not be able to answer? and who, when thy soule is sicke to death, and even to damnation, can binde the deadly wounds thereof. A good Minister therefore is worthy (as the Apostle saith) of double honour, whose dutie we see is to declare unto man his righteousnesse. And to conclude this point al-

2. What to esteeme of Gods Ministers.

A so, the consideration of the height of this office of a Minister, may encourage fathers to dedicate their sonnes to this holy calling: for the Physitian care for thy body, or the Lawyer for thy cause, are both inferiour duties to this of the Minister. A good Lawyer may be one of ten: a good Physitian one of twenty, a good man one of a 100. but a good Minister is one of a 1000. A good Lawyer may declare the true state of thy cause: a Physitian may declare the true state of thy body: But calling, no man can declare unto thee thy righteousnesse, but a true Minister. And thus we see the office or function of a Minister. Now followeth the blessing.

Then will he have mercie upon him.

The fourth generall part of this description, B is the blessing, which God giveth to the labours and function of a true Minister: then, that is, when a man by the preaching of the Law is brought to true humiliation and repentance, and by the preaching of the Gospel, to true faith in the Messias; Then will he (that is, God) have mercie on him, (that is, on the penitent and beleeving sinner.) Behold here the admirable sympathy, and the cooperation of God, and the Ministers office. Man preacheth, and God blesseth: Man worketh on the heart, and God giveth grace: a Minister declares unto man his righteousnesse, and God saith, so be it, he shall be righteous: a Minister pronounceth mercie to a penitent sinner, and forthwith God hath mercie on him. Here we see the great and glorious account C which God makes of the word of his Ministers, by them truly taught, and rightly applyed; namely, that he as it were eyeth his blessing unto it: for ordinarily till a man know his righteousnesse, by the meanes of an Interpreter, God hath not mercie on him; but as soone as he doth know it, then as we see here, God will have mercie on him, and will say, Deliver him, &c. This is no small honour to Ministers, and to their Ministerie, that God himselfe gives a blessing unto it, and worketh when they worke, and as it were stayeth waiting, when they declare unto man his righteousnesse, and then hath he mercie on him: so powerfull, and so effectuall, is the word spoken by a Minister of God. This is that which Christ avoucheth, Whatsoever you loose in earth, shall be loosed in heaven. Will you know the meaning hereof? Reade S. Iohn, Whose sinnes soever you remit, they are remitted: whose you retaine, they are retained: will you have the meaning of both? Reade Esay: God destroyeth the tokens of Southsayers, and maketh Wizzards, and Astrologers fooles, turneth worldly wisemen backward, and makes their knowledge foolishnesse, but he confirmeth the word of his servants, and performeth the counsell of his messengers, thus God binds and looseth with them, enricheth and retaineth with them, by confirming their word, and performing their counsell.

For example,

A true Minister seeth a sinner hardened in his sinnes, and still rebelling against the wil of God;

he

For fathers to make their sonnes Ministers.

4. Points, the blessings: then will God have pitie on the sinner.

God and his Ministers worke together.

Matth. 16.16.

Iohn 20.23.

Esay 44.25,26.

he therefore declareth unto him his unrighteousnesse, and his sinne, and denounceth unto him the miserie and curses of Gods justice, as due unto him for the same: hee hath bound on earth, hee doth binde on earth, this mans sinnes are likewise bound and retained in Heaven. On the other side, he seeth a man penitent and beleeving, he pronounceth forgivenesse of sinnes and happinesse unto him for the same: he looseth him from the bond of his sinnes, by declaring unto him his righteousnesse; this man also is likewise loosed and remitted in heaven, and God himself doth pronounce him clear in heaven, when the Minister doth on earth. This God confirmeth, the word of his servants, and performeth the counsell of his messengers.

A

The use of this doctrine is first, for Rulers and great men of this world: this may teach them to be nursing Fathers, and nursing Mothers unto the Church, whose authoritie they see is so great over them, as that their decree stands ratified in heaven. Therefore though their place be great, and they be Gods upon earth, yet must they withall acknowledge, that in justifying a sinner, in interpretation, in declaring unto man his righteousnesse, in binding and loosing, their power also is immediate from God, and above theirs; and they themselves, as they are men, must submit themselves to this powerfull word of the Ministers, to be taught by it, and to be reconciled by meanes of it, and highly must they respect it; for though a man speake it, yet it is the Word of God: this is to licke the dust of Christs feet, which the Prophet speaketh of: not as the Pope would have it, to hold the stirrop, and leade the horse, and hold the water to the Pope, to kisse his toes, to hold their kingdomes of him as tenants at will, or by curtesie; but reverently to acknowledge the ordinance to be Gods, the function and dutie to be high and excellent, to acknowledge the power of their keyes and censures (being rightly applyed,) their promises and their threatnings to be as from God, and to submit to them accordingly.

Vse 2. For Ministers.

Secondly, Ministers themselves here must learne, when they take the word of reconciliation into their hands and mouthes, to call to mind whose it is, even the Lords, and that he worketh with them; and that therefore they must use it in holy manner, with much feare and reverence: It is not their owne, they may not use it as they list. And lastly, hearers are here taught, first to see how mad such men be, which carelesly, and seldome heare Sermons, but upon any occasion flie to Wizzards and Charmers, which are the Devils prophets: for see the difference of these two, the Wizzard and Charmer hath societie with the Devill, the Preacher with God: the Charmer hath his calling from the Devill, the Preacher his from God: the Charmers charme is the Devils watchword, (when he charmeth the Devill doth the feate:) the Preachers doctrine is Gods watchword; when he truly applyeth it, God himself ratifieth and makes it good: therefore let all men feare to have thus to doe with the devill, by seeking to his slaves; and let them draw neere to God by entring into fellowship with his holy Prophets and godly Ministers.

2. Vse Gods word reverently.

Vse 3. For hearers. First, heare Gods word often and reverently.

And further, if when they preach, and thou beleevest, that God hath mercie on thee; then learne what reverence thou and their word is worthie of, which is thus accompanied with Gods mercie and forgivenesse: and then learne to heare the word of God with feare and trembling, for it is Gods Word, and not theirs: and when a true Minister saith unto thee, on a true ground, I denounce thee a sinfull man, or under the curse; or I declare thee to be righteous and a childe of grace; it is all one as though God from heaven had said so unto thee. If any man aske; But is it not as good, if another man pronounce forgivenesse unto me upon thy repentance? I answer, yes undoubtedly, if it be in extraordinarie times, or places, when there are no Ministers: for otherwise, certainly this blessing is principally tied unto the Ministers calling: for it is not said of any private mans calling, any where in the Scripture, as it is here said of the Ministers: If an Angel, an Interpreter, come to a man, and declare unto him his righteousnesse, then (marke the connexion) will God have mercie on him, and will say, Deliver him.

D

Whence comes this blessing? from this promise of God. If therefore other callings will challenge ordinarily the same blessing, then must they have the same promise besides; other Christians being private men, though they be sanctified, and have a good measure of knowledge, yet have they not the same Spirit of discerning that godly Ministers have: nor can so fully and truly judge when a man hath repented, when not; and therefore cannot so truly pronounce the sentence of the Law or Gospel, nor have the power ordinarily by their good conference and Christian counsell, to convert a soule, but to confirme one converted: but that power ordinarily belongs to the publike Ministerie of the word: therefore it followeth, that ordinarily they have not the power to pronounce the sentence of binding or loosing upon any man. I confesse, in times or places where no Minister can be had, God blesseth the labours of private men that have knowledge, sometimes even for the converting of a man to God, and for comforting him at the howre of death, and giveth a vertue and power to that sentence, which they shall pronounce one upon another in repentance: and as this is extraordinarie, and in the want of ordinarie Ministers; so in that case, a private man of knowledge and godlinesse, is made a Minister for that time to himselfe, or to another; even as a private man in cases of extreme danger, when no Magistrate is present, is made a Magistrate himself to defend his owne life. So then as in want of a Magistrate, the sword of the Magistrate is put into the hands of a private man; so in the want of Ministers, the keyes of the Ministerie are committed and put into the hands of private men, (as in the dayes of persecution) that then they may with comfort admonish and advise: and with power pronounce mercie, and forgivenesse one unto another, upon their true repentance. Yet alwayes remember that in so doing, a private man is as a Minister for that time and in that case: but ordinarily (and alwayes in setled Churches) this power pertaineth to the Ministerie, and is theirs alone by ordination; and to them belongeth the promise and the blessing, that when he hath declared to a man his righteousnesse, then God will have mercie on him. And thus we see also the blessing of God upon the function of the Ministerie, and annexed thereunto by the mercifull dispensation of God. It followeth,

Object. 5 Part. The Commission, which is, Deliver the penitent man from hell.

Should will say, Deliver him, that he goe not downe into the pit: for I have received a reconciliation.

The fifth and last part of this description is, the Commission & authoritie given unto him, which is Regia, as never was given to any creature, and is this; When a Minister of God hath declared unto a man his righteousnesse, hath brought him to the state of grace, and God in his favour hath had mercie on him; then God saith to the Minister, Deliver that soule from hell, for I have pardoned him in Christ, I am reconciled to him.

How a Minister is a Redeemer.

In which words, authoritie is given to a Minister of God, to redeeme a man penitent from hell and damnation: not that he is the meanes of working out this redemption, for that is wholly and onely in Christ himselfe; but he is Gods instrument, and Christs instrument: First, to apply those meanes unto him: Secondly, to pronounce his safetie and deliverance when these meanes are used. Here is the principall honour of all belonging to that calling: and it is the greatest that ever was vouchsafed to any creature, Man or Angel: for it is a plaine Commission, To goe and deliver such a man from the power of hell, and to redeeme him into the state of Gods children, and to make him heire of heaven: Angels never had this Commission, they are Messengers sent out for the good of those whom Ministers have redeemed, and they have brought many comfortable messages unto them: but it was never said to any Angel, Deliver that man that he goe not downe into the pit, as it is here said unto a Ministers; not any but Ministers have this Commission. To some callings God saith, Worke thou for man, build him houses, provide him sustenance; to the Physitian, heale that man; to the Lawyer, doe that man justice: to the Souldier, fight for him: to the Magistrate, defend him: to the King, governe him, and see that every one doe his duty: to none but to the Minister doth he say, Deliver him that he goe not downe into the pit.

More than Angels.

Hebr. 1. ult. More than any other calling of men.

Use 1. For Ministers. Ergo. they must pray and preach diligently.

If this be so, then for the use first, Ministers must learne here, that if they will have the honour of Redeemers, then must they doe the duties of Redeemers, they must pray earnestly for the people; for that is one meanes whereby they redeeme men.

A They must say with Samuel, God forbid that I should cease to pray for you: They must mourne for the impenitent, when they will not turne to God. So did David, His eyes gushed out with rivers of waters, because men kept not Gods Law. And Jeremie, who wished a fountaine of teares in his eyes, that he might weepe for the sinnes of the people. They must privately conferre, visit, admonish, and rebuke; and principally they must preach, and that in such good manner, and in so diligent measure, as they may redeeme and win soules, and the end that they must aime at, must be to win soules. Some preach for fame of the world, to avoid censure or punishment: some for fashion sake, that they may be like others: some for ostentation sake, to win credit and praise: some for ambition, to rise in the world: all these forget their Commission, which is, Deliver a man from hell. This should be the end of their preaching, this to save soules from hell: and what should Commissioners doe, but execute their Commission? High Commissioners are worthy to be low Commissioners, or rather no Commissioners, if they will not put this in execution. It is therefore lamentable to see, that some by not preaching, some by vaine preaching, shew that they intended any thing, rather than the winning of soules to God.

1 Sam. 12.

Psal. 119.

For so doing they are redeemers.

Idle Ministers are no redeemers.

Let then all good Ministers so preach, as they may say with Esay, Behold Lord, here am I, and the children whom thou hast given me. And

C that they may returne their Commission thus; Whereas thou, O Lord, gavest me this people, and badst me deliver them, that they goe not downe into hell, I have done it: it is the thing my soule aimed at with all my desire and endevour: and by thy mercie I have effected it accordingly.

And the rather must all Christian Ministers seriously intend the saving of soules, in as much as Antichrist doth so earnestly seeke the destruction of soules, by winning them to his Synagogue. The Turke spares no labour, no cost, to infect yong children of Christians with his impure and blasphemous superstition. The Pope and his vassals (especially Jesuites) use all meanes, devise many stratagems, spare no cost, nor labour, to seduce and inveigle yong men, and the best wits. Surely their care and pollicie herein is admirable: and yet alas, when (like the Pharisies) they have compassed sea and land to make a Proselyte, they make him like themselves, the childe of hell.

Turkes and Iesuites are carefull to seduce soules.

D And they are so farre from having any Commission from God to doe this, or any blessing promised, as contrariwise God forbids them, and his curse lieth upon them for so doing.

Shall they be so diligent to destroy soules without a Commission, and incurre Gods curse for their labours: and shall not Christian Ministers be much more diligent to win & redeeme soules, having so large a Commission for the purpose, and so great a blessing promised thereunto?

In the next place, this doctrine hath use to the the hearers. Firſt, to let them ſee the excellency of this calling, which hath a Commiſſion and power to redeeme them from hell and damnation, and what honour is due unto it: and to let the wicked man ſee (which any way abuſeth either the perſons, or the function) how baſe and unthankfull men they are, to recompence evill for good; and therefore no marvell though evill doe never depart from the houſes and families of ſuch men: and further, to encourage all men to give themſelves to God in this calling: for ſee here what they are, even the high Commiſſioners of God. We have in our State a power delegated to certaine men of worth, and it is called the high Commiſſion, becauſe they have power to doe great things, and that man thinkes himſelfe happy who can bring his ſon to this, to be thought fit to be one of this Commiſſion; but behold here a higher Commiſſion, a Commiſſion from God, to redeeme Soules from the power of hell, and the Devils clawes: this is indeed a high Commiſſion, and ſo high as this was never granted out of the Court of heaven to any creature, but to Miniſters: they therefore are the High Commiſſioners of the high God. Is it not then an honour and happineſſe unto thee, to Miniſters are Gods high Commiſſioners.

A bring thy ſonne to this eſtate?

And laſtly, this muſt teach all hearers their duty to Gods word: namely, to ſubmit themſelves unto it; for if the Miniſter have a Commiſſion to redeeme thy ſoule, it muſt be by the word and holy diſcipline. Therfore thy duty is to heare Gods word patiently, to ſubmit thy ſelfe unto it, to be taught and inſtructed, nay, to bee checked and rebuked, and to have thy ſinnes diſcovered, and thy corruptions ript up. If thou wouldeſt have thy cauſe ſucceed well, thy Lawyer muſt diſcover the weakneſſes of it: If thy body be to be cured, thy Phyſician muſt purge the corruption of it: So if thy ſoule be to be redeemed, thy Miniſter muſt ſee the weakneſſe, and purge the corruption of it; and though

B his doctrine be harſh and hard unto thy nature, and the diſcipline of the Goſpell ſeeme rough unto thee, yet muſt thou not rage and rebell againſt it, nor hate him, nor raile at his perſon, but ſubmit thy ſelfe unto it: for it is the meſſage and miniſtery of thy ſalvation: If otherwiſe, thou doeſt indeed a great wrong to the Miniſter, for thou fruſtrateſt his Commiſſion; but alas, a farre greater to thy ſelfe, for thou fruſtrateſt thine owne ſalvation.

2. Hearers: Ergo, muſt ſubmit themſelves to be redeemed.

DAN. 12. 3.

They that turne many to righteouſneſſe, ſhall ſhine as the Starres, for ever and ever.

LONDON,
Printed by IOHN HAVILAND.

TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFVLL, and Reverend Iudges, Sir IOHN SAVILE, Knight, One of the Barons of his Majesties Exchequer, and Sir CHRISTOPHER YELVERTON, Knight, one of the Iudges of his Majesties Court of Kings Bench, and Sir EDWARD PHILIPS, Knight, his Majesties Sergeant at Law, now, or late, the worthy Iudges of our Northerne Circuit, The Spirit of Wisdome, Zeale, and Courage, be multiplied.

RIght Worshipfull, It is said in other Nations, and written in some of their bookes, that there are three disgraces of the English Nation: The ignorance; or (that I may so call it) the unlearned of our Gentry and Nobilitie: the beggery of our poore; and the baseneſſe of the body of our Miniſterie. The firſt blot our Nobility and Gentry have well wiped off, ſince the firſt daies of our bleſſed Queene Elizabeth, partly by ſtudy at home, partly by travell abroad, and I hope they will doe it more and more. The ſecond hath beene well leſſened by good Lawes of late, and would be more, if the execution were as good as our Lawes be; and it were much honour to our Nation, and more to our Religion, if it were quite taken away: for he that tells us, There ſhall be poore ever with us, ſaith alſo, There ſhall not bee a begger amongſt us: If there were no poore, what ſhould become of Charity? for it is Charity to releeve poverty, not to maintaine beggery: Poverty may be a Croſſe, but it is no Curſe: But beggery is a fearefull curſe, threatned on the enemies of God: and Davids faith not, he never ſaw a righteous mans childe poore, but that he never ſaw him beg his bread. The daily cries in our ſtreets, cry yet for further reformation hereof, that the impotent poore may bee ſufficiently provided for, that he need not, and the ſturdy begger compelled to worke, that he may not be ſuffered to beg. Happy you, or whoſoever can have a hand in effecting this bleſſed worke: we who can doe little elſe, ſhall pray for it, and for them that labour in it. But now for the third, I feare none but the very hand of God can wipe out that ſtaine from our Church: The baseneſſe of the generall body of our Miniſtery, whence is it but either from the unworthineſſe, or poverty thereof? and the unworthineſſe, whence is it, but from the poverty and baſe maintenance of our Miniſtery, which was once robbed by the Abbies, and after by ſome in our owne State, which was then Popiſh: and Popery that ſtands ſo much upon Non dimittitur peccatum, niſi reſtituatur ablatum, yet for all that would not reſtore unto the Church her tenths againe. But as Popiſh Abbies ſtole them, ſo a Popiſh State kept them; and to their ſhame ſome of the good Profeſſors of our Religion, have of late reſtored ſuch as were in their hands: and there is hope that all Profeſſors, (unleſſe they care not to be accounted hypocrites) will make ſome conſcionable reſtitution. We doe not crave that they would with Zacheus reſtore fourefold, (though it is apparent, that the tenths were got from us in the old time, by moſt falſe and forged cavillations) we onely crave our owne, we would aske no more, nor willingly take leſſe: for our whole duty is ſtill required, then why ſhould not our whole due be paid? And yet that the world may learne of us contentedneſſe, as well by our practice as our doctrine; we would for the preſent take in good part, and reſt contented with a part of our owne: and ſome competent portions out of the Impropriations, (proportioned to the quantity of the charge impoſed, and the gifts and paines required) would for a time be a reaſonable ſatisfaction in our Miniſtery, untill our State found it ſelfe, either better enabled, or more ſtraightly tied in conſcience to full reſtitution. But as I ſay, this is a worke of God himſelfe: for if man could doe it, ſo many Parliaments would not have ſlipt it, but ſome of them would have eternized it ſelfe, with this honourable name to all poſterities, The Parliament that reſtored Impropriations: But till that or ſome other courſe (as good) be taken, it is both unſeaſonable & unreaſonable to complaine of the Ignorant, or to crave a learned Miniſtery. For ſhall the Oxe's mouth be muzzled, which treads out the Corne? or, ſhall a man goe to warre at his owne coſt? and hath not God ordained (marke, it is his Ordinance) that thoſe which teach the Goſpel, ſhould live of the Goſpel? But alas, how ſhall the Miniſtery of England live of the Goſpell, when my ſmall experience can ſhew, that in one corner of one County of this Kingdome, wherein there are ſome 105. Pariſhes, or parochiall Chappels, almoſt 100. of them, (if not a full 100.) are impropriate: and amongſt them I can ſhew the moſt Pariſhes have but 10. pounds, or thereabouts, ſome 8. pounds, ſome 4. pounds, ſome not 4. pounds yearely living for the Miniſter, and theſe Impropriations worth ſome 300. pounds, many 200. pounds, almoſt all 100. pounds per an. yea, there is one worth 400. pounds per an. where there were but 8. pounds left for the Miniſter, untill of late with much adoe 10. pounds more was obtained for a Preacher; and ſo there is out of 400. eight pounds ſhared for a Miniſter, and ten pounds carved for a Preacher, in that Pariſh where there are 2000. Communicants. Of all the reſt, the Crowne hath ſome 100. pound rent, or not ſo much; and the remainder of 280. pounds, (being a rich living for a worthy learned Miniſter, a competent living for two, and more than ſome ſeven painfull and able Miniſters have) I know not what becomes of it, unleſſe it goe to the feeding of Kites and Cormorants. Are not theſe goodly livings for learned men? and may not we expect a learned Miniſtery, where there is ſuch maintenance? and I heartily wiſh that other Countries be not able to ſhew the like Preſidents. I have the rather made relation hereof, that our high Court of Parliament may ſee how great cauſe they have to goe forward with that motion already by them made, for the eſtabliſhing of a learned Miniſterie.

But if they bring it not to paſſe, what then remaineth, but to hope that the great God of Heaven, will put it into the heart of the God on earth, our Noble King (into whoſe hands hee hath put the ſword of ſoveraigne authority) an irrevocable and unreſiſtable reſolution to execute his ſupreme power for the reformation of this evill, which as (Mr. Perkins ſaith in this Treatiſe) may well be called the Kings evill: for it will hardly be healed, but by the will and power of a King. In the meane time, this Treatiſe of that worthy man, may bee a motive to our zealous Profeſſors, who have any Impropriations in their owne hands, to excite and provoke them to a conſcionable reſtitution, in whole or in part, as their ſtate may beare, or their conſcience ſhall move them. For herein are laid downe and mixed together, both the Duties to be done by faithfull Miniſters, and the Dignities due unto them for their Duties: and ſo ſeeing the Dignities of that calling to be moſt honourable, and the Duties ſo chargeable, it cannot but grieve their Chriſtian hearts to ſee their maintenance ſo miſerable.

This Treatiſe I firſt of all ſend to you, and under your names to the world; and to you firſt, for as I am ſure you loved the Author, and honoured thoſe excellent gifts of God in him, ſo you cannot but accept this after-birth of his (as a Fatherleſſe childe for the Fathers ſake.) And for my ſelfe, to conceale all perſonall and private reſpects, in the name of many thouſands in the Northerne Countries, I praiſe God for the good done in theſe parts, by your painfull courſes and religious care: not doubting, but if your ſelves, or the like be imployed there, to aſſiſt our Honourable and Religious Lord Preſident, that the multitude of Popiſh Prieſts there lurking will be daily leſſened, the number of Preachers augmented, Popery put downe, and the Goſpell maintained more and more. which bleſſing, God grant to that and all other Countries of this Kingdome, for his mercies ſake; and give unto you, and all others in your place, the Spirit of courage and conſtancy in theſe declining daies, that being faithfull in your great charges unto the end, you may receive the Crowne of life: for which hee heartily prayeth, who will ever reſt, yours to command,

THE SECOND TREATISE OF THE DVTIES AND DIGNITIES of the MINISTERIE.

ESAY 6. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.

Then I said, Woe is me, I am undone: for I am a man of polluted lips, and dwell in the middest of a people of polluted lips: for my eyes have seene the King and Lord of hosts.

Then flew one of the Seraphins unto me, with a hot coale in his hand, which he had taken from the Altar with the tongs:

And he touched my mouth, and said, Loe, this hath touched thy lips, and thine iniquity shall be taken away, and thy sinne shall be purged.

Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send? and who shall goe for us? Then I said, Here am I, send me.

And he said, Goe, &c.

The Coherence.

IN the five former Chapters are contained such Sermons, as the Prophet had made under Vzziah King of Iudah. At this Chapter begin such as he preached in the raigne of Iotham, and so forward. But before he either preach or propheſie of any thing in King Iothams daies or his ſucceſſors, the Lord in this Chapter gives a new confirmation to this calling: the old King, in whoſe daies Eſay was firſt called being now dead, & another ſucceeding him, God with the new King renueth the calling and commiſſion of the Prophet: wherein God doth not give him another calling; for one calling to the office of the Miniſtery is ſufficient: but he confirmeth the calling formerly given, by repeating and ratifying it. And this God did to Eſay, not as he was an ordinary, but an extraordinary Prophet: for ordinary Miniſters need no renovation of their calling, nor any new ſignes of confirmation; but extraordinary Prophets, who came in extraordinary manner, and to doe many extraordinary works, God in his wiſdome will have their calling confirmed, againe and againe, and that by

With a new King, God gives the Prophet a new Commiſſion.

A very extraordinary meanes. Out of which practice of the Lord, we learne how great cauſe we have to doubt theſe men, to be either phantaſticall or worſe, who pretend extraordinary callings in theſe daies, & yet ſcarce can ſhew us any good ſignes of an ordinary, much leſſe of an extraordinary motion: for if in thoſe daies when ſuch courſes were more common, God will have his extraordinary Prophets calling to be renued and confirmed againe and againe, then certainly in theſe daies we may juſtly require, more and more wonderfull ſignes of an extraordinary calling afore we beleeve it: and if God himſelfe was ſo carefull to ſatisfie his Church in thoſe daies of the vocation of his Prophet, ſurely the Church in theſe daies hath much more cauſe to B doubt in ſuch caſes, and to require many and extraordinary ſignes, afore it acknowledge any ſuch extraordinary calling: Theſe men therefore offer much wrong to the Church, and deſerve both the cenſure thereof, and the ſword of the Magiſtrate, who dare ſo boldly offer and obtrude to the Church their owne fancies and dreames, as extraordinary motions of Gods Spirit. This is the occaſion and coherence.

Callings or motions in theſe daies are not eaſily to be beleeved.

This Chapter hath two parts; firſt, the meanes of

of his confirmation, from the beginning to these words: secondly, the confirmation it selfe, from these words to the end: the meanes of his confirmation, is a vision he saw from Heaven, of certaine holy Angels appearing and speaking to him, in the first foure verses. In the confirmation which followeth in these words, are three points:

The parts of the Text.

1. The effect of the vision, which is wrought in the Prophet; it caused him feare, it astonisht him, and cast him downe: in the fifth verse.

2. His Consolation, and raising up againe after his feare, in the sixth and seventh verses.

3. The renuing of his Commission againe; from thence to the end.

The feare and astonishment of the Prophet is described:

1. By signes, of which are two:

1. A note of exclamation, Woe is me.

2. By a note of extreme dejection in himselfe, I am undone.

2. By the causes of it, which are also set downe to be two:

1. He was a man polluted, and dwelt amongst people polluted.

2. He had seene the Lord.

Then said I, woe is me, I am undone.

1 Point is, the feare of the Prophet.

The first point in order is, the feare and extasie into which the Lord drove his holy Prophet; which the Lord did not in his anger, but in his love unto him; not for a punishment of sinne, but as an evidence of his further love: for the intent and purpose of God in striking this feare into him, was to inable him to be a true Prophet, and fit messenger for himselfe. It may seeme a strange course, which God taketh to confirme and raise up his servant in zeale and courage, to strike him into an extreme feare, even to astonish and amaze him; and yet we see it is the course which the Lord taketh. Out of which practice of the Lord, we learne this doctrine, That all true Ministers, especially such as are deputed to the greatest works in his Church, must be first of all stricken into a great feare, in consideration of the greatnesse of their function, yea, into an amazement and astonishment, in the admiration of Gods glory and greatnesse, whose roome they occupy, and whose message they bring; and the more they are afraid and shrinke, so it be under the contemplation of Gods Majesty, and their owne weaknesse, the more likely it is that they are truly called of God, and appointed for worthy purposes in his Church: but he that steps to this function without feare, he may thrust in himselfe, but it is doubtfull whether he be called of God, as here the Prophet was. Nor is it so here alone, but every where when God called any of his servants to any great work, he first drove them into these feares and amazements, as is evident in Moses, in Ieremy, in S. Paul, and others. The reason of this dealing of the Lord is plaine: namely, because mans nature is alwaies ready to take enough and too much upon it selfe, God therefore in his wisdome puts a bridle unto the corrupt nature of man, and astonisheth it, lest it presume too much, and take too much upon it selfe. Againe, a Minister is to preach unto the people feare and reverence of the Lord: but how can he doe so to others, when he hath not tied that bond in his owne conscience, nor was ever cast downe in admiration of Gods glory and Majesty. And lastly, the ministerie is an high & excellent calling (especially the office of extraordinary Prophets in the old Testament) and is therefore subject to pride, and to be puft up with selfe conceit: and therefore teacheth the Apostle to Timothy, that a Minister may not be a young scholler, lest he be puft up, and fall into the condemnation of the wicked; giving us to understād, that it is the peculiar danger of that calling, to have high conceits of themselves, because of the height & dignity of their function. Therfore to prevent this inconvenience, God in mercy appointeth, that all his true Ministers shall have some meanes or other to be cast downe, even to nothing in themselves, and shall be driven into such feares and amazements, at sight of their owne wickednesse, as they shall throw downe themselves at Christs feet, and denying themselves wholly, shall acknowledge that they are in him whatsoever they are: and doe rely and trust onely on his grace and helpe.

The use of this doctrine, as it is for all Ministers, so especially for us which live in the Universitie: we live as it were in a Seminarie; wee many of us are hereafter by Gods grace to be framed to the Ministery, as some of us already are. Now here we have many occasions to bee puft up in selfe conceit: we see our selves grow in time, in degrees, in learning, in honour, in name and estimation: and to many of us God gives good portions of his gifts; what are all these, but so many baits to allure us to pride and vaine opinions of our owne worths? but let us remember the end we aime at, is not humane nor carnall, our purpose is to save soules: Then the weapons of our warr must not be carnal, as pride, vaine-glory, and selfe conceit. If therefore we ever looke to bee made instruments of Gods glory in saving of soules, then at the first set we not before our eyes the honour, but the danger of our calling, and humble we our selves under the mighty hand of our God, that he may exalt us in his due time: and let us be content that God give any occasion or meanes to pull us downe, either by outward crosses or inward temptation: and let us rejoyce, when we are thereby so farre cast downe, that we cry out in the astonishment of our Spirits, as the Prophet here; Woe is me, I am undone: but otherwise if we will needs follow the swing of our proud natures, and trust in our owne abilitie, gifts, and learning, let us know, we use carnall weapons in a spirituall warfare; and let us be assured, the Lord will worke no great worke in his Church by our Ministery: we may raise our selves in worldly estimation, and work out our owne owne purpoſes, but we ſhall doe little in the ſalvation of ſoules: for thoſe men doe pronounce the moſt powerfull bleſſings on other mens ſoules, and ſpeake the beſt words of comfort to other mens conſcience, which oftenest ſay unto themſelves, Woe is mee, I am undone.

Doctr. 2. Ergo, the Prophets held not the opinion of the interceſſion of Angels.

Furthermore, whereas the Prophet at this viſion and Revelation of Gods glory upto him, cryeth out of himſelfe, Woe is me, I am undone: being words of extreme feare and aſtoniſhment, and of ſo low a dejection as is a degree towards deſperation (if it had gone forward) let us learne, that the Prophet held not in his judgement, the doctrine of Interceſſion of Angels and Saints for particular men: for if he had, he needed not at the ſight of Gods Majeſty, forthwith to have cried out, Woe is me, I am undone: but he might have ſtaied himſelfe a while in this cogitation; I will deſire Moſes, Samuel, or David, to pray to this glorious God for me: or here are holy Angels of the Seraphins preſent, they ſee in what a fearefull caſe I am, I will pray to them to ſpeake to this glorious and mighty Lord for me, that I periſh not in this feare: but hee inſtantly ſeeing the Lord appeare in majeſty, and fearing his juſt wrath, (being guilty of his owne corruptions) without any hope or expectation, or (as he ſeemes) without the leaſt cogitation of helpe or aſſiſtance from any creature, cryeth out, I am undone.

Doct. 3. Ergo, the calling to the miniſtery is worke like unto the calling of a ſinner to the ſtate of grace.

Laſtly, whereas he exclaimeth, Woe is me, I am undone: being words of a ſoule humbled and dejected, and hereby ſhewed himſelfe to be in that caſe which a poore ſinner is, when the preaching of the Law hath humbled him, by ſhewing him his ſinnes, and his extreme danger by them: We may learne, that to be called to the miniſtery, is to be as it were converted and regenerate; and that when a man is called thereunto, it is a worke little leſſe than that whereby God calleth a ſinner from his ſinne, to the ſtate of repentance: for as God firſt caſteth downe the ſinner, before he give him grace, or any feeling of his love in Chriſt; ſo here he firſt abaſeth and caſteth downe the Prophet in the ſight of Gods Majeſty, and his owne miſery, afore he honour him with a Commiſſion to preach his word unto his people. Which I note againſt thoſe men which hold it ſo ordinary a matter to enter into the Miniſtery, as many doe, which take it upon them in worldly and politike purpoſes. And ſome of better Ranke, which thinke if a man have learning, degrees, age, he is ſufficiently qualified for that calling. But alas, this is not all; there is a greater worke to be wrought than ſo: he muſt be humbled and caſt downe in ſight of the greatneſſe of that calling, of that Majeſty of that God, whoſe roome he is to execute, and of the unworthineſſe of himſelfe to ſo great a worke: he muſt be reſolved, that to call a man to the Miniſterie, is the greateſt worke that God worketh in his Church, but the converting of a ſinner, and calling him to the ſtate of grace: nay it is a work even like unto it: for as a ſinner in his converſion, ſo he at his Vocation to that place, is often to cry out in the amazement of his ſoule, Woe is me, I am undone. As therefore they are foully deceived, which thinke any holineſſe or ſanctification can ſufficiently qualifie a man without learning; ſo are they no leſſe, which thinke all outward complements to be ſufficient without this worke, which here was wrought in the holy Prophet. Thus wee ſee the feare and aſtoniſhment of the Prophet. It followeth;

For I am a man of polluted lips.

Now follow the cauſes of his feare, which are two: The firſt is, his owne pollution and ſinfulneſſe, and the ſinfulneſſe of his people: his owne he freely confeſſeth in theſe words; I am a man of polluted lips: that is, I am a miſerable and ſinfull man, and therefore I feare and tremble to ſtand in Gods preſence; nay, I dare not looke upon the Lord for my ſinnes. But it may be demanded, how could the Prophet ſay thus truly? for he was a holy man, and juſtified in Gods preſence, by his true faith in the Meſſias, and ſanctified by repentance: can a man juſtified and ſanctified ſay, he is a man polluted? Anſwer; It is doubtleſſe he was ſo; hee therefore complaineth here, not of any great and enormous ſinnes, which he had committed to the publike ſcandall of the Church, but firſt of the corruption of his nature, which in him, as in all men as a very ſea of iniquity, and which alwaies appeares the more, the nearer a man comes to God: and therefore did now moſt apparantly diſcover it ſelfe in the Prophet, when he was in the preſence of the Lord himſelfe. Secondly, he complaineth of ſome actuall ſinnes of his life, and it is more likely of ſome ſinnes of omiſſion, than of commiſſion: for we finde not that the Prophet was ever touched with any great ſin, and where we know it not, wee are in charitie not to imagine it. So that it is moſt probable, he complaineth of ſome ſmaller faults, or negligences in his miniſtery: as not preaching to the people at ſome time when hee ought, or not preaching ſo willingly or cheerefully as hee ſhould, or deſire to leave preaching, becauſe the people were ſtubborn and diſobedient, or ſome impatience in his Miniſterie, when the people were rebellious and reſiſted his doctrine; which paſſion might the rather vex him, (as we reade it did Ieremy) the Iewes were ſo ſtubborne and ſtif-necked a people: or it may be ſome want of zeale or forwardneſſe: theſe, or ſome ſuch were the cauſe of his feare: and the conſcience of theſe makes him here cry out that hee cannot ſtand in the ſight of God. Where we learne, firſt, what a tender conſcience godly Miniſters muſt have above all men: namely, that they muſt make conſcience, not of the great and groſſe ſinnes onely, but even of the loweſt and leaſt ſinnes: and he muſt endevour in his calling, not onely to be cleare of great crimes, but Cauſes of his feare, two. 1. Cauſe, pollution of himſelfe and his people. 1. His owne. He was a man of polluted lips.

And he was a polluted man.

And he complaineth not of capitall ſinnes.

But of the corruption of his nature.

2 Of ſome omiſſion in his calling.

Vſe. Ergo, much muſt be required to qualifie a man for the Miniſtery.

Doctr. Ergo, Miniſters muſt be men of tender conſcience but as farre as may be, to be free from the least appearance of evill, and from the least negligences in his place; for a small fault in other men is great in them, and that which may bee somewaies pardonable in other men, is no way in them: they must therefore watch over themselves most carefully, and take heed to all their waies: and for this end is it, that a Minister in godly wisdome must often deprive himselfe even of many things (which it may be, lawfully he might use) lest his liberty be an occasion of evill to others; and must abstaine from the least sinnes, lest even they bee blemishes to his calling, and burthens to his conscience. And hence is it, that a Minister cannot be too carefull in his calling, in his words, diet, company, recreation, apparell, gestures, and in his whole carriage, because little sinnes are so great in him. Especially Ministers must here learne the Apostles lesson, to be instant in season, and out of season: to preach and exhort, to comfort and rebuke, publikely and privately: to good, to bad; when it is well taken, when it is ill taken; when they willingly receive it, and when they stubbornly resist it; when they commend him and reward him, and when they raile at him and persecute him for it: thus must he be diligent in season and out of season; for the least negligence in his duty, or omitting the least opportunity of doing good, will when God visits his conscience, be a burthen and vexation to him, as it was here to the Prophet.

And furthermore, if these small sinnes thus afflicted the Prophet, then alas what is to bee thought of those Ministers, who make no conscience of foule and scandalous sinnes? how shall Symony, Incontinency, Usury, Inhospitality, Covetousnesse, Ignorance, Idlenesse, careless Non-residency, how shall these (I say) and other like grievous crimes oppresse and burthen the soule, when as the smallest sinnes doe so affright this holy man? Surely, when God shall visit them, their states will be most fearefull, nor shall any mans case be so miserable, as an unconscionable Ministers. And though now such loose and licentious Ministers seeme to live in jollity, and without any feare, yet when God shall appeare unto their conscience, then will they cry out in fearefull anguish, Woe is me, I am undone.

And againe, if these small faults so affrighted this holy Prophet, and burdened his conscience; then what pittifull consciences have those Ministers, whose daily negligence, and unconscionable carelesnesse in their places is such, as all men speake of, and yet they are not touched: surely these men are not of so tender consciences as the Prophet was; and either the Prophet here was much more nice than needed, or else these men will prove to be in a miserable estate.

Lastly, let Ministers of care and conscience, be here comforted in the example of the Prophet: who is there but may finde imperfections and blemishes in himselfe, which will often make him cry out, Woe is me? but let not that discomfort them, but rather rejoyce that they can see their owne weaknesse, as the Prophet did here: If they have cause to exclaime against themselves, they are not alone; it was this, and all other holy Prophets case before them. In having imperfections in themselves, they are no more miserable than the Prophet was: but let them labour to bee as blessed in seeing and complaining of themselves as he was: And let every Minister assure himselfe, that the more he makes conscience, even of the least sinnes of all, the more he resembleth the ancient holy Prophets, and the more likely is he to worke effectually in his Ministerie. For his duty is to worke in his people a conscience, not of great sinnes only, but even of all: but how can he doe that in them, if he have not first of all done it in himselfe? hence it is therefore, that godly Ministers finde fault with themselves, when other men cannot, and cry out against themselves for their pollution (with the Prophet here) when no other man can accuse them of the least crime: nay, when other men doe magnifie God for his graces on them, and praise their gifts, and commend their good lives, even then doe they condemne themselves, and exclaime against their owne corruptions: and their owne smallest negligences or omissions, are great wounds to their consciences: and their least sinnes, and their most pardonable infirmities, are sore burdens unto them: for of all men in the world, a godly Minister is a man of a most tender conscience.

Hitherto hath the Prophet complained generally of his pollution.

Particularly, he exclaimeth against the pollution of his lips. But why, will some say, complaines hee of the pollution of his lips, rather than of his heart, or his hands, or any other part of him: were they not polluted? yes, all in some measure: and was not he grieved at them all? yes assuredly, we must grant that also. But the reason is, he was a Prophet, his duty was to use his tongue: for a Minister is an interpreter, as he is called, Job 33. 23. that is, the peoples to God by prayer, and Gods to the people by preaching: he is Gods mouth, and the peoples mouth: so that the tongue of a Minister is that part of his body, which is to bee used as a principall instrument of Gods glory, and more to the setting forth of his honour than any other. Now every man is to be tried what he is by his calling, rather than by any other collaterall courses: therefore the honour or dishonour of a Minister, is the use or the abuse of his tongue; and his comfort or discomfort, is the well using or not using of it. The Prophet therefore here affrighted at Gods presence, and therefore retyring into himselfe, presently his conscience checks him for his most proper sinnes: namely, for some fault or negligence in his ministerie (which is the proper sinne of that calling) and therefore

And make conscience of the least sinnes.

And be most carefull in his Ministery both publikely and privately.

Use. Ergo, Ministers for great sinnes should be greatly humbled.

And for great negligence in their calling, else they have no conscience.

Good and faithfull Ministers not to be discouraged, though they have some wants: for so the Prophets had: but let them complain of them as here the Prophet doth.

Godly Ministers finde fault with themselves when the world cannot.

Particularly he complaineth against the pollution of his lips.

For a Prophets duty consists in the use of his tongue.

His smallest negligence in teaching, checks his conscience.

therefore is it, that hee exclaimeth againſt the pollution of his lips: out of which practice of his we may learne,

Vſe 1. Ergo, Popiſh doctrine of mans merits is falſe. And of workes.

First, the vanity of the Papiſts, who magnifie the Merits of holy mens workes: for if this holy Prophet, a man truly juſtified and extraordinarily ſanctified, yet durſt not ſtand before God in this little appearance of his glory, notwithſtanding all his zeale, and courage, and conſcience, and paines, and ſufferings in his function, but was caſt downe ſo farre, from a conceit of his owne worth, that he cried out, Woe is me, I am undone: How then can we who are no better, but much worſe than he, ſtand before God in the day of Judgement, in the great appearing of his infinite juſtice and glory? Rather doubtleſſe, as here the ſmalleſt pollution of his B lips, and negligence in his calling, drove him out of all conceit of merit, when once he came into the preſence of God; ſo the due conſideration of our ſo many and foule pollutions above his, ſhould beat downe all proud conceits of our own goodneſſe, when we appeare before God. It is therefore to be feared that the Papiſts, who thus magnifie their owne merits, doe ſeldome or never enter into ſerious conſideration of their owne infirmities, doe ſeldome preſent themſelves in the preſence of Gods Majeſtie. For if they did, then doubtleſſe the leaſt ſight of their leaſt pollution, would make them farre from ever thinking of their owne merits.

And of works of ſupererrogation. And perfect fulfilling the Law in this life.

They alſo tell us, of works of ſupererrogation, but it ſeemes here this holy Prophet had none C of them. And they teach, a man may in this life perfectly fulfill the Law, but who can doe it, if not Miniſters? And what Miniſters, if not extraordinary Prophets? And yet Iſaiah (the firſt and chiefe of them) exclaimeth here in pittiful manner againſt his pollutions. Doubtleſſe, if the Papiſts would ceaſe flattering themſelves, and not examine their conſciences by their owne pleaſing corruption, but preſent themſelves in the face and preſence of Gods Majeſty, they would be farre from theſe conceits.

Vſe 2. Ergo, Miniſters muſt take heed of negligence in their function above all ſinnes: for that burdeneth the conſcience moſt heavily of all.

In the next place, whereas the Prophet complaineth of the pollution of his lips, as of the peculiar ſinne of his place: Miniſters are here taught, to avoid that ſinne above all other; and to labour in that duty above any other: for the D doing of it, is his moſt comfort; the want of it is his moſt vexation: his tongue is the inſtrument given him to honour God; if he uſe it well it yeelds him comfort, more than any other duties.

Other vertues are excellent, but cannot ſuffice, if this want.

But if hee uſe not, or abuſe his tongue, the pollution of his lips will be the heavieſt burthen of all: they therefore are greatly deceived, who thinke a Miniſter to diſcharge ſufficiently his duty, though hee preach not, if hee keepe good Hoſpitality, and make peace amongſt Neighbours, and performe other works of charity and good life: for if a Miniſter have not this vertue, he hath none: If he Preach not, if he abuſe his lips; or if he open them not, hee hath no conſcience: nor can have any comfort, for that is the principal duty of a Miniſter (though all the other bee required to make him complete:) the want of them may condemne him before men, but it is the pollution of his lips which preſently checks him before God, as we ſee here in this holy Prophet. The concluſion then is to every Miniſter, that if he had all the vertues and good properties that can commend a man in the world, yet if his lips be polluted, either by not preaching, or by negligent, idle, or careleſſe preaching, this pollution will ſo ſtaine his conſcience, and ſo burthen him in the preſence of God, that the time will come (notwithſtanding all his other good qualities) hee will cry out in farre more pittifull manner than here the Prophet doth; Woe is me, I am undone, becauſe I am a man of polluted lips. It followeth,

2. His peoples pollution. He complaines of it to teach.

And I dwell in the middeſt of a people of polluted lips.

The Prophet not onely complaines of his owne pollution, but of his peoples alſo amongſt whom he lived: and this he doth for theſe cauſes: Firſt, to teach us, that it is the Miniſters duty to confeſſe not only his owne ſins, but the ſins of his people, and to complain of them to God: for as he is the peoples Interpreter to God, hee muſt not thinke it enough to put up their petitions, to unfold their wants, and crave releeſe for them at Gods hands, but hee muſt further take knowledge of the ſinnes of his people, and make both publike and private confeſſion of them to God: and the more particularly he can doe this, the better: and this he is to doe both for the peoples good, and for his owne alſo, becauſe it cannot be but the ſinnes of his people, are in ſome ſort his: for this is the peculiar danger of the Magiſtrates and Miniſters callings, that generally the ſinnes of their people are theirs: I meane that they are acceſſary to the ſins of their people, either by provoking them by their evill example, or by not reproving, or not hindring, or ſuffering, or winking, or covering and concealing, or not puniſhing them, or not carefully enough uſing meanes to prevent them: by all which meanes and many more, it comes to paſſe, that the peoples ſinnes are the Miniſters by communication: ſo that as well for his owne ſake as theirs, hee is to confeſſe to God their ſinnes as well as his owne.

For generally he is acceſſary to his peoples ſinnes.

Vſe 1. Ergo, a Miniſter muſt know his peoples ſinnes.

Now if a Miniſter muſt confeſſe his peoples ſinnes, then it followeth conſequently, that he muſt know them, and take notice of them: for elſe hee cannot confeſſe them. And this is one cauſe why the holy Ghoſt commands a Paſtor to know his flocke.

Prov. 27. 23.

He muſt not onely have a flocke, and know which is his flocke, or have a generall eye over it; but hee muſt have a particular and diſtinct knowledge of the ſtate of it: and the more particular the better.

And if the Miniſter ought to know and confeſſe his peoples ſinnes, then it followeth; firſt, first, that it is best for a Minister to be present with his people, that so he may the better know them and their state: and certainly if it bee a Ministers duty to confesse to God the pollutions of his people, then wilfull and careless Non-residency, and all absence, without just and conscionable causes, must needs be a foule and fearefull sinne. For how could Isaiah have confessed, that his people were a people of polluted lips, but that he dwelt amongst them? Nay, saith the Prophet, hee dwelt in the middest among them: indeed well may he know and confesse his peoples pollutions, that dwels in the middest among them.

Vse 2. Ergo, people must confesse their sinnes, and reveale them to their Minister.

Not Popish, but voluntary. And of such sins as disquiet the conscience.

Againe, if the Minister bee to confesse his peoples sinnes, and therefore must needs know them; then it followeth also that they must discover and confesse them unto him, or else it is not possible hee should perfectly know their estate: the want of this is a great fault in our Churches: for however we condemne Auricular confession, as a very policy in the devisers, and a racke to the consciences of poore Christians, yet we not onely allow, but call and cry for that confession, whereby a Christian voluntarily at all times may resort to his Pastor, and open his estate, and disburthen his conscience of such sinnes as disquiet him, and crave his godly assistance, and holy prayers: great blessing and comfort doth doubtlesse follow them that use this godly practice; and the want of it is cause that a Minister cannot discerne the state even of his own flocke, nor can complaine to God of their pollutions, and confesse their sinnes so particularly, as would be good both for him and them.

2. To teach us that people make their Minister more or lesse polluted also.

Secondly, the Prophet couples together his owne pollution, and the pollutions of his people, as the adjuvant or helping cause, and the effect: For the pollution of a people helpes forward the pollution of a Minister, and the worse people they are, the worse doe they make him, though hee be otherwise never so good: For even the Propher, though called of God himselfe, and justified, and sanctified, and a man of extraordinary grace, yet dwelling in the middest of a people so stubborne and disobedient as the Jewes were, was something touched with their pollutions. Ministers (even the best) are men, and this comes to passe by reason of the corruption of their nature as they are men, the nature of which corruption is to apprehend any evill where ever it findes it, and to partake with it: regeneration qualifies and abates this corruption, but takes it not away perfectly in this life: whereby it comes to passe, that a Minister living amongst evill people, cannot but be somewhat stained with their pollutions, of what sort soever they be: insomuch as it is often seene, that one knowne to be otherwise disposed of himselfe, is found to bee disposed to this or that evill, by living amongst a people so disposed. And againe, that a Minister in such a place, and amongst such people, free from such A and such sinnes, removed to another place, is there found more or lesse tainted with them, because they abound amongst the people: and yet further, that a Minister knowne to be faithfull, painfull, and zealous, and comming to a disobedient, and stubborne, froward, or prophane and dissolute people, his faith is weakened, his zeale and courage abated, Gods graces in him dulled and much decayed: godly Ministers doe daily complaine hereof, and experience every where shewes it too true. Out of this wee may learne something both for our instruction, and for our conversation.

1. wicked people dull and decay Gods graces in good Ministers.

Vse double.

For our instruction, it here appeares how wicked and wretched the corruption of our nature is, which cannot but receive some contagion B from the pollution of those with whom we live: for this is so, not only in them who carry a loose hand over themselves, but even in such as looke most narrowly unto their steps; as we see here in this holy Prophet, who was a man of more than ordinary sanctification: how little cause therfore hath any man to extol nature? and how much lesse cause the Schoolemen, and some other Papists, to give the least commendations to our pure naturals: for if nature rectified by grace, be so hardly kept within compasse, alas how outragious and perverse is it, when it reignes without controlment?

1. For instruction. 1. See how corrupt our nature is.

And for our further instruction, here we may see of what a creeping and incroaching nature sinne is, which like a secret venome in the naturall body, C so it in the politike body rests not in the place or party poysoned, but closely creeps, and diffuseth it selfe into every part and member of the whole: it creeps from man to man; yea, from an evill man to a good, from the worst man to the best: from prophane men, to godly Ministers: and as from publike persons (as Magistrates and Ministers) it descendeth visibly, and the example of their evill life is palpably scandalous; so from the people to the Magistrate or Minister it creepeth closely, and ascendeth in more secret and insensible manner, yet in effect it is too sensible: for it is alwayes seene that they are something touched with their peoples pollutions: sinne is not onely as a poyson, spreading from the heart to all parts, D from the Minister to the people: but as a gangrene, if it beginne in the foot, will without speedy prevention spread privily to the heart: so sinne shewes it selfe, even from the people to the Ministers: So great cause is there for all men to stoppe sinne in the beginning, to breake it in the egge, to give water no passage, no not a little: for let this gangrene beginne at the feet, it will not rest till it be in the heart.

2. What a creeping nature sinne hath.

It will creepe from Ministers to people, and from people to Ministers.

Ergo, stop sinne in the beginning.

For our conversation wee are here taught, first, if a Minister, by reason of the corruption of his owne nature, and the creeping nature of sinne, is in such danger to bee stained with the peoples pollutions; then let all Ministers desire, and use all good meanes to dwell with a people

2. For our conversation.

1. Ministers: Ergo, labour to live amongst a good people.

people as little polluted as may bee: otherwiſe let him aſſure himſelfe to bee polluted with them, which is both a great diſcomfort to his owne conſcience (as here it was to the Prophet) and diſgrace to his profeſſion; for if it be a duty of every good profeſſor of Religion, to keepe himſelfe unſpotted of the world, then how much more is it the Miniſters duty ſo to doe? and how foule a ſtaine is it to the honour of his calling, to be polluted in the common pollutions of the people?

Iam. 1.27.

It may be therefore good counſell to all godly Miniſters in the placing and diſpoſing of themſelves, not to enquire onely how good a living ſuch and ſuch a place is, how well ſeated, how healthfull and beneficiall it will be (which are alas the common and almoſt the only queſtions now adayes) but principally, to regard what a people they bee, and how affected amongſt whom they are to live: if godly and well diſpoſed, or at the leaſt tractable and gentle, and willing to be taught, then leſſe to regard other incommodities: but if wicked and prophane, or (which is worſe) ſtubborne, froward and untractable, then leſſe to regard the greateſt commodities: and certainly if this point be well conſidered of, and how bitter it hath beene in the end, to many who have not regarded it, it will appeare, that this is the beſt encouragement or diſcouragement, the greateſt commodity or diſcommodity, and the beſt reaſon, either to win a man to a place, or to draw him from it, how good ſoever it bee otherwaies: they that neglect this duty, and are led (or miſ-led rather) with carnall and worldly reſpects, how juſt is it upon them when they are made to cry in the ſorrow of their ſoule, Woe is me, I dwell in the middeſt of a people of polluted lips?

And in diſpoſing themſelves, rather regard it, than other commodities.

A poore living with good people, better than a great living and evill people.

And here ſuch Miniſters as have poore livings, but good people, let them not faint nor be diſcouraged, they have more cauſe to bleſſe God, than to be grieved: for doubtleſſe they are farre better than thoſe who have great livings, and an evill people.

But as for thoſe to whom God hath beene ſo good, as to beſtow upon them competent livings, and a willing and well diſpoſed people, let them thinke themſelves double bleſſed of God, and treble bound to honour God, and to doe good in his Church: and if ſuch men goe not before their brethren in all miniſteriall care and duty, their fault is above all men, and they make themſelves unworthy of ſo great mercies.

1. Ergo. Miniſters muſt take heed of their company.

Againe, if that a polluted people pollutes their Miniſter, here is a good warning for all Miniſters to be wary and choice of their company, with whom they will privately converſe: for as on the one ſide they may not retire themſelves into any ſolitarineſſe, nor ſequeſter themſelves from all ſociety with their people, (which is rather a cynicall and fantaſticall, than any way a religious practice:) ſo of all men A are they to be moſt carefull, that they doe not looſely and laviſhly beſtow themſelves on all companies, as too many doe in our Church, to the great ſcandall thereof, who care not with whom they converſe; but all companies, all places, all times, all ſports and recreations, all meetings, all occaſions are one with them: but alas, what marvell though ſuch men keepe not themſelves unſpotted of the world, but prove too offenſive to their calling: for ſeeing the beſt men cannot live with the beſt people, but they ſhall receive ſome contagion from them, how carefully ought ordinary Miniſters to make difference of men and meetings, times and places, and not diffuſedly and careleſly to thruſt themſelves into all: So doing ſhall they keepe their B calling from much reproach, and preſerve themſelves from much pollution, which otherwiſe from their polluted people they ſhall be ſure to receive.

All companies, and all recreations are not for Miniſters.

And here people are to be admoniſhed, not too ſharply to cenſure their Miniſter: though he be not ſo ſociable with them all, as it may be many would expect: for it concernes no man to be ſo warie of his company and his ſports, as it doth the Miniſter: and if they would have comfort and honour by their Miniſter, let them be carefull into what recreations and company they draw or deſire him: for the more polluted the people are amongſt whom hee lives, the more carefull muſt he be to keep himſelfe cleare from their pollutions.

And people muſt not draw their Miniſters too much into company.

C Laſtly, here people are taught, not to bee too ſharpe condemners of thoſe Miniſters, whoſe converſations are not ſo unblameable as were to be wiſhed: for as they live ill, generally the cauſe is, becauſe they live amongſt an ill people.

3. People muſt not condemne too ſharply ſuch Miniſters as are faulty in their lives, for themſelves are the cauſe of it, being of evill lives themſelves.

Why then ſhould they ſo much condemne them, for ſuch faults wherein themſelves have made them faulty? I ſay not, but our Church, and State, and Miniſtery, are to cenſure ſuch men, (and it were good they did it more) but it is againſt all reaſon the people ſhould doe ſo, whereas themſelves are the cauſe of it: For alas, if this holy Prophet was a man of polluted lips, becauſe he dwelt with a people of polluted lips, what marvell then though ordinary Miniſters D be polluted with the common and univerſall pollutions of their people? People therefore are firſt of all to ſee that themſelves bee well ordered and godly, and then juſtly may they complaine, if the lives of their Miniſters be not agreeable: but otherwiſe, it is not poſſible without very ſpeciall grace of God, but that a Miniſter ſhall bee more or leſſe touched with thoſe crimes which are the common faults of his people. And lamentable experience daily lets us ſee, that where a people in a towne is given to drunkenneſſe, there the Miniſter is either ſo for company, or at the leaſt too good a fellow; where a people are given to contention, there the Miniſter hath two many ſuits: where the people bee Popiſh, there the Miniſter is too superstitious: where the people are ignorant, there the Minister is no great Clerke; where the people are given to any great sinne, there the Minister generally is not free from the same pollution; and it is seene, that the best Ministers, and most carefull of all, doe complaine bitterly of the pollutions of their people: for that howsoever it may bee they escape partaking with their sinnes, yet they alwaies finde at the least a dulling and decaying of Gods graces in themselves, where the people are untoward and disobedient. If therefore a Minister lives with such a people, his case is pitifull and dangerous: for he walkes in the midst of nets and snares, which are laid for him on every side; and if he escape them (I meane, if he keepe himselfe unspotted, in the middest of a spotted and polluted people) his care and his conscience is worthy both admiration and imitation, and himselfe is worthy double honour, as being both a zealous Minister and a holy man. But he whom God hath blessed with a good and tractable people, and well affected with the word, and yet himselfe liveth loosely and scandalously amongst them, a heavy burthen and a hard account lyeth on that Minister, and no rebuke is too rough, no punishment too great, no censure too sharpe for him. And, if this holy Prophet feare so much the presence of God for his small pollutions, and yet lived amongst so wicked and polluted a people, then what heavinesse and horror shall be heaped on his soule, who cares not with how foule pollutions his life be stained, and yet liveth amongst a godly and well disposed people? And thus wee have the first cause of his feare, his owne, and his peoples pollutions.

But such Ministers as live with a good people and yet are loose, they are not worthy to be Ministers, but to be deprived.

It followeth, And mine eyes have seene the King, and Lord of hosts.

2. Cause of his feare, he saw the Lord. How? in a vision.

The second cause of the Prophets feare and astonishment is, Hee saw the Lord, who then appeared in glory unto him: not that hee saw the substance of God, (for that is invisible and incomprehensible) but his glory: nor the fulnesse of his glory, for that cannot be endured, but a glimpse of it: nor that with the eyes of his body in ordinary manner, but in a vision: wherein how farre the eyes of his body were used, neither the Prophet expresseth, nor wee can well conceive. The meaning then is, In a vision hee saw such Glory and Majesty, as hee knew there was an extraordinary presence of the Lord of Hosts, who is the King of glory, at whose sight, and thought of his presence, instantly his conscience is smitten with feare, for his owne infirmities, and the pollutions of his people.

Wherein let us first of all observe the connexion and dependance of these two causes one upon another: for as they are both jointly the cause of his feare, so one of them is in a sort the cause of another: hee feareth, because of his owne and his peoples sinnes, and because he saw the Lord: but why is he afraid to see the Lord? A the cause thereof is his owne and their sins, without which, he would never have beene afraid, but rather have gloried to see the Lord: but his conscience checking him, for some defect of duty in his calling, therefore he trembleth at the least glimpse of Gods glory. Here let us marke the ground of his reason, which is this: That man that is in his sins, is not able to stand in the presence of God: this is a generall and certaine truth; and the reasons of it are; First, the contrariety betwixt God and the nature of sin, it being the onely thing which offends him, and which provokes his wrath and just displeasure: therefore as a subject cannot but be much amazed, if he hap to come into the Kings presence with any thing about him which the King B hates, or cannot abide to see: so a man cannot but be extreme astonisht, if he know himselfe to be in Gods presence with his sinnes, which Gods soule hateth.

Doct. The man that is in his sinnes, endures not Gods presence.

1. For God hates sinne above all things.

Secondly, sinne makes a man indebted to God: for as the law tieth him first to obedience, so if he sinne, and faile in that, it bindes him to punishment: and the more a man sinneth, the deeper is he in Gods debt. If then in this world a man willingly endures not the sight of him in whose debt he is; what marvell though a poore sinner tremble at the presence of God, to whom he hath forfeited soule and all?

2. Sinne makes a man a debter to God.

Thirdly, sinne is that which provoketh God to wrath: therefore a sinfull man feareth the presence of God, as a traitor the face of the C Prince, or a malefactor of the Judge. For these causes, a wicked man endures not Gods presence.

3. Sinne is that that makes God angry.

Now Gods presence hath divers degrees: First, God is present to our conscience, when we thinke of him. Secondly, he is present when we name him, or heare him named or mentioned by others, and these are the furthest off. Thirdly, God is neerer unto us in the presence of his Ordinances, as his Word and Sacraments, and publike service in the Congregation. Fourthly, there is a most apparent and sensible presence of God, which shall be at the last judgement, when all men shall stand before him in his immediate presence, to receive their judgement. Now all these presences of God are hatefull to a D wicked man: for the first, a wicked man by his good will never thinkes of God, and if sometime a thought of God (like lightning) flashes in his minde, presently hee quencheth it, as being a most unwelcome and burdensome thought unto him: therefore saith David, The wicked is so proud he careth not for God, neither is God in all his thoughts: Nay, God himselfe is so little thought on by them, that they will willingly thinke of nothing that might bring God into their thoughts; as namely, Gods great works of his wonderfull judgements: of whom the same Prophet saith in the same place, Thy judgements are farre above out of his sight: as if hee had said, hee labours to set them farre from the eye of his minde, that he

he may never have occasion to thinke of them, nor on God by them. That this is true for his thoughts, I have endevoured thus to prove by Gods owne testimonies, because thoughts cannot be discerned by man. But alas, for the second, that is, for his words, that is too apparent in the sight of all men. For observe it, and you shall never see a wicked man, by his good will have God in his mouth, (unlesse it bee to abuse his name, by swearing or blasphemie) nor willingly doth hee heare any other man talke, or discourse largely of God, or of his greatnesse and his justice; but such talke is tedious and cumbersome unto him: and if he cannot breake it off with other discourse, then hee sits as mute as a fish, and inwardly either frets with anger, or is tormented with feare. All this is true in Felix the Governour: who whilest Paul discoursed of righteousnesse, temperance, and judgement to come, the text saith, in the meane time he trembled.

He never speakes of God, unlesse it be to abuse his majesty.

Act. 24. 26.

3. They love not the Word nor Sacraments.

And for the third, wee see daily wicked men endure not Gods presence in the Church: for nothing is more troublesome unto them than many Sermons, often praying, and much receiving of the Sacrament: and therefore they never come to the Church, nor receive ofter than the Law layes upon them: But further than that, as the Psalmist saith, they never call upon God. But as for the last, that they feare and abhorre above all, they wish in their heart it may never be. And therefore S. Paul makes it a token of a true beleever, and a holy man, to love, and looke for the appearing of Iesus Christ. Whereupon it followeth, that even so it is a signe of a wicked man, to feare the last judgement, and to wish it might never be: And when it comes indeed, and they see they cannot escape it, what then doe they? Even cry to the mountaines, fall upon us: and to the hils, cover us, and hide us: from what? from the presence of God: so fearefull and so hatefull is Gods presence to a sinfull man.

Psal. 14. 4. 4. They wish Christ would never come to judgement. 1 Tim. 4. 8.

Rev. 6. 16.

Besides these, there is another way whereby God sheweth his presence: and that is by extraordinary revelation of his glory immediately: which was usuall in the old Testament, as here to the Prophet, but now it is not to be expected. But how terrible that is to the sinfull nature of man, appeares in this place: for if the Prophet a most holy man, whose conscience accused him but of a few small sinnes, yet thus cries out amazed and affrighted, at the revelation of some part of Gods glory: alas, how would they be terrified with it, whose consciences are burdened with great and grievous sinnes, and that without repentance? Thus we see the ground of this reason, how true it is, that a man in his sinne cannot cheerefully come nor boldly stand in Gods presence. The use of this doctrin: First of all, let us see the monstrous presumption of such Ministers as dare venture rashly into the Ministery, to tread upon the holy ground of God with uncleane feet; to handle Extraordinary apparitions of Gods majesty, a sinfull man cannot endure.

Use 1. For Ministers: Ergo, let them not enter into that calling in their sinnes.

A the holy things of God with unwashen hands. For what is it to enter into the Ministery, but to enter into the chamber of presence of the great King? and should not a man looke about him afore he come there? Therefore if God rebuked Moses for stepping too hastily towards the bush where his presence was, and said: Come not too neere, for the place where thou standest is holy ground: then how will God rebuke and checke the consciences of such carnall men, as carelessly and carnally rush into the Pulpit, and to Gods holy table, where God is present in a farre more excellent manner than he was in the bush? And if they be so to be blamed who enter into this calling without feare and reverence, then how much more faulty are they, who being Ministers, dare venture to preach or minister the holy Sacraments, without holy and private preparation, and sanctification of themselves: but rush upon them, as upon common and prophane actions? whereas God is present there, in a most holy and glorious manner: these men sure will say, the Prophet here was of too nice a conscience: but fearefully and terribly shall God appeare at the last unto such men as care not how they appeare in his holy presence.

For it is into Gods presence chamber.

Exod. 3. 4.

Nor come to doe the duty of that calling, without repentance, and holy preparation.

Secondly, this sheweth the reason of the practice of al Christian Churches, who use to pray before the Sermon and after, namely, not for Decorum onely, and to grace the action, but to sanctifie and to humble our selves, because then we come before Gods presence: they therfore doe not thinke reverently enough of God and his presence, who doe by their practice in any sort make way to the contrary.

2. Ergo, they are to pray before and after Sermon.

Thirdly, we may here learne the pittifull case of those Ministers, who are so presumptuous, as to exercise that holy function, and yet remaine in their sinnes without repentance: what doe these men? they approach to the burning Bush with their shooes on their feet: that is, into Gods presence in their sins: what shall come of it in the end? surely, that burning fire shall consume them. The least sinne and smallest negligences affrighted the holy Prophet, when he should goe into Gods presence: But these men dare come into the Sanctuary of God, yea, dare take Gods word in their mouthes, and yet hate to beereformed: and doe cast the glorious word of God behind their backes, which they preach to others with their mouthes: these men may wonder at this holy Prophets niceneesse, or else all the world may wonder at their profaneneesse. A little pollution of his lips, feared him to come into Gods presence: but these dare doe it, with eyes, eares, lips, feet, hands, heart, and all polluted: their eyes polluted with careleesse looking at all vanities: their eares with hearing; and their lips with speaking wanton and wicked talke: their feet with running into wicked company: their hands with practising, and their hearts with devising and consenting to all wickednesse.

Use 3. Ergo, such men are extremely desperate, who dare come to preach and minister Sacraments in their sinnes.

Psal. 50. 16.

Such mens labors are fruitlesse.

This is the cause why the labours of such men are most unprofitable; because they dare come into Gods presence in their sinnes. In many places of our land, there is by Gods blessing much teaching, yet there is little reformation in the lives of the most: but contrariwise some fall to Atheisme, some to Papisme: some into foule sinnes, not to be named amongst Christians.

And their loosenesse doth more hurt, than their doctrine good.

Where is the cause? surely not in the Gospel, nor in our doctrine, nor in the teaching of it; but one very principall cause is, many Ministers come into Gods presence unsanctified, and in their sinnes: not caring how loosely they live in the face of their people; and therefore God in justice, though hee instantly smite not them with visible vengeance for their presumption:

By Gods secret judgement.

yet he smites the people with spirituall blindnesse, that they regard not their doctrine, but looke at their lives, and doe rather follow the prophanenesse of the one, than the holinesse of the other. Ministers are such, in whom God will be sanctified; therefore because they doe not so, but dishonour him, by comming into his presence in their sinnes, therefore hee cannot abide them, nor give any blessing to their labours.

All Ministers therefore, as they would see any fruit of their Ministery, let them first sanctifie themselves, and cleanse their hearts by repentance, before they presume to stand up, to rebuke sinne in others: else let them not think that their golden words shall do so much good, as their leaden lives shall doe hurt: and they may hap to to confirme men that already are converted, but hardly shall any such men convert any soule from Popery or prophaneneſſe. And it is a vaine conceit for men to imagine there is any force in eloquence, or humane learning, to overthrow that sinne in others, which ruleth and reigneth in themselves. Our Church, and all reformed Churches may make use of this doctrine: for it is the glory of a Church to have their doctrine powerfull, and effectuall for the winning of soules, therefore it concerneth them to take order, as well that their Ministers be godly men, as good Schollers; and their lives be inoffensive, as wel as their doctrine sound: or else they will find in wofull experience, that they pull downe as much with one hand, as they build up with the other.

But most neerely this doctrine toucheth Ministers themselves: who must know their case is most fearefull of all mens, if they come into Gods presence in their prophaneneſſe: for as no man is more honourable than a learned and holy Minister, so none more contemptible in this world, none more miserable for that to come, than he that by his loose and lewd life doth scandalize his doctrine: and let him assure himselfe, that for his presumption, in rushing into Gods presence in his sinnes, he shall in this world, be cast out as unsavory salt, and trodden downe of men, with the foot of contempt: and in

Matth. 5. 13.

A the world to come, he shall above all men cry out in most extreme torment of conscience; Woe is me that mine eyes must see the King and Lord of hosts: and so because hee would not in this world, come into Gods presence in sanctification and holinesse, he shall therefore in feare and horror, be haled into the presence of Gods glory, at the last day, there to receive the just sentence of his condemnation.

Lastly, all painfull and godly Ministers may receive comfort, not to be discouraged or driven from Gods presence, because of their corruptions or infirmities; for wee see it was the Prophets case; but let them still approach in feare and reverence, and be so farre from being driven from their duty, because they being sinfull men, dare not come into Gods presence,

B without much feare; as let them contrariwise be assured, that the more they tremble at Gods presence here, the lesse shall they feare it at the last day: and when prophane and ungodly men, who in this world feared not to stand in Gods presence in their horrible sinnes, shall cry to the Mountaines, fall upon us, and to the hils, cover us and hide us from the presence of God: then such Ministers as in this world in feare and trembling, and alwayes in repentance, did approach into Gods presence, shall then looke up and lift up their heads, and shall say to the holy Angels, and all the powers of heaven, Helpe us, and hasten us to come into the glorious presence of our God and Saviour.

C And thus we see the manifold use of this doctrine to our Church and Ministery.

Use 2. Against the Papists.

Secondly, in as much as here the Prophet in a conscience of his corruptions, feareth and crieth out at the least apparition of Gods glory: The vanity and false dealing of the Church of Rome, is here discovered, in whose Legends and stories of their Saints, nothing is more common than apparitions from heaven, of Saints departed, of glorious Angels, of the Virgine Mary, (and that so familiarly, as sometime she sang with them in their Cell, kissed some of them, and let them sucke her breasts.) Nay, of God himselfe; and especially of our Saviour Christ Iesus: who they say appeared (I know not how oft) to one man Saint Francis: and

D appeared as he was crucified with his wounds, and imprinted those wounds of his in Francis his body, which, they say, hee bare all his life, and that they bled whensoever he would suffer them, which he alwayes did on Good Friday, that he might be like to Christ. This, and many more such, may you see in the fabulous and blasphemous booke, of the conformities of Saint Francis.

Ergo, the apparitions of God and Christ, which they make so ordinary, are but collusions.

But for the matter: are apparitions from heaven so ordinary in the Popish Church? how then came it to passe, that the greatest and holiest men in the old Testament, were so amazed at the very apparition but of an Angell, as wee may see in the whole course of the Storie? Some ranne away, and hid themselves:

Vse 4. For Ministers: Ergo, good Ministers must not flie from Gods presence, because of their sinnes, but repent, and so approach to his duty.

ſelves: ſome covered their faces, ſome fell flat on the ground: and the Prophet here cryed out, Woe is me, I am undone; mine eyes have ſeene the King and Lord of Hoſts. But in the Church of Rome, looke the ſtories: that Saint or Monke is no bodie, that hath not had ſome apparition, either of the Virgin Mary, or ſome of the Apoſtles, or an Angell, or Chriſt Jeſus appearing and talking with him: and yet alas, Peter, Iames, and Iohn, thoſe three great pillars, they were as good as beſide themſelves at the appearing of a little part of the glory of Chriſt, in his transfiguration.

Gal. 2. 9. Matth. 17. 6. Luk. 9. 33.

Either therefore muſt it follow, that theſe men have no ſinne in them, which dare and can behold Gods glory ſo eaſily, and ſo ordinarily, (which is impoſſible) or rather, which indeed is truth, it appeares that theſe are but deceitfull fancies and forgeries of their own device, to deceive the world, and to magnifie themſelves, before the eies of the common people: for it is firſt of all moſt falſe, that apparitions are ſo common as they make them; for if they were, then are they more ordinary in the new Teſtament, than in the Old. For whereas the Scripture hath one, their Legends have twenty: and whereas one, namely, S. Paul, was once rapt into heaven, they have 20. that were rapt thither: And as that is falſe, ſo is it impoſſible that any man clothed with fleſh, can endure any extraordinary apparition of Gods glory, without extreme amazement, as is plaine here in the Prophet; who I hope was as holy a man, as the holieſt Monke that ever was. I have noted this, that young Divines may bee occaſioned to looke a little into their fabulous legends, that ſo they may diſcover the falſe tricks, and jugling caſts of that Religion: which evill ſhifts it needed not, if it were of God.

Reaſons.
1 Apparitions of God cannot bee more common in the new, than they were in the old Teſtament.
2 Cor. 12.
1 No man in his fleſh can endure Gods glory.

Thirdly, the people may here learne: Firſt, in that Gods preſence is ſo glorious and fearefull to mans nature, how mercifully God hath dealt with them, in teaching them not by himſelfe, or by his Angels from heaven, which they could never endure; but by men who are like themſelves: and how vaine and fond theſe men are, who would bee taught from heaven, and not by men, who are ſo full of wants. In the Old Teſtament, when the people received the law from Gods owne mouth, it is ſaid, they ran away & cried out, Why ſhould we die? if we heare the voice of God any more, we ſhall dye: for what fleſh ever heard the voyce of the living God, and lived: therefore they ſay to Moſes, Goe thou neere, and heare all that the Lord ſhall ſay, and declare thou unto us what God ſaith to thee, and we will heare it and do it. And then ſaith the Text, The Lord ſaid, I heard the words of this people, they have ſaid well in all that they have ſpoken. And ſo, from that day forward, God ordinarily taught his Church by men like themſelves: and we ſee, that the beginning of it was not in judgement, but in mercy unto them. It is therefore the duty of all men, both to acknowledge this mercy of God, in due thankfulneſſe, and withall to remember, when they ſee infirmities in Miniſters, that they are but men; and that if they had not the Miniſtery of men, how hard it would goe with them: conſidering, that the leaſt meaſure of Gods owne preſence, cannot be endured by any man.

To the people: They may ſee Gods mercy to them, in teaching them by men like themſelves, and not by apparitions from Heaven.

Deut. 5. 25, 26, 27, 28.

2. Inaſmuch as Gods preſence is ſo glorious in it ſelfe, and fearefull to our nature, all men are taught to prepare themſelves by holy prayer, by humiliation, and confeſſion of their ſinnes, and unworthineſſe, afore they come to Gods Word or Sacraments: for they come at that time into Gods preſence: they therefore are not to come in their ſecurity, nor in their ordinary ſinnes unrepented of, leſt God ſtrike their conſciences, with a ſenſe of his fearefull diſpleaſure, and make them cry out upon far greater cauſe, than here the Prophet did.

Ergo, they muſt prepare themſelves before they come to the Word or Sacraments.

Thirdly and laſtly, we learne here the different natures and properties of ſin and holineſſe: Sinne, even the leaſt ſinne, nay, a very ſinfulneſſe of nature makes a man afraid of Gods preſence. That ſinne unrepented of doth ſo, appeares in Adam, who as in his integrity, hee ſpake and converſed even in a familiar ſort with God: ſo no ſooner had he ſinned, but he ran from God and hid himſelfe: and that even the leaſt ſinnes not repented of, doe ſo alſo, appeares in this Prophet, who being a holy man, yet his conſcience being privy to it ſelfe of ſome ſmall omiſſions or negligences in his calling, he crieth out: he is undone, becauſe he ſeeth the Lord of hoſts. But contrariwiſe, the ſtate of perfect holineſſe, and the want of all ſin, makes a man bold in Gods preſence, and rather deſirous, than afraid to behold Gods glory, which ſhall be moſt apparant at the laſt day: for when the wicked ſhal deſire rather to be covered with the hils, and ground to duſt by the mountaines, than to appeare before the face of God, then ſhall the godly, whoſe holineſſe ſhall then bee perfect, looke up, and lift up their heads, becauſe their redemption is ſo nigh. And Iob teſtifieth of himſelfe, that he knoweth his Redeemer liveth: And that hee ſhall ſtand before him, and looke upon him with his eyes. Thus as guiltines drives a man from the Kings preſence, but innocency makes him bold before him; So ſinfulneſſe makes a man avoid Gods preſence, but holineſſe makes him draw neere unto God, and to rejoyce in his preſence.

See the different natures of ſinne and holineſſe. Sinne drawes a man from Gods preſence.

Harmes in this a man into Gods preſence.

Rev. 6. 16. Luk. 21. 28. Iob 19. 25, 26, 27.

Then for a concluſion of this point, let all men here learne the way to true courage and boldneſſe before God, namely, to repent daily of their ſinnes, and labour to grow in true holineſſe: wealth nor wit, learning nor authority, can doe this for thee, but onely a good conſcience, which muſt be made good by grace, & by repentance: then ſhalt thou rejoyce in Gods preſence in this world, & delight to think of God, to ſpeake of God, to pray unto him, to meet him in his word and Sacraments, and at the laſt day ſhalt thou ſtand with cõfidence before the

Hitherto of the feare and astonishment of the Prophet, and the causes thereof. Now followeth his consolation:

Then flew one of the Seraphims, &c.

In these two verses is laid downe the second generall point, namely, the consolation of the Prophet: concerning which, there are two points in the text:

1. The ground and matter of his consolation; that is, the forgivenesse of his sinne.

2. Divers circumstances of that consolation.

1. The time: Then.

2. The Minister by whom it was done: an Angell, one of the Seraphims.

3. The manner how he did it, speedily, Hee flew.

4. The instrument or outward signe, a coale from the Altar.

5. The outward action or application of it; He touched his lips.

The matter of the consolation is last in order: Let us therefore first speake of the circumstances.

The first circumstance is, the time when this Prophet was comforted and raised from his feare; Then, saith the Text: that is, after his feare and astonishment, but not afore. Thus dealt God alwayes with all his Saints, he bestoweth no graces on them pertaining to salvation, but after he hath by some meanes or other brought them to true humiliation in themselves, and to sorrow for their sinnes. Humiliation is the preparative for grace: for when by sight and sense of their sinnes, and their owne miserie by sinne, hee hath even driven them quite out of themselves, finding nothing in themselves but cause of feare and astonishment; then powres he the oyle of grace, and of sweet comfort into their hearts, and refresheth their weary soules with the dew of his mercy. This point needs no further proofe: for look into the Scriptures, and we shall finde God never called any man to the state of grace, or to any notable worke or function in his Church, but hee first humbled them, and then brought them out of all conceit with themselves, and then wrought in them, and by them, his wonderfull workes.

The use of this doctrine is, first of all to teach all men to esteeme aright of the afflictions that God layeth upon them in this world: commonly men take them impatiently, and our nature grudgeth against them; but let a Christian man consider with himselfe, how God hath alwayes dealt with his children, and he hath cause not to thinke so: for doth God lay some great affliction on thee? it may be hee hath some mighty worke of his grace to worke in thee, or some great worke of mercy to be wrought by thee in his Church, and hereby prepareth thee for the same. Say therefore with the holy Prophet, I held my tongue, O Lord, and spake nothing, because it was thy doing: and what God may intend in his doing to thee, thou canst not tell: and therefore in silence and patience possesse thy soule.

Againe, here is a comfort to all such as are distressed in minde, in sense of their sinnes, and sight of Gods wrath: their state is not miserable, much lesse desperate; for they are in the high way to grace and favor. God justifieth not but him that repents; God exalts not, but him that is humble; God comforts not, but him that is distressed; God hath mercy on none, but such as both know and feele they want it: and know also, that they know not where to have it, but at his hands. Happy therefore is that soule, that feeles the weight and burthen of sinne, for to him will Christ bring most ease and comfort. Gods Ministers therefore are hereby to comfort distressed consciences, to assure them, that if with this Prophet they be so deeply touched with sight of their sinnes, and Gods justice, as that they cry, Woe is me, I am undone: Then, even Then, are they most capable of comfort, and best prepared to receive it, as here it fell out to the holy Prophet. Thirdly, here is the way taught us how to attaine to any excellent graces of God, either for our owne salvation, or the good of the Church, namely, to labor for a sensible feeling of the want of them in our selves: for God useth to bestow no gifts on any man, but such as doe in humility and lowlinesse confesse to God, and acknowledge in themselves the want of them. So the blessed Virgin signifieth: God filleth the hungry with good things, but the rich hee sends empty away: And so the Psalmist, God satisfieth the hungry soule, and filleth the empty soule with goodnesse. So then if thou be rich in thy conceits, God hath not for thee: but if thou be hungry, hee is ready to fill thee with good things: and doest thou acknowledge thy soule empty, then behold treasures of goodnesse, to feed and fill thee: and art thou cast downe with the Prophet, and is thy soule empty of hope, and fraught with feare, then behold, even then, God and his Angels are ready to raise thee up, and to fill thee with consolation. Thus much for the time of his consolation: now for the Minister, by whom it was;

The second circumstance of his consolation is, the Minister by whom it was done: An Angell, one of the Seraphims: that is, an Angell of that order so called: out of which wee learne:

First, that there are divers degrees and severall orders of Angels, though we know not the true distinction thereof: nor thinke it lawfull to imagine them to bee 9. nor to set them downe particularly, as the Church of Rome doth, who make many of their owne devices, which they call traditions of equall authority with the Scriptures. Secondly, that those holy Angels are the glorious guard of God, and doe continually stand about the throne of his glory, and attend his holy will, both in heaven and in earth.

Thirdly,

2. Generall points. His consolation, wherein are two points.

1. Circumstances of it. Circumstances are many. 2. The ground of it.

1. Circumstance, the time, that is, after his feare.

Doctr. No consolation, but after humiliation.

Use 1. To all men: Ergo esteeme of afflictions.

Psal. 39. 9.

2. To men distressed in conscience that their state is not desperate as they imagine, but most comfortable.

Use 3. The way to get excellent graces at Gods hand, is to labour to feele the want of them.

Luk. 1. 53.

Psal. 107. 9.

2. Circumstance of the Minister: an Angell, a Seraphim.

Doct. 1. Ergo, there are severall degrees of Angels, that we know not.

Doct. 2. That they are Gods guard.

Thirdly, that they are alſo by the merciſull appointment of God, the guard of Gods children, and miniſtring ſpirits ſent out, as it were with a Commiſſion, for the good of the Elect. All theſe points becauſe they are plaine in the Scripture, and doe leſſe concerne our generall ſcope, which is touching the Miniſterie, I paſſe them over.

Pſal. 34. Heb. 1. Doct. 3. That they are the guard of Gods children.

Fourthly, here it is apparant, that as the Angels are ſent out for the helpe and ſervice of the Elect, ſo eſpecially of Gods Miniſters, as is plain in this place, where the Prophet being affrighted, a holy Angell is ready to give him comfort: and ſo over the whole courſe of the Prophets: and at this day their protection and comfortable aſſiſtance, is no leſſe preſent to the godly Miniſters of the new Teſtament, though not in ſuch ſenſible ſignes, and ſuch viſible manner as in the old: for if they be miniſtring Spirits ſent out for the good of them which ſhall be ſaved, how much more for their good, which ſhall be both ſaved themſelves, and ſave others alſo?

Doct. 4. That they have a ſpeciall charge and care of godly Miniſters.

A doctrine of great comfort, and much good uſe to all Miniſters; who firſt of all may here learne contentment in their calling: for howſoever no calling hath more croſſes, ſo none againe hath more comfort: and howſoever none be more diſgraced by evill men, yet none is more honored by the holy Angels: and howſoever in this world, they above any calling are ſervants to all men, yet none hath the ſervice and attendance of Angels ſo much as they: for though we have them not to help us to doe the outward actions of our Miniſtery with us, or for us, (as ſome Popiſh Doctors teach, that in their maſſe Amen is not ſaid to one Collect, becauſe the Angels ſay Amen to it) yet doubtleſſe they are preſent alwaies, as at all holy exerciſes and lawfull actions, ſo eſpecially at the publike ſervice of God performed by the Miniſters: and beſide that, they are witneſſes thereof, and of the paines, and diligence, and faithfulneſſe of a good Miniſter: they alſo doe miniſter unto them oftentimes, bodily ſtrength and aſſiſtance, and many comforts in their troubleſome travels, which they know not how by any naturall meanes they come unto them. And as this doctrin doth thus yeeld them contentment againſt the contempt, ſo alſo courage againſt the danger of this calling. For what though thou haſt mighty men of this world againſt thee, when thou haſt Angels for thee? and what though thou fighteſt againſt principalities & powers, when thou haſt Cherubims and Seraphims on thy ſide? godly Miniſters have many enemies, but if by the eye of faith they can ſee as well who are with them as with the eye of reaſon who are againſt them, they will confeſſe with Eliſha, There are more with us than againſt us. The ſtories of all ages doe affirme, and the comfortable experience of theſe daies of ours doth verifie the truth hereof. Miniſters that live in places very propliane, or very Popiſh, it is admirable to ſee how many dangers they have eſcaped, and what plots they have avoided, which by their enemies, (or rather the enemies of their doctrine) have beene laid for their lives: which their deliverance, and many other comforts in their Miniſteries, whence are they but from Gods protection, by the miniſtery of his Angels?

Vſe Gods Miniſters. 1 Let them beg comfort with their calling, though it be full of croſſes and contempts: for it is honoured of the Angels above others.

2 Vſe, let them have courage: for though men bee againſt them, Angels are with them.

Before we learne this point, two queſtions may be asked, not amiſſe briefly to bee reſolved.

1 Queſt. 1 Ergo, whence is it that Angels attend Miniſters more than other men.

Anſw. 2 Reaſons.

First, if any aske whence comes it that Angels performe more ſervice to good Miniſters than to other men: I anſwer, the reaſon is partly from God, partly from the Angels: firſt, God hath a principall care of them above all other men, becauſe they worke his work above all other callings: for their labours immediatly concerne the good of mens ſoules: whereas others doe firſt concerne the body, and conſequently the ſoule: therefore, whereas hee hath given his Angels charge over all his Elect, to keep them in all their good waies, they have a ſpeciall charge doubtleſſe over all godly & faithful Miniſters, whoſe waies are Gods in a ſpeciall manner.

1 From God, he will have it ſo, becauſe they worke his worke more than other callings. Pſal. 91.11, 12.

Againe, Angels themſelves as they willingly performe any ſervice to the Church, or to any part thereof; ſo moſt willingly of all are they imployed for the good of godly Miniſters, and that for two cauſes.

2 From the Angels themſelves.

First, becauſe they are their fellow-labourers, both for that the Angels and good Miniſters are both called Gods Ambaſſadors, and Gods owne ſervants or officers, in a more peculiar manner than any other calling: and for that their ſervice is ſo like, that their names are common one to the other, Angels being called Miniſters, and Miniſters Angels, as though they were almoſt all one.

Becauſe they are fellow labourers. 1 Cor. 4.2. Heb. 1.14. Mal 2.7. Rev. 2. & 3. chap.

Secondly, becauſe the Miniſters duty is, to convert and ſave ſoules, being a worke which (next to the glorifying of God, and doing his will) the Angels doe take moſt delight in above any other: for if they bee ſent out for the good of them which ſhall be ſaved, how much more willingly for their good by whom they are ſaved which ſhall be ſaved? and if the Angels rejoyce at the converſion of a ſinner; ſurely they much love him, and deſire to doe him good, by whom the ſinner is converted: and in theſe reſpects, Angels and Miniſters have the ſame names: and are both imployed in the ſame great worke, namely, doing good to the Elect.

Becauſe they convert ſoules, which delighteth the Angels above any thing in this world. Heb. 1.14. Luk. 15.10.

Therefore is it, that the Angell calls himſelfe Saint Johns the Evangeliſts fellow in the Revelation: If then they be fellowes, even fellow-ſervants and fellow-labourers, in a more ſpeciall manner than any other, what marvell though the Angels be moſt willingly imployed in doing any ſervice of helpe or comfort to godly Miniſters?

Revel. 19.10. & 22. 9.

2 Queſt. What duties then are good Miniſters to performe to Angels. Not worſhip them ſo as the Papiſts doe.

In the ſecond place. If any aske if it bee ſo, then what duties are Miniſters to performe to Angels, for this their ſo carefull ſervice, and eſpeciall attendance upon them above other men?

A Papist would answer; Ministers must therefore worship them, and keepe their fasting, holy daies, and say their service, and pray unto them as to their keepers and Mediators. But alas, cannot the Kings Messenger or officer be honoured, unlesse he be set upon the Kings throne? will nothing serve him, but the Crowne and Scepter? so, cannot Angels be honoured, unlesse they be made Gods, or Saviours, or Mediators? But I answer therfore, we dare not goe so far, lest we remember the servant so much, that we forget the master: but rather we answer thus; seeing Angels are thus serviceable to Gods Ministers, it should first of all teach all men to honour that calling with all due reverence: for they cannot but please the Angels in honouring good Ministers, whom they esteeme their fellowes.

As all men should therefore honour that calling:

Secondly, it should teach all Ministers, not to content themselves with the name and title, but to labour to be good and faithfull. For so doing, they are fellowes to the Angels, and it is a disgrace to the Angels, when those that are their fellowes are unfaithfull.

1. So Ministers should labour to be faithfull in their calling.

And it should further teach them to adorne their calling with a holy life: for as sinne is that that grieves the Angels, and drives them away; so it is grace and holinesse which makes them delight in the fellowship of men.

2. To adorne it with a holy life.

And it may also encourage any man to take paines in that holy calling, wherein he is sure to have Gods Angels in a speciall manner to attend him, to assist him, to protect him, and to be a witnesse of his faithfulnesse: and who would not worke cheerefully in that labour, wherein he hath the Angels to be in a sort fellow-workers with him?

3. To bee painfull in their calling.

To doe these three duties, is to honour good Angels: and that Minister that conscionably performeth them, the Angels will take themselves sufficiently honoured of that man.

Thus to doe is to honour them.

And if besides this honour, we would rejoyce Gods Angels, and minister matter of joy unto them, then in the fourth place, let all Ministers propound to themselves above all things the conversion of soules, rather than their owne praise, or living, or pleasing of men, and so endevour it both in teaching, and all their other courses, that the Angels may see it, and be witnesses of it: for if they rejoyce at the conversion of a sinner (as Christ saith they doe) then those men make them oftest rejoyce, which doe most seriously aime at the conversion of sinners.

And if a Minister would rejoyce them, let him labour seriously so to preach as he may win soules.

And thus we see both the service of Angels to Gods Ministers, and the duties they are to perform to them in that regard. The due consideration of this point, may raise the world to a better conceit of this calling, and perswade fathers to dedicate their sonnes to it, and stir up young students to consecrate themselves thereto, and turne their studies to that end: for no man in no calling hath so speciall attendance and assistance of Gods Angels, as godly Ministers have: At least, if it worke not this in the A world, yet it may yeeld comfort and contentment to all faithfull Ministers in their painfull calling.

But let us see how the Angell performed his service to the Prophet: not unwillingly, not lingringly, but speedily: so saith the Text.

He flew.

3 Circumstance, the manner: He flew.

Which is not so to be understood, as though the Angel had wings: for they have no corporall nor sensible bodies, but spirituall and insensible substances, the actions whereof are performed with such nimblenesse and agility, as cannot fall within the compasse of outward sense. But the phrase is used for our capacities, to shew how readily and speedily the Angell went about to minister comfort to the Prophet. For as nothing B moveth so quickly to our sense, as doth the creature that flyeth; and as we say, that man doth flie about his businesse, which doth it quickly and diligently: so here the holy Ghost sets downe the willingnesse and quicknesse of the Angell, to comfort this holy Prophet, and to doe the will of God. Where we learne;

That is, readily, speedily, willingly.

First, what excellent servants of God the holy Angels be, which so readily, willingly, and speedily execute the will of their Lord. This must teach all Gods servants to do the like, and to imitate them in this excellent obedience: And the rather, because we pray daily to God; Thy will be done in earth as it is in Heaven: In earth of us, as it is in Heaven of the holy Angels: but they do it most cheerefully, and without all lingring, therefore so ought we. Magistrates in their places, and Ministers in theirs, and every man in his function is to apply this to himselfe, and to be stirred up thereby to a cheerefulnesse and quicknesse in their duties, for therein they resemble the blessed Angels, and then their deeds accord with their prayer: but contrariwise, he that doth his duty unwillingly and unreadily, is like the Devill: which indeed doth Gods will, and yet against his will: and surely unto such obedience there belongs no reward. But as God loveth a cheerefull giver, so doubtlesse loves he a cheerefull worker.

Doctr. 1. See what excellent servants of God Angels are.

The third petition.

Vse. We must so serve God in our places.

2 Cor. 9. 7.

Secondly, we see here how great love Angels beare ur to Gods children, especially unto godly Ministers, how willingly they are imployed D to doe them good. Willingnesse and readinesse to doe good to any man, must needs come from love: and yet alas all men, even the best, and all Ministers, even the best, are creatures farre inferiour to the Angels.

Doctr. 2. What good friends they are to good men, especially to good Ministers.

Here Magistrates and Ministers must learne to be far from contempt of their inferiours: and to doe their duties of ruling and teaching carefully, though the people be far their inferiours: it is the nature of love to make any man do service most willingly, to him that he loves, though he be farre meaner than himselfe.

Vse. 1. Ergo, Superiours love their inferiours, and contemne them not.

If therefore Princes love their subjects, they will not spare any care, cost, nor paines, nay, they will rejoyce to do them good, & they will labour to be like the Angels, who are farre greater ter than men, as they are then their ſubjects.

And shew it by doing them good.

And if Miniſters love their people, they will forget their owne dignity, which oft-times they might ſtand upon, and will make themſelves even ſervants to all, that they may winne ſome.

1 Cor. 9. 19.

Vſe 2. Ergo, Miniſters muſt,

1. Be faithfull.

And ſeeing Angels doe flie ſo faſt to give helpe and comfort to good Miniſters, this muſt teach them further:

2 Painfull.

First, every one to labour to be a good Miniſter, for then are they ſure of the love of Angels; and then moſt willingly doe the Angels any ſervice to them. Againe, let it teach them to flie as faſt to the diſcharge of their duties to Gods Church, as the Angels flie to doe them ſervice; ſo ſhall Gods Angels thinke their diligence and carefull ſervice well beſtowed upon them.

Vſe 3. Ergo, all men ſerve God cheerefully: if we be like Angels therein, we ſhall even be like them in glory. Prov. 22. 29.

Laſtly, this diligence of the Angels, and their willingneſſe, proceeding from love, muſt ſtirre up all Chriſtians to performe all duties of godlineſſe to God, and of love unto his Church, with alacrity and cheerefulneſſe: ſo doe Gods Angels. We looke to be like the Angels in glory in the world to come, then be like the Angel in glory in this world. The wiſe man ſaith, He that is ſlothfull in his buſineſſe, is good for nothing: but the diligent man ſhall ſtand before the King. And ſurely, he that is willing and diligent in the duties of Chriſtianity, ſhall ſtand before the King of Kings in Heaven. And let this ſuffice for the Angels ſervice, and his diligence in his ſervice. Now let us ſee what inſtrument the Angell uſed;

4 Circumſtance: The Inſtrument: a coale of fire. A ſtrange and wonderfull meanes,

The fourth Circumſtance of this conſolation, is the Inſtrument which it pleaſed God, the Angell ſhould uſe to miniſter comfort to the Prophet; a ſtrange inſtrument for ſo great a worke, a coale of fire. Here let humane reaſon hide it ſelfe, and worldly wiſdome be confounded, to ſee the wonderfull workes of the Lord: God could have healed the Prophets infirmities, and given him comfort againſt his feare, and courage in his calling, without meanes; but he will uſe meanes: and what? a weake meanes: nay, a meanes that ſeemes contrary; A coale of fire muſt touch his lips: that which in all reaſon would have made him ſpeake worſe, by Gods appointment, and the power of his Word ſhall make him ſpeake better. Out of which practice of God, we learne many points:

And which ſeemes contrary to reaſon.

Doct. 1. That God commendeth the uſe of meanes. Gen. 1. from 4. to 19. Seeing himſelfe alwaies uſeth them.

First, ſee how God magnifieth meanes: he can worke without them, and ſo he did in the creation, giving light to the world divers daies before there was Sunne: but ſince the order of nature was eſtabliſhed, he generally uſeth means not onely in his ordinary, but even in his miraculous actions: and though he uſe not alwaies the ordinary and direct meanes, yet meanes he generally uſeth, though they ſeeme contrary, as here in this place: and the ſame will bee found true in almoſt all the miracles, both of the old and new Teſtament.

This therefore commends unto all men, the uſe of ſuch good meanes, as Gods providence have ordained of any duties, or effecting of any thing that doth belong unto us to doe: and not to depend upon immediate helps from Heaven, as many fond and fantaſtic all men doe, who are therefore oftentimes juſtly forſaken of God, and left deſtitute of all helpe; and ſo expoſed to ſhame and reproach.

Vſe. Ergo, we are to uſe the meanes appointed in all our purpoſes.

Secondly, ſee here the mighty power of Gods ordinance, how it appeareth in weakneſſe; ſuch are all his great workes; In the Creation, he brought light out of darkneſſe; In our Redemption, hee brought us life out of death; In our converſion, he works upon us by his word, and by it he drawes us to him, which in all reaſon would drive us from him: and by it confounds the wiſdome of the world, which is ſtark fooliſhneſſe to the wiſdome of the word.

Doct. 2. See how Gods power doth ſhew it ſelfe in weakneſſe.

And ſo here, he cleanſeth the Prophet by a Coale of fire; which would rather defile him, and ſeaſoneth his mouth with it, which in reaſon ſhould have burned him: ſo great, ſo admirable, and ſo powerfull are the ordinances of God, though they ſeeme ſo contrary, or ſo weak in themſelves, or in their meanes.

Vſe. Ergo, God can worke by his Word and Sacraments, and mans miniſterie, though never ſo baſe.

Let this teach all men not to contemne the Sacraments, though the outward Elements, Bread, Wine, and Water, be weake and common, and dead creatures in themſelves: nor the Miniſtery of the Word, though it be exerciſed by a weake man, mortall and miſerable as others are: for that God, which can ſeaſon the Prophets mouth, and cleanſe his heart by a coale of fire, no marvell though hee worke upon the conſciences of men, by his word & Sacraments.

And againe, when we ſee Grace and Holineſſe conveyed into mens hearts by the Word and Sacraments; let us learne, not to aſcribe it to the dignity, either of the Miniſter, or the Elements, but to the ſupreme power of the mighty God, who can purge the Prophet, by a coale from the Altar.

Doct. 3. The apt teacher muſt have a fiery tongue.

Act. 2. That is, a powerfull tongue, to reprove and burne up ſinne.

Neither is it altogether without myſterie, that God here ſanctifieth the Prophet, by touching his lips with a firie coale: for it ſignifieth, that the apt and ſufficient teacher muſt have a firie tongue, and to that ſame purpoſe, the holy Ghoſt came downe upon the Apoſtles in firie tongues: and it may be that the one is a type of the other. Certaine it is, that they both teach us thus much, that all true and able Miniſters, muſt pray and indevour to have a tongue ful of power and force, even like fire, to eat up the ſins and corruptions of the world. For though it bee a worthy gift of God to ſpeake mildly and moderately, ſo that his ſpeech ſhall fall like dew upon the graſſe: yet it is the firie tongue that beats downe ſinne, and works ſound grace in the heart. It may bee there are ſome which need the firie tongue.

Ergo, ſuch Miniſters are faulty who reprove not ſinne.

This ſhewes apparantly, that thoſe Miniſters never had their lips touched with a coale from Gods Altar: that is, their ſoules with a coale from Gods Altar: that is, their conſciences never ver touched, nor their soules so long with the sanctifying grace of Gods spirit, which sit still, and see great and grievous staines in a Church, and corruption in a State, and can bee content never to reprove them, as though Ministers were perswaders onely, and not reprovers.

But when this comes to bee weighed in the ballance of a good conscience, it will be found, that not the pleasing tongue, but the fiery tongue is the principall grace of a good Minister.

But to goe further: whence came this Coale; Taken from the Altar.

This coale of fire was taken by the Angell from the Altar of God, where was a fire which never went out: and this fire was that, that came from Heaven, sent downe by God, at the dedication of the Temple by Salomon. And this fire kindled by God, never went out: for no man could kindle the fire, but all other was counted strange fire: As Nadab and Abihu tried in wofull experience, when they would needs offer with it.

Whence came this coale? from the Altar: which fire came from Heaven. Levit. 10. 1, 2.

Now the Prophet must be cleansed with the fire which came from heaven: teaching us, that the Minister must have his fiery tongue from the Holy Ghost: As the Apostles were said to bee baptized with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. A fiery tongue is a speciall ornament of a Minister, but that fire must come from Heaven: that is, his zeale must be a godly and heavenly zeale; but he that hath a raying, a lying, a slanderous, malicious, or a contentious tongue, he hath a fiery tongue indeed: but this is kindled of the fire of hell, as S. Iames saith; That unbridled tongue is a world of wickednesse, and defileth the whole body, setteth on fire the whole course of nature, and is set on fire of hell.

Doct. The fire and zeale of the Minister must come from Gods Spirit. Act. 2. 3. Matth. 3. 11. Not from carnall affections.

Iam. 3. 6.

So then, a spitefull and malicious tongue we see, is a fiery tongue; but that fire is taken from hell, and not from Gods altar.

For that is from hell, not from Heaven.

And hee that stands up to preach with this tongue, God will never suffer any great worke to be done by him in his Church, though his tongue be never so fiery, and his speech never so powerfull.

As therefore Ministers must abhorre the flattering and pleasing tongue, and must have a fiery tongue: so on the other side, this fire must be from Gods Altar: that is, the fire of their zeale must be kindled by Gods Spirit, and not by the spirit of discord and dissention. Ambitious humours, turbulent and proud humours, new opinions, private quarrells; all these, nor any of these are for the pulpit.

These may make a man fiery tongued, but this fire was never taken from Gods altar, as the Prophets was: this fiery tongue never came from Heaven, as the Apostles did.

It followeth,

And touched my lips.

5 Circumstance, The Application of the remedy to his lips which were polluted.

This fifth and last circumstance, is the Application of the remedie. The coale which is the medicine, is applied by this Angell to his lips, that is, to that part which was polluted: and as he formerly complaineth of the pollution of his lips, so the medicine is applied to his lips. Here the Angell, which in this case is made Gods Minister, doth teach all Gods Ministers a great point of wisdome in heavenly Divinity, namely, to apply their doctrin to their audience in such manner, as the circumstances of place, times, or persons doe require: some Ministers come to an ignorant and unhumbled people, and teach them the Gospell, which never knew the Law: here the fiery coale is used, but the lips are not touched, that is, good doctrine taught, but not well applied; for that the Law should first be laid to their consciences: others beare all upon the Law, when it may be their hearers are people sufficiently cast downe, and have more need to be raised up with the sweet comfort of the Gospell: other use to lay open the nakednes of the Court in the Country, and to reprove the faults of Princes and great Magistrates before the common people, who have more need of the Catechisme: others bring the Catechisme or points of ordinary instruction into the court, where the duties of Kings and Counsellours should be taught in all plainnesse and sincerity: others bring their new opinions, or controversall points unto popular audiences, which indeed are fit for the schooles: other busie themselves about ceremonies, when the substance is in danger to be lost. All these have (it may be) the Coale of fire, but it is misapplied, and not applied to the polluted lips. Let all Ministers therefore learne this point of wisdome of the Angell, to apply the medicines of their doctrine to the times, persons, and places which are infected; so shall they be sure not to take paines in vaine. And thus much of the circumstances of his consolation.

Doct. Ergo: Ministers must apply their doctrine fitly.

It followeth in the text, Loe thine iniquitie shall be taken away, and thy sinne purged.

After the Circumstances, followeth the ground and matter of his consolation, and that is the forgivenesse of his sinnes: where first, let us marke how it and the instrument are annexed together. Loe, saith the Angell, this coale hath touched thy lips, and thy iniquitie shall be forgiven, and thy sin purged; as though hee had beene cleansed by the Coale: where we may note, how greatly God magnifieth the meanes which himselfe ordaineth, even true remission and salvation to the right and holy using of them, though it come not from them, but from his owne mercie, and power of his ordinance. It is therefore no marvell, though God sanctifieth the childe by the ministerie of water in baptisme, and feed our soules in the Lords Supper, by feeding our bodies with bread & wine: and no marvell though the carelesse neglect of either of them, be damnation to them that despise them, seeing they are Gods instruments ordained by him, to convey his grace unto us. And yet for all this we are to know, that remission or salvation, is no more tied to the very elements, or the actions, than here the Prophets for-

2 Point, the ground of his consolation: which is the forgivenesse of his sinnes.

Doctr. 1. Forgivenesse and the meanes, are annexed together.

Vse. Ergo, Vse the meanes with reverence, and despise them not.

forgiveneſſe to the Coale of fire.

But the maine point is, that for the Prophets conſolation, the Angell tells him his iniquities ſhall be taken away, and his ſins purged: as if thereby he had ſaid, thy ſins were the cauſe of thy feare, therefore that thy feare may be taken away, thy ſinnes ſhall be forgiven.

Doctr. 2. Here comfort is from forgiveneſſe of our ſinnes.

Where wee learne, that as feare comes by ſin, ſo all true comfort comes from the forgiveneſſe of ſinnes: this is that that onely pacifieth the conſcience, and ſatisfieth the ſoule. When David had ſinned againſt the Lord in his two great ſinnes, and thereby provoked Gods wrath againſt him, and wounded his owne conſcience, if the Prophet had told him, he had made him King often Kingdomes more, he had not ſo rejoyced his heart, as when he told him, after his repentance, Thy ſins are forgiven thee, thou ſhalt not die: So when this Prophet was extremely affrighted at Gods preſence, becauſe of ſome ſins and negligences in his calling, it had beene no comfort to his poore ſoule, to have beene told, Thou ſhalt have a more eloquent tongue, and a more powerfull ſpeech, thou ſhalt have better acceſſe to the Court, and audience before the King: all theſe, and ſuch like, would have beene no better than gilded poiſon unto him, being in this caſe: but the happy anſwer that refreſheth his weary ſoule more than all the world, was this, Loe thy iniquities are forgiven, and thy ſinnes purged.

2 Sam. 12.

And in this Prophet.

Vſe. Him is the true way to comfort diſtreſſed conſciences.

All faithfull Miniſters muſt here learne the true way of comforting troubled and diſtreſſed conſciences, namely, firſt to draw him unto a ſight of ſome particular ſinnes, then to ſummon him into Gods preſence, and there to arraigne him for thoſe ſinnes, untill the view of the foulneſſe of his ſinnes, and the glory of Gods juſtice have ſufficiently humbled him; and then to labour to perſwade his conſcience upon good grounds of the pardon of thoſe ſinnes by Chriſt Jeſus: this is the way that God uſed, and deviſed, this is the ſure way that cannot faile.

Some thinke that all trouble of minde is nothing but melancholy, and therefore thinke nothing needs but Phyſicke and outward comforts: but he that conſiders in what caſe the Prophet here was, or David when he made the ſixt, the 32. or the 51. Pſalmes, will be of another mind, and will finde, that nothing can properly trouble the minde, but ſin: therefore as the wiſe Phyſitian in his cure, firſt ſearcheth out the cauſe, and then endevours to take it away; ſo the good Phyſitian of thy ſoule muſt firſt of all ſearch into the cauſe of his ſickneſſe, that is, his ſinnes, and muſt take them away: which if they doe not, then all their labour is loſt: for all the company, muſicke, recreation, wine, diet, nay, worldly comforts and delights, if it were the advancement to a Kingdome, cannot ſo much comfort the diſtreſſed ſoule of a ſinner, as this voice of a Miniſter ſpoken from God upon good grounds, thy ſins are forgiven thee. Now to lay downe what bee thoſe true and good grounds, whereupon a Miniſter may ſafely and comfortably pronounce pardon of ſins to a ſinner, belongs properly to another place.

Phyſicke and outward comforts will not ſerve. Pſal. 2. 3, 6, 7. Pſal. 32. 3, 4. Pſal. 51. the whole Pſalme.

In the next place: Let us here obſerve how the Lord afore he renew the Prophets commiſſion, or ſend him to preach to the people; firſt, humbles him for his ſinnes, and then upon his repentance gives him pardon: teaching us, that no Miniſter is well qualified to the holy duties of the Miniſtery, unleſſe he have truly repented of his ſinnes, and have obtained pardon and mercy in the Meſſias.

This is done by the Author in his caſes of conſcience.

Doct. 5. True qualification of a Miniſter is to be humbled, and to repent.

Miniſters labour for qualifications, but the true Miniſter of God will labour for this qualification above all other: for doubtleſſe he ſhal pronounce moſt powerfully the pardon of ſinnes to others, to whoſe conſcience God hath pronounced pardon of his owne.

In the laſt place, let us obſerve how the Prophet being to be comforted before he goe this new Embaſſage, the Lord is ſo carefull for him, that rather than he be not comforted (if there be no man to doe it) an Angell ſhall be ſent to be his comforter, and (if there be not another Prophet to doe it) an Angell ſhall pronounce unto him the pardon of his ſinnes.

Doct. 6. True Prophets and Miniſters ſhall have helpe and comfort in their labours, elſe Angels ſhall come to comfort them.

Let this be an incouragement for all Paſtors and Miniſters of Gods Church, to labour painfully and faithfully in their places, for the goodneſſe of the Lord will never faile them: nor ſhall they want comfort, when ever they ſtand in need thereof. Yea, rather ſhall Angels from Heaven be helpers and comforters, than faithfull Miniſters ſhall be left deſtitute.

Hitherto of the ſecond generall point, namely, of the Prophets conſolation.

The third and laſt generall point is, the renovation of the Prophets commiſſion, in the eighth, and part of the ninth verſes, and it containeth three parts: Firſt, a queſtion or inquiry made by God; Whom ſhall I ſend, and who ſhall goe for us?

Generall points, the renuing of his Commiſſion, which containeth three points.

2. The anſwer of the Prophet, Here am I, ſend me.

3. The commiſſion renued unto him: The Lord ſaid, Goe, ſpeake unto this people.

The firſt part is a queſtion made by God, by way of Proclamation, wherein hee inquireth who ſhall goe preach unto this people.

1. Gods queſtion: Whom ſhall I ſend?

Alſo I heard the voice of the Lord, ſaying, Whom ſhall I ſend? and who ſhall goe for us?

In which Proclamation, and inquiry of the Lord we are not to imagine, that the Lord was either unprovided of ſuch as ſhould execute his will, or knew not who were able, or who were willing to goe preach his word: For as the Apoſtle ſaith, in the matter of Election; The Lord knoweth who are his: ſo much more in particular vocations, The Lord knoweth who are his; and need not to aske, Whom ſhall I ſend, or who ſhall goe? But then it may bee demanded, why the Lord ſaith ſo? I anſwer, not for his owne ſake, but for ours: whom hereby he

Not as though God had none to ſend, or knew not whom.

2 Tim. 2. 19.

But to our conceits, and for our ſake, to teach us many good doctrines.

he would instruct in divers points of holy doctrine.

Doctr. 1. How hard to find a good Minister.

First, hereby he would give us to understand, how hard a thing it is to finde an able and godly Minister: for if there were not a great scarcity of such men, the Lord needed not aske this question. But some will object against this, that there are in many Christian Churches so many Ministers, as they cannot all be maintained, but some goe up and downe undisposed, and unprovided for. I answer, this is too true in all ages: there were wandring Levites in the Old Testament, which went up and downe and offered their service, and served for ten shekels of silver, and a suit of apparell, and meat and drinke: but this calamity was upon the Church of the Jewes, (never but then) when there was no King in Israel, & every man did that which was good in his owne eyes. If therefore there be any in our Church, and in Christian nations, which goe up and downe, and offer their service at such rates, it is much more miserable, seeing now there are Kings in Israel: and therfore it is no reason that every man rob the Church, as it shall please his covetous minde. But ceasing to enquire whether this be so or no: and if it be so, leaving the reformation thereof to those Churches and States whom it may concerne: I answer for the matter in hand; that this may bee so, and yet the Lord may complain as here he doth; Whom shall I send? for the Lord meaneth not such as beare the name of Levites or Priests in the old, or of Ministers in the new Testament (for there were alwaies enow of them: who, some for preferment sake, some for their ease, and some for a refuge how to live, are willing to enter that function, and accordingly in that calling, seeke not the Lord, but themselves and their owne ends.)

Object. There are too many Ministers, for some goe up and downe.

Answ. 1. Then it is a disorder in a Church.

Iudg. 1. 9. 1. 8. and 17. 8. 6.

Iudg. 17. 8.

Answ. 2. He seekes not for any.

But here the Lord enquireth for such men, as first, purely doe seeke and undertake that function, therein to honour God, and to gather his Church, and then in all their labours and ministeriall duties, truly and faithfully endevour to the same ends; Preaching Gods Word, and as Gods Word, diligently reproving, exhorting, and admonishing, and shining before their people in good workes: for such men, it is no marvell though the Lord light a candle at noone day, and make open Proclamation to seeke for them: saying, Whom shall I send? for such a man is as Iob saith, One of a thousand: for some want abilitie to discharge their duties, as Paul saith, Who are sufficient for these things? And some want willingnesse to undertake the labour, as God here complaineth; Who shall goe for us? Now to make use of this doctrine unto our Church.

But for good Ministers.

Iob 33. 22.

2 Cor. 2. 16.

Good Ministers scarce, even in these daies.

It were to be wished, that in these daies, and for our Christian Churches, the Lord had not as great cause to cry out in the want of able, faithfull, and godly Ministers, Whom shall I send, and who shall goe for us? But alas, this want is too apparent, and this blemish is too notorious, and it is a worke worthy the labour of Kings and Princes to reforme it: and is a Kings evill; not to be healed but by the power of a King: for as long as there are so few and meane preferments for painfull Ministers, there will never want abundance of such Ministers as doe want either conscience or abilitie to discharge their duties.

Vse 1. To Ministers. 1. They in the Universities frame themselves to the Ministery.

In the meane time, till God put into the hearts of Parliaments and Princes, to looke to this great and needfull worke, let us Ministers learne our duties: and first, we who are in the Universities, are here admonished to looke to our selves. By Gods blessing we are many, and daily grow more and more: let us therefore so furnish our selves, as that when God or his Church shall say, Who shall goe for us, and whom shall I send? then hee may finde many amongst us, whom he may send to that great worke of the Ministery: and let us feare to be such, as that God may affirme of us, as he did in the daies of Iob, that he cannot finde One of a thousand.

2. Labour to bee worthy Ministers.

Secondly, all Ministers learne here not to content themselves with the name and title of Ministers, but labour for the substantiall ornaments thereof, nor to be willing to take the honour and livings, and to refuse the burthen and duties of the Ministery.

For God hath use of them, but none of unconscionable or idle Ministers.

For else let them know, God hath no need of them: for had the Lord pleased or contented himselfe with such kinde of men, as seeke to bee Ministers for themselves, and not for his sake: or being Ministers doe feed themselves, and not their flock: or preach themselves, and not Christ: then had he not needed to have made this Proclamation: for ages have yeelded store of such. But contrariwise, he that is painfull and faithfull in this function, let him know that God and his Church hath need of him.

Vse 2. To the Clergy of Rome. A shame to them that being so many, there are so few of them fit for God to send.

Lastly, here the Romish Clergy are justly to be taxed, whose number is infinite: but it is lamentable to see how few among them bee such as the Lord here seeketh for. Their orders of Regulars are exceeding many, besides all their Secular Priests; and it is almost incredible, how many thousands there be of Dominicans, or Franciscans, or in some one of their orders: and yet amongst the many millions of their Monks, there is scarce to bee found one of many, who for his learning and other gifts, is fit to bee sent to the worke of God: nay, their ignorance was palpable and ridiculous to the world, untill of late, being by Luther, and others of our Church made ashamed thereof, they have laboured (especially the Iesuits) to become learned. How foule a thing is it, that amongst so many, the Lord should have cause to complaine; Whom shall wee send? The Iesuits indeed, many of them are learned, but for other qualities, they are fitter to be plotters and practicers in State-matters, Spies, or Intelligencers, Reconcilers, Seducers, and Subverters, than Ministers: and fitter to be instruments of policy to evill Kings,

Most of all their Priests and Monks are ignorant drones.

The Iesuits have learning, but no conscience: and are rather Statesmen than Divines.

then Ministers of the Gospel unto God. But take away them, and some few selected Monkes, (and those but a few out of many thousands) and then even for learning God may cry, and call, and proclaime in their Monasteries; Whom shall I send? And if it be a shame and misery to a Church to want such as God may send, or to have but a few, then the Romish Church is shamelesse, which shames not to have so many, and yet amongst them all, whom God may send, almost none.

Doctr. 2. No man is to goe untill God send him.

In the next place. By this inquiry, and question made by God, Whom shall I send, and who shall goe for us? The Lord would teach us, that no man is to undertake this function, unlesse God call and send him: therefore here are condemned the prophane fancies of the Anabaptists, and all like them, who thinke that any man upon a private motion, may step forth and undertake the duties of a Prophet, to preach and expound, &c. Oh but say they, these motions are from Gods Spirit: surely they can say little for themselves, who cannot say so much: but that cannot serve their turne: for if we say, contrariwise nay, but they are from the Devill, or at least from your owne vanity and pride, how can they disprove it? Againe, might not the Prophet have alleaged that with a better pretence and colour than they? yet he stayeth till God here call him: even so all good Ministers are to stay Gods calling.

And not to runne upon private motions.

Object. How shall I know when God calls me?

Answ. If Gods Church allow thy calling.

If any aske, how shall he know when God calls him? I answer, God calleth ordinarily by his Church, her voice is his: therefore whatsoever the Church of God saith unto thee, Thou shalt be sent, and thou shalt goe for us, even then doth the Lord call us out to this holy function.

Doct. 3. Out of the repetition of Holy three times, here is no sufficient proofe of the Trinity, as some thinke.

Thirdly, let us observe how the Lord saith, whom shall (I) send: and who shall goe for (us?) Some Interpreters gather out of this Chapter, an argument for the trinity of persons; as namely, out of the third Verse, where the Angels sing, Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God, &c. But it is not sound enough to overthrow our stubborne enemies the Iewes, and therefore it seemes those Divines are of a sounder and wiser judgement; who seeing we have other places pregnant and plaine enough, therefore thinke it no good discretion to urge this, or any such place which may probably admit another interpretation, lest that the Iewes finding the weakenesse of the Argument, doe judge all our proofes to bee as weake: and so take occasion to persist the rather in their blindnesse, by that which wee brought to have converted them. And as for that song of the Angels in the third verse, where they ascribe holinesse to the Lord three times: that their repetition signifieth nothing else, but the continuall joy and delight which the holy Angells take in praising of God, who cannot satisfie themselves in honouring his name: teaching us in their example, never to bee weary of praysing God by prayers and holy hymnes, and of honouring him in our lives and callings.

But to prove out of the words, Holy, Holy, Holy, the three persons in Trinity, seemes to be no fit nor sound collection. Rather in my opinion, we may safely collect and conclude out of these words (I, and Us) that there are more persons in the Trinity than one: for first, God the Father, or the whole Deity saith, Whom shall I send? and then changing the number, he saith, Who shall goe for us? For howsoever God may imply in the word (Vs) that hee that is sent to preach, is sent as well for the good of the Church, as for his owne glory; yet can it not be denied, but that the plurall number here, and elsewhere, ascribed to the Deity, must needs argue a certaine plurality of persons in that Deity: as in Genesis it is written, that God said, Let us make man: and here, Who shall goe for us?

But here may be proved a plurality of persons.

Gen. 1. 26.

Out of the evidence of which places, seeing the enemies of this doctrine must needs grant a plurality, namely, that there are more than one; then wee shall sufficiently prove out of other places, and by other arguments, that there are three.

Doct. 4. Ministers are Gods servants, they goe for God.

In the last place, let us marke what God saith, Whom shall I send, and who shall goe for us? God sends a Minister to preach, and hee goeth for God. Then behold here, what is the trade and profession of a Minister; he is the servant of God. So saith God here, he goeth for me: and so saith the Apostle of himselfe and all other good Ministers, that they are Gods Labourers.

1 Cor. 3. 9.

And in another place, the Angell of God appeared, Whose I am, and whom I serve. But if any man thinke that either God speaketh too favourably of them, or S. Paul too partially of themselves, then let the Devill himselfe bee judge in this case, who plainly and freely confesseth (though he did it not in love to the truth or them) These are the servants of the most high God, which teach unto us the way of salvation. Let therefore either God bee beleeved, who is for them, or the Devill who is against them. But what kinde of servants are they? what place of office have they? They are his Messengers or Ambassadors, that is, their profession, and their place.

Act. 27. 23.

Confessed even by the Devill himselfe. Act. 16. 16, 17.

Quest. What place is it they hold?

Answ. His Ambassadours. Iob 33. 23.

Now then for the use thereof.

Use 1. Then they must seeke to please God their Master, not themselves.

If they be Gods servants, then are they not their owne Masters; they have a Master, even God whose they are, and for whom, and from whom they come; they may not therfore please themselves, nor serve their owne pleasures, nor seeke the satisfying of their owne carnall lusts either in matter of pleasure, credit, or profit: if they doe, then will he call them to a heavy account, whose servants they are.

Use 2. Then let them doe their service diligently, and expect their reward assuredly.

Againe, if they bee Gods servants, then let them doe their service to God, and expect their reward from God: some Ministers will expect the reward, and honour of Gods servants, but will doe no service: that beseemes not servants;

let such men remember for whom they come, even from that God, who as hee can give reward, so he will expect service.

Though the world doe not, yet God will, for they are his Ambassadors.

And as for such men as painfully doe their service, but are not regarded nor rewarded of men as they deserve, let them be content and continue in their faithfulnesse, for they are Gods Ambassadors: and we know Ambassadors may have gifts given them of those to whom they are sent: but they expect their maintenance from the Kings their owne Masters: So the maintenance which the world should give Ministers, is like gifts given to Ambassadors: if it come, it is no more than they deserve: if it come not, yet will faithfull Ministers doe their duty, and expect their payment from their King and Master God, whose they are, and whom they serve.

Vse 3. Let no man therefore wrong them: for God will not suffer his Ambassadors to be abused. No King so poore that suffered it.

Thirdly, if they be Gods Ambassadors, sent by him, and come from and for him, then let all such as either condemne, or any way injury them, bee assured, that as God is mighty and powerfull, so he will mightily revenge it.

There was never King so poore, or weak, but thought himselfe strong enough to revenge any wrong offered to his Ambassadour. And shall God suffer so foule a wickednesse to lie unpunished? Nay, they and their posterities shall smart for it: let Ahab, and Iezabel, and Iulian, say if it be not so: and all ages or stories shew the contrary if they can, that ever any contemner and abuser of godly Ministers, escaped the visible vengeance of Gods revenging hands on him or his.

1 King. 22. 36, 37, 38, 34, &c. 2 King. 9. 33, &c. Acts 12. 1, 2. and 23.

Vse 4. Ergo, they must not be servants of men: that is, men-pleasers: but his that sent them.

Fourthly, seeing they are Gods Messengers and servants, they must not be the servants of men, to please, or flatter, or satisfie humours, this is not for them that are Gods servants: they therefore that will be slaves to the persons, and pleasures, and humours of men, they forget that they are Gods servants, and came for him: yea, they must not endevour the pleasing of themselves, nor the bringing of their owne purposes to passe, but in every motion, either made to them by others, or suggested from their owne hearts, they must forth-with call to minde, Who sent me hither, and for whom am I come? Even from and for God: therefore they are to yeeld to nothing, nor aime at any thing, but which may bee both to the will, and for the glory of him that sent them.

Great men must not think to have Gods servants at their command.

And if the great men of this world doe thinke it wrong that any man should command their servant against their will, or expect any service from him against their owne honour; then let them thinke it reason that Gods Ministers should not bee commanded any thing contrary to Gods will, or against his honour.

Vse 5. Ergo, they must regard the glory of God, their master, both in life and doctrine.

And further, if Ministers be Gods servants, then let them regard their masters glory, and be ashamed to doe any thing, either in their doctrine or lives, which may dishonour him: that servant is unworthy of a good Master, who seekes not his Masters credit in all his courses.

A Lastly, if they be Gods Ambassadors, then must they not deliver their owne fancies or inventions, but that message they received: and as they received it, so must they deliver it. And if they doe their duties faithfully, this doctrine is comfortable unto them, they may take paines with joy, they have a master will reward them: they may speake freely (so it be with discretion) they have a Master will make it good: they may stand boldly in the face of their enemies, they have a Master will defend them. And every faithfull Minister may say to himselfe, I will doe my duty, and deliver my Ambassage; He whom I serve, and whose I am; Hee who sent me, and for whom I come, will beare mee out. And thus much of the enquiry which God makes, and the meanes of it.

Vse 6. Ergo, they must deliver Gods Ambassage, not their owne, as they received it.

B Now let us see the answer which the Prophet makes, in these words:

Then I said, Here am I, send me.

The Prophet after he was comforted by God, and had his sinnes forgiven, then answereth; Here am I, send me. First, marke here, what a great change is wrought on the sudden: hee who a little before feared and shrunke at the least appearance of Gods glory, now stands forth boldly as soone as he is called, and answereth: Here am I, send mee. So great a matter is it for a Minister to have his sinnes forgiven, and to feele the favour of God to his soule and conscience. Here therefore we have an answer to two great questions, often moved in the world.

a Point. The Prophets answer: Here am I, send me.

Doctr. 1. He whose sinnes are forgiven, comes boldly to God: and to his duty.

C First, many would have quietnesse of mind, and peace of conscience, and cannot attaine unto it. If they aske how they might; to them I answer, Here is the way, seeke it not in worldly wealth, carnall pleasures, nor humane learning, in company, nor recreations: but seeke it in the favour of God, and pardon of thy sinnes, and thou shalt not misse of it. Thus shalt thou have comfort in thy owne conscience, courage before men, and boldnesse toward God.

Vse 1. Here is the true way to peace of conscience, and quietnesse of minde.

Secondly, many Students in Divinity, would gladly be Ministers, and doe much honour to the calling; but they finde a feare and shrinking in themselves, and thereby an unwillingnesse to venture upon it. If they aske how they may amend this: I answer, or rather the example of this Prophet answereth (for me:) Let that man set himselfe in Gods presence, enter into himselfe, search his conscience, finde out his sinnes, confesse and bewaile them to God, crave pardon in Christs blood, and leave them, and cease not till he heare the voice of Gods Spirit sounding in his conscience; Thy sinnes are forgiven thee. Then when God shall aske, whom shall I send, thou wilt answer readily, and with joy, Here am I, send me.

Vse 2. To Students. 1. If they would be Ministers, repent and get pardon of their sins.

D And againe, many are driven from this Calling, beholding the contempt and reproach, and dangers which belong unto it. But let those men marke here the phrase of this holy Prophet, when God asked, Whom shall I send? Hee might might have anſwered; Lord, I would goe: but ſuch diſgraces and diſcouragements accompany this function, as I deſire to be excuſed: but hee caſting aſide all ſuch conceits, anſwereth peremptorily, Here am I, ſend me. How came this to paſſe? for certainly the Prophet was as ſenſible of theſe wrongs as any of us all: for he was nobly borne and brought up, and was of the bloud Royall: ſurely, becauſe he ſaw he was in Gods favor, he had him and his commiſſion on his ſide; and he held this for a ſure ground, If God be on my ſide, who can be againſt me?

Therefore doubtleſſe, thoſe men who are driven backe by theſe diſcouragements, were never ſetled in aſſurance that their ſinnes were forgiven; nor ſatisfied ſufficiently, that God was on the ſide of ſuch good Miniſters; and that their calling, as it hath its authority from God; ſo likewiſe, allowance, bleſſing, aſſiſtance, and defence of God, above any other calling: for if they were, they would ſcorne the ſcorne, and contemne the contempt of the prophane world, and with much courage and comfort ſet their hand to Gods Plough, and ſay with the Prophet, Here am I, ſend me.

Doctr. 2. We muſt not ſet others to the labour of the Miniſtery, but our ſelves alſo.

Secondly, let us obſerve how the Prophet when God askes the queſtion, ſends him not to others, nor commends others to that ſervice, as is to be thought hee might have done many in the Churches of the Jewes; but offers himſelfe, Here am I.

It controlls the carnall courſes of many amongſt us in the Univerſities, who think it ſufficient to live there, and ſend out other men, and give teſtimonies and Letters of commendations to other men, but themſelves ſtir not. When queſtion is made, Who ſhall goe to ſuch a place? or who ſhall be ſent to ſuch a pariſh? they ſay not, Here am I; but either it is too little a living, or too great a charge, or ill ſeated, or ſome fault it hath, that they will not be ſent to it: but will anſwer God and his Church, There is ſuch a man, and give him letters of teſtimonie, or commendation, and ſo all is well: but for themſelves, they live too ſweet and eaſie lives, willingly to undertake the contempt and burthen of the Miniſtery.

Univerſity men muſt not be alwaies ſending out others, but muſt alſo ſend out themſelves.

Let ſuch men therefore learne, when God and his Church give them a calling, to anſwer with the Prophet, Here am I, ſend me.

And let all ſuch as are Students of Divinity in the Univerſities, marke here the Prophets anſwer, not I will be ready, but here am I: Why takes he no longer time? becauſe hee was now ſufficiently qualified. Where let them learne, not to linger and lie loitering too long in their ſpeculative courſes: but when they are competently furniſhed with learning and other qualities befitting that calling, let them ſhew themſelves willing and ready to yeeld their ſervice to the Church, when they ſhall be called. For as an Apple may as well hang too long on the tree, as be puld too ſoone, and both make it unfit for uſe: ſo many men as well ſtay too long

And Students muſt not deſer too long, but haſten to the Miniſtry.

For ſome ſtay too long, as ſome goe too ſoone.

A as goe out too ſoone, and both waies are made unprofitable, or at leaſt leſſe profitable to the Church.

And to conclude this ſecond point: It is not unworthy to be noted, that the Prophet ſaith not, Here I am, and I runne on my owne head but Send me.

He wills the Lord to ſend him: then where are they who dare brag of their private motions, and will runne when they are not ſent?

The Prophet might have ſaid; Oh, now I feele a motion from the Spirit; therefore I will goe and preach: but he ſtayeth till he be ſent in expreſſe termes. Let no man therefore preſume to preſſe into this function, till hee be full reſolved in his conſcience, that God and his Church hath ſaid unto him, Goe.

B And though a man be never ſo well qualified with all manner of ſufficiency, yet let him ſit ſtill, and ſtay Gods leiſure, and let him ſay, Here I am, ſend me: and ſo reſt contented untill he be ſent. If any man ſay it is unfit that a man ſhould ſay ſo of himſelfe: I anſwer, let him not ſay ſo in words, but in deeds: let him therefore make proofe of himſelfe, and give the Church triall of his gifts. Upon which experience of his gifts, if he be found ſufficient, that practice of his is all one, and much more than if he had ſaid, Here I am, ſend me.

Thus we ſee the Prophet would not ſtir till he were ſent; and therefore in the next word he is bid to Goe.

C And he ſaid, Goe, and ſpeake unto this people.

Here is the third and laſt point; namely, the eſſentiall words of his Commiſſion. Wherein (after God had ſought for one to goe, and the Prophet had preſented himſelfe, and offers his ſervice) God both gives him leave to goe, and further doth furniſh him with authority, both to goe, and ſpeake.

Wherein the principall point is, that the authority of the Prophets calling, is derived from God himſelfe in plaine and evident words; Goe and ſpeake: and till then the Prophet went not. So in the new Teſtament, the Apoſtles went not into the world to preach, till they had their Commiſſion, Goe and teach all Nations. And after them, Saint Paul preached not till it was ſaid unto him, Ariſe, and goe.

D In all which is diſcovered and condemned the pride and preſumption of thoſe who dare runne on their owne heads, and will not ſtay till the Lord ſay unto them, Goe and ſpeake. Theſe men are bolder than either the extraordinary Prophets of the old Teſtament, or the Apoſtles which are the extraordinary Miniſters of the new: who alwaies had their warrant with them when they went. And if any man aske why it is neceſſary they ſhould have ſo; I anſwer, the reaſons are many.

First, all Prophets and Miniſters are Gods deputies and Commiſſioners; it is therefore reaſon that they have authority from their Lord and Maſter:

Doct. 3. The Prophet will not goe till he be ſent.

And that not by private motion onely, but in expreſſe words.

Men therefore are to offer themſelves, but not to goe till they be ſent.

3 The Commiſſion received.

Doct. 1. No man is to preach without a Commiſſion.

Matth. 28. 19. Acts 9. 6, &c.

This is ſo for theſe cauſes.

Reaſon 1. Commiſſioners have no power but from the King.

Secondly, their words nor deeds beare no credit, not have any power in them, unlesse they be spoken by vertue of a Commission: nor have their labours any blessing, unlesse God give it.

Reason 2. Else what they doe, is without vertue or blessing.

Thirdly, their persons have no protection nor safety, unlesse they be Gods Ambassadors: and how are they so, unlesse they be called and sent by God, and have authority given of God? For these causes, no man is to thrust himselfe into the Ministerie, without a calling from God: and therefore no marvell, though those men who will be Chusers and Callers of themselves, and run when they are not sent, bee in their persons subject to all dangers; because they are out of Gods protection, and their labours without profit, because no blessing, nor promise of God was given unto them: for God may justly say unto them; Let him that sent you protect your persons; Let him that sent you blesse your labours.

Reason 3. His their persons have no protection.

But it will then bee demanded, how may I know if God bid me goe? for God speakes not now from Heaven as in old time, and as to this Prophet: I answer; It is true, we are to looke for no such visions nor apparitions from heaven; for ordinarily there are none such, and the Popish Church doth but deceive themselves, and couzen the world, who tels us of so many apparitions that happen to their Monkes and Friers; for now ordinarily, God speaketh in another manner to his Church: for in generall duties God speaketh to us out of his Word and holy Scriptures; and in particular and personall duties, (where the Word in plaine termes serveth not) he speaks to a man by his owne conscience, and by the voice of his Church.

Object. How may I know if God bid me goe?

Answ. We must not expect Gods voice from Heaven.

But he speaketh to man two waies, generally in his word.

Out of his Word, God sheweth thee the dignity and excellency of this calling, to be a Minister of the Word: namely, they are his Messengers and Ambassadors, &c. that so hee may win them to love and affect it. And againe, the necessity of it, that it teacheth the way to salvation, that without it ordinarily Gods Church is not regarded, nor mens soules saved: and this may stirre thee up to undertake the burthen; this is generall. But now particularly for thy selfe: Wouldest thou know whether God would have thee to goe or no? then thou must aske thy owne conscience, and aske the Church: for if thou be heartily willing, and be fully & worthily qualified, then God bids thee goe. Now thy conscience must judge of thy willingnesse, and the Church of thy ability: and as thou maist not trust other men, to judge of thy inclination or affection; so thou maiest not trust thy owne judgement, to judge of thy worthinesse or sufficiency. If therefore thy owne conscience tell thee upon true examination, that thou doest not love and affect this calling above any other, then God sends thee not: and if thou enter with such a testimony, not God, but some worldly & sinister respect doth send thee, and put thee forward: for though thou dost desire it, yet if the Church of God have not allowance of thy sufficiency, God doth not send thee: But if contrariwise, thy conscience doe truly testifie unto thee, that thou desirest to doe service to God and his Church, in this calling above any other: And if withall, upon signification hereof to the Church, and upon triall made of thy gifts and learning, the Church (that is, many learned, wise and godly, and such as the Church hath publikely appointed for that purpose) doe approve of that thy desire, and of thy sufficiency to doe God service in his Ministery, and thereupon by a publike Calling, bid thee goe; then assuredly God himselfe hath bid thee goe. And it is as effectuall a calling, as if thou hardest the voice of God from Heaven: for as in repentance, if thy conscience tell thee thou hast truly repented, and if thou canst make that knowne to the Church by so good evidence, as thereupon a Minister of God pronounceth the pardon of thy sinnes unto thee: If thou seest herein, and knowest it to be as effectuall, as if God from Heaven had told thee, thy sinnes are pardoned: So it is here; if thou hast the testimonie, first of thy conscience, and then of the Church, thou art to rest therein, as in the voice of God. And this is the calling that we are to looke for in these daies.

1 Cor. 4. 1. Iob 33. 23. Act. 16. 17. Prov. 29. 18.

By which doctrine, as those are justly condemned of foule presumption, who dare runne upon private motions, and carnall respects, and are justly left without blessing or protection: so they on the other side, doe offer great wrong to God and his Church, who when they cannot deny, but they affect the Ministerie above any calling, and have approbation of their gifts from the Church of God, yet will not beleeve the testimony of the Church herein, but their own private judgements, which in this case is no way a competent Judge, either for or against. Let such men know, that they oppose themselves even against God himselfe: it being certaine, that where the inward calling of the conscience, and the outward calling of the Church doe concur, there God himselfe calleth and biddeth that man, Goe, and speake.

Use 1. Against them that runne, and cry they be sent. 2 Against such as are called by both voices, and yet will not goe.

Now then (to draw to an end) let us observe in the last place, with what authority a Minister of God comes unto us, and executes his Function; even with immediate authority and Commission from God: whereby he is bid, Goe, and speake. If it be so, let it perswade the world, to feare to doe any wrong, either to that calling, or to those persons who come with so faire a Commission from God himselfe. But if it doe not perswade the prophane world, at least let this bee a comfort and incouragement to all true Ministers: for if God bid them goe, he will goe with them himselfe: if he send them, he will not forsake them, but assist them, & blesse them, and open their mouthes, & enlarge their hearts, and harden their foreheads, and give power unto their words to convert his children, and to confound and astonish the hearts of his enemies. If he send them, he will defend and protect them, so

1. Particularly God speaketh: 1. By the voice of his conscience for his inclinations. 2. By the voice of his Church for his gifts.

Doctr. 2. See the authority of a true Minister immediate from God himselfe.

Use 1. Ergo, let no man wrong them.

Use 2. Ergo, let Ministers be comforted in doing their duty: for if God send them, he will never faile them.

ſo that one haire of their heads ſhall not fall to the earth, without his providence. If hee ſend them, he will provide for them, and ſufficiently reward them: and will honour them in the hearts of his owne people, and magnifie them in the faces of their enemies. And laſtly, if he ſend them, he will pay them their wages, even an eternall weight of comfort here, and of glory in A Heaven. And as they are here bid goe, ſo once they ſhall be bid Come: and that not only with the generall call of all the Elect; Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdome prepared for you: but even with that particular Call, which eſpecially belongs to them that are faithfull in this ſervice: Come thou good and faithfull ſervant, enter into thy Maſters joy.

DIALOGVE ## CONCERNING
The end of the World.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE,

THOMAS Lord SCROOPE,

Of the Noble Order of the Garter: and of his Majesties Honourable Councell in the North.

RIght Honourable, this little Treatise was the first fruits of the labour of that great and reverend Divine, Master Perkins; many yeares agoe set out by himselfe: and now (all his Workes being to be put together) held fit to bee joyned with the rest: for though it were written in his young yeares, yet did these first fruits give assurance of that plentifull harvest of Instruction and Consolation, which the Christian world hath since reaped and received from the hand and mouth of that holy man: and in this very beginning did that blessed Spirit begin to shew it selfe, which afterward was so mighty and powerfull in his tongue and pen. It was first written against covetous hoarding up of Corne (amongst other sinnes) and was published in a yeare of dearth, the fitter therefore to be now againe reprinted, seeing our sinnes have brought upon us a dearth, and (which is more lamentable) a dearth without scarcitie.

Having perused and revised this Treatise, I doe humbly present it to your Lordships reading, and from you to the worlds view: the Honourable conceit your Lordship hath vouchsafed to hold of me and my poore labours, deserve at my hand more service and duty, than yet I can performe to your Lordship, till I can: give me leave thus to ranke your Lordship amongst the Religious and Honourable Patrons of Master Perkins his Works. Honour and all true happinesse be multiplied upon your Lordship, from God the Father in Iesus Christ. Amen. Iune 4. 1609.

Your good Lordships in Christ to be commanded,

To the Christian Reader.

IT is not unknowne unto thee (Christian Reader) that Satan is the deadly enemy of mankind, and that he goeth about continually like an hunger-bitten Lion, seeking whom he may devoure. For this cause he useth infinite sleights and conveyances, he layeth innumerable gins and snares to entrap men, and to bring them into eternall bondage under him. Of this point, thou maiest have a plaine view in the people of this Land. Some of them neither regarding Gods providence, nor his judgements which he may send upon them for their sinnes; stand agast at the signes of Heaven, at the conjunctions which ordinarily result: and at this present, their mindes are greatly occupied with fooliſh dreames of the yeare next ensuing. Some others (and they peradventure of a better sort) are professors of the Gospell, and yet live securely, still weltring in their old corruptions, and in very truth, not returning to the Lord. For they thinke they have done their duty, and are perswaded they are truly faithfull, if they doe not oppose themselves against the Gospell, but give an outward reverence to it, and to the Ministers of it. As the fooliſh Virgins contented themselves with their Lamps, never seeking for oile, untill it was too late: so these men content themselves with outward shew, and profession of godlinesse, never regarding to feele the power of it in themselves. Others there are, which no doubt might receive profit by the word which they heare preached, but they cannot abide that the word of God should be applied aright to their consciences. For they themselves never thinke of any thing, but of the promises of the Gospell, and cannot abide the threatnings of the Law. Yea, they like the Ministery of the Word when generall doctrine is delivered: but if the two-edged sword of Gods Word pierce into the marrow of their bones, and ransacke the secret affections and lusts of the flesh; then they are forth of order, and storme as furious and mad men. Againe, some there are, which partly by reason of the tendernesse of their owne consciences, partly by their owne ignorance in the word of God, are ever awnd disquieted, and troubled with manifold temptations. In all these sorts of men, thou maist easily perceive, how busie Satan is to deceive and bewitch men, and to keepe them still under his dominion, that his Kingdome may not be diminished. Now, for the preventing of these evils, I have drawne this little Treatise: Reade it at thy leasure, and accept in good part this my endevour: I trust by Gods blessing, it shall not bee unprofitable unto thee. # A Fruitfull DIALOGVE

Betweene the Christian and the VVorldling, concerning the End of the World.

Christian.

WEll overtaken honest man: how farre travell you this way?

Worldling.

As farre as Cambridge, God willing.

Christ. What have you a load, I pray you?

Worldl. As good Wheat as ever grew on Gods earth: I would I had as good a price as I could wish for it.

Christ. Why would you so?

Worldl. Alas, I have great store of Corne in my house at home, and I feare me it will rot upon the floares before I shall bee able to sell it, because I cannot get almost any thing for it: and they which offered me foure markes for a quarter of wheat, will not at this present give me foure nobles, and scarce twenty shillings.

Christ. Truly I perceive that you are a hard-hearted man, void of any compassion to the poore: you have beene one of those, that have brought our Country into such misery. And to you the Prophet Amos speaketh after this manner; Heare this, O ye that swallow up the poore, that yee may make the needy of the land to faile: saying, When will the new moneth be gone, that we may sell Corne? and the Sabbath, that we may set forth wheat, and make the Epha small, and the Shekell great, and falsifie the weights by deceit? that wee may buy the poore for shooes: yea, and sell the refuse for wheat? the Lord hath sworne by the excellency of Iacob; Surely I will never forget any of thy works. And even now at this time God hath beene mindfull of his promise: for he hath frustrated the desires of all such covetous men as you are, and of his mercy he hath heard the cries of the poore, and hath now given us plenty in this land.

Amos 8. 3, 6, 7.

Worldl. I marvell why you should speake against me, and all such as I am. I tel you plainly never any man spake so much to me as you have done now. In the parish where I dwell I am taken for an honest man, I doe no man any hurt: I use not to goe to the Alehouse and Taverne, as many naughty men doe: and I have a care to provide for my selfe and for my family, and I hope you will not condemne me for doing so.

Christ. Did you never heare so much before? doubtlesse more is the pity, and now yee shall heare more, even of me. For all these hoarders up of Corne, (among which you are one) are as bad as the vilest rascals that be in the land. You say yee doe no man harme: doe you not? and what good ever did ye? ye stop your eares at the cry of the poore, and say unto them; Goe thy way thou stranger, God send thee thou stranger, meat, drinke, and cloathing, as Sirach saith. Yee play the Glutton in the Gospell, yee doe not shew so much favour unto poore Lazarus crying unto you for releefe, as the dogs did which licked his sores. The richer sort of you, if a man in any need come to beg or buy something for his sustenance, ye cry out, away with this begger, goe whip this slave, to the stocks with this stinking rascall, stand further off for filling us with thy vermine, thou lousie wretch. Contrariwise, ye which are of the poorer sort, say, God helpe thee poore man, I have not for thee: I have a great charge, and am a poore man my selfe: thou wouldst have Corne of me, but thou wilt not goe to the price of it: thus deare it is now, I cannot bate a farthing of it; therefore goe thy waies and trouble me not. And yet forsooth ye doe no man any harme, ye would be sorry to be charged with any dishonesty. But in truth yee are murderers, because many are famished by your hoarding up of Corne: ye are theeves, because ye keep back that which belongeth to the poore, upon a reasonable price: ye are cursed Idolaters, because you set your hearts upon your riches: and in one word, ye are very Atheists in the world; yee distrust Gods providence, yee love him not, yee feare him not: ye are starke rebels unto God, bowing the knees of your hearts before the Prince of the world Satan. You are the rich men of which it is said, To be an impossible thing for them to enter into

Luk. 16. 21.

1 Ioh. 2. Coloss. 3.

Matth. 19.

into the Kingdome of Heaven: and except with ſpeed ye repent, ye ſhall finde it to be ſo.

Worldl. What meane you thus to raile on us? What doe we but that we may lawfully doe? I pray you for all your skill, is it not lawfull for us to doe with our owne what wee will? and to make as much of it as we can? you tell us (me thinkes) that we cannot bee ſaved, but I will alwaies put a good faith in God, ſay you what you will, and I hope to bee ſaved as well as you.

Chriſt. It is a pittifull thing to ſee how the world taketh many things for lawfull, which are flat againſt the Word of God. As for example: it is thought no fault to raiſe the market, and to take for a mans owne whatſoever he can get, and to ſell of any price; but this is reproved in the place of the Prophet Amos before alleaged, where hee denounceth Gods judgements againſt them that wait for a time, in which they may make the meaſure ſmall, and the price great, and take for their corne according to their covetous deſires: you ſay you have a good faith to God-ward, but alas you deceive your ſelfe with a phantaſie: for if you had true faith indeed, you would love God with all your heart; and loving God, you would alſo love your poore brother in whom Gods Image appeareth: and if you had a love of your brother, you would bee full of pitifull compaſſion towards him; you would no more ſing this ſong, May I not take for my owne what I can get? nay, you would rather doe as the faithfull did in the Primitive Church, who ſold their poſſeſſions, and tooke money, and divided it to the poore as they had need. And as the Churches of Macedonia did, which being in extreme poverty, yet did ſend plentifull releefe to the Church at Jeruſalem, farre diſtant from them. And you would rather ſee your ſelfe in miſery and poverty, than your poore brother, for whom Chriſt hath ſhed his bloud: yea, you would be content to fare hardly, and to pinch your ſelfe, that you might releeve your neighbours: For (as Paul ſaith) love is bountifull, love ſeeketh not her owne, love ſuffereth all things, and endureth them. 1 Cor. 13. 4. 5. 7.

Worldl. For mine owne part, I could have beene content to have ſold my Corne all the yeare thorow for leſſe price, if other would have done ſo: but other men were ſo hard, that they would ſticke for a penny. Theſe men indeed were they that did raiſe the Market: I tooke nothing but that which was offered me: and for my part, I hope God will have mee excuſed.

Chriſt. The vileſt miſer, and moſt covetous Carle that is amongſt you, can ſay ſo much. And how can you looke for any favor at Gods hands, when by your own confeſſion you have done as others have done, and given conſent to their wickednеſſe? In Sodome and Gomorrha no doubt all were not drunkards and whoremaſters, ſome were civill, and did abſtaine from this filthineſſe: yet becauſe they hated not theſe ſinnes, but approved the doers of them, nothing diſliking their filthy behaviour, as Lot did, whoſe righteous heart was vexed at their wickednеſſe, behold God deſtroyeth them all alike: and Paul maketh him to be a covetous man that favoureth and giveth conſent to the doings of a covetous man. Gen. 18. 19. Rom. 1. 29. 31.

Worldl. How if I ſhould have ſold my Corne cheape all this yeare, and no body elſe, what good would this have done?

Chriſt. You ſhould have done great good: for in regard of your ſelfe, you ſhould not have beene guilty of the great oppreſſion of this land, and your doings would have condemned the devilliſh practices of other men, and it might have pleaſed God by your enſample, to have moved other men to deale more charitably in their bargaining: and the Scripture is plaine, that the good works and Chriſtian converſation of any man, ſhining as lights before the eyes of the world, make many men to glorifie Gods name. Matth. 5. 16.

Worldl. You ſay like an honeſt man: and I am perſwaded, if you will ſpeake your conſcience, you that have ſpoken ſo much againſt us, cannot but ſpeake ſomething in our behalfe. You ſee every where what incloſing there is, and you cannot be ignorant, that Gentlemen and Landlords they have large conſciences, they make nothing of it to take great fines, and to double and treble their rents: now if the poore tenants ſhall not be ſuffered to ſell their corne at a dearer price, how ſhall they be able to live? how ſhal they pay their fines and their yeerely rents? I tell you plainly, if this may not bee ſuffered, we ſhall have beggers enow within this land: yea, even they which are now ſubſtantiall men, will ſhortly come to vile beggery.

Chriſt. Indeed I doubt not but theſe rackers of rents, and theſe incloſers, they are unmercifull men: ſurely they eat the bread of oppreſſion: and the very ſtones in the walls, and the beames of their faire buildings cry unto God for vengeance againſt them: but what then? they deale unjuſtly with you, they rob you, will you deale therefore unjuſtly, and rob others? it is very like that God doth uſe them as meanes to chaſtiſe you, to make you know your ſelves, to know God, and to depend upon his providence. You muſt not therefore in any wiſe uſe unlawfull meanes to avoid this croſſe which God layeth upon you by theſe wealthy oppreſſors, but rather you are to beare it with patience, till ſuch time as God ſhall deliver you: praying to God (if it be his will) to ſoften the hearts of theſe hard-hearted men, who regard nothing but their owne pleaſure and eaſe. Hab. 2. 11.

Worldl. Yea, wee ſhould doe ſo indeed: but who are they which doe ſo? I would faine ſee you doe ſo.

Chriſtian. This is the manner of you all. You thinke theſe bee dreames which I ſpeake of, and that no man ever did them: but it is a most infallible truth, that all they whosoever have received the spirit of God, their minds are so enlightened, their hearts and affections so reformed, and brought in order, that they cannot but doe these things: but you are a worldly carnall man, you can shift in the world, and make a bargaine for your owne advantage: but as for the will of God in his word, and the performance of it, it seemeth foolishnesse unto you; you know not the meaning and the reason of it. To let this passe: I marvell why you dare travell abroad from your owne house; you seeme to be sicke, and very low brought with sicknesse, and in my judgement you hazzard your life: you doe not well, you have small care of your selfe.

World. I am brought low indeed, but (I thanke God) I have no sicknesse, that I can tell of.

Christ. What is the matter then I pray you, if a man may bee so bold as to enquire of you?

World. As I told you, I have great store of corne, and I hoped to have enriched my selfe by it: but on the sudden, the price of corne fell very much; I tell you, it strucke me to the heart, and it made me at the very wits end. If I had not been a strong hearted man, and borne out my griefe, I had not been here now. For when I saw I should have a great losse, and be almost undone, I had thought to have made away my selfe: but I hope I shall beare it out now, and because there is no other remedy I am content: truly the world is come to that passe, it will not last always.

Christ. You in your talke doe verifie the saying of S. Paul, That they that will be rich, do fall into temptation and snares, and into many foolish and hurtfull lusts, which drowne men in perdition and destruction. And he addeth, That the desire of money is the roote of all evill, which while some lusted after, they erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrowes: all which you have done.

World. But I am in better case now than I have been, and I comfort my selfe as well as I can; for I see there is no remedy, and I shall not be alwaies in this misery: for the world will last but a while.

Christ. These are silly comforts indeed: you should rather cut off the vice of covetousnesse, and then you might have sound comfort. But how commeth this into your minde, that the world cannot last long?

World. How? why I am sure you know as much as I: they say I know where, that the next yeare eight eight, Doomesday will be.

Christ. They are flying tales.

World. Nay, I promise you I have some skill, and I have read bookes of it that are printed, and talke goes, that there be old prophecies of this yeare found in old stone walls.

Christ. I tell you plainly they are very lies.

A World. It seemeth that you have skill this way: we have yet a good way to go before we come to our journies end: I pray you let me heare your judgement of it. And what doe you say to these verses which every man hath in his mouth?

What after Christs birth there be expired
Of hundreds five compleat, yeares eighty eight
Then comes the time of danger to be feared
And all mankinde in dolors it shall freight:
For if the world in that yeare do not fall
Of fire and land then erre we greatly all.
Let Empires all and Kingdomes shake or fall
And man to ease himselfe shall have no meanes.

Christ. For my part I make as little account of these verses as of Merlins drunken prophecies, or the tales of Robin hood. They import thus much in effect: that either the end of the world shall be the next yeare; or if the end of the world be not then, yet that there will be great troubles and subversions of Kingdomes in the world. And for the satisfying of your desire, I will shew you my judgement betweene you and me: first of the end of the world, secondly of the troubles which (as men suppose) shall befall us this next yeare.

B World. I pray you then, what is your judgment of the end of the world? shall it not bee that next yeare?

Christ. My judgement is this, that it is not possible for any to find out the time of the end of the world: and if it were possible to appoint that time, yet it were not lawfull.

C World. Every body thinketh, that unto learned men it is both possible and lawfull: for my part I cannot tell, I would be glad to learne, and untill I heare what you say, I will say as most doe say.

Christ. That we may speake of this point in some order: first let us consider whether it be possible by any meanes to let downe the end of the world: and for a ground of all that I shall speake hereafter, this I will propound as a principle, that no man can define or any wise conjecture the houre, the day, the weeke, the moneth, the yeare, or the age in which the end of the world shall be.

D World. I thinke not so: how can you prove it by any good reason?

Christ. The word of God is the ground of this my affection. In a vision Daniel seeth one Angel asking another Angel clothed in linnen, when should be the end of the miseries and troubles of the Church: the answer was, that it would be after a time, two times, and halfe a time. Now marke the words of Daniel, Then I heard (saith he) but I understood it not: and then I said, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things? And he said, Goe thy way Daniel: for the words are closed up and sealed till the end of the time. If Daniel could not tell the time, and when an answer was made concerning the end, could not understand it; what meanes can any man living use, to conjecture at the day, or the yeare, or at the hundred yeare in which the world shall end. Againe, when the Disciples of our Savior Christ asked him whether he would at his ascension restore the kingdome to Israel, this answer was given them; It is not for you to know the times and seasons, which the Father hath put in his owne power. Which answer maketh very much for me. For it proveth also, that the speciall times in what the end of the world shall happen, are unknowne to man and hidden from him: God keepeth them to himselfe. And in the Apocalyps, the soules of them that were killed for the word of God, longing for a full deliverance, cry with a lowd voice, How long Lord, holy and true? In the answer which they receive from the Lambe, there is no speciall time mentioned of their deliverance: but it is told them, That after a little season when their fellow-servants and brethren shall be killed as they were, that then they shall see the end. In my judgement these proofes are sufficient to confirme that I said before.

World. For my part I have no skill in the Scriptures as you have; you may soone deceive me. But if this be true which you say, then be like all the prophecies which goe of the end of the world are false.

Christ. All prophecies are not of God, and from his Spirit: many are from the phancies of wicked men, and from the suggestion of the Devill.

World. I pray you therefore shew mee how I may discerne of prophecie, whether it bee from God, or the Devill; and to whether it ought to bee regarded as true, or despised as false.

Christ. I will to my power doe what I can to satisfie your request: and here I will set down certaine notes, by which you, or any man else may discerne of any prophecie. First, if the Prophet be insufficient, it is a strong suspicion that he is not of God: but it argueth that his prophecies come from some other cause. The sufficiencie or insufficiencie of a Prophet may be perceived by these markes:

1. If he maintaine heresies, and doe not embrace the Christian religion.

2. If his judgement be rash and inconstant in other matters.

3. If he be given to some notorious vice, as covetousnesse, or pride; for then it may be suspected, that hee seeketh by his prophecies to winne either some gaine, or some glory unto himselfe.

4. If his complexion and the temperature of his body be strange: for then he may be thought to have some disease which hindereth the reasonable part: he may have the weaknesse of the braine, the phrensie, or some such like. And it is certaine that in all such Satan hath great power, and doth trouble them with dreames and visions, and many strong phantasies and terrors of minde.

5. If he despise other mens judgements and counsels, and sticke to his owne opinion. Paul, which was rapt up in the third heaven, and saw strange visions, was for all that most humble, 2 Cor. 12.7.

6. Lastly, if the Prophet be a young man, not an old: if a woman, and not a man: if babling and talkative, not fraught with wisdome: if unruly and disordered, not quiet: suspicion may be gathered, that the prophecie is an illusion of Satan. For in the weaker sort he most prevaileth.

Secondly, if it be against the word of God, or any circumstance of it: and if it reveale that particularly, which the word of God foretelleth in generall manner, not laying downe the place, the time, the persons, the manner of doing it, it may be taken for a false prophecie.

Thirdly, if the prophecie be uttered in ambiguous words, or in speeches which are insolent and strange, not understood of them which heare them, and never used in the Scriptures, or of the Church; it is like to be some sleight: for the Spirit of God speaketh plainly; and if it utter things which are not to bee knowne mystically, yet evermore it speaketh like it selfe, as appeareth in the prophecies of the old and new Testament.

Fourthly, if the end of the prophecie be Gods glory, and the profit of Gods Church, it is to be regarded: but if this be the drift of it, to put some men into a foolish feare, to make disquietnesse in the Church and Common-wealth: if it be a platforme to bring some to promotion, it is not to be regarded. For example, this is a flying prophecie: Canterbury was, London is, and Yorke shall be. This prophecie, if men will regard it, tendeth to strife, contention, and sedition: and it may bee a meanes of wicked attempts, if hereafter time and place doe serve: the devill oftentimes soweth his seed a long time before he can have it growne up.

Fifthly, if it concerne some private men, and some private family, it is to be suspected: for the prophecies which come from Gods Spirit are commonly generall, and tend to the profit of the whole Church.

If it be false in any one little point, or in any circumstance, account of no value. For those prophecies which are of God, are in no point false: for God is truth it selfe.

By these notes and many other, we may judge of the prophecies of Merlin, of the prophecies of those that terme themselves Elias, of Anabaptisticall revelations, of dreames, of these flying tales of the second comming of Christ.

World. I know more now than ever I knew in all my life; and I promise you for this I will not believe all prophecies, which I shall heare, but as well as I can I will trie them out. But in the meane time let me heare your judgement of some speciall prophecies, which concerne Doomes day. What say you to Elias prophecie: Two thousand yeare, two thousand the Law, two thousand Christ: And for our sinnes which which are many and marvellous, some yeares which are wanting shall not be expired.

Christ. Some men there are, which make great account of this prophecie, but in truth it is not to be regarded. And if we shall examine it by the former notes, it will appeare to be but a fooliſh prophecie.

1 Berosald. Chro. l. 2. c. 3. Talmud. par. 4. l. 2. de Iud. & Senat.

First, who is the Author of this prophecie? not Elias the Thisbyte, whoſe hiſtory we reade in the old Teſtament: but a fond Jew of the ſame name, and the words of the prophecie are found no where but in the Jewiſh Thalmud.

Secondly, it is againſt the word of God: From the beginning of the world, to the publiſhing of the Law, were two thouſand yeares, ſaith Elias: two thouſand five hundred and thirteene yeares, ſaith the Scripture. From the giving of the Law, to the paſſion of our Saviour Chriſt, were two thouſand yeares, ſaith Elias: from the giving of the Law to the paſſion of our Saviour Chriſt, were only one thouſand, five hundred, forty two yeares, ſaith the Scripture. Now ſeeing two parts of this prophecie are againſt the Chronologie which is laid downe in the word of God; why ſhould I beleeve that Elias ſaith the truth in the third part which is not yet fulfilled?

Thirdly, this prophecie is a plaine viper, it eateth out the guts of the Jewes Thalmud, and confuteth them for ſaying, that Chriſt is not yet come; For Elias maketh but foure thouſand yeares from the beginning of the world, to the death of Chriſt: and now almoſt ſix thouſand years are paſt ſince the beginning of the world: ſo that the Jewes, if they will maintaine their prophecie, they muſt grant that Chriſt is alreadie come, which they deny.

Worldl. You ſpeake too ſore againſt this prophecie: ſome learned men doe ſay, that it is agreeable to the word of God. For in the fourth of Eſdras, whereas Eſdras demandeth of Vriel the Angell, whether the time paſt be greater than the time to come? the Angell doth anſwer by two ſimilitudes, and doth ſhew unto him a burning furnace, and afterward a watery cloud, and ſaith, Marke whether the fire doe overcome the ſmoke, and the ſhowre the drops, or otherwayes. To whom Eſdras ſaith; I ſee Lord, that a very great ſmoke doth paſſe away: I ſee alſo a very great ſhowre to come powring downe; but afterward I perceive the flame to overcome the ſmoke, and the drops the ſhowre. Then ſaith the Angell, now judge of the continuance of the world. Even as the firſt ſmoke vanquiſheth the fire, and the drops the ſhowre; ſo the yeares of the time paſt ſhall exceed the time which is to come. But now according to the computation of yeares, it is evident, that Eſdras lived about the third thouſand and five hundred yeare after the worlds creation, and a while after Cyrus death: from which time about two thouſand yeares are conſumed. Wherefore we doe ſee, that this prophecie doth marvellouſly agree with that of Elias, and the 1 Eſd. 4. 45.

A end of the world to be nigh at hand.

Christ. I perceive that you have read ſome bookes of this matter: but doubtleſſe your reaſon is of no force: for that booke is not canonicall, and the place which you alleage may be otherwiſe anſwered. For the Angell by his ſimilitudes doth not ſo much compare the time paſt with the time to come, as the eſtate and infidelity of the time paſt, with the eſtate and infidelity of the time to come. For as the ſmoke vanquiſheth the fire, and the drops the ſhowre, ſo ſhall (ſaith the Angell to Eſdras) the wickedneſſe of the time to come be increaſed more than thou haſt ſeene now, or haſt heard in times paſt. And this is that which the Angell principally meaneth in his anſwer to Eſdras.

The very Popiſh Church doe hold it not Canonicall.

Worldl. Let us goe on further in this point. What ſay you to the prophecie of the Poet Orpheus? I cannot ſay his words, but the meaning is this, That in the ſixth age, or ſixth thouſand yeare God ſhall deſtroy the world.

Christ. You ſay true, I remember ſuch a thing indeed, alleaged by the ancient Philoſopher Plato. But if the prophecie of Elias is not to be regarded (as in truth it is not) who is ſo mad as to give any heed to the ſaying of a fabling Poet? But leave your prophecies, let us heare what you can ſay elſe? for it ſeemeth that you have read ſome bookes of the ſecond comming of Chriſt.

Worldl. I remember ſuch a reaſon as this, drawne from the creation. God was ſix dayes in making the heaven and the earth, and he reſted the ſeventh day: now every day is a thouſand yeares, as Saint Peter ſaith: therefore about ſix thouſand yeares the end of the world ſhall be.

2 Pet. 3. 8.

Christ. You doe abuſe the place of Scripture which is in Saint Peter: for his meaning is this, that the greateſt time, and the ſmalleſt, differ not in reſpect of God, to whom all times are preſent. And if your reaſon were good, I will make another as good forth of the ſame place againſt you, after this manner: Saint Peter which ſaith, that one day is a thouſand yeares, ſaith alſo in the ſame place, that a thouſand yeares are but as one day. Out of which words I frame my reaſon thus; A thouſand yeares are but as one day; the world ſhall laſt ſix thouſand yeares, as you ſay, therefore the world ſhall laſt but ſix dayes. Moreover your owne reaſon may be retorted againſt you, thus; You thinke that the end ſhall be of all things, this next yeare 88. But as God was ſix dayes in creating the world, and hee did not reſt in the ſixth day, but in the ſeventh: ſo in like manner (if the ſix dayes of the creation reſemble the ſix thouſand yeares of the continuance of the world, as you ſuppoſe) the end of the world cannot be before the ſixth thouſand yeare bee expired: as the reſt was not before the ſixth day of the creation was expired. And ſo neither you nor any other have any cauſe to feare the yeare next enſuing.

D

Worldl. You are too subtill for me: I have not been at the University as you have been, though I travell that way now. But because you are so friendly in talke, I will be bold with you a little more yet. Are not these times in which we live, called the last houre, and the last times? I know you will grant it: for the Scripture saith, that our Saviour Christ was once offered in the end of the world; and S. Peter saith, that Christ was made manifest in the last times; and if then were the last times when our Saviour did suffer, the end of the world must be looked for every houre.

Heb. 9.26. 1 Pet. 1.

Christ. You must understand, that the whole time of the continuance of the world, is divided into the old time, which continueth from the beginning of the world, unto the comming of Christ: and into the latter dayes, or last houre, which is the whole space of time from the comming of Christ, unto the end of the world: as may appeare in the Epistle to the Hebrewes. So then your reason proveth nothing. For these may be the latter dayes still, and the last houre, and the world may for all that continue an hundred yeares, or two hundred yeares longer, for any thing we know. Is not the comming of our Saviour Christ compared to the comming of a theefe, for this cause: That as no man is able truly to conjecture the comming of a theefe, before he beginne to breake into the house; so no man can truly conjecture the comming of Christ, before he see him in the clouds, and then he may certainly determine, that the end of the world is present.

Worldl. All the signes of the comming of Christ are past; Oh, what earthquakes have there beene? what famine? what wars and hurliburlies among men? what signes in the Sunne and Moone? what flashing in the ayre? what blazing starres? surely, surely, the world cannot last long: there is some cause that so many men so long agoe have spoken of these times, and specially of the next yeare. I see you doe not feare, but I promise you I am afraid.

Christ. Some men there be, that thinke that all the signes of the comming of our Saviour Christ are past. And what if they be past, as you say, what then? must of necessity the end immediately follow them? what should hinder, that the comming of Christ should not be two or three hundred yeares after the signes which signifie his comming? you have nothing to shew but your owne imaginations. But now if the signes of Christs comming be not all past, what will you say then? assuredly very godly and learned men are of this minde.

Worldl. I pray you shew me how all the signes are not yet fullfilled, which goe before the end of the world.

Christ. According to that measure of knowledge which God hath given me, I will doe my endevour to shew this point unto you. The signes of the comming of Christ are of two sorts; for either they goe with the comming of Christ, or before it. Of the first sort speaketh our Saviour Christ in the Gospell of S. Luke, saying: Then there will be signes in the Sunne and Moone, and in the starres, and upon the earth trouble among the nations, with perplexitie: the Sea and the waters shall roare: all these signes shall be fulfilled at the very comming of Christ: When as the heavens shall passe away with a noise, and the elements shall melt with heat, and the earth with the workes that are therein shall be burnt up. The other sort of signes that goe before our Saviours comming are very many.

Luk. 21.25. 2 Pet. 3.10.

1. The first signe is the preaching of the Gospell, as Christ saith: and this Gospell of the kingdome shall be preached throughout the whole world, for a witnesse to all nations, and then shall the end come: and this signe is every day more and more accomplished.

Matth. 24.14.

2. The second is, the spreading abroad of errors, heresies, and schismes: as S. Paul saith, That in the last dayes some shall depart from the faith, and give heed unto spirits of errors, and doctrines of devils: and our Saviour Christ saith, That many false Prophets shall come, and if it were possible, even to deceive the elect: We and our ancestors have seene this signe fulfilled.

1 Tim. 4.1, 2.

3. The third is a generall security of men in every calling, and in every place. Which now is evident. When was there ever more Atheisme? more contempt of Gods holy Ministery? more shamelesse hypocrisie, than is in these times in which we now live?

Luk. 17.26, 27, 28, 29, 30.

4. The fourth signe is the Apostasie, and the revealing of Antichrist, which now is knowne of all men to be the Pope, and his Church; and they themselves, if they were not past shame, would grant, that the second beast comming forth of the earth, having the lambs hornes, but the dragons mouth, they (I say) would grant, that this beast should be the Pope their Father.

2 Thess. 2.3, &c.

5. The fifth signe, is the afflictions and miseries of the world by earthquakes, warres, pestilence, famine, and such like.

6. The sixth signe, is the conversion of the Jewes unto that religion which now they hate, as appeareth in the 11. to the Romans: and this signe which goeth immediatly before the comming of Christ to judgement, is not yet fulfilled for any thing I can tell. These only be the chiefe signes, of which Gods word maketh any mention: Of these, some are present, some are to come: so that for any thing I can tell, there is no cause why we should thinke that the end of the world should be the next yeare.

Rom. 11.26.

Worldl. I cannot tell whether all the signes of the comming of Christ be past or not; but sure I am, that wonderfull things are come to passe in these dayes; and the world is come to that passe for naughtinesse, that it cannot last long.

Christ.

Christ. That is your old song, but if the world be naught, it is the worse by you that are so covetous: and if you thinke that the end of the world will bee shortly, even the next yeare, what a mad man are you to be so covetous? will you heap up riches which you know you shall never enjoy? And will you hoard up treasure for many yeares, when the world is not to continue one?

Worldl. Well, well, my covetousnesse is an eye-sore to you, you are alwayes harping upon it: take no care, it shall never hurt you, you shall answer for your selfe, you shall not answer for me; if you will not talke quietly with me in good neighbour-hood, I will hold my tongue.

Christ. I must needs admonish you of this vice which raigneth in you. What if you should see a man cast into a water, swimming, and readie to be drowned; would you not with all speed seeke to save his life? and were it not a wicked part in him to be angry with you for your good will?

Worldl. Yes.

Christ. Your case is the very same: You are plunged over head and eares in this sinne of covetousnesse: it presseth downe your soule to the bottome of hell, and by it you are in fearefull danger of eternal death; it pitieth me to see you in this case, I would with all my heart doe any thing to bring you forth of danger. Yet for all my good will, thus I am rewarded.

Worldl. It is but your minde that I am in such danger of hell fire. I would be sorry, if I had not a good heart to God-ward, and I serve him truly morning and evening, as well as God will give me grace. And if I were so bad a fellow as you would make mee, good Lord! what a miserable case is the world in? For I doe nothing but that which every body doth. I pray you heartily, let us goe on in our former talke.

Christ. Well, goe too; I will follow your humour, say what you can.

Worldl. You reject all prophecies of the end of the world, and all other conjectures you account them as frivolous, and not to be regarded: yet the Astronomers are men that are gaily learned, and can tell many things, which the world knoweth not: I thinke you dare say nothing against them.

Christ. Astronomers that take upon them to prognosticate of things to come, are babblers, and there is no heed to bee given to their sayings. There is many of them in this land, that make a living by telling of fortunes, and things that are lost and stollen: but in truth they are very theeves, and the good statutes that are made against coziners, might better be urged against them, than many others.

Worldl. Me thinks you are very rash, before ever I tell you what they say, you inveigh bitterly against them; they write, that about eighty eight, the end of the world shall be, or at the least great subversions of Kingdomes, warres, confusions, &c.

Christ. In a word, they are all lyers and deceivers; they are not able truly to conjecture these things, and I will shew it you plainly. The Ægyptians and Chaldeans of all other men, were most given to the studie of the stars, and never any were so skilfull in that matter as they: Yet for all that, the Lord by the Prophet Esay, layeth this in their teeth, that for all their skill, yet they were not able to foretell their owne destruction, which was at hand. Where are now (saith the Prophet) thy wise men, that they may tell thee, or may know what the Lord of hosts hath determined against Ægypt? And unto Babylon he saith: Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counsels; let now the Astrologers, the starre-gazers, and prognosticators stand up, and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee: behold, they shall be as stubble: the fire shall burne them, they shall not deliver their owne lives from the power of the flame: there shall be no coales to warme at, nor light to sit by: thus are they with whom thou hast wearied thy selfe, even thy Merchants that have beene with thee from thy youth: every one shall wander to his owne quarter: none shall save thee. Esa. 47. 11, 12, 13.

Worldl. The Prophet in these places speaketh against the unskilfull, not against the art of Astronomie.

Christ. Yea, if you marke and consider the places well, you shall find they are against the art it selfe, and against the most wise and skilfull in all Ægypt and Chaldea: the spirit of God here confuteth their arrogancie, and threatneth revengement on them, for that they professe to fore-shew those things which God hath hid in his secret counsell, and cannot be perceived by the starres.

Worldl. Doe you thinke, that God would make the heavens, and the starres in them for no end? no doubt, God hath made them for some great use.

Christ. The beautifull frame of the heavens, was created for mans use and profit. As to be signes of the ordinary and naturall course of all things in the world; as of the time of sowing corne, of reaping, of planting, lopping, &c. Gen. 1. 14. Againe, they have this use, to distinguish and to make the seasons of winter, summer, spring, harvest: they make day and night, and the naturall course of yeares is by them: In a word, they are made even as an hen to foster and cherish the creatures here below: and therefore doe give heat, and cause raine and moisture in the seasons of the yeare. As the Prophet David saith, Nothing is hid from the heat of the Sunne. Psal. 19. 6. And the Prophet Hosea saith: And in that day, I will heare (saith the Lord,) I will heare the heavens, and they shall heare the earth, and the earth shall heare the corne, and the wine, and the oyle, and they shall heare Israel. Now God did not make the starres to be meanes of foretelling things to come, and that men should learne of them good and evill successe: Hos. 2. 21, 22.

ceſſe: they that referre the ſtarres to this end abuſe the ſtarres, and breake the third commandement, by taking Gods name in vaine. And therefore God threatneth them by his Prophet Eſay, that make ſignes of things to come in the heavens; and ſaith, I deſtroy the tokens of the Southſayers, and make them that conjecture, fooles, and turne the wiſemen backward, and make their knowledge fooliſhneſſe. And to thinke, that by the ſtarres and their courſe, a man may conjecture the end of the world, is fooliſhneſſe, or rather madneſſe. For either the ſtarres muſt be the cauſes of the end of the world, or bare ſignes. Cauſes they cannot be; for this is a property in nature, that every thing laboureth to preſerve it ſelfe; and therefore it is not like, that by the heavens ſhall be cauſed the end of the world: for then they ſhould be cauſes of their owne ruine. And againe, the courſe of the ſtarres cannot be a token or ſigne of the end. Dionyſius Areopagita, when hee ſaw the Sunne to be eclipſed at the full Moone, being ſore afraid, ſaid, That either the end of the world was then, or that the God of nature did ſuffer. And no marvell; for the extraordinary eclipſe of the Sunne was a ſigne of ſome ſtrange wonder: but that the naturall and ordinary courſe of the ſtarres in the heavens, ſhould ſignifie ſtrange and extraordinary things, (ſuch as are ſubverſions of kingdomes, and the end of the world) that by no reaſon can be ſhewed. And yet this is that which Aſtronomers maintaine, and take as granted. Againe, the power, and vertue, and the operation of the ſtarres is unknowne to man: and if it were knowne, yet by the ſtarres no man could gather what was to come: which I will ſhew you by this ſimilitude. Suppoſe twenty egges of ſundrie divers birds ſet under one hen, let her ſit on them all, and communicate her heat unto them all; can you, or any other, by knowing the properties of the hen, and by feeling of her heat, tell mee of every egge what chickens ſhee will hatch? whether crowes, or partridges, or what other fowle: and can you tell by the ſame meanes when the hen ſhall die?

Isa. 44 45.

Worldl. I tell you, my wife hatches many chickens in the yeare, but this paſſeth all my skill, and herstoo.

Chriſt. Very well. The heavens are as a hen, foſtering and cheriſhing theſe earthly things under them: and you cannot by the vertues of the ſtarres, if you knew them never ſo well, you cannot (I ſay) conjecture either the event of things upon earth, or the diſſolution of the world: except you could there withall know the ſecret purpoſe of God, and the particular cauſes of every particular thing.

Worldl. You ſhut me your minde plainly, and me thinks it ſhould be true you ſay: but every where there is great talke of Conjunctions of planets, and you would wonder to ſee, how ſimple men (ſuch as I am) liſten after ſuch things: and ſome men have beene ready to ſell away all their goods, for feare of conjunctions. I pray you is there no ſuch things? and if there be ſuch things, what are they?

Chriſt. Indeed, Aſtronomers have written of ſtrange conjunctions; and among others, one Cyprianus Leovitius, a Bohemian: and becauſe you are ſo earneſt on me in this point, I will repeat ſome of his words. In the yeare of our Lord (ſaith he) 1583. in the moneth of May, there ſhall happen a great conjunction of planets in the laſt end of Piſces; after which ſtraightwayes in the yeare 84. ſhall enſue a wonderfull mixture of all the planets in Taurus, about the end of March, and beginning of Aprill. And which is more, a little after that ſhall be ſeene an eclipſe of the Sunne, in the twenty degree of Taurus, about the head of Algol, a moſt cruell and hurtfull fixed ſtar, governed by Venus, which ſhall be linked to five planets in Aries, tending toward the twelfth degree. Here we muſt watch (ſaith he:) and I think it meet that all earthly cogitations be caſt off, leſt we be deſtroyed being unready: for this great conjunction is of all the laſt which ſhall happen in the end of the watery Trigon: and the watery Trigon ſhall have an end, and be turned into the fiery Trigon. Neither ſhall there be any more in the ſpace of 800. years, the end of the watery Trigon ſhall be nigh. But becauſe about the end of the watery Trigon this Monarchie did begin, it is likely, that the ſame alſo in the end of the ſame Trigon ſhall have an end: ſith the Sonne of God himſelfe, Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, even in the end of the watery Trigon, tooke upon him the nature of man. For ſix yeares before his moſt glorious nativity, the very ſame conjunction in the end of Piſces, and in the beginning of Aries happened. Neither came the like ſince that time, but when CHARLES the great held his Empire, which was in the yeare of our Lord, ſeven hundred eighty nine; and now the ſecond time ſuch a ſtrange and great conjunction ſhall come; which undoubtedly doth foreſhew the other comming of the Sonne of God and man, in majeſtie of his glory: at which time we muſt render an account of our life and converſation.

Worldl. I remember that I have read theſe words in an Engliſh booke, of the ſecond comming of Chriſt, and I would deſire your judgement of them. It ſeemeth, that the man which writ theſe words, was deeply learned in Aſtronomie.

Chriſt. You ſhall heare as much as I am able to tell you, and I can ſay ſomewhat, becauſe I have laboured in theſe matters. Firſt therefore know this much, that this Leovitius doth not truly account the motions of the ſtarres, but is farre deceived, as by the moſt exact tables of Eraſmus Reinholdus, and Stadius may appeare. And whereas he ſaith, that in the yeare of our Lord 1583. in the moneth of May, there ſhall happen happen a great conjunction of the ſuperiour planets in the end of Piſces: in truth there is no ſuch thing. For Iupiter and Saturne are almoſt three degrees aſunder, when they are both in the end of Piſces in May: but in Aprill, the moneth going before, they are in conjunction: and what ſtrange thing can this be, which hath happened ſo often ſince the beginning? To wit, every 240. yeares, once in the ſame Trigon (as they ſay.) As for that he ſaith, that in the yeare 1584. there ſhall be a mixture of all the planets in Taurus, about the end of March, there is no ſuch thing: but in the beginning of Aprill, Saturne and Mars are in conjunction, and then Iupiter is about twelve degrees diſtant from them: other mixture of planets to be regarded, I ſee none. Meſſahala maketh the greateſt conjunction of planets to be, when the three ſuperior planets are joyned all together in Aries, which ſhall not be either in the yeare 83. or 84. But be it, that there had been then ſuch ſtrange conjunctions of the planets, as Leovitius ſpeaketh of, what then? what ſhould follow? forſooth the end of the world. And why ſhould this be, conſidering that all theſe conjunctions are naturall, and come of the naturall and ordinary motions of the heavens? and there have beene ſince the beginning of the world, 270. conjunctions of the ſuperiour planets, Mars, Iupiter, and Saturne? heretofore they have portended no ſuch dangers, as the effects declare: but there is no remedy, now they muſt needs ſignifie ruines of kingdomes, and the end of the world; Leovitius will have it ſo: for he ſpeaketh very confidently, as from an Oracle: No doubt (ſaith he) this great and ſtrange conjunction doth fore-ſhew the other comming of the Sonne of God and man, in majeſty of his glory. But no doubt, God will deſtroy the ſignes, and confound the phantaſies of theſe men, as hitherto in all ages hath beene ſeene. Albumazar, he propheſied, that in the yeare of our Lord 1460. an end ſhall be made of Chriſtian religion: and yet even then the Goſpell beganne moſt of all to flouriſh. And a Iew propheſied, that in the yeare 1364. Meſſias ſhould come, who ſhould deliver the reſt of his owne nation out of ſervitude under the Chriſtians: how true this is, let they themſelves judge.

Worldl. You are too ſore an enemie unto Aſtronomers, you are now neare the Univerſity, if you were there, you durſt not ſay ſo much: he is a wiſe man indeed that is never deceived; and theſe men, though they are deceived ſometime, yet they often tell the very truth.

Chriſt. That is nothing: for it is no marvell, if a man unskilfull in ſhooting, often hit the marke, if he continue in ſhooting. But I would have theſe propheticall Aſtronomers ſhew a reaſon, why the great conjunction of planets forſhew the end of the world: belike they will ſay, that they know it to be ſo: if they know it, then their knowledge commeth either by experience, or without any experience: If they ſay that they know it without experience, then truly they deceive us, for all good knowledge in humane learning is builded upon experience. If they know it by experience, then they muſt needs have obſerved this, that the deſtruction of the world hath followed ſuch conjunctions: if they have ſeene this, then they were either in the world, or forth of the world: If they were in the world, how did they eſcape when the world was deſtroyed? If they were forth of the world, where ſtood they? But I will here ceaſe to ſpeake of Aſtronomers, leaving to them their vanities, till ſuch time as it ſhall pleaſe God to make them acknowledge them, and loath them, as the Epheſians did: who being given, not unto wicked and devilliſh arts, but unto ſuch vaine and frivolous conceits as theſe of the Aſtronomers are; after that they were wonne to the religion of Chriſt, brought their curious bookes, and openly burned them. Act. 19. 19.

And I would have you that are an ignorant man, to remember the ſaying of the Prophet Ieremie, Be not afraid of the ſignes of heaven, though the heathen be afraid of ſuch: for the auſtomes of the people are vaine. Ier. 10. 3.

Worldl. I have heard you hitherto, ſhewing, that no man by any probable conjecture can tel the ſpeciall time of the end of the world: now ſhew me, that it is not lawfull for any to ſearch out the end of the world.

Chriſt. Indeed I thinke it is not lawfull to be curious to ſearch out the time, in which the end ſhall be: it is a thing in which Chriſtians are not to meddle. For it is the will of God, that this ſhould not be knowne; therfore whoſoever ſearcheth this time, doth againſt the wil of God: to this purpoſe it is ſaid in the Acts, It is not for you to know the times and ſeaſons. Act. 1. 6. Moreover, God hath kept the knowledge of this ſecret unto himſelfe: and neither the Angels, nor Chriſt as he is man, knowes this time: wherefore it ſhall be pride and vanity in man, to occupy himſelfe in ſearching it out. 3. Laſtly, the Apoſtles, and Daniel the Prophet, when they were curious, and deſired to know the end, and asked this queſtion, When ſhall theſe times be? they had the repulſe, and never received any anſwer: which declareth, that none ought curiouſly to enquire of that time.

Worldl. But why is it not the will of God that this time ſhould be knowne?

Chriſt. The ſame cauſe that moved God to conceale from us the houre of death, the ſame alſo made him hide from us the houre and time of his comming: to wit, that we might alwaies watch and pray, and have our loynes girt round about us, and our lamps in our hands burning, as though we every houre did wait for the comming of Chriſt. And this is the reaſon which our Saviour Chriſt uſeth. For after he had ſhewed the uncertainty of the time of his comming, and yet that his comming was moſt certaine, and very ſudden: hee addeth an exhortation, ſaying, saying; Watch therefore, because yee know not when the Son of man will come. And indeed because the time is unknowne, it stirreth us up to perpetuall watchfulnesse. The master of a familie, if hee knew the houre in which the theefe would come, he would watch onely the same houre: but because hee knoweth that he will come, and is uncertaine of the houre in which he will come, therefore he watcheth the whole night throughout. Matth. 24. 41.

Worldl. I thanke you (sir) heartily, for that you have shewed me your opinion so willingly and so courteously, of the end of the world: but yet I would make bold with you a little more in this matter. I often come among my neighbours, and now and then we talke of these matters, and every man will have his owne saying, and peradventure we are all deceived. You say it is neither possible, nor lawfull to search the comming of Christ by any meanes: how then may a man frame his talke wisely, and speake the truth in these matters?

Christ. It is a good question you demand, and I will bee carefull to make you an answer. Therefore, when you speake with any man of the end of the world, frame your talke after this manner.

1. That the end of the world is most certaine.

2. That the time of the end of the world is uncertaine to man; and that he must not be curious in this matter.

3. That God would have this time to be unknowne, that men might live in the feare of his name, and not deferre their repentance.

4. That every man must long to see this day, in which an end shall be made of sin and wickednesse.

5. That God may come sooner to judgement than we are aware of, or the world doth imagine; as the parable of the wicked servant sheweth.

6. That if God seeme to defer his comming, it is, that by his long suffering he might bring us to repentance.

7. That though God will not end the world, yet hee may every moment cut off the life of man. If you shall speake of any of these points, you cannot speake amisse.

Worldl. Surely my memory is naught, and now you doe me pleasure, in that you tell me your whole minde so briefly and plainly. I pray you let me make bold to conferre with you of the other part of the Prophecie: which is, that if the end of the world be not this next yeare, yet there shall bee great troubles and subversions of kingdomes. If I knew your opinion of this, I would cease to trouble you.

Christ. Not to make long discourses, my opinion is this: that there must be great troubles in the world, but they are not to bee looked for more in the yeare 88. than any other yeare. And this I will briefly declare unto you, and then we will end this matter.

A Worldl. Shew me first of all, that there shall be many troubles in the world; for I would very faine know that.

Christ. Doubtlesse, the reasons of this thing are most evident. First, Gods word threatneth plagues and punishments to the disobedient, and the transgressors of his commandements. If (saith Moses) thou wilt not obey the voice of the Lord thy God, to keepe and doe all his commandements which I command thee this day, then all these curses shall come upon thee, and overtake thee. Cursed shalt thou be in the towne, and cursed in the field, &c. The Lord shall send upon thee cursing, trouble, and shame in all that which thou settest thy hand to doe, untill thou be destroyed & perish quickly, &c. Deut. 28. 15, 16, 20.

B And the Lord shal make the pestilence to cleave unto thee, untill hee hath consumed thee forth of the land, whither thou goest to possesse it: the Lord shall smite thee with a consumption, and with the fever, & with a burning ague, and with fervent heat, and with the sword, and with blasting and mildew. The heaven that is over thy head shall be brasse, and the earth that is under thee, iron: the Lord shall give thee for the raine of thy land, dust and ashes; even from heaven shall it come upon thee, till thou be destroyed. And the Lord shall cause thee to fall before thine enemies, &c. Also Amos the Prophet speaketh thus; Behold the eyes of the Lord are upon the sinfull nation, and I will destroy it cleane out of the earth: nevertheless I will not utterly destroy the house of Iacob, saith the Lord. Amos 9. 8.

C And in the third chapter he speaketh of the house of Israel, thus; They know not to doe right (saith the Lord) they stirre up violence and robbery in their palaces: therefore thus saith the Lord God, An adversary shall come even round about the Country, and shall bring down the strength from thee, and thy palaces shall be spoyled. And the Prophet Isaiah, pronounceth a fearfull curse against Israel for her sinnes; Behold, (saith he) the Lord maketh the earth empty, and he maketh it waste: he turneth it upside downe, and scattereth abroad, &c. Amos 3. 6. Isa. 24. 1, &c.

D Well, to the purpose: these are the cities in which even through all nations sinne and wickednesse most aboundeth. These last times are compared to the dayes, of Noah, and of Lot, in which there was nothing, but eating, and drinking, and marrying, and building, and a generall security possesseth all mens hearts. And Paul speaketh of these dayes thus; This know also, that in the last dayes there shall come perillous times: for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, cursed speakers, disobedient to Parents, unthankefull, unholy, without naturall affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, intemperate, fierce, despisers of them that are good, traytors, headie, high minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, having a shew of godlinesse, but having denyed the power thereof. Wherefore, seeing God threatneth his curse to the disobedient, and wee know, that 2 Tim. 3. 1, 2, 3, 4.

now the whole world is given to disobey God in outragious manner, and Atheisme never more abounded: who cannot be a Prophet, and make his conclusion of these times, that there must needs be plagues and punishments in the world, and great troubles? for God is not changeable: but as he threatneth plagues to the disobedient, so his immutable justice will require the same.

2. Secondly, because these are the last times, and Satan seeth, that he hath but a short time to continue, therefore he bestirreth himselfe, his desire is to bring confusions, and to make havocke of all: it is a death to him to see Gods kingdome to be advanced, the preaching of his word to have free passage, his name to be glorified in the congregation of his Saints, the clouds of ignorance to be dispelled, and men that have long sate in darknesse, and in the shadow of death, now to walke in the true light, and to warme themselves at the comfortable sunneshine of his Gospell. He doth even as tenants doe with their farmes; when their leases draw neare an end, then they use to rack all things to the uttermost, to make money of every thing, and to scrape unto themselves by hooke and by crooke whatsoever they can, that afterward they may have wherewith to maintaine themselves. Even so fareth it with the devill; this is the last houre, therefore now he will play reaks every where, he ruffleth in a pace, as though hee were wood; he stirreth seditions, conspiracies, tumults, warres, and by all meanes with violence he laboureth to overlarge his owne kingdome.

3. Thirdly, the Church of God hath alwayes beene subject to the crosse, and none must marvell if it be: how can the world love them that hate it, and have little acquaintance with it, and are on the earth as pilgrimes, waiting every day for happy passage through the troublesome sea of this life, to their owne home, even to the heavenly city of Ierusalem? And how can the Prince of the world, Satan, love the faithfull, that hateth God? and how can he shew favour to the members, that bitterly detesteth the head Christ Iesus? And surely, it is the blessed will of God, that his children shall welter and languish under afflictions, that they may learn to despise the world, to know themselves, to love God, to seeke unto him, and to set their affections, not on things on earth, but on the things that are above. He letteth the worldlings have their hearts ease, he letteth them feed themselves with the pleasures of this world, and fat themselves as oxen against the day of slaughter. With his own children he dealeth after another manner. He taketh them as it were by the heeles, he flingeth them into a sea of melting glasse, there he lets them for a time to seeth & boile, and in great perplexity to shift for themselves: at length he draggeth them to the shore, and giveth them ease of their former miseries. And all this is for this end, to sanctifie and purifie them, and to cleanse them of the filthy drosse of sin, and to make them with joy of heart to praise and magnifie his name; for which end they came into this world. And experience teacheth, that as there is a perpetuall entercourse betweene day and night: so there is in the Church of God, not any perpetuall quietnesse, but trouble and quietnesse; affliction and ease doe continually succeed one another. So that it is verified of the Church: Though sorrow come in the evening, yet joy shall bee in morning. Psal. 30. In the beginning, the Church was in Adams family; and albeit for a time they had prosperity, yet through the malice of Satan Abel was slaine, Adams only childe which feared God.

Before the floud, when Giants were upon the earth, what misery was the Church in? how was religion prophaned? what corruption of manners was there, when the sonnes of God married with the daughters of them that came of wicked Cain? though the Lord preserved Noe and his family, yet pitifull is it, to see the dangers in which they were after this: Abrahams family, how was it now at rest, now in trouble? he being oppressed with famine, was faine to goe downe into Ægypt, and there he was in danger of his life, when he received the King, saying of Sarah, she was his sister. But afterward being very poore, he was made rich, and the land of Canaan was promised him, and he got victory of five Kings. The propagation of Gods Church was to be preserved in Isaac. And see now to what a straight it is brought; Isaac is bound and laid upon the Altar, Abraham stretcheth forth his hand, and taketh the knife to kill his only sonne: where is now the Messias? where is the promised seed? a man would have thought, that God would here have made an end of his Church; but this was to shew what shall be the estate of the Church, that though in miseries to mans judgement it may seeme to be destroyed, yet God will preserve it & governe it for ever. This entercourse of quietnesse and afflictions may be seene in Iacob, in the children of Israel being in Ægypt, in the wildernesse, and in the land of Canaan. But to let passe other times, this thing is apparent, when the Israelites were governed by Judges and Kings: The Israelites for the space of eight yeares were in bondage under Chusan King of Aram: by Othoniel afterward they were restored to their liberty, for the space of forty yeares. Againe, after this eighteene yeares together they were in bondage under Eglon King of Moab, and were given to filthy Idolatry: after his decease, Ehud gave them rest for 80. yeares together. And so unto the time of Samuel, they were otherwhiles in peace, and otherwhiles in trouble: so it might be shewed through all histories, even till this day. Iudg. 1. 8. Iudg. 3. 12. And therefore no doubt, the Churches of God at this time, if they enjoy peace, yet are they continually to looke for troubles, and afflictions, afflictions and calamities in this world.

And as all Churches must put this in their accounts, that they cannot bee free from the Crosse: so, above all other must this our church of England. We have had long peace under our gracious Deborah, and no doubt in Gods good time we must drinke of the cup of afflictions: the Prophet Amos saith, Will a Lion roare in the forest when he hath no prey? or will a Lions whelp cry out of his den, if he have taken nothing? And againe, will the fowler take up the snare from the earth, and have taken nothing at all? or shall a trumpet be blowne in the city, and the people not be afraid? Manifold and great are the dangers which our Prince hath escaped, many assaults have beene made against our country. It hath beene in great perill by enemies at home, and enemies abroad: a lingring famine hath a long time afflicted us. What are all these things, and many more, but the roaring of the Lion forth of the forest? and the sounding of the Trumpet? these things are no doubt forerunners of greater judgements, and except we in England with speed repent, the roaring of the Lion will not be in vaine: assuredly the Lion will have his prey. And thus much shall suffice to declare this point, that in these dayes we must looke for manifold afflictions in every country and kingdome.

Amos 3.4,5,6.

Worldl. It is well said of you, I con you thanke; I promise you, I thinke a man cannot speake a truer word than this that you have said: for the world is every where so bad, that scarce there can be any quietnesse or good fellowship among men. Well, I am satisfied for this matter, but one thing I will aske you, doe you thinke that there is no more danger to be feared the next yeare, than any other yeare?

Christ. As I said, so I now say againe; that afflictions, hurly-burlies, subversions of kingdomes, are no more to be feared this next yeare than any other yeare.

Worldl. What reason moveth you to say so?

Christ. This moveth me to thinke so, because I can finde no cause of the troubles of this yeare, more than of any other yeare.

Worldl. Nay there you are deceived, the strange conjunctions of planets will shew their operation this next yeare: and though you will not grant that they are signes of the end of the world; yet you will confesse that they are the causes of plague, pestilence, famine, warres, subversions of kingdomes, and such like: and by this meanes wise men have prophesied before of this yeare.

Christ. Your speech is full of impietie. For to divine of things to come, belongeth to God alone, and none must be so bold as to challenge this to himselfe; as the Prophet Esay sheweth. Stand to your cause (saith the Lord) bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Iacob, let them bring them forth, and let them tell us what is to come: let them shew the former things what they be, that we may consider them, and know the latter end of them: either declare us things for to come. Also it is a wicked part to attribute wars and alterations of kingdomes to the starres, which only belongeth to God. And Daniel saith; God he changeth times and seasons: he taketh away kings, he setteth up kings, &c. And to make warres and peace, is not from any conjunctions of the starres, except the ruling of mans heart may come from the starres, which nevertheless is proper to God; as Salomon saith, The heart of the king is in the hands of the Lord, as the rivers of waters, and he turneth it whithersoever it pleaseth him. Furthermore, betweene the heavens and things below, there is a great sympathy and consent, and the starres oftentimes make tempests, whirle-winds, drought, continuall raine; and so they may be causes of some diseases, of scarcity, and of plenty: but we must account them onely as instruments, which God useth to bring to passe his counsell: and this not alwayes, but onely at some times: For example, when David was bidden to chuse of three divers things which he would suffer, he chose the plague; now there is not any man (I thinke) that will attribute this plague to the starres. And the famine which was in Iudea in the daies of Elias, and the want of raine, was not from any constellations. Nay, rather all these things befall us by reason of our sinnes, and our wickednesse is the chiefe cause that provoketh God to powre these punishments upon us, as that blessed martyr Master Hooper sheweth, whose words I will recite. The prognostications (saith he) of these blinde Prophets, are good to be borne in a mans bosome, to know the day of the moneth. The rest of their practices is not worth an haw: as Moses teacheth, Deut. 28. Levit. 26. and Malach. 2. whereas yee may see all these evils, and many more than the Astronomers speake of, come unto us for sinne, and the transgression of Gods commandements. It is neither Sunne nor Moone, neither Iupiter nor Mars, that is the occasion or matter of wealth or woe, plenty or scarcity, war or peace. Neither is pestilence caused by the putrifaction of the aire, (as Galen writeth;) but contempt of Gods commandements is the cause, as thou mayest read in the places before alleaged. The ayre, the water, nor the earth have any poison in themselves to hurt their Lord and master man: but first man poysoneth himselfe with sinne, and then God useth these elements, ordained for the life of man, to be the occasion of his death. Reade the places, and know, that good health is numbred among the blessings of God, and appertaineth to those that feare and keepe Gods commandements, and not to those that be destinied to live long by the favor and aspects of planets. And the evill of what kinde soever it be, is the malediction of God against sin. The Physitians say, that the chiefest remedy against the pestilence, is to flie from the

the place where the ayre is corrupt: Gods law saith, flie whither thou wilt, the Lord shal make the pestilence cleave and associate thee, till it consume thee from the world. Againe, in the same Chapter, the disease or sickness shall bee faithfull, that is to say, sticke fast to thee, use what medicines thou wilt. Galen saith, that the chiefe remedy to preserve from pestilence, is to purge the body from superfluous humors, to have a free and a liberall winde, and to avoid the abundance of meat and drinke. God saith, nothing preserveth, but the keeping of his commandements. If we offend, the best remedie is repentance and amendment of life. It maketh no force how corrupt the ayre be, so the conscience of man be cleane from sinne. Though there die a thousand on the one side of thee, and ten thousand on the other side, thou shalt be safe, Psal. 91. &c. And now to make an end, I hope I have satisfied your minde, concerning the yeare next ensuing 88, though I know, I am not able to satisfie the learned, neither was it ever my purpose or my thought.

World. Yea, Sir, you have indeed: I thanke you for it: I hope I shall be the better for your talke as long as I live: I warrant you I shall remember you when you thinke little on mee. And because you are now come to Cambridge, if you will, I will bestow the courtesie of the Towne on you, even with all my heart.

Christ. I thanke you heartily: but the best courtesie you can shew to me is this, to releeve the poore, wherein you have beene faulty.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE,

WILLIAM Lord RVSSEL, Baron of Thornhaugh,

Grace and all good blessings from God our Father, and our Lord Iesus Christ.

RIght Honourable, as it cannot be but true, which Truth it selfe hath uttered: [a] Him that honoureth me, I will honour; no more can it bee but sure paiment which such a creditor hath undertaken, and not by any surety, but by himselfe to bee performed. Bootlesly had the world beene betrusted with such a charge; which by suffering some to walke through dishonour, and by powring out contempt upon others, unwittingly suteth the condition of the servants to the case of the Sonne, who said: [b] Thou honour the Father, but yee dishonour me. Well then is it with us, that hee whose bare word is above all bonds, hath said, I will honour: not those who by treading downe his honour, honour themselves, neither whom men honour, nor who honour men; but those who hondur him: by [c] loving him as a Father, and fearing him as a Lord. Not that any man can enlarge his honour; the [d] infinite perfection whereof is in it selfe uncapable of any accession: nor that any can of himselfe expresse his honour; seeing himselfe [e] worketh both such wills and deeds also, of his owne good pleasure: neither that if any could, he might merit the returne of honour; for all that [f] were but his duty: not that if any could and would, he should thereby profit God, to whom [g] mans goodnesse is not extended: nor lastly, if any could and would not, God should thereby be disprofited; for [h] if one be wicked, he hurteth not him: but because the Lord, who delighteth to be the portion of Iacob, is pleased to accept the broken and homely service of his children, as an high honour done unto himselfe; and themselves as honourers of him, and such as he (by crowning his owne worke in them) cannot but honour.

But [i] what shall be done to the man whom this King will honour? Ans. If [k] Beltazar King of Babel were to promise his highest honours: if [l] Haman were to advise Ahashuerosh, King of 27. Provinces, in the bestowing of what honours himselfe could wish or hope: if [m] Pharaoh should call againe his Nobles to consultation, how to enlarge Iosephs advancements: no more could bee either promised, expected, or performed, than that such an one should be arraied with royall attire, as cloth of purple and fine linnen, with a golden chaine about his necke, the Kings Ring on his hand, his princely Diadem set upon his head, and withall by Proclamation published the third man or Vice-Roy in the Kingdome. Which indeed were singular advancements: but yet the highest of these farre inferiour to the least and lowest honour, which this King of Kings vouchsafeth to bestow. For even those Kings whilest they enriched and invested others with such royalties as belonged to a kinde of externall happinesse, themselves were exceeding poore and destitute of the things truly good; the which (being of an higher straine, and of nature internall and eternall) are incomparably and onely the best blessings. In a word then, thus shall it be done, yea, [n] this honour have all his Saints: that being borne of God, their descent is from the King of glory, all of them Kings sonnes, all brothers to Christ, the first borne among many brethren: all younger brothers indeed, but (which is admirable) all [o] Princes apparant, and to the same incorruptible Crowne of glory. Tell me now: was it not almost the highest staire of earthly honour, to which Moses was mounted, when he was called the sonne of Pharaohs raohs daughter? and yet juſtly [p] refuſed he, nay, deſpiſed he the title, that he might be called but the ſervant of God. But [q] behold what love the Father beareth us, that we ſhould be called (not ſervants any more, but friends, Ioh. 15.15. nay more) the ſonnes of God. Was it ſuch an advancement that David ſhould become the ſonne of Saul, a wicked King of Iſrael? and [r] can it ſeeme a ſmall thing to become the ſonnes of the holy one the God of Iſrael? Is it to be reputed a great grace to be nobly deſcended from great men, and backed with the alliance of the mighty? who then can deeme it other, than the top and tower of trueſt Nobilitie, to be (as the beleever) ſo neerely allied unto Chriſt, who ſprouted out of the moſt honourable ſtocke that ever the great field of the earth bare upon it? unto which their deſcent, if you adde their whole ſutable eſtate, they will appeare ſo abſolutely glorious, as it ſeemeth no further honour here below can befall them. Whoſe [f] garments are the white and unſtained robes of Chriſts innocency and righteouſneſſe; their chaine is the golden chaine of their ſalvation, the linkes whereof are deſcribed Rom. 8.24. their [t] Ring or ſignet is the Spirit of God, pledging and ſealing up in their hearts the aſſurance of their ſalvation: their Iewels and [u] ornaments are the graces of that Spirit, as Humility, Knowledge, Faith, Love, Hope, &c. their diet more choice than that Manna, which was but a ſhadow of [x] this bread which commeth downe from Heaven: their Miniſters are all the creatures; their attendance are the Angels, not onely going before them and at their heeles, but as a guard [y] pitching themſelves round about them; their Diadem is that [z] crowne of righteouſneſſe, which the righteous Iudge ſhall give to all them that love his bleſſed appearing. This is ſuch honour as darkneth all the honour of the world, as the bright ſhining of the Sunne obſcureth the light of the leſſer ſtarres; this cauſeth the heart that hath it to contemne the contempt of the world, and quiet it ſelfe in the holding hereof, as in a choice inheritance and a precious purchaſe.

Now (my Lord) by all that hath beene premiſed, you may behold what goodly grounds your Lordſhips lines are fallen into: whom the Lord hath not onely thus inwardly honoured by putting his feare in your heart, (whereof I might truly relate more than either your Lordſhip would be willing to reade, or my ſelfe (hating even the ſuſpicion of the baſe ſinne of inſinuation) am heartened to write) but alſo in your whole outward eſtate: a great honour is it to bee the ſonne of ſo noble and worthie an Earle, as was your father of famous and perpetuall memorie: but that the ſame love of religion, zeale to the truth, practice of piety, wiſe care of your Country, noble and valiant reſolution, bountifull hoſpitality and liberalitie ſhould be ſo eminent, and that the beſt part of his better part and vertues ſhould ſo ſeat themſelves in your perſon; this is it which maketh your Lordſhip honourable, not in him ſo much, as in your ſelfe; neither in your ſelfe alone, but (as [a] Samuel was) in the heart [b] of all the people. Theſe (my Lord) eſpecially of the former kinde, are qualities well beſeeming [b] Nebuchadnezzars Nobles. For who are ſo fitted to ſtand before earthly Kings, as they who are often in the preſence of the great King, to whom all Kings are to bee countable? or who are ſo worthy to ſtand in the preſence of our earthly Gods, as thoſe whom the God of Heaven hath vouchſafed to ſet in his ſight, and gracious acceptance? Whereunto when I have added how God hath honoured your Lordſhip to be the husband of a vertuous and religious Lady, the Father of an hopefull heire, the brother of three ſo worthy and religious Counteſſes (two of whom of late have received the end of their faith, even their glory with God, the poſſeſſion of a goodly reyenew: I may well ſay, [c] not many thus noble. Now becauſe to whom much is given, much is of them required, and where the Lord ſoweth liberally, there hee expecteth a plentifull crop: let your Lordſhip be pleaſed to give me leave by writing to ſtir up and warne your pure minde, by calling to your remembrance that duty, which you religiouſly received from my mouth (and that not ſeldome) thoſe divers yeares I employed my paines and poore talents in your Honours houſe, namely, that as either you tender the continuance of the Honour which the Lord hath already powred upon you; or expect any acceſſe thereunto, ſo you faithfully proceed in the waies wherein Honour may redound to the higheſt: perſiſting to honour him with your [d] heart, by giving it unto him: with your life; by [e] adorning the doctrine of God: with your countenance;

nance; by [f] incouraging the practices of piety: with your [g] riches and increase; by releeving the poore members of Christ: seeing that in all these your large receits God hath made your Lordship his Steward, and requireth your faithfulnesse. These be the paths beaten by the feet of the faithfull, wherein they are well experienced of the Lords faithfulnesse. In these standeth the whole duty of a man, upon performance whereof, and no other conditions, the Sonne of God himselfe made challenge of the glory of his Father: [h] I have glorified thee in earth, and now glorifie me with thy selfe.

Among other furtherances of your Honour hereunto, may your Lordship be pleased to receive this booke, and give it the reading, after what time I hope you will not deny it your protection, in regard of it selfe: although neither your Honours affection to the Author himselfe whilest he lived; neither his love towards your Honours house made knowne to the world, in the dedication of sundry of his workes unto the same; neither yet my owne duty (which in many regards as your Lordship may justly challenge, so my selfe am straightly bound alwaies to render) could suffer me elsewhere to seeke the shelter of this orphane Commentary. My hearty desire of the Lord is, that as he hath directed it unto your Lordship, so he would also direct your Lordship to it, and make it fruitfull unto your Lordship, as it is in it selfe, in leading you into all the waies of Gods honour: that as his faithfulnesse hath honoured you, so your whole heart may out of setled resolution say in it selfe: Him that hath thus honoured me, I will still honour: and so he who is first and last in mercies, who [i] giveth both grace and glory, shall (after your Lordship have many good daies through his grace beene found faithfull before him and your Soveraigne) decke your soule with perfect righteousnesse as a Robe, cloath your body with immortality, crowne your head with glory, and (in a word) shall be all in all unto you, and all his, who beyond all times be blessed for ever. Amen.

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER,

Much peace and prosperity from the Author thereof, even the Prince of Peace, the Lord Iesus Christ. AMEN.

SInce it pleased the God of light by chasing away the blacke mists of popish darknesse to restore the cleare and sun-shine light of his glorious Gospell unto these parts of Europe, he hath never beene wanting in raising up most faithfull and furnished instruments, who as golden Trumpets have sounded out, and like golden Candlesticks have held forth before his people that great light, even the word of truth which we preach; wherewith they have beene mighty through God both by voice and pen, by word and writing; not onely to discover and to detect that Anti-christ, but to overthrow and cast downe his strongest holds: yea, and have by the power of the same spirit in their mouthes, which out of Christs owne mouth shall most powerfully utterly abolish that man of sinne at the brightnesse of his appearing, given the beast already his deadly wound: yea, and by the light have driven away that former Ægyptiacall darknesse and blinde barbarisme wherein men sate, and could not for many daies, yea hundred of yeares before stir out of the place wherein the corruption of their nature had set them. Witnesse this truth with me can those incomparable lights of Germany (that I may beginne where the Lord began) Luther, Melancthon, Bucer, Oecolampadius, &c. France justly glorieth of her three worthies, Calvin, Beza, Marlorat: and of her three Nobles, Sadeel, Morney, and Iunius. How happy hath Helvetia beene in her fruitfull Gardens, whence so many sweet flowers, such as Bullinger, Lavater, Zwinglius, and others (not a few) have sprouted? Yea, Italy her selfe, whose soile is a step-mother indeed to such plants, hath yet beene so farre manured by the hand of the good husbandman, that even from thence two faire branches, neither of them inferiour to the former, Martyr, and Zanchius have sprung up, that as out of the mouth of two witnesses from among themselves, their sentence might bee sealed against them. But among the Nations, glorious art thou Great Britaine in this thy greatnesse, which as thou hast stripped all these thy neighbour Nations in other externall beauties: so no whit art thou inferiour to them in this honour; yea, herein is thy truest triumph over them, that as peace and truth have kissed each other within thy walls, and as the scepter of the Prince of peace hath beene almost full fifty yeares upheld by the sceptors of peaceable Princes: so thy Seas and Seminaries have not beene destitute of their Iewel, Whittakers, Fulke, Reynolds, Rolock, Sutliffe, Willet, and their late Perkins, whom alone I make mention of, not because either they are alone, or alone worthy; but partly that I may bee moderate, and not (as I might) infinite in recitall: and partly for that these have most valiantly like Davids worthies broken through these Philistims forces, and brought unto us in despight of them the pure water of the well of life; among whom this our Author last named was not the least, nor of so small note through the Christian world, that I can thinke by my pen to adde any moment unto his: whose writings so savory and so innocent, have sufficiently proclaimed his profound knowledge in all learning, his prudent zeale, his mature judgement, with an admirable dexterity and facility, yea, I may say felicity, (for herein he reigned, that I may use the phrase of the reverend Deane of his Majesties Chapell, properly applyed unto him at his funeralls, which with singular approbation he performed) in the direct resolving the obscurest doubts of Divinity, and the acute loosing and dissolving the hardest knots of Papists, so briefly and so perspicuously, as that his most polemicall writings, being first by himselfe in our vulgar tongue published, could scarce meet even amongst our common people, with such an uncapable Reader (if any white catechised) into whom they might not convey some competent conceit and understanding of the deepest and darkest differences between the Papists, those patrons and defenders of darknesse, and our selves. But beside these, such a tongue of the learned had the Lord God given him, Isa. 50. 4. that he knew to minister, and ministred according to knowledge a word in due time to him that was weary: the which most weighty duty of the ministery was so familiar unto him, that he made it his holy daies exercise (as his recreation) to resolve cases of conscience. In his ordinary Ministery how powerfull was he? which of his hearers cannot confesse that he spake as one having authority? Adde now unto these his labours, an holy and harmlesse life: for why should I disjoyne them, seeing they were so happily combined in him? betweene which two (both of them conspiring to the glory of God, and his cause) was such a sweet harmony and consent, that in reading his writings any man might see the manner of his life, and in seeing his life, he might also therein reade his writings: for his life spake what his pen writ, and his person was the president of his written Precepts. But when these unwearied labours had quickly worne out such a candle, who so freely spent himselfe to give others light; such a life was not shut up, but by a proportionall, even a religious and Christian death: of the which when God made (with some others) my selfe a beholder, I could not but conceive him a messenger one of a thousand, singled out by God to give directions to others, both how to live, and that well, as also in the right manner of dying well; who himselfe was so trained to a blessed death, by a holy life, whereby he became both in life and death a most happy and blessed man, for whose written Precepts concerning both, the whole Church is bound to blesse God with us: but especially wee his ordinary hearers in Cambridge, who besides were also the beholders of both, cannot be but so much the more strengthened and confirmed (our owne heedlesse ingratitude not resisting or withstanding us) by how much the eye is quicker than the eare, and the sight a more certaine sense than can be the hearing. But we will leave him with God, and unto those worthy workes which himselfe whilest hee lived (according as the relaxation both from the weekly labours of his calling, and the daily weaknesse of his body would permit) did publish, not onely for the watering of this famous Seminarie where he lived, but even out of his abundance and full buckets, to the refreshing of all the heritage of God; and come to our owne purpose. It is not now to be wished, but bewailed rather, that all his workes were not finished by himselfe before his owne course, seeing the orphane writings of the learned published by others are commonly lesse polished: for sometimes the Authors minde is not taken, and sometimes his matter is mistaken, otherwhiles his forme is inverted, and not seldome either his owne elegancies and proprieties, which are like goads, are neglected, or something besides his owne is injuriously inserted: but yet the Lord having loosed him from his labours, the Christian care of his Executors commendeth it selfe to the Church herein, that before it should be deprived of any part of his paines so profitably imployed, desirous they are to communicate them, if not altogether in such exact manner as they would, yet as perfectly as they can, contented rather to hazard the due regard of the Author himselfe, by committing unto his schollers hands the publishing of his labours; then that the Church should want them by their holding and hiding them with themselves. As for my selfe, my wish was to have beene spared in these paines, both because of my owne weekly imployments, and that in this place wherein the businesse might have beene committed to divers others farre better furnished with gifts, and fitted with opportunity than my selfe: but especially seeing how safe and wise a thing it is to sit silent where a man need not speake, and that in these daies, wherein every mans oare is in every mans boat, and most men are become left-handed in receiving things which are reached unto them with the right; too like the 700. left-handed Benjamites, whose sole Iudg. 20. 8. commendation seemeth to stand in this, that they can throw stones and darts against others at a haire-bredth and not faile: yet notwithstanding considering my calling hereunto, as also being after a sort reared up by the Poets rule, not doubting but that the matter following is farre better than silence, I was contented, at the instant intreaty of the Authors Executors, to undertake the publishing of this Epistle, which himselfe had in his heart (if God had given him longer time) to have with his owne hand set and sent out in it owne native beauty and perfection: wherein what my paines have beene, they onely know who have fathered other mens posthumous writings. I have not trodden in their steps who make the grounds of the Authors serve their owne discourses (for so should I have made this Exposition containing in it the summe of 66. Sermons, exceed the measure even of a tedious Commentary) but in the Authors owne, who was wont to transcribe out of the notes of some of his hearers, the heads and marrow of things more largely in publike delivered, explaining the points which were more obscure, and with a second hand polishing and perfecting things so explained. Yea, herein imitating not onely the Author of the Commentary, but even of the Text and Epistle, the Apostle Iude himselfe: who perceiving the men of his daies quickly waxing weary of hearing or reading Sermons or Epistles, if extended to any length or prolixity, condiscended so farre to their infirmity, as to contract and abridge much matter into a very short and summary Epistle. Upon the same consideration also have I studied brevity, so farre as in such multiplicity of matter I might avoid obscurity: having herein employed my best paines, that in ought appeare that though I may have failed in other complements, yet so farre as my endevour could reach me, not in faithfulnesse to the Author either of the Text or Commentary. The fitnesse and seasonablenesse of this Exposition may seeme to plead for it a more gracious acceptance of it: which being breathed out by the Apostolicall spirit against the heretikes and heresies which were to infect and infest the last ages of the world, may by Gods blessing in the due reading hereof, strengthen the people of God in the land, in discerning and resisting both the wicked seducers themselves daily sent in amongst us, those Popish instruments (I meane) who (like so many devils compassing the earth) are so diligent to compasse sea and land to make carnall Protestants Popish Proselytes, and so seven-fold more the children of the devill than they were before; as also their diabolicall doctrines which every where it meeteth withall. Let them out of their malice (as that foule mouthed Franciscan Feverdentius, who hath not therefore vouw his booke passed many lines without some egregious lie or other) apply the scope of the Epistle to blacke the doctrines and lives of those most excellent instruments of God the restorers of true Religion, Luther, Calvin, Beza, &c. yet as a milstone rolled up a Adowwaine, or as a bull tossed against a brazen wall, so returneth and recoileth it upon themselves, as this grave Divine hath through this Exposition in particular, divindly proved. Reade it (Christian Reader) with diligence, faithfully consider and remember what thou readest, and the Lord give thee understanding in all things, and build thee up further upon thy most holy faith.       3. The circumstance of time, now and for ever.

      4. The affection of the heart ever needfull in the worship of God in the word, Amen.

EXPOSITION

VPON THE EPISTLE OF IVDE,

Explained in publike Lectures by that reverend man of God, M. WILLIAM PERKINS, and now published for the vse of the Church of God.

Vers. 1. *Iude (or Iudas) a servant of Iesus Christ, and brother of Iames, to them which are called and sanctified of God the Father, and reserved to Iesus Christ.

THe generall aime and scope of this Epistle, is partly to declare the dutie of all Christians, and partly to set out the corruptions of those, and these daies and times; in both which every one may receive edification, who are desirous either to follow the former, or avoid the latter. In which generall consideration, note three things concerning this Epistle, before we come to shew the parts of it in particular.

First, the Authoritie; Secondly, the Superscription; Thirdly, the Argument or substance of it.

First, concerning the Authority, two questions are to be answered.

The first question, Whether this Epistle bee canonicall Scripture.

And secondly, How we may know the certainty of it.

Concerning the former: Luther and others, who acknowledge it to be a profitable writing, deny it to be Canonicall Scripture, and alleage foure reasons.

Object. 1. First they say, Iude calleth himselfe a servant of Jesus Christ, and not an Apostle, but all the new Testament was penned or approved by some Apostle.

Answ. This hindreth not but that he was one of the Apostles, who also called themselves servants of Jesus Christ, as Paul, Rom. 1. 1. and Peter, 2 Pet. 1. 1. Secondly, by this reason the Epistles to the Philippians, and Philemon, as also of Iames, Iohn, &c. might be rejected.

Thirdly, he calleth himselfe as much as an Apostle.

Object. 2. Iude writeth of such things as the Apostles themselves had formerly foretold, verse 17. Therefore he was no Apostle.

Answ. Iude lived after the Apostles Paul and Peter, who with Iohn were the last of the Apostles, and living after their decease (who were the principall) might very well put them in minde of those things they had foretold.

Object. 3. In the ninth verse, hee bringeth in a profane Author, concerning the strife and disputation between Michael the Archangel, & the devill, about Moses body, which cannot be found in Canonicall Scripture; as also of Enoch the seventh from Adam, out of profane writers.

Answ. By this reason, neither should the Epistle of Titus be Scripture, seeing Paul makes mention of the prophane Poet Epimenides, Titus 1. 12. nor the Epistle to the Corinths, where is brought in the speech of Menander, 1 Cor. 15. 33. nor the Acts of the Apostles, where Aratus the Poet is cited, Acts 17. 21.

Object. 4. This Epistle is taken out of Saint Peter, from whom this Author hath borrowed both the matter and manner. Therefore this Iude was no Apostle, but some scholler of theirs.

Answ. If this were sufficient to prove this Epistle not authenticall, then the whole bookes of Samuel, the Kings, and Chronicles should be cast out of the Canon by the same reason: which take the matter from Civill Chronicles. Now if it be lawfull to take matter out of Civill Chronicles, why may not one Scripture be taken out of another? we must therefore (notwithstanding these weake allegations) esteeme this Epistle to be the Canonicall Scripture, and the eternall Word of God, as our Church, and the Church in all ages hath received it. And now in the second cond place see how we may come to bee resolved that it is so to be allowed: which wee may in this resemblance. An Indenture between man and man is knowne to bee sufficient two waies: First, by the matter and contents therein, which plainly shews an act passed and done: secondly, adding and annexing thereunto certaine outward signes and testimonies, as the hands and seales of the parties, the hands and names of the witnesses corroborating and strengthening the same: the first is good in it selfe (though not so confirmed to the parties) without the second: but the second is nothing without the first: but if both these shall concurre and be specified in the Indenture, then it is absolutely authenticall, both in it selfe, and unto the parties. If this be applied to the Scripture, it shall be apparant to be no lesse ratified than such an Indenture. For first, consider but the Contents and matter it selfe of it, it will speake the certainty and truth of it: reade over the Epistle, you shall finde the whole matter agreed upon by the Prophets and Apostles: and for the testimony, the Catholike and common consent of the Church, or greatest part since the Apostles daies, hath set to her hand and seale that it is the truth of God, no lesse assured than other books of the Canon: which assent of the Church, though it cannot make us, yet may move us accordingly to entertaine it. Besides, if we consider the ends, as also the effects of this Scripture (which are the same with any part of the Canonicall) wee cannot but confesse that it is the holy and sacred truth of God, all of it conspiring with all the other to the advancing of Gods glory, and furthering of mans salvation. So much of the authoritie of this Epistle.

The second point is the Superscription, which is in these words: The Catholike Epistle of Iude. This title seemes to be prefixed rather by some Scribe afterwards, than by Iude himselfe: first, because this title (Catholike) was not heard of in the Church whilest the Apostles lived; so as it is not so ancient as the Epistle.

Secondly, the title seemes to be unfit for this and other Epistles intituled after the same manner, and may be well forborne; as the Epistles of Peter are called Canonicall, which are no more Canonicall than others.

Thirdly, most of the Post-scripts are uncertaine, if not false: as of that after the second Epistle to Timothy, in which Timothy is called an Elect Bishop of Ephesus, and yet commanded to doe the worke of an Evangelist, 2 Timoth. 4. 5. which cannot stand together, to bee the Bishop of one place, and also universally to preach unto the whole world, following the Apostles, as the Evangelists duty was: and so of others. This title then was not added by the Apostle, but by some Scribe that copied out the Epistle: it is not therefore holy Scripture as the Epistle is.

The third point concerning the Epistle in A generall, is the argument: which doth exhort all Christians to constancie and perseverance in their profession of the Gospell. Secondly, to beware and take heed of false teachers and deceivers which craftily creepe in among them: And thirdly, these deceivers are lively set out in their colours; and with them their destruction.

Now concerning the Epistle it selfe, and the speciall parts of it.

Of it there be three parts: First, a Salutation, in the first and second verses: Secondly, an Exhortation, from the third verse to the end of the three and twentieth. Thirdly, a Conclusion, from that to the end of the Chapter. In the Salutation consider three things:

B First, the person that wrote this Epistle, Iude.

Secondly, the persons to whom he wrote: to those which were called, sanctified of God the Father, and reserved to Iesus Christ.

Thirdly, the prayer ordinary in Apostolicall salutations: mercy unto you, &c.

Concerning the first, namely, the writer of this Epistle, observe three things: first his name, Iude: secondly, his office, a servant of Jesus Christ: thirdly, his Allyance and brother-hood, being of the kindred of Christ himselfe.

First, of his name, Iude, or Iudas, which was the name of two of the Disciples of Christ: the first was Iudas the sonne of Alpheus, the brother of Iames, and so neere allied unto Christ: who was the writer of this Epistle. The other C was Iudas Iscariot, or Iudas the Traitor, the sonne of Simon, who could not write this Epistle, because he died before Christ.

In this name consider two things: First, the occasion of it, and secondly, the variety of his name. The occasion of this name is set downe with the reason of it in the 29. of Gen. 35. When Leah had borne three sons unto Iacob, she conceived again, and bare a fourth son, saying, Now I will praise the Lord, therefore shee called his name Iudah, which signifieth praise or confession: so no doubt did Alpheus the father of this Iude, at his birth give him such a name as might move not only himselfe, but his childe after him, to thankfulnesse and confession of Gods goodnes. So ought every father in imposing his childrens names with Alpheus, and D every mother with Leah make such choice of names, as themselves and their children may be put in minde, yea, and stirred up to good duties, even so often as they shall heare or remember their own names. The second point in this name is the variety of the names of Iude, he was called Thaddeus, Marke 3. 18. and Lebbeus, Mat. 10. 3. all which signifie the same thing, & all put in minde of the same duty. Here two questions may be asked. First, why was he called by so many names? Some thinke hee had all these names given him by the people and multitude, as signifying all one thing: others (which is more probable) that he was thus called by the Apostles themselves, rather than by his owne name, Quest. 1. Answ.

name, that the horrible fact of Iudas in betraying his Master should be utterly with his name forgotten.

Quest. 2. A second question is, whether may a man change his name, or no?

Answ. If the change thereof bee no prejudice to any man, much lesse hurtfull to the Church or Common-wealth, nor offendeth the faithfull, but wholly tendeth to the glory of God, and good of men, it may be altered and changed: As Saul a great persecuter, being called to bee a publisher and Patron of the Gospell, changed his name into Paul: as also Salomon was at the first called by his Mother, Iedidiah: Peter, at first called Simon Barjones, Christ afterwards gave him a new name, and he accepted it. Yet hence the too cõmon practice of the world cannot be warranted, who for fraud and deceit doe alter their names: which when it is not intended may warrantably be done: as in time of persecution in the reigne of King Edward the sixt, Bucer changed his name, and both called himselfe, and suffered others to call him Aretius Felinus: so did divers other worthy men in those daies, seeking no other than the glory of God, and good of the Church in their owne safety: and that the Papists not kowing their names, might reade their writings without prejudice.

Bucer writ two Homilies concerning the Sacrament, under the title of Catharum Neskium: and Calvins Institutions printed under the name of Alcuinus, the Master of Charles the Great, An. 1534.

II. The second thing in the person writing is his office: being called [a servant of Iesus Christ] which is not so generally to be understood as meant of every professor of Christ and beleever, who is a servant of the Lord Jesus: but of a speciall service, namely, of Apostleship, to which he was deputed.

Wherein consider two things: First, that he was called to bee an Apostle and servant of Christ to plant the Church of the Gentiles: Secondly, that he did faithfully execute his function, and performed his service.

First, he pleads his calling, for two causes: first, in regard of others; and secondly, in respect of himselfe. First, that his doctrine might with more attention, and reverence bee received of others, seeing he run not unsent, but was called, and that to an Apostleship; and therefore hee spake not of himselfe, but wholly and immediately directed by God.

Secondly, for the confirming and comforting of himselfe, that the Lord who had called him would stand by him, both in protecting his person, and prospering his worke in his hand.

Vse. Seeing the Apostle Iude before he writeth layeth downe his calling; so ought all Ministers to make their calling the foundation of all their proceedings, containing themselves within the compasse thereof, even as they are to teach the same duty unto all sorts of men, that they tempt not the Lord, by passing the bonds and limits of their calling.

Secondly, in that Iude, though he was of the same Tribe, yea, of neare alliance unto Christ, A yet hee passeth by all these respects which hee might have stood upon, and contenteth himselfe with the title of a [servant of Christ.] We learne to make more account, and esteeme it a greater privilege to be a servant of Jesus Christ, than to bee of the kindred of Kings, and allyed to the greatest Monarchs of the world: Christ himselfe shewes us what kindred should take up our chiefe delight, when hee turned himselfe from his Mother & Brethren, and beholding his hearers said, those were his mother, sisters, and brethren, that heare the word of God, and keep it: this alliance in the faith was neerer and dearer unto him than that in the flesh. If then thou standest upon thy preferment, strive to be the servant of Christ, which is more honourable B than to be the sonne of a King; to be a follower of Christ, is more than to goe before the Rulers of the earth. But if thou aske, How shall I come to this preferment? Himselfe answereth thee, Thou must give up thy selfe to heare his Word and doe it, that is, learne to know and obey his will, this is the maine duty of a servant: endevour to please the Lord in keeping faith and good conscience, thou art in the way of preferment, and art admitted a servant of Christ.

Thirdly, If we be admitted the servants and followers of Christ, we must serve no other Master, but keepe our selves from being intangled either with the offences or affaires of the world, as to be vassals thereto: no man can serve two, much lesse more masters of such contrary commands. Let none pretend to be the servant of C Christ, who by loving pleasure more than God, or seeking earth more than Heaven, disgrace such a profession.

III. The third thing in the person writing, is the alliance [Brother of Iames] of which name there were two, first, Iames the sonne of Zebedeus, whose death is mentioned in the 12. of the Acts by Herod: the second was the sonne of Alpheus, here mentioned:

First, that he might distinguish himselfe from the other Iudas the Traytor. Secondly, that he might win further credit and attention to his doctrine, seeing hee was no unknowen person, but one that came of the worthiest stocke that was upon the face of the earth; and for this cause D he mentioneth his brother Iames, who was better knowen, as being the President of the Councel at Jerusalem, & a choise pillar of the Church in his time, Act. 15. 13. not to credit himselfe, but this Scripture (which otherwise is in it selfe sufficiently powerfull) by the mention of him.

Now followes the second thing in the Salutation: that is, the person to whom Iude wrote, in these words [unto those who are called and sanctified by God the Father, and preserved by Iesus Christ] it is the militant Catholique Church, which is lively described to bee the number of beleevers dispersed thorow the face of the whole world; who are effectually called, and sanctified, and preserved unto life everlasting. Out of which description note:

The Scriptures written properly for the Church, that it might bee gathered and strengthened thereby.

First,

First, who and what they bee that are members of this Church: namely, no wicked or prophane persons, but onely the Elect, such as are chosen unto life everlasting, who after receive their calling unto holinesse, and therein are assuredly preserved unto life: which privileges no wicked person, no unrepentant sinner can bee partaker of, but onely the Church of the first borne, as in Heb. the 12. whose names are written in the booke of life, and who receive daily spirituall increase: for howsoever in the Catholike Church there be two sorts of men professing Religion: the one of them that doe unfainedly beleeve, and are sanctified: the other of them who make a shew of faith, but indeed beleeve not, but remaine in their sinnes: of the former doth the Catholike Church consist, and not of the latter, who are no members set into the head of this body, though they may seeme so to be.

Secondly, this confuteth the Romish Church, who teach and hold that a reprobate may be a member of this Church.

Thirdly, that none can bee the head of this Church and Catholike congregation but only Christ, for he onely knoweth them, who and where they bee, thorow the face of the whole earth: not the Pope or any other creature hath any headship over this company, who are given and properly appertaine unto the Son of God.

Fourthly, that this Catholike Church is invisible, and cannot by the eye of flesh be discerned; for what eye (except of faith) can see or discerne the depth of Gods election, or whom he hath effectually called? yea, and who can infallibly determine of the things that are within a man? and therfore this is a matter of faith, not of sense, an Article of our beleefe, not the object of our sight, seeing faith is an evidence of things not seene: which againe overthroweth that Romish doctrine, which teacheth, that the Catholike Church is visible and apparant upon earth, and so destroy that Article of our faith.

Fifthly, that this Catholike Church being preserved by God the Father to life everlasting, cannot utterly perish and be dissolved: all other congregations and particular Churches being mixed, and the greatest part not predestinate, may faile, yet this cannot bee overcome, Rom. 11. 7. this election of God shall obtaine, though the rest be hardened. The gates of hell shall not prevaile against the faith of the Church, because faithfull and true is he that hath spoken, and who will preserve in this Church a succession of wholsome and found doctrine, and Heaven and earth shall bee sooner dissolved, than one jot of the same shall faile and perish.

Object. But though that faile not, the Church may fall from that, and so faile.

Answ. That particular Churches, and of them the most famous, have beene ruined, yea, and fallen away, and so may doe, is evident by the Churches of Ephesus, Corinth, Galatia, &c. and no marvell, seeing these consisted ever of mixed persons: but the Catholike Church consisting onely of a number elected and called, though it also (not being as yet without wrinkle) may erre and faile in some smaller points; yet being preserved by God to life, cannot possibly faile in the maine and foundation.

This doctrine affordeth strong consolation to the Elect of God, both in regard of their frequent falls and infirmities, whereby they might feare to cast themselves quite out of favour; as also in regard of the manifold assaults and bickerings, which in the world they doe and shall endure, whereby they might seeme to the outward view to perish; yet the truth is, neither of both need dismay them, but that their faith and hope may still be revived and strengthened, seeing they are preserved to salvation.

Sixthly, here are better notes of a true Church than the Papists Antiquitie, Succession, Multitude, &c. which can be no notes. First, for Antiquity: In the beginning was a true Church, but no Antiquitie. Secondly, succession failes: for what men soever are called and sanctified, are the Church: Thirdly, multitude no note: for if there bee a calling and sanctification of men, there is a Church, be there many or few: But the true notes are the meanes of calling to the faith by the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, and obedience thereunto, proceeding forward in sanctification, even untill death; without which notes none can truly say they are of the Catholike Church: By which we may know the Church of England to bee the true visible Church of God, called and sanctified in the truth, Joh. 8. 31.

The Church not tied to persons or places, but to Christs voice.

Now to proceed, we are in the next place to intreat of the order which God observeth in bringing men by degrees to life everlasting: And first of the calling mentioned; which is a worke of God, who of his meere favour and grace calleth vile and miserable men out of the world, and inviteth them to life everlasting: to understand which, wee must know that the calling of God is twofold: The first is generall, when God calls a whole Nation, Kingdome, and Country, that is, when he offers them salvation in the meanes; as when he sends his Word amongst them, affords them the Sacraments to seale the Covenant, gives leave to approach him in prayer, and all this in the Ministery of man, that man might call man: yea, when he vouchsafeth private meanes farre inferiour to the former, yet often serving for a generall calling, as is the reading of the Scriptures, yea, of mens writings, and sometime reports, as in Rahabs example, and the woman of Samaria: by these meanes the Lord generally calleth men, offering, but often not giving grace offered, in great judgement turning away from a froward people.

Object. If God offer, but give not grace, it is a deluding of men:

Answ. No, for first a man was once able to receive it: secondly, hereby he maketh them without excuse cuſe whom he will deſtroy: thirdly, hereby he keepes the wicked in outward order.

Vſe. Conſidering to bee called of God is the firſt ſtep to life everlaſting, and wee in this Church of England are thus called, it remaines that every man ſhould anſwer this calling.

Queſt. How ſhall this be done? Anſw. Frame thy heart to anſwer God, as David did when God bade him ſeeke his face: Thy face O Lord will I ſeeke: ſee alſo Marke 9. 23,24. of the father of the poſſeſſed childe, and Pſal. 40 6,7. when Davids eare was pierced, hee anſwered, Lord, I come: this ought to bee the Anſwer of our hearts to the Lords voyce ſounding in the miniſtery.

The ſecond calling is more ſpeciall, when grace is not only offred, but given alſo by God, through the effectuall working of his ſpirit in our hearts; which is the beginning of grace in us, he himſelfe laying the firſt foundation of it: by giving power to receive the word to mingle it with faith, and bring forth the fruits of new obedience; for the better conceiving of the nature of it conſider ſix points.

Firſt, the ground and foundation of it, namely Gods eternall free Election of us unto life everlaſting, as 2 Tim. 1. 9. when I ſay free, I exclude not onely whatſoever man can imagine within himſelfe as vaine in procuring ſuch good unto himſelfe, as not of workes, ſaith Paul, leſt any ſhould boaſt; but alſo placing the ground of all our good out of our ſelves in the counſell of God, which the Apoſtle cals his good purpoſe, Rom. 8. 28. yea to ſhew the freeneſſe of this grace, it is thence denominated and called the election of grace.

Secondly, the meanes of this calling, which in the Lords hands are divers; whereof ſome prepare to calling, otherſome are inſtruments of it: as firſt the reading of the Scriptures, ſerving to beget a generall hiſtoricall faith. Secondly, afflictions in body, goods, name, friends or otherwiſe, tending to humble a man and prepare his heart as ſoft ground. Thirdly, the denouncing of Gods judgements, and threats of the Law which ſends to hell, but gives no grace: theſe are generall preparatives: others are inſtruments to effect the inward calling, as the preaching of the glad tidings of the Goſpell which is the moſt principall and effectuall meanes of this ſpeciall and effectuall vocation, and to this Paul aſcribes it, as 2 Theſ. 2. 14. whe reunto he called you by our Goſpel: that this is true, conſider a two-fold worke of this Miniſterie, when it is powerfully applyed to the hearts of men. Firſt, it openeth the very heart of a man, and layes him out to the beholding of himſelfe, ſhewing him that by his deteſtable ſinnes hee hath made himſelfe more ugly in Gods eyes than any Toad can bee in mans; whereby he is prepared not to lie aſleepe in this eſtate, but unto the ſecond worke, which is to apprehend and apply the blood and merits of Chriſt (exhibited in the Goſpell) for the waſhing and bathing of his ſinfull ſoule, that ſo he may be ſaved from wrath.

Thirdly, the perſons that are called: thoſe are mentioned, Rom. 8. 30. namely, thoſe whom hee had before predeſtinate, thoſe he called: which ſeemes to bee expounded in Act. 13. 48. So many as were ordained to life everlaſting beleeved, that is, were called unto the faith: all therefore are not called.

It pleaſeth ſome to teach another doctrine, namely, that God for his part cals all men effectually, and gives them a power to beleeve if they will; but the difference, ſay they, is in the will of man; to prove which they bring this compariſon. The Sunne ſhines on wax and clay equally, the wax is ſoftened, but the clay is hardened. But this is not true out of the Scriptures: for it is not given to all to underſtand the myſteries of the kingdome, Matth. 13. 11. theſe things are hid from moſt of the wiſe of the world, and revealed unto babes, Matth. 11. 25. Knowledge is given to ſome, not to others, and conſequently faith: for they which have not knowne cannot beleeve.

Fourthly, the time of this calling. The particular time of any mans calling is not revealed, but laid up in the ſecret counſell of God, in whoſe hands times and ſeaſons are: yet the extent of the time is large enough though ſtinted, even the time of this life, ſome at the ſixt houre, ſome at the ninth, & others at the eleventh, &c. but not after, becauſe that then all meanes of calling of men ceaſe. Now becauſe men know not the date of their dayes, it behooves them out of hand to ſtrive to enter, not to deferre from day to day, alleaging that ſome were called at the twelfth houre, but accept of the Lords call, while it is yet the acceptable time. If the Lord now ſay, Seeke my face, let thy heart anſwer as an Eccho which takes the word out of the mouth, Thy face O Lord I will ſeeke, Pſalm. 27. 8. ſuch a pleaſant harmony God is delighted with. If he ſay (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) Behold now my people, they are preſently ready to anſwer, Behold now our God, and the rather becauſe the Lord will bee free, and not ſtinted by thee, that either he ſhal call thee in thy crooked years, or not at all: he wil not be preſcribed extraordinarily to cal thee at the twelfth houre, as he did the theefe on the croſſe, when thou howleſt upon the bed of thy ſorrow, & gaſpeſt upon thy death-bed. Therefore while it is called to day let us heare the voice & harden our harts no more.

Queſt. Fiftly, wherin doth this effectual calling ſtand? Anſw. Both in the outward and inward calling, becauſe the former is often in the meanes given to Nations, people, men, at leaſt to make them without excuſe: but the ſecond being ſecret and inward, whereby the Lord makes a mans hart inwardly anſwer the outward calling, poſſeſſeth him with a willing minde ſtedfaſtly to beleeve in the Lord Jeſus, and with an endevour to pleaſe the Lord in all things: thus is the heart pierced, Pſa. 40. 6. the heart of ſtone changed into an heart of fleſh, that is, made tractable and pliable, Ezech. 11. 19. and an heart which is a ſacrifice accepted of God: ſuch a heart was Lydias, Act. 16. 15. when God had opened it, it was heedfull and attentive to the words of Paul: this heart can reliſh the ſweet promiſes of the Goſpell, and no other.

Sixthly, the excellencie of this calling: which we ſhall perceive by theſe conſiderations. Firſt, in that it is a great worke, as was the creation of man at the firſt, Roman. 4. 18. ſo the Apoſtle maketh it, 2 Cor. 4. 6. he that at the beginning called light out of darkneſſe, the ſame hath ſhined in our hearts, &c. that as God cals the firſt time, and dead creatures come forth to life: ſo with no leſſe powerfull voice the Lord cals the heart of man dead in ſinne, and it is quickened with the life of God.

Secondly, this effectuall calling goes beyond the worke of our creation; for here a man is taken out of the firſt Adam, and ſet into the ſecond, and at the ſame inſtant power is given to beleeve, being in time both together, though in order faith is firſt, and then ingrafting, wherein is not onely a bare privation as in the creation when God called things that were not, as though they were: but here is a plaine reſiſtance and rebellion, God calling not only things that are not, but things that would not and refuſe to bee. Thus to raiſe a man out of the bloud of Chriſt, is more than to raiſe Eve out of Adams ſide; to raiſe a dead ſoule from the death of ſinne, farre more glorious and powerfull than to raiſe a dead body from bodily death; to raiſe a man to ſupernaturall life, farre greater than to a naturall onely.

Thirdly, this calling ratifies all our covenants with God. Men in their baptiſme enter covenant with God, but often ſtart from it, and will not ſtand to it, ſo as the covenant is only made: but when as a man is effectually called, the covenant is not onely made, but truly accompliſhed, and that on mans part.

Vſe. Seeing wee are called of God himſelfe in the Miniſterie of the Word, (for Paul cals it, Phil. 4. 14. an high calling) wee muſt labour to joine the inward calling with it, which is higher than that, by having firſt a griefe becauſe wee cannot beleeve: ſecondly, a ready minde: thirdly, an endevour to beleeve: fourthly, a ſorrow becauſe wee beleeve no more, and faile ſo much in the ſervice of God; which if we want, we muſt labour for them; and if we have them, be thankfull unto God for them.

2. Vſe. Learne the dutie laid downe by the Apoſtle, Epheſ. 4. 1. That wee ſhould walke worthy of our calling. To doe which, firſt wee muſt look that we frame our lives holily; being holy in our converſation as he that hath called us is holy. Secondly, there muſt bee the ſame end of our lives which is of Gods calling, that is, to bring us to heaven. The end of our being in the world, is to bee called out of the world, and (as Abraham) to obey God, as looking for a city in heaven not made with hands.

A Now wee proceed to the ſecond ſtep of life eternall, which is ſanctification: this name is taken from the Latines, and by it is underſtood Regeneration, renovation, new-creation, and to be ſanctified is to be made holy and be borne anew. That we may the better know this grace, conſider ſundry points.

Sanctification followeth effectuall calling.

Firſt, what ſanctification is: It is an inward change of a man juſtified, whereby the image of God is reſtored in him. For the opening of which deſcription, marke that firſt I call it a change of a man, to put a difference betweene it and civill converſation, which is a gift of God likewiſe as this is, but farre different from it: becauſe this only reſtraineth the corruption of the hart, wheras ſanctification reneweth the heart: and thus the gifts of God are of two ſorts: firſt, B reſtraining, which doe keepe in the wickednesſe of the heart, ſuch as are all civill vertues. Secondly, renuing or altering the mind, which not onely repreſſeth, but aboliſheth corruption; of this kinde is ſanctification.

Secondly, I call it an inward change, namely in the minde, will, affections, as working upon the inward corruptions and luſts of the heart, to diſtinguiſh it from outward ſanctification, which a wicked man may have, whereby he reformeth his outward man and carriage by the miniſtery of the word: ſuch are they whom the Apoſtle ſpeaks of Heb. 10. 27. which tread under their feet the blood of Chriſt, whereby they were ſanctified, namely, externally: this is of another kinde, working the inward change of the C heart.

Thirdly, I adde, of a man juſtified, for two cauſes: firſt to ſhew that juſtification and ſanctification are two divers gifts of God, and their difference may appeare in three things; firſt, in that juſtification is out of a man; ſanctification is within him. Secondly, juſtification abſolves a ſinner, and makes him ſtand righteous at the barre of Gods judgement; ſanctification cannot doe this. Thirdly, juſtification brings peace of conſcience; ſo doth not ſanctification, but followeth that peace.

Thus the Apoſtle hath them diſtinct, 1 Cor. 6. 11. Ye are waſhed, yee are juſtified and ſanctified: as alſo 1 Cor. 1. 30. Chriſt is made to us righteouſneſſe and ſanctification. Secondly, be- D cauſe juſtification goes with ſanctification, though juſtification be before in nature, yet they are wrought at the ſame time. For when God accepts a mans perſon, then is hee made juſt, who is alſo ſanctified. Fourthly, I ſay, the image of God is hereby reſtored, the which that we may know wherein it conſiſteth, conſider the threefold eſtate of man; the firſt of innocency, the ſecond after the fall, and the third under Chriſt. Firſt, in innocency man had three things: firſt, ſubſtance of body and ſoule: ſecondly, the faculties of ſoule, as reaſon and underſtanding: thirdly, the image of God ſtanding in the conformitie of the whole man, to the will of God: ſecondly, in the ſtate after the fal, man hath two of theſe: firſt, ſubſtance of body and ſoule: ſecondly, faculties as before. But the third is wanting, ſtanding in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, and in ſtead of it is originall ſinne, which diſtempereth and diſordereth the whole man, his minde, will, and affections, and carrieth him againſt the will of God. In the third condition under Chriſt wee have three things: firſt, ſubſtance of body and ſoule: ſecondly, faculties of the reaſonable ſoule: thirdly, a new created holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, before loſt, but now reſtored by grace above nature; and this is a renued conformity to the will of God, and the image of God againe reſtored.

Religion rectifieth affections, but aboliſheth them not.

Where note that ſanctification is ſuch a gift of God, as changeth the man, not the ſubſtance of body, or the faculties of the ſoule, but the corruption, diſorder, and ſinfulneſſe of man, it rectifieth, but aboliſheth not affections, if a man be of ſad diſpoſition, it neither increaſeth nor taketh away, but moderates his ſorrow and keepes it in order: ſo if a man be of a merry diſpoſition, it deprives him not of his mirth, but corrects it that it exceed not: ſo in choler, and other complexions. Then thoſe that feare to labour in their ſanctification, becauſe then they muſt be ſolitary, ſad, and cannot be merry, and thoſe that thus object againſt thoſe who endevour over their owne reformation, may ſee themſelves deceived, ſeeing it onely tempereth the affections to ſuch moderation as becommeth holineſſe.

Queſt. The ſecond point is, Whence have wee our ſanctification? whether from our Parents, or from what originall?

Anſw. No it cannot flow from the parents, no although they bee holy; * Joh. 1. 13. the new birth is not of bloud, nor the will of fleſh, nor of man: for parents muſt be conſidered two waies: firſt, as they are men, children of Adam. Thus they bring their children, and convey no more to their children than Adam did, which is nature, together with the corruption of it.

*Who can bring a cleane thing out of filthineſſe? there is not one.

Object. Holy parents have no ſinne, for it is mortified in them, therefore they cannot derive it to their children.

Anſw. Notwithſtanding their ſanctification they convey the nature and ſinne of Adam: which comes thus to paſſe. God in the beginning gave this Law, that whatſoever Adam received, he ſhould receive it for himſelfe and his poſterity; and whatſoever he loſt, he ſhould loſe it from himſelfe and his poſterity: by vertue of which Law parents ſanctified bring forth children unſanctified, which may appeare by this compariſon. Take wheat, and make it as cleane as you can, ſow it, and it will come up not as it was ſowne, but in ſtalke, blade, & eare, and it brings up as much chaffe as ever it did, though none were ſown with it; what is the reaſon hereof, but only the order ſet in nature by God at the firſt? So parents, let them be never ſo holy, by vertue of the former Law bring forth unholy children.

Secondly, parents muſt be conſidered as holy men, ſonnes of the ſecond Adam by a ſecond birth: and thus they produce not their children, nor derive their holineſſe into them, although their holineſſe may be a meanes to bring them within the Covenant.

Whence note that the ſoule of the childe is not derived from the ſoule of the father, as the body is from his body, for then ſhould they have the ſame properties with the ſoule of the parents: ſo every regenerate man ſhould derive a regenerate ſoule unto the infant, which is falſe not onely in many examples, but in that originall ſinne infecteth every infants ſoule, as well of the beleeving as unbeleeving parent.

Queſt. But if ſanctification bee not from the parent, whence is it?

Anſw. From Chriſt, who is made of God unto us ſanctification, 1 Cor. 1. 30. Coloſſ. 1. 19. In him are hid all the treaſures of it, of whoſe fulneſſe we receive grace for grace, Joh. 1. 16. wherein two further points are to be knowne: firſt, what thing in Chriſt is the root of our ſanctification: namely Chriſt his holineſſe as he is man, even as Adams unrighteouſneſſe is the root of our corruption.

Secondly, that ſeeing he is the root of our ſanctification, it is neceſſary there be a conjunction and union between him and us, before we can partake of his holineſſe, and it is the bond of faith which knits us as members unto him the head: in which regard the Apoſtle ſaith, he is made of God our ſanctification, 1 Cor. 1. 30. that is, the root and author of it.

A third point is, the meaſure of our ſanctification, which is but in part given us in this life, the moſt regenerate man being partly fleſh and partly ſpirit, appearing in this compariſon: Take a veſſell full of water, let a portion be taken out and an equall portion of hot water put in, it becomes luke-warme all of it, partly hot, and partly cold: even ſo every man is a veſſell of water filled with corruption to the brim, if a part of his corruption be taken away, and a proportionall part of holines put in ſtead of it, the whole man becomes partly holy, partly unholy: of which wee have an example in Moſes, Numb. 20. 8, 9. who in ſmiting the rocke ſo as the water guſhed out, bewrayed the mixture of faith with unbeleefe in the ſame action; he takes the ſtaffe, therein hee obeyed God; but he ſtrikes the Rocke twice, being commanded onely to ſpeake to it, and therein he diſobeyed, for which the Lord was angry.

A fourth point is, touching the parts of ſanctification, which may be divided two waies: firſt, it is divided into mortification and vivification.

The firſt diviſion of ſanctification.

Mortification is a part of ſanctification, whereby the power, tyranny, and ſtrength of originall ſinne is weakned, and alſo by little and little aboliſhed, which be conſidered to be not in one part onely, but thorowout; ſo as when one part of originall ſinne decayeth, ſo doth alſo the reſt, the ground of which is the vertue and efficacie of Chriſts death: which if any aske what it is, and what power it can have since it is ended: I answer, it is that power of his Godhead whereby on the crosse hee sustained his Manhood, and so made his death a satisfaction to the justice of God for mans sinne.

Quest. It will be further asked, how come we to be partakers of this vertue of Christs death, and to feele the power of it in our hearts?

Answ. So soone as any man by faith begins to bee united unto Christ, his death is applied unto him, so that by meanes of our conjunction with Christ, we as truly partake of that power of his, as he himselfe was on the crosse sustained by it: then he feels sinne wounded in him, and dying daily, to which he cannot live as before.

The second part of sanctification is vivification, or quickning, and it is when Christ dwels and reignes in our hearts by his spirit; so as we can say, we henceforth live not, but Christ in us: the foundation of which is the vertue of Christs resurrection: which is nothing else but the power of his God-head raising his Manhood, and freeing him from the punishment and tyranny of our sins: this power is conveyed from him, unto all his members, who being mystically conjoyned with him, are thereby raised from the grave of their sinnes.

The second division. The second division is taken from the faculties of man: which are seven in number: 1. The Minde: 2. Memory: 3. Conscience: 4. Will: 5. Affections: 6. Appetite: 7. The life it selfe. In all which this grace of God must appeare.

Minde. 1. The Minde is that part of man which frameth the reason: this Paul calleth, Eph. 4. 5. the spirit of our minde, which must be renued; the sanctification of which is called, Revel. 3. the eye-salve; it is a grace clearing the darke minde and dim understanding; containing in it these three things: First, saving knowledge, 1 Cor. 2. 12. whereby we know the things given us of God. Some will say, what be they? Ans. This knowledge may be referred to two heads: The first is the knowledge of God. The second is the knowledge of our selves. The former of these hath two branches: first, that knowledge of the true God, which is life everlasting, Ioh. 17. 3. Secondly, to know the mercy of God in Christ to my selfe in particular, Ephes. 3. 18. This is, to know the height, length, and depth of the love of God to me in speciall; as, that God the Father is my Father; God the Sonne my Saviour; God the holy Ghost my Sanctifier: this is the saving knowledge of God.

The second head of this saving knowledge is to know a mans selfe, when hee sees the secret corruptions of his heart against the first and second Table: to see and to feele this, is a worke of grace, and an argument of an heavenly light enlightning the soule.

The second thing in the sanctification of the minde, is (after the knowledge of these) to approve the things of God, that is, to minde and meditate on things spirituall, Rom. 8. 5. to savour the things of the spirit, namely, things

A pertaining to the Kingdome of God. Contrary to the practice of them whose glory is their shame, yea, whose end is damnation, Phil. 3. 19. who minde earthly things.

The third thing is a setled purpose in the minde, not to offend God in any thing, but to endevour the doing of his will, and the pleasing of him in all things: this is called the turning of the minde, and is the substance of true repentance.

Memory. 2. The Memory: the sanctification of it, is an aptnesse by grace to keepe good things, specially the doctrine of salvation, by which David was preserved from sinning, Psal. 119. 11. and Mary pondred things concerning Christ, and laid them up in her heart, Luk. 2. 15.

Conscience. B 3. The sanctification of the Conscience is an aptnesse to testifie alwaies truly, that a mans sinnes are pardoned, and that he preserveth in his heart a care to please God, 2 Cor. 1. 12. This testimony was Pauls rejoycing: and Hezekias comfort on his death-bed was the testimony of his conscience of his upright walking before God: yea, this conscience is apt also to checke and curbe us when we incline to evill: so David saith, Psal. 16. his reines did correct him in the night season: and to stirre us up to good as the voice behind us, saying, Here is the way, walke in it, Esay 30. 21.

Will. 4. The Will is sanctified when God gives grace truly to will good; as to beleeve, feare, obey God; when a man can say, that though he find not to performe that which is good, yet to will good is present with him, Ro. 1. 18. This is much accepted of God: for where the minde and other faculties faile in their duty, then comes this will and supplies their want, which being willing to doe much more than it can, the Lord of his mercy accepts it for the deed it selfe.

Affections. 5. For the Affections, some of them concerne God, some our Neighbour, and some our selves. Sanctified affections concerning God are first feare of God, when a man stands in awe of Gods presence, and in regard of his Commandements. Secondly, a contentment and quietnesse of mind in all conditions of life, when a man at all times can submit his will unto the will of God, Job 1. The Lord hath given and taken away, blessed be his name: and David, Psal. 39. 2. I held my tongue and said nothing, because thou Lord didst it. Thirdly, love to God in Christ and to Christ in man, 2 Cor. 5. 14. Rom. 9. 3. Fourthly, an high estimation of Christ and his bloud above all things in the world: Phil. 3. 8. I count all things dung for Christ.

Secondly, the affections towards our Neighbour is to love him, because he is Gods childe in my judgement, 1 Epist. Joh. 3. 14. and in Christ my brother.

Thirdly, concerning our selves, to have a base estimation of our selves in regard of our knowne sinnes and corruptions: Paul cried out that he was the head of all sinners: so the prodigall sonne; I am not worthy to call thee father: David, Have mercy on mee according to the multitude of thy mercy.

Appetite. 6. The sanctification of Appetite stands in the holy ordering of our desires in meat, drinke, apparell, riches, &c. and in the practice of three maine vertues: first, Sobriety: secondly, Chastity: thirdly, Contentation: by which the appetite must be governed.

Life. 7. Sanctification of life stands principally in three things: first, in an endevour to doe the will of God, that herein wee may testifie our thankfulnesse. Secondly, in testifying our love to God in man. Thirdly, in deniall of our selves: which is, first, when we hold God to be wiser than we are, that so we should be both directed and disposed of by him. Secondly, when we account him more carefull for us, than wee our selves can bee, and so rest well satisfied with what condition of life soever he sets us in. Thus are we to practise this grace through our whole conversation; for we may not measure it, nor judge of it by one action good or bad; but looke to the whole course of life, if that bee good, the heart is sanctified.

V. The fifth point is, how sanctification is here ascribed to God the Father, seeing all outward works are common to the whole Trinity. Ans. Sanctification is attributed and that truly to all the three persons, who have all stroke in the worke of it, but diversly. The Sonne sanctifieth by meriting sanctification; the holy Spirit sanctifieth by working it, and by creating the new heart; the Father sanctifieth by sending his Son to merit, and giving his Spirit to worke it. And here the worke is thus ascribed unto him, as being the ground and first author of it.

Vse. Labour for the speciall grace of God. The meanes wee are to use is laid downe in Rom. 6. 1. to the 14. verse, namely, to beleeve that we were crucified with Christ, buried with him, yea, and rose againe with him; because he was upon the crosse, in the grave, as also in rising from thence in our stead and roome, sustaining our persons upon him: this is the foundation of our holinesse. Some will aske how this can bee a ground of our holinesse? I make it plaine in this comparison: As a Traitor arraigned, and hanged according to Law, is then freed from his fact, the Judge ceaseth to punish him, and he ceaseth to be a Traitor, committeth no more misdemenour; o the sinner being arraigned at the barre of Gods justice, and attainted of high treason, is according to Gods Law condemned and executed in Christs condemnation and execution, is now as a dead man unto sinne, and cannot thenceforth live thereunto any more.

Now followes the third degree of life eternall, in these words [ and reserved to Iesus Christ. ] The meaning of which words is plaine in the 1 Epist. of Peter, the 1. 5. where he saith, that the Elect are kept by the power of God unto salvation: in the adding of which words to the former, we are taught that with the gifts of true faith, calling and sanctification, is joyned unseparably the grace of perseverance unto the end: of which truth we will consider foure maine grounds.

4 Grounds to prove the perseverance of the Elect.

The first ground is, the election of God, that is, his decree whereby he setteth some apart to life. This decree is as unchangeable as God himselfe is: and as election is unchangeable, so is the fruit of it in us, in respect of the ground: and hence followeth it that faith and sanctification are unchangeable. Rom. 8. 3. the predestinate are glorified. Matth. 24. 24. the exception sheweth it impossible the Elect should be deceived.

The second ground is the promise of God in the Evangelicall Covenant, which is largely propounded in Jerem. 32. 40. where is promise made of two things: first, the Lord promiseth that hee will not turne from them to doe them good, which is a promise of eternall mercy, shewing the pardon of sinne, being once given, is given for ever. Secondly, that he will put his feare into their hearts, there is promised continuance of faith and sanctification, for they shall not depart from it.

The third ground, is the office of Christ: in it consider first his Priest-hood; secondly, his Kingly Office. First, he was a Priest, partly to offer sacrifice, partly to make intercession for every beleever, for so he did for Peter, Luk. 22. 32. that his faith might not faile, and not onely for him, but as appeares in that worthy prayer recommended in Joh. 17. for all the Disciples, and not for them onely, but for all beleevers through their word. The same request is in that Chapter repeated thrice. Secondly, for his Kingdome; as he is the head of his Church, his office is, first, to keepe all that are given him unto life, Joh. 10. 28. I give unto them life: and none can plucke them out of my hands. Secondly, to give spirituall life to his members, Rom. 6. 8, 9. If Christ the head died but once, and liveth for ever, then all his members die but once to sinne, and after alwaies live to righteousnesse: for this life admits of no corruption neither in nor out of temptation.

The fourth ground is the quality of grace, as of faith, sanctification, &c. whose nature is to endure to life everlasting: for he that once beleeves, remaines ever a beleever, 1 Joh. 3. 9. He that is borne of God sinneth not, because the seed remaineth in him. Now if that remaine whereby he is borne of God, himselfe must also still remaine borne of God, upon which foure grounds we may perswade our selves of the gift of perseverance.

Object. It is alleaged, nothing is unchangeable but God, and therefore grace is changeable.

Answ. Every gift is changeable in it selfe, so man in himselfe considered may fall away: but God hath promised a second grace confirming the first, by vertue whereof a man cannot fall away.

Object. It will be further said, that the child of God when he falleth into a grievous sinne (as David did) is guilty of death, and therefore is not justified, and consequently falleth away.

Answ. When David fell, he was guilty of death, but onely in regard of that sinne into which he was now fallen, all his former sinnes being pardoned: yea, that sinne also was pardoned (though not actually to him before his repentance, yet) in Gods counsell: so as that sinne being on Gods part pardoned, he remaines still in the favour of God.

Object. But in time of persecution many fall away.

Answ. If any fall quite away, they never had true faith: which stands in three things: first, Knowledge; secondly, Assent; thirdly, Apprehension of Christ. The two former they might have, but the third was wanting unto them. Againe, those that fall off in persecution, if they have true faith, they fall not wholly, because the seed of God remaines in them; nor finally, because in time they shall returne unto the Lord againe.

Object. But this doctrine leads men to security.

Answ. No, it leads a man from security unto a new life and watchfulnesse: seeing grace is added unto grace to keepe us in the state of grace.

Vse. First, in that the gift of perseverance is joyned with true faith, I gather that the doctrine of the Papists is not of God, but a doctrine of devils, which teacheth that he which is chosen of God, who hath true faith, and is justified, may in regard of his present right fall away: for how can that be, if he that be chosen be called, sanctified, and preserved unto life?

Secondly, it is false that a man truly justified may lose his grace, seeing with justification is joyned preservation: neither that which teacheth, that a true beleever may fall wholly, though not finally, is true.

Thirdly, those also are deceived who thinke that mans salvation is pinned upon his owne sleeve, and hangeth upon his owne will; for God would have all saved, Christ died for all, the holy Ghost gives grace to all: why then are some saved, some not? It is (say they) from their owne will, grace in some prevailes against flesh, and they are saved; but flesh against grace in the other, who therefore are damned: but this Scripture shewes that to bee but a device of man, seeing whosoever are once elected, are called, sanctified, and preserved to life; and what malice is able to resist this will of God?

Vse 2. Note here the unspeakable goodnesse of God in the worke of Regeneration; in that he not onely gives a new life, but preserves it in us. Adam once had this life of grace betrusted unto him, and had it in keeping, but hee quickly lost it from himselfe and his posterity. Now God hath restored this life againe to beleevers; but that they might be sure of it hee will now keepe it for them himselfe.

And reserved unto Christ] that is, to be presented and set before Christ, and that partly in the day of death, partly in the day of judgment, A holy and without blame, Ephes. 5.27. Whence note: first, beleevers need not feare the day of death or judgement; nay, rather they may rejoyce in it, as the day of their redemption, yea and of triumph. What an honour was it for Pharaohs daughter to be presented to Salomon, and Hester to become the spouse of Ahashuerosh? much more glory is it for the faithfull thus to stand before Christ at that day!

Secondly, wee must all our life long prepare and fit our selves to be presented as pure spouses to our Bridegroome: both these duties are laid downe, Revel. 19.7. Be glad and rejoyce, for the mariage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made her selfe ready. This preparation stands in two things: first, we must betroth our soules to B Christ: this is done when God gives Christ, and we receive him by faith, cleave unto him alone, depend on him as the spouse upon whom her soule loveth. Secondly, we must beautifie our soules having given them to Christ: this is done when the holy Ghost sanctifieth the same, and we daily labour in the renuing of our owne hearts.

Thirdly, we must hence be stirred up to prayer for this gift of preservation to life everlasting, and reservation to Christ, hungring for grace after grace, to be strengthened in temptation, especially in this last and declining age, wherein the Gospell takes little place in our hearts.

V. 2. Mercy unto you, and peace, and love be multiplied.

C In these words is laid downe the third point in the salutation, namely, the prayer usually observed in Apostolicall salutations. In which first he prayeth for three things; mercy, peace, and love. Secondly, that these may be multiplied, that is, continued and increased in and upon them. First, of the multiplying of mercy: The mercy of God towards the creature is taken in Scripture two waies; generally, and specially: Gods generall mercy is that, whereby he is inclined to helpe the creature in miserie, Luke 6.36. Gods speciall mercy (called riches of mercy, whereby he will have mercy on whom he will, Rom. 9.15.) is that, by which is granted D pardon of sinne, and acceptance in Christ to life everlasting: and for this he prayeth in this place. Now because this speciall mercy cannot be multiplied in it selfe, being infinite in God, as himselfe is infinite, therefore by mercy we must understand the fruits and effects thereof. And for our better instruction herein, three things are to be considered.

Gods mercy in Christ as set in the first place, so to be sought for above all things in the world.

First, that mercy is asked in the first place, before peace and love: teaching us, that the mercy of God in Christ is to bee sought for above all things in the world, Psal. 4.6. Many say, Who will shew us any good? but Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us. Psal. 119.77. Let thy tender mercy come upon mee, that I may live. This is the foundation of all blessing.

Secondly,

Secondly, note the perſons for whom hee thus prayeth, To you; that is, as in the firſt verſ. to thoſe who were called, ſanctified, and reſerved to Chriſt; not for unbeleevers, unrepentant, and Apoſtataes: whence we learne, firſt, that a man juſtified, ſanctified, and made heire of life, cannot merit any thing at Gods hands: for merit and mercy cannot ſtand together, and hee that ſtill ſtands in need of mercy, can never merit: which doctrine muſt bee maintained againſt the Roman Church, which teacheth, that a man may put his truſt in the merit of his works, ſo he doe it ſoberly. Secondly, that men effectually called and ſanctified, becauſe they ſtill ſtand in need of mercy, muſt bee in their owne eyes ſtill vile and miſerable. Abraham being to ſpeake to God, termes himſelfe duſt and aſhes. Iacob acknowledged that he was leſſe than the leaſt mercy. Iob cries out that hee was vile, and abhors himſelfe. After theſe examples we muſt ever keepe our hearts as empty veſſels, ready to receive more mercy.

Thirdly, note the meaſure of mercy asked; he prayes for continuance and increaſe of mercy to thoſe who had already the riches of mercy. Whence we learne, firſt, that all the good we have, or can doe, is of meere mercy; not only for the beginning and continuance, but alſo for the increaſe thereof: as grace is no grace, unleſſe it be every way grace; ſo alſo of mercy. Which takes away all conceit of merit, ſeeing mercy filleth up all the roome, and leaves no place for merit. Secondly, that the Apoſtle here alſo confirmeth the former grounds of our perſeverance: for by this prayer, grace is to be added to the former graces, yea, multiplied: ſo the Lord dealeth, not giving over when he hath given one grace: for firſt, he gives his ſervant power to beleeve: ſecondly, he gives an execution of this power. Neither there gives over, but by a third grace gives continuance of that power: yea, and adds a fourth, which is an execution of that continuance. Thus he deales with all true beleevers, not onely in reſpect of faith, but of obedience alſo: Phil. 2. 13. God worketh both the will and the deed. Phil. 1. 6. Hee that hath begun this good worke in you, will performe it untill the day of Chriſt. So as this may well be called a multiplication of grace, ſeeing every beleever hath one grace more than Adam had: he had power to obey; ſo the renued have. Secondly, hee had the act of obedience; ſo they alſo have. Thirdly, he had power to perſevere; which they likewiſe have: but he had not the act of perſeverance; which they having, therein farre excell him.

The ſecond thing deſired in the prayer is peace, namely, the peace of God, whereof he is the Author: and it is the unity and concord of man with God, and with the creatures. Touching this peace, note three things; the foundation of it, which is Chriſt the ſecond Adam: even as the firſt Adam was the Author of diſcord and enmity, Epheſ. 2. 14. Secondly, the manifeſtation of it: this peace is offered in the preaching of the Goſpel, which therefore is called the glad tidings of peace, Rom. 10. 15. and the Miniſters of it, the Ambaſſadors of peace, 2 Cor. 5. 20. Thirdly, the kinds of this peace, it is two-fold: firſt, betweene perſon and perſons: ſecondly, betweene perſon and things. The former hath ſix heads: I. Peace betweene man and God, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt, properly called reconciliation, whereby God in Chriſt is at one with man, and man through Chriſt at one with God, of which when man is once perſwaded in his heart, then comes this peace, Rom. 5. 1. from which ſprings another, namely, tranquillity of minde, when the minde is quieted in all things that befall, without grudging or impatience, and that becauſe it is the revealed will of God, Phil. 4. 11. II. Peace with the good Angels, Eph. 1. 10. for men being at peace with God, the Angels are become ſervants and miniſtring ſpirits unto them, Heb. 1. 14. III. Peace with a mans ſelfe, conſiſting in two things: firſt, when the conſcience ſanctified ceaſeth to accuſe, and in aſſurance of Gods favour beginneth to take his part, to excuſe and ſpeake for him before God. Secondly, when the will, affections, and inclinations ſubmit themſelves to the enlightened minde: of which if either be wanting, man is at warre with himſelfe, and the peace of God ruleth not in his heart, Coloſſ. 3. 15. IV. Peace of true beleevers among themſelves, who before they beleeved were as Lions and cockatriſes, Eſa. 11. 6. but now in the Kingdome of Chriſt, have put off that ſavage nature, and become peaceable; as Act. 4. 32. the number of beleevers were all of one heart. V. Peace of the faithfull with profeſſed enemies; namely, when they endevour to have peace with all men, Rom. 12. 17, 18. not requiting evill with evill. VI. Concord of the enemies themſelves, with the true Church: for often the Lord reſtraineth the malice and rage of his enemies, and inclines them to peace. Thus Iacob and Ioſephs family were preſerved in Ægypt, and Daniel was brought in favour with the chiefe Eunuch, Dan. 1. 9.

The ſecond branch of this peace, is when all things and creatures conſpire and agree for the good of the godly. This is called good ſucceſſe; promiſed Pſal. 13. Whatſoever the righteous man doth, it ſhall proſper.

Vſe. Firſt, in that mercy is firſt asked, and then peace, wee are by the order taught that peace and good ſucceſſe are grounded on mercy: ſo as men for the moſt part take a prepoſterous courſe, who would have good ſucceſſe in health, wealth, peace, honour, learning, &c. in that they ſeeke it out of aſſurance of mercy in the pardon of ſinne: whereas this ground muſt firſt be laid as the foundation of all bleſſing and good ſucceſſe.

Secondly, we muſt endevour that this peace grounded upon mercie, may have place in our hearts, that we may have boldneſſe in regard of God,

God, comfort in our consciences, peace with our brethren, quietnesse and contentednesse in all conditions of life, &c. This peace shall preserve our hearts in all things, Phil. 4.7. This was Davids security in the middest of his enemies, and danger of death, he would now lie downe in peace, because the Lord did sustaine him, Psal. 4. vers. 8. This grace preserveth the heart undanted in many afflictions, even as a souldier that takes the enemies Ensigne, cares for no blowes or wounds so hee may carry away the Ensigne: so hee that preserves the peace of God in his heart, makes light of afflictions, seeing he holdeth that which countervaileth all of them.

The third grace desired in the prayer is love, which is a most excellent vertue, preferred [a] before faith and hope, in some respects, and made [b] the end of the commandements. Love is diversly taken in the Scripture; sometime it signifieth the love of God to the creature: and sometime the love of man to God and man; and so it is taken in this place, being set after mercie and peace as a fruit of them.

[b] 1 Tim. 1.5.

In the handling of this vertue consider three points in generall, before we come to the speciall parts of it: First, what this love is; The love of God and man is a certaine divine and spirituall motion in the heart, causing it to bee well pleased in the thing loved, and moving it to affect communion therewith: in these two consists the nature of true love to God and man.

Secondly, Whence hath love his beginning? Anſ. Not from nature, for the [c] wisdome of the flesh is enmitie with God: yea, there is in every mans nature a disposition to hate God and man when occasion is offered; let the naturall man say never so often hee loveth God, herein hee lieth and deceiveth himselfe: for urge him to frame and conforme himselfe unto the Word, wherein he should testifie his love, here his wicked heart hating to be reformed, resisteth plainly, saying, I will not have this man to rule over me, I desire none of his waies. This love then comes from grace, 1 Joh. 4.7. Love commeth from God, 1 Tim. 1.5. it hath his beginning from a pure heart, true faith, and good conscience. Which must be maintained against the Papists, who say that nature affordeth the inclination, but grace the practice; whereas indeed grace giveth both.

[c] Rom. 8.7.

Thirdly, consider the use of love; It is the instrument and companion of true faith, which worketh by love, Gal. 5.6. The proper work of faith is to lay hold on Christ, this faith as a hand can of it selfe doe; but when it commeth to the practice of morall duties, it can no more worke without the grace of love than a hand (which can lay hold alone and of it selfe receive and retain) can cut any thing without any instrument. Whence it appeareth, that faith in justification is alone, but in the life of man it worketh by

A love: and whereas it hath bin taught for many hundred yeares that love is the life of faith, that is untrue, for it onely testifieth that faith hath life. It is alleaged, that as the body without the spirit is dead, even so faith without workes is dead: therefore workes are the soule, and give life to faith. But this consequence from this comparison is not good, because the soule is not properly the soule of the body, but of the man, and so it proveth not that love is the soule of faith. Againe, the word Spirit there betokeneth the breath, without which the body is dead, and thus is the comparison to bee returned; that as breath maketh not a man living, but sheweth him to be alive, so love maketh not faith living, but testifieth it so to be; yea, indeed is the fruit and effect of faith, as breath is of life. Iam. 2.26.

More particularly this grace of love is twofold: first, that whereby man loveth God: Secondly, that whereby man loveth man. In the former note two points: first, what it is; namely, a motion of the heart, whereby it is affected to God, causing it to be well pleased in God, and his works for himselfe; as also to seek fellowship with God so much as it can. Secondly, note the measure of this love, which in Scripture is double: first, that which the Law requireth, and that is the full measure of love, love in the highest degree, when man loveth God with all his soule, with all his strength, and all the powers of the whole man, so as in man no love can be above it; unto this all men are bound, yet no man since the fall can attaine. Secondly, that which the Gospel describeth, standing in an unfained will, and true endevour to love God, with all the heart, all the strength, and all the powers; which is a smaller measure than the former, yea, and a qualification and moderation of it, yea, to none but those that are in Christ. Whereby we come to the right understanding of divers places of Scripture; as 2 King 23.25. of Iosiah: 2 Chron. 15.15. all Judah sought the Lord with their whole heart. These and such other places must be understood as they are qualified by the Gospell, in that they willed and endevoured by all good meanes to seeke God; yea, this Text also must bee understood of this second measure, seeing the former being in the highest degree, cannot be multiplied, no not if men were glorified.

The second kinde of this love is that whereby man loveth his neighbor: which is a certaine divine and spirituall motion, causing the heart (as the former) both to be well pleased in man for God, (that is, because he is Gods Image and his owne flesh) as also to powre out it selfe and communicate goodnesse to his neighbour, in wishing, speaking, and hoping the best of him. Wherein by the way observe a plaine difference betweene faith and love: faith is a hand, but to pull Christ to our selves: love is a hand also, but opening it selfe and giving forth unto others.

In

1 In this love of the neighbour consider these three things: first, the order of it: The order that hath beene taught for many hundred yeares is, that first wee must love our selves, and then others, from this ground, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thy selfe; for the rule (say they) must go before the thing ruled. But this is not sound: seeing worthy men have beene commended in Scriptures for loving others as well, yea and better than their owne selves: so David loved Ionathan, 1 Sam. 20.17. Christ loved his enemies better than himselfe; these began not with themselves: yea indeed, the right beginning of love is in God, and then as a man is a more principall instrument of Gods glory, hee must be for God preferred in our love above our selves. Thus every man is bound to love and preferre the life of his Prince above his owne; see the perfect rule of direction herein, Joh. 13. 34. Secondly, note the manner of it, set downe in that precept: Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy selfe: that is, as we are cheerefull, and free to practise the duties of love to our selves, so must we do it to others: for this precept aimeth at the manner, rather than the rule of our love to man; for that is, as Christ hath loved us. 2 Thirdly, the kinds of it: it is two-fold: first, single, when men love others, but are not repaid with love againe: yea, when a man loves his enemy, but is not loved againe. The second is mutuall love, that is, when love is requited with love, called in Scripture brotherly love: see Phil. 2.2. 1 Cor. 1. 10. when men are of one judgement, like minded, speake one thing; and one soule is as it were in many bodies. 3

The second point is the multiplication of love which the Apostle prayeth for upon good ground, because it joyneth man to God, and man to man, and so becommeth as it is called the bond of perfection, the bond of the Church, Common-wealth, and of all societies. 1 Cor. 12. Love edifieth, that is, it helpeth to build the Kingdome of God, yea, it constraineth men to all good duties in their particular callings. Qu. But how shall this love be multiplied? An. By certaine meditations and practices. The meditations are many; first, on Gods commandements: Be servants one to another in love, Gal. 5. 13. Secondly, of Gods image, which all men should beare in love, 1 Joh. 3. 16. Thirdly, of the fellowship of the faithfull, having all one father, one brother, one salvation, all linked by one spirit, Ephes. 4.4. Fourthly, of the love of God, Joh. 13. 35. which hereby wee shall bee assured of, 1 Joh. 3.14. The practices also are divers: first, we must labour to bee assured of Gods love to us, and increased upon us, Ephes. 5. 2. Secondly, the law of nature must teach us to doe as we would be done unto. Thirdly, our care must be more to love, than be loved: for to love is a vertue in our selves, to bee loved is the vertue of another. Fourthly, pray daily for multiplication of love towards God and man, yea towards our enemies; seeing the more this A is multiplied, the happier is our estate, yea and the condition of the Church upon earth.

v. 3. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needfull for mee to write unto you that yee should earnestly contend for the faith which was once given unto the Saints.

B Here begins the second part of this Epistle, which is the Exhortation, reaching to the end of the 23. verse. In this verse two things are contained: First, the causes which moved the Apostle to write the Epistle. Secondly, the matter of his exhortation. The causes of his writing are three: First, his love, noted in the word Beloved. Secondly, his ready and willing minde of himselfe, noted in the word diligence, which signifieth a carefull endevour and studie to doe the Church good, and it is enlarged by three arguments: first, in that he gave all diligence, and not some part onely, to further the Church. Secondly, when he could not speake to the Catholike Church, hee gave diligence to write. Thirdly, he writeth not of small matters, but of things most weightie, such as concerne their salvation, against which seeing it might be objected, that he was not able to write of such a weighty matter, hee therefore calls it common salvation to cut off that surmise, as also to shew that it is common to himselfe and the whole Church, of which therefore having a share therein he is not ignorant.

C The third cause in the word [needfull] a necessity was laid upon him in that he was called to be an Apostle, and so bound to further the salvation of the Catholike Church. 3

Out of these three motives which caused the Apostle to write, observe; First, that every Minister that would deliver the Word faithfully must have three things to excite him thereto: D first, love towards the Church, to which hee is called. Secondly, a ready minde to further the salvation of their soules. Thirdly, the bond of his calling, stirring him up to faithfulnesse and diligence. All these three concurred in Paul. first, his love appeared, 2 Cor. 5. 14. Secondly, his ready minde was not wanting, Phil. 2. 17. Thirdly, for his calling that urged him, see 1 Cor. 9. 16. 1

Note hence also, that whosoever would heare the Word, or reade it to salvation, must bring three things in his heart: first, a love to the Word delivered: This caused David often to muse thereupon, Psal. 119.97. Secondly, a ready and diligent minde to receive and retaine it: this was in the Bereans, Act. 17. 11. and in 2

the Galathians, when they received Paul as an Angel of God, Gal. 4. 14. Thirdly, a consideration of the great necessity of hearing, and reading the Word; Prov. 29. 18. Where vision failes, the people perish.

3 Thirdly, in this example of the Apostle, all Pastors must learne diligence in all good means for the furtherance of the salvation of their flocke: for which cause they are called Watchmen, because they are to watch over their soules. Yea, Saviours, Obadiah 21. to put them in minde, that they are to bee the meanes of saving men. They had not need then bee entangled with many charges: and other businesses.

4 Fourthly, as the Apostle writeth of the [common salvation] of which he hath good experience; so every Minister must see that hee have experience in himselfe of that hee teacheth others; and have a taste of that in his owne heart which hee would have others seasoned withall, else his teaching shall be cold.

The second part of this verse is the exhortation: the whole matter and substance may bee reduced to three heads: First, that faith is a notable treasury, which hath many enemies. Secondly, that the Saints are the keepers of it. Thirdly, that the office of every member of the Catholike Church is to hold and maintaine this treasure. For the first, that faith is a treasure, appeareth 2 Pet. 1. 1. where it is called precious faith: 2 Cor. 4. 7. a treasure in earthly vessels; and by this, that a fight is here enjoyned against the enemies of it. For the clearing of which, consider two things: First, what it is. Secondly, who bee the enemies of it, against whom we must fight; and them we shall jointly observe with the severall grounds of faith. For the first, this faith is nothing else but the wholsome doctrine of the Gospell, called by Paul to Titus 1. 1. the truth according to godlinesse. So 1 Tim. 4. 1. this faith, which many shall deny, is opposed to the doctrine of Devils. Now for our more orderly proceeding, we must consider that this doctrine of faith admitteth a distinction, which Paul himselfe maketh 1 Cor. 3. 11, 12. Some doctrines are of the foundation, without which religion cannot stand such as are set downe, Heb. 6. 1. Others pertaine to the foundation but are not of it, as gold and silver built upon the foundation: It shall not be amisse here to stand awhile to set downe the wholsome doctrine of salvation which is fundamentall, reduced by the Apostle to two generall heads, Faith and Love. The wholsome doctrine of faith, containes things needfull to bee beleeved. The wholsome doctrine of love containes things necessary to bee practised. And both these are expresly set downe in Scripture, as we shall shew in order.

2 Tim. 1. 13.

Grounds of doctrine to be beleeved.

1. Ground. First, that all doctrine of the Prophets and

A Apostles is given by divine inspiration: 2 Tim. 3. 16. All Scripture is given by divine inspiration: that is, all the doctrine both for matter, stile, and words of Scripture is delivered by the inspiration of the holy Ghost. Hence it followeth that all Scripture is authenticall, as having the authority from God, yea and must be beleeved as if God from Heaven should speake, without disputation, or calling any part of it into question. This ground must first be laid. If it be said the Scripture may be proved by reason, and by the generall consent of the Church. Ans. That is untrue, for reason cannot settle the conscience to beleeve in any point. But Scripture telleth there is a God, which reason proveth. Ans. Reason out of nature teacheth there is a God,

B but by the Word of God only I doe beleeve it: inducements to faith may be brought out of nature, but Gods Word onely causeth true beleefe. Secondly, for the authority of the Church; I beleeve not because the Church saith so, but because the Scripture saith it: and the Church I beleeve so farre as she consents with the Word, and speaketh out of it.

Object. Answ. Object. Answ.

First, the Turkes and Turkish religion, who deny Scripture to be given by inspiration, and deny the books of the Prophets and Apostles, and in stead of them stand to their Alcaron. Se-

C condly, the Iewes, who refuse the bookes of the new Testament. Thirdly, the Atheists, who will beleeve nothing of all this. Fourthly, the painted adversary, the Papist, who undermines this ground; first, saying that the Hebrew and Greek Text is corrupted, so as we may not build upon it; that thereby they might bring their Latine Bible into credit as most authenticall; and yet (that they might make the sentence of their Church the rule of faith) the most learned of that Church hold that the Latine Bible is also corrupt; so indeed they covertly renounce all Scripture, that the sentence of the Church may have the chiefe stroke. Secondly, in teaching that the authoritie of the Church in regard of us, is above the Scriptures, because we know

D not the sense thereof, but by the Church; Thus putting downe the true and principall ground of Scripture, that they might more easily set up their owne dotages.

Papists enemies to Hebrew and Greeke.

2. Ground. The second ground concerneth the sufficiency of Scripture, and is this: The Scripture of the Prophets and Apostles is a perfect rule of faith and manners: It is of all men to be beleeved or done to salvation. 2 Tim. 3. 16. The Scripture is profitable to teach, improve, correct, instruct in righteousnesse, to make the man of God absolute, yea, perfect in every good work. If it make him perfect in all kind of teaching, it is also able much more to make every man perfect to all the duties of his calling, Gal. 1. 8. If an Angell should teach otherwise, that is, divers or besides, though though not contrary to that which is taught, he ſhall be accurſed; many doctrines indeed of Arts and other things are divers and beſides it: but the meaning is, that no doctrine of ſalvation muſt be brought, no not beſides it, therefore the bookes of the Prophets and Apoſtles containe a perfect rule. Many things which cannot be found in Scripture may bee ſupplied by tradition. Anſ. Traditions can never ſettle the conſcience, for though divers of them are found in the writings of the Fathers, yet they were ſubject to errour, and ſo might and did erre in them.

Adverſaries of this ground, to be contended with.

First, all men by nature; Job 22. 14. Who ſay to the Almighty, Depart from us, for wee deſire not the knowledge of thy wayes: yea, our common Proteſtants, who in judgement acknowledge this rule, yet in their life they leave it, and take the leaden rule of naturall reaſon, ſenſe, ſight, and feeling, and few there bee that live by faith.

Secondly, the Romiſh Church; for firſt, they make the written word a thing ruled by ſetting up another Rule: ſaying, that there are two kindes of Scripture: The firſt is inward, written in the heart of all Catholikes, which is the univerſall conſent of the Church: The ſecond is outward, written by the Prophets and Apoſtles, an inken Scripture, (ſay they) and a dead letter without the former. Whereas the cleane contrary is true, the true rule being the Scripture of the Prophets and Apoſtles: and the other in the heart in this life, but an imperfect patterne drawne according to the former. Secondly, they overturne the ground, in joyning to the written word unwritten traditions, ſo making it but halfe a rule, and indeed as good no rule. But where are theſe traditions? In the writings of the Fathers they ſay: But how ſhal we know them to bee Scripture? Becauſe the Fathers ſay ſo: But how ſhall we know they ſay true? Here muſt they flie to man, whereof yet no man can aſſure us. Thirdly, in teaching that the true ſenſe of ſcripture cannot be found without the Churches determination, and ſo indeed make it no rule; becauſe a right rule both ruleth it ſelfe, and is plaine to rule other things alſo.

The third ground is: There is one true God. By one, I meane one in number, not two: 1 Cor. 8. 6. To us there is but one God, that is, to the Church, to us that looke to be ſaved: which is plain by this reaſon, for there can be but one infinite, and if there were two or moe Gods, there ſhould bee two or moe infinites, which is impoſſible.

3. Ground.

Adverſaries to the ground.

First, the common Proteſtant, who in judgement holdeth one God, yet in heart and life he ſetteth up two or moe: ſome riches, ſome pleaſure, ſome one ſinne or other: for where a mans heart is, there is his God. Paul ſaith ſome make their bellie their God: and that the Devill is the God of the world.

Secondly, the maine Enemie is the Popiſh Church, which in word holdeth one God, but divers wayes ſet up divers Gods. As firſt the Pope himſelfe, who (by their reformed Canon law) is to judge all, and to be judged of none. Who maketh himſelfe a forgiver of ſinnes, and that properly: yea, a maker of lawes to binde conſcience as wel as Gods laws: which is horrible blaſphemy. Secondly, the Virgin Mary, whom they make a Goddeſſe, as Chriſt a God: as Chriſt a King, ſo her a Queene; as he a Lord, ſo her a Lady: yea, they ſet Chriſt below her, whom they deſire to command her ſonne by the right of a mother: yea and in ſome of their reformed Service bookes, they truſt in her for ſalvation.

Popery a monſter of many heads, ſetteth up many Gods.

Thirdly, the Saints whom they pray unto; wherein they attribute unto them the knowledge of the ſecrets of mens hearts, and omnipreſence, for they muſt alſo bee in all places; which are things proper unto God alone.

4. Ground.

The fourth ground is, that God is all-ſufficient in himſelfe: Gen. 17. 1. I am all-ſufficient: that is, he hath in himſelfe all perfection: for firſt, hee taketh being from none, but giveth being to all. Secondly, for ſubſtance he is a Spirit of perfect nature. Thirdly, every way infinite, in regard of time, place, attributes. This may well be called a ground: for whoſoever placeth any want or imperfection in God, denieth God, and maketh him no God.

Adverſaries hereof.

First, the common people, who conceive a God made all of mercy without his juſtice.

Secondly, the Papiſt, who robbeth God of his perfection two wayes: firſt, they attribute an imperfect juſtice unto him, namely, ſuch a one as may be ſatisfied by mans ſatisfaction. Secondly, an imperfect mercy, whereof our owne merits muſt make a ſupply: teaching that indeed Chriſt muſt make us juſt, but wee muſt make our ſelves more juſt and merit ſalvation.

Papiſts rob God of his mercy and juſtice.

5. Ground.

The fifth ground is: There be three in heaven, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt, and theſe three are one God, 1 John 5. 7. How can it bee that three are one God? Anſw. It is a myſterie, which the ancient Church anſwereth thus: they be three in perſon and one in ſubſtance; ſo wee alſo ſay they bee three in manner of ſubſiſting, but one nature and God-head: Three they bee diſtinguiſhed in perſon, the Father not being the Sonne, nor the holy Ghoſt, and ſo in other perſons, three ſubſiſtences in one nature. John 17. 2. This is life everlaſting, &c. This is a ground, because wee must worship one God in three persons, neither can wee aright thinke of God out of the Trinitie.

ground

Adversaries of this ground.

Papists become Antisinitaries.

First, Heretikes innumerable whose memorie is accursed; as Arians of former and latter times, denying the Godhead of Christ. Secondly, the Turke and Jew, who hold an absolute God out of the persons. Thirdly, our common people, who pray to such a God in their owne names out of the Sonne and holy Ghost. Fourthly, the Popish Church, which denieth by their doctrine the three persons: for hee that denyeth the Sonne, denyeth the Father and holy Ghost, 1 John 2. 23. Now they deny the Sonne both in his natures abolishing his Man-hood in their doctrine of the Sacrament, as also his offices of King, Priest, and Prophet, for which wee must utterly separate from them.

6. Ground.

The sixth ground is, That nothing commeth to passe without the speciall decree, will, and providence of God. Matthew 10. 23. A sparrow falleth not to the ground without his will. Object. Sinne is against Gods will, and therefore commeth to passe without his will. Answ. That which is against the will of God is not without his will. Quest. How can this be? Answ. No sinne commeth to passe but God decreeth the permitting and being of it: now to permit sinne and the being of it, is neither the causing of sinne, nor the doing of it, but the not hindring of it, to which he is not bound. This ground being denied, chance will be brought in, and God himselfe denied.

7 Ground.

The seventh ground is, That God hath chosen some men before the world was, to bee partakers of the riches of his mercy, and passed by others because it was his will, Rom. 9. 18. He will have mercy on whom hee will, Ephes. 1. 4. 1. Peter 2. 9. Some are chosen generation, and therefore some are not chosen. Againe, whom he will he hardeneth: he hideth the mysteries of the kingdom from some: why? because his pleasure was such, Matth. 11. 25. And of this there is good reason: for in nature the first cause ordereth the second causes, and not the second the first. Now Gods will is cause of all causes: which therefore must rule all as the supreme, and not bee ruled by any other. That this is a ground, appeareth, 2 Tim. 2. 19. The foundation of God remaineth sure, the Lord knoweth who are his: and indeed none other can bee the ground of grace and happinesse unto us, then the counsel of God in electing us, called therefore of the Apostle a foundation.

Adversaries hereof.

First, our common people that thus abuse this doctrine: If I bee chosen to salvation, I shall bee saved, therefore I may live as I list. They might as well reason thus; The tearme of my life is stinted, none can lengthen or shorten it, I will therefore neither eat, nor drinke, nor use Physicke, nor other meanes of prolonging my dayes: which what were it else but to murther the body? So these from the same ground become murtherers of their soules: whereas men chosen to the end will presse after the meanes, and conclude otherwise, and say, I will use meanes that I may come to life. Secondly, others more learned are adversaries to this ground, who teach, that God for his part hath chosen all men to life; and for his part would have all saved, and that Christ for his part hath redeemed all, and the holy Ghost giveth or offereth grace to all. If wee aske, why then are not all saved? They answer, because God fore-saw those who would beleeve, whom hee appointed to salvation: hee fore-saw also others who would not beleeve, and adjudged them to damnation. But by this doctrine shall Gods will hang on the will of man, and bee ruled by it, seeing hee would have men saved but man will not; and so this ground is in part raised.

8. Ground.

The eight ground is, That God made the heavens, and the earth, and all things that have being in them. Col. 1. 16. By him were created all things which are in heaven and in earth. This is a principle; for if creatures had no beginning, then are they become Gods; which would overthrow the Godhead. But all things were not made besides God. For the highest Heaven the Throne of God is eternall as God himselfe is. Answ. The Throne of God is a creature as well as the rest: Hebr. 11. 10. Hee looked for a Citie having a foundation, whose builder and maker is God. In the world are many evils, which could not bee from God, the foundation of all goodnesse. Answ. Evill is of three sorts: First, Naturall, which commeth by nature corrupted, as sickenesse, diseases, plagues, and death it selfe. Secondly, Materiall evils, as hurtfull beasts, poysons in trees, plants, beasts; these are created, and the very poyson of them is a creature. Thirdly, morall evils, which be transgressions against the Morall Law and Commandements of God. Of the two former God is the author and cause: Esay 45. 7. I create evill: that is, naturall and materiall: but of the third, that is, morall evils which bee sinne, God is no cause. Object. But God is the cause of all things, and sinne is something. Answ. Sinne is no creature, but the destruction of Gods image, which is a creature effected by the creature: for though the creature cannot make a creature, yet it can destroy a creature.

The adversary to this ground is the Atheist, who holdeth the creatures to have beene from everlasting, and so by denying one God, hee maketh many thousands.

9. Ground.

The 9. ground is, that God made man according to to his owne image, Gen. 1. 27 For by creation man had three things: Firſt, the ſubſtance of body and ſoule. Secondly, in them the powers and faculties of minde, will, affections, &c. Thirdly, an excellent conformity of all theſe to the will of God: This is the image of God, called in the Scripture righteouſneſſe and holineſſe. This is a ground: for the image of God is the ſubſtance and body of the Law; he therefore that denieth this, denieth the Law, the fall from it, and the reſtoring unto it by Chriſt.

10. Ground.

The 10. ground is, that by Adam, ſinne and death entred into the world, and in him all meere men ſinned, Rom. 5. 12. To the conceiving of which we muſt know, that the firſt ſinne of Adam was eating the forbidden fruit; the next was, the putting out of Gods image: in ſtead of which, corruption of heart tooke place ſo farre, as (the ſeed of all ſinne being within him) hee was prone and ready to every ſinne. Now Adam being a publike perſon, and having received whatſoever hee had for himſelfe and his poſterity either to hold for, or loſe from both; hence is it that both thoſe ſinnes are become the two firſt ſinnes in our conception; he ſinning we ſinned, and with him have the ſeeds of all ſinne within us by nature, no ſinne excepted, no not the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt. Yea, no otherwiſe is it with us, than with a noble man practiſing treaſon, whoſe whole bloud is thereby ſtained. Obiect. But Chriſt came of Adam, therefore he in Adam ſinned. Anſ. God made this law with Adam, that all who came of him by ordinary generation ſhould be guilty of his ſinne: but Chriſt was extraordinarily conceived by the holy Ghoſt, and tooke of Mary Adams nature, but not Adams ſinne. Againe, Chriſt came of Adam, but from him as a beginning, and not by him as by a father; whereas all other men are both from Adam and by him. This is a maine ground of our religion, without which there could bee no redemption.

Adverſaries hereof are:

Firſt, our common people, who ſay they ever kept Gods Law, and loved him with all their heart, and their neighbours as themſelves, and thinke hence all is well: but were it ſo as they dreame, they had never fallen in Adam, and ſo Adams ſinne had not gone over all men.

Papiſts compell the Apoſtle where he ſaith, that ſinne entred by one o-ver all.

Secondly, the Popiſh Church: firſt, in teaching that the Virgin Marie (who came of Adam by ordinary generation) was conceived without ſinne: notwithſtanding ſhee was ſaved, not by her bearing of Chriſt in her wombe, but by beleeving on him with her heart. Secondly, in that they teach, that men are not wholly dead in ſinne, but in part, or halfe dead, yea, that being a little holpen, they can keepe the Law: as though by ſinne men had not beene wholly deprived of the glory of God.

11. Ground.

The 11. ground is, that the Law and Goſpell are two parts of the word of God, and are divers kindes of doctrine. By the Law I underſtand, that part of Gods word which promiſeth life to the obeyer. By the Goſpell, that part which promiſeth it to the beleever. Theſe I ſay are divers kinds of doctrine; to the clearing of which conſider, firſt, their conſent and agreement: ſecondly, their diſſent and difference. Firſt, the Law and Goſpel conſent: firſt in the Author; of both which is God. Secondly, in their generall matter, for both require juſtice and righteouſneſſe to ſalvation. Thirdly, in their end, namely, the glory of God. Secondly, they diſſent in ſix things: Firſt, the Morall law is written in nature by creation; yea, and ſince the fall we have ſome remainder of it in us. Rom. 2. 15. The Gentiles ſhew the effect of the Law written in their hearts: but the Goſpel is not in nature, but above the reach of nature created, much more corrupted. The ground of the Law is the image of God; but the ground of the Goſpell is Jeſus Chriſt. Secondly, the Law will have us doe ſomething that we may be ſaved by it, and that is to fulfill it. The Goſpell requireth no doing of us, but onely beleeving in Chriſt. Obiect. But beleeving is a worke to be done. Anſ. The Goſpell requireth it not as a worke, but as it is an inſtrument, and the hand of the ſoule to lay hold upon Chriſt, Rom. 4. 5. and 3. 21. and 10. 5. Hence is it that the Law requireth righteouſneſſe inherent; but the Goſpell, imputed. Thirdly, the law is propounded to the unrepentant ſinner to bring him to faith: but the Goſpel to the beleever, to the begetting and increaſe of faith. Fourthly, the Law ſheweth ſinne, accuſeth and revealeth juſtice without mercy; but the Goſpell covereth ſinne, and is a qualification of the rigour of the Law. The Law ſaith, Curſed is every one, &c. The Goſpel qualifieth that, and ſaith, Except he beleeve and repent, every man is accurſed. Thus the Law (which manifeſteth juſtice) is moderated by the Goſpell, which mingleth mercy & juſtice together: juſtice upon Chriſt, mercy unto us. Fifthly, the Law telleth us what good workes muſt be done: the Goſpell, how they muſt be done: the former declareth the matter of our obedience, the latter directeth us in the manner of obeying: the former is pleaſed with nothing but the deed, the latter ſignifieth that God is pleaſed to accept the will and unfained endevour for the deed it ſelfe. Sixthly, the Law is no worke of grace and ſalvation, no not inſtrumentally, for it is the miniſtery of death; the Goſpell preached worketh grace only, though the Law may be a hammer to breake the heart and prepare the way to faith and repentance.

Obiect. Anſw.

Adverſaries hereof are:

The Papiſts, who hold that they are one doctrine onely, but herein differing, that the Law is more darke, the Gospel more plaine, the former more hard to fulfill, the latter more easie; that is as the root of a tree, this as the body and branches: by which premises they would conclude Christ to bee no Saviour, but an instrument rather for us to save our selves by, he giving us grace to keepe the Law: for a sinner must needs bee saved by workes, if there be no difference betweene the Law and the Gospell, and if the Law which requireth workes were not moderated by the Gospell, which requireth not workes but faith.

12 Ground. The 12 ground is, The Word was made flesh, Joh. 1. 14. This is a maine ground, as in 1 Joh. 4. 3. Every Spirit that doth not confesse that Christ is come in the flesh, that is, every doctrine in which Christ is denied to bee come in the flesh, is not of God, but of Antichrist. Now by [Word] I understand the eternall Sonne of God, the second person in Trinity, the very substantiall word of the Father. It is added [was made] not as though the Sonne of God was turned into flesh, and ceased to be Gods Sonne, but as Heb. 2. 16. in that hee tooke not the seed of Angels, but of Abraham. The meaning then is, that the Sonne of God abiding still the word, tooke (that is) received into his person our nature: Phil. 2. 7. Hee tooke upon him the forme of a servant. The word [flesh] signifieth first, mans nature which Christ tooke unto him, namely, a true nature of man, not phantasticall or apparant onely. Secondly, the whole nature of man, consisting of true and perfect soule and body, with all things that belong to the entire nature of man; for if he had taken mans nature onely in part, hee had redeemed it but in part. Thirdly, the properties of man, in soule, minde, will, affections; in body, bredth, length, circumscription, &c. Fourthly, the infirmities and frailties of mans nature without sinne; where must be noted, that Christ tooke not all infirmities of mans nature, as sinne and corruption, neither every personall infirmity of every person, as blindnesse, gowt, or this and that particular disease. Here by the way it may be asked, whether Christ had oblivion in his agony, as some have thought? To which may bee answered: That even when hee uttered those words [Father, if it be thy will let this cup, &c.] it is not fit to attribute oblivion unto him, which properly is a forgetfulnesse of those things which we are bound to remember, for thus we should draw sinne upon him: but rather to ascribe it to suspending of the memory: which is, when a man neither forgetteth nor remembreth. For as in the will be three things, 1. willing, 2. nilling, 3. suspending of the will, which is neither of the former; so also is it in memory, which remembreth, forgetteth, and suspendeth memory for a time. Now the summe of the whole ground is; That the Sonne of God, the second person, and so abiding, tooke unto him the perfect nature of man, in all things being like unto us, sinne onely excepted. For the further clearing of which, consider these foure conclusions: first, The Sonne of God made man is not two persons distinct, but one alone. Quest. How can this be? for as he is the Sonne of God, hee is a person; and as he is a man, he is a particular person, as every severall man is, and therefore hee is two persons. Quest. Answ. Answ. Every particular man is a person, because he subsisteth of himselfe; but the manhood of Christ subsisteth not in it selfe, but in the second person onely, so that Christ, God, and man is but one person, for even as body and soule make one man, so Godhead and Manhood make but one Christ. Secondly, this one person consisteth of two distinct natures, the Godhead, and the Manhood standing of body and soule. Thirdly, these two natures are united and joyned into one person, for the Godhead doth take the Manhood and support it. Fourthly, these two natures after conjunction remaine distinct, the Godhead is not the manhood, neither on the contrary: but still distinguished, first, in regard of themselves: secondly, of their properties; for the properties of the one are not the properties of the other: thirdly, of their actions: for the actions of the Godhead are not communicated to the Manhood, neither is the worke of one nature the worke of another.

Adversaries hereof are:

First, Heretikes innumerable which are not knowne to all; but knowne enemies are: first, Jewes, who deny Christ to be come in the flesh. Secondly, some Jewish Arrians compounded heretikes, who have withstood Christs incarnation, some of which have suffered amongst us. Thirdly, the Papists, the substance of whose doctrine robbeth Christ of his humane nature, though they confesse him incarnate: for since his death (they teach) his body is become invisible, and in innumerable places at once; so they abolish the Manhood of Christ, and turne it into the Godhead, seeing it is become infinite and uncircumscribed. Object. They alleage, God can make it to bee in many places at once. Answ. Wee must not dispute what God can doe, but what he will doe; so farre as he hath revealed. Secondly, it stands not with the power of God to doe some things, as those which imply contradictions to bee true at the same time. Of which nature this is to make a true body to be in many places at once, yea, to bee in heaven, and also every where on earth.

Papist doctrine denying Christs humanity is of Antichrist. Object. Answ.

But his body is glorified, and therfore may be in many places at once. Object. Answ. Answ. The words [this is my body] were spoken before his glorification. Secondly, glorification taketh away the corruption, but not the true properties of his body, as length, bredth, thicknesse, and circumscription. Object. But things joyned together must bee in the same place, and cannot Object.

not be severed; and therefore his Manhood being joyned to his Godhead, must needs be every where. Answ. The antecedent is false; for things joyned together may be the one in one place, the other in another; as the body of the Sunne is joyned with his beames, and light, and yet the body of the Sunne is in heaven, but the beames and light in the earth also.

13. Ground. The 13. ground is, that Iesus is Christ. 1 Joh. 2. 22. Who is a liar but hee that denieth that Iesus is Christ, the same is the Antichrist: From which place wee may gather two things: First, That Jesus is Christ. Secondly, That it is a ground susteyning our whole salvation. For whosoever denyeth it, is Antichrist: see 1 Cor. 3. 10. The meaning of the ground: by Christ I understand the annointed Saviour and Redeemer; who is a King, Priest, and Prophet. First, as he is a King, his power manifesteth it selfe in three things; First, in saving and destroying not the body onely as other Kings, but the soule also. Secondly, in pardoning sinnes or retaining them. Thirdly, in making lawes to bind consciences. Secondly, his Priestly office standeth in two things: First, in a power to offer sacrifice propitiatorie for the sinnes of whole mankind. Secondly, in making intercession to God for mankind. Thirdly, his Propheticall office consisteth in three things: First, in revealing to man the will of his Father. Secondly, in enlightning of the minde to understand that will revealed. Thirdly, in framing of the heart to performe obedience unto it, together with the setling of it in the truth. Thus he is the Christ, that is, the annointed of God.

But we must yet here goe further and understand by Christ a perfect Christ, a perfect Redeemer, without any partner, fellow, or deputy: for if he have a partner, he is but halfe a redeemer, and if hee have a fellow or deputy, how is he omnipotent, or omnipresent? This is plaine by testimony of Scripture; There is none other name, Acts 4. 12. therefore there is no fellow or partner. There is one Mediatour, that is, but one, 1 Tim. 2. 3. yea, by himselfe he purged our sinnes, Heb. 1. 3. without fellow or deputy: whose Priesthood is such as cannot passe from himselfe to another, Heb. 7. 24. Object. But Ministers have power to remit and retaine sin, having the keyes given them. Ans. The keyes are not given to Ministers to pardon men properly, but ministerially to pronounce and declare that God in heaven doth pardon them. Object. The Saints shall judge the world, and therefore not Christ only. Ans. They shall not judge by pronouncing a soveraigne sentence of absolution or condamnation, which is proper to Christ the Judge; but by assisting him (as Justices upon the bench) both by witnessing and assenting unto that righteous judgement. Object. Psal. 45. 7. He is annointed with oyle of gladnesse above his fellowes: therefore hee hath fellowes. Answ. All that beleeve in Christ are the fellowes of Christ: but in his annointing, that is, in grace, though not in office. Object. But Ministers are Christs deputies. Ans. Ministers are properly no deputies, but instruments to declare the will of God, and can goe no further than to teach the eare; for it is Christ himselfe that enlightneth the minde. But it will bee said that Kings are Christs deputies on earth. Answer. They are his deputies as he is God equall to his Father, not as hee is Mediatour.

Adversaries of this maine ground are,

The Romish Church, who rob Christ of all these three offices. For first, his kingly office they give part of it to the Pope, in making him to remit sins properly; to make lawes to bind conscience properly, as Gods lawes doe, which is a power equall to Christs, and so they make him check-mate with Christ. Secondly, his Priestly office is given to the Masse-priest, who by their doctrine hath power to offer a propitiatory sacrifice for the sinnes of the quicke and dead; yea, every Papist hath a peece of it, because every one of them may satisfie the justice of God for his sinnes by his owne merit. And for his intercession, the second worke of his Priesthood, that is dealt among the Saints, (among whom the Virgin Mary hath the greatest part) who are invocated as intercessors, not onely by their prayers, but by their merits in heaven. Thirdly, his Propheticall office is bestowed likewise upon every Pope, who is without Scripture to determine infallibly, by an inward assistance of the Spirit, locked up in his breast, of all matters concerning faith and manners, which is the proper office of him who is the proper Doctor of his Church. Therefore this Romish doctrine established by the Councel of Trent, is an hereticall and Antichristian doctrine, making God an Idol-god, which is concluded out of this place alleaged, thus; He that denieth Iesus to be Christ, is Antichrist. And againe, He that hath not the Sonne, hath not the Father. But the Romish Church deny Jesus to be Christ, and hath not the Sonne because it overturneth his person, and oppugneth all his offices: and therefore neither have they the Father, but an Idol-god, and consequently their doctrine is Antichristian and hereticall. For which cause the reformed Churches have justly separated from them, and ought ever so long as they deny this ground, so to doe.

Papists worse than the souldiers in parting Christs garments.

The Romish Church deny Iesus to be Christ.

14 Ground. The 14 ground is: Hee that beleeveth in Christ shall not perish, but have life everlasting. Joh. 3. 16. God so loved the world, &c. For the better handling of it, consider, first, for the meaning, what this faith is. Secondly, that it is a maine ground of true religion. Thirdly, the enemies of it. For the first: In this faith are two things: first, knowledge. Secondly, application of the thing known. The knowledge is of Christ and his benefits, of which some measure must be had, had, or else there can be no faith. Esay 53.11. By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justifie many. Joh.17.3. This is life eternall, &c. And this stands with reason, that the thing to be beleeved must first be knowne: for faith without knowledge is fancie. The Roman Church hath then erred, which teach that there is a faith to salvation whereto knowledge is not required, such an one that standeth only in an assent to the faith of the Church. The second thing in faith (which is the more principall) is an application of things knowne: namely, of Christ and his benefits unto our selves in particular. And herein standeth the very substance of true faith, which is not caused by any naturall affection of heart, or action of will, but by the supernaturall action of the minde enlightned by the Spirit of God, resolving us that Christ and his merits belong unto us in particular. That this true particular application is required in true faith, is proved by these reasons: First, that which we lawfully aske by prayer, wee must beleeve by a speciall faith: but in prayer we lawfully aske the pardon of our sinnes in particular, and life everlasting by Christ; therfore we must beleeve the pardon of our sinnes and life everlasting by Christ. The adversaries can deny nothing but the first part of this reason, which is the very word of God it selfe. Mark. 11. 24. Whatsoever ye desire when you pray, beleeve yee shall have it, and it shall be done unto you. Where in every petition of praier our Saviour requireth two things: first, a desire of things promised. Secondly, a particular faith of things desired standing in assurance, for they shall be granted. Secondly, whatsoever the holy Ghost doth infallibly testifie to us particularly, that we must beleeve particularly: but the holy Ghost doth particularly testifie by infallible testimony to every beleevers conscience, his owne adoption and pardon of sinne, and acceptance to life everlasting; and therefore it must particularly be beleeved. Here the Papist excepteth and saith; that this testimony of the Spirit of God, is not certaine, but probable onely, and a man may be deceived in it. But the Apostle, Rom. 8. 16. answereth this allegation, The Spirit of God testifieth with our spirits that wee are the children of God; and cleareth this testimony of fearefulnesse and weaknesse in the former words: where he saith, it is not the spirit of feare which we have received, but such a spirit as maketh vs cry Abba, Father, and with a strong voice: yea, and for the further assuring us in this testimony, it is called the seale and earnest penny of the Spirit in our hearts: than which things what are more sure and certaine ratifications among men, whose testimony, (though it be but of two men, but much more of three) seale, or earnest, if it bee sufficient confirmation unto men, how much more sure is the testimony, seale, and earnest of the Spirit of God unto us? Thirdly, that which God offereth and giveth us particularly, we must particularly receive: but God offereth and giveth us Christ and all his benefits particularly in the Word and Sacraments, and therfore we must have particular faith to receive him. It will here be said, we grant all this, we must receive Christ and his benefits in speciall; but we doe it by hope; as the Papists teach to hope well. Anſ. It is a worke of faith alone: Joh. 1.12. As many as received him, &c. Who were they? The next words shew, even they that beleeved on his name. Againe, in the Sacrament of the Supper, Christ is offered as the bread and water of life to every one in particular: and therefore every beleever must have something in his soule proportionall to a hand and mouth, for the receiving and feeding upon him; which is nothing else but faith specially applying Christ and his benefits: see Joh. 6.35. Fourthly, the example of beleevers in the Scriptures prove the same truth. Abraham beleeved by a particular faith, which was imputed to him for righteousnesse, Rom. 4.23. So also Paul, Gal. 2.20. I live by the faith of the sonne of God, who loved me, and hath given himselfe for mee. Now both these are patternes and presidents for us to follow, that as they beleeved, and particularly applied Christ to themselves, so must wee: see Rom. 4.14. 1 Timoth. 1.16. Now from these two, namely, knowledge and application, followeth Confidence, whereby we trust and rely our selves upon Christ and his merits thus knowne and applied unto salvation; which because it inseparably followeth faith, is often in the Scripture put for faith it selfe: I distinguish it from faith, because it hath beene said (though falsely) that it is a part of faith, which indeed is a fruit and follower of faith: and the Apostle, Ephes. 3. 12. doth manifestly distinguish them: By whom we have boldnesse and entrance with confidence by faith in him.

The second point in this ground, is the weight of it. That it is a maine ground of Religion, appeareth thus; If the inheritance of life (saith Paul) be not of faith, it is not sure, Rom. 4.15. For if we were entitled by workes, the promise should not be certaine: he then that oppugneth this ground of particular faith, overthroweth the Gospell, as which cannot assure a man of salvation. Secondly, in the Catechisme of the Primitive Church, faith in God is made one ground, Heb. 6.1. Thirdly, this ground being the most maine promise of the Gospell, whosoever overthroweth it, hee depriveth men of all comfort of religion.

The adversaries of this ground are, first, the common people, who for the most part professe that they are not certaine of the pardon of their sinnes; they hope well, because God is mercifull; but to be certaine they thinke it impossible: as though there can be hope and confidence where is no assurance: but speciall hope alwayes presupposeth speciall faith. Secondly, the Papists, for they condemne speciall faith for these reasons: First, where is no word, there (say they) can be no particular faith: but there is no word that saith, thou Cornelius, Peter, Iohn, &c. shalt ſhalt be ſaved. Anſ. It is true indeed, there is no particular faith where there is no particular word, or which is proportionall: but the Miniſter truly applying the generall promiſe to this and that particular man, it is as much as if a mans name were regiſtred in the Scripture. Secondly, we have in ſubſtance a particular word, in that God who hath given the promiſe hath given alſo a commandement, to every beleever to apply the ſame unto himſelfe; 1 Joh. 2. 23. This is his commandement, that wee beleeve in the name of his ſonne Ieſus Chriſt, which is equivalent to a particular word. As a King gives a pardon to a thouſand men, but nameth never an one of them: yet every of them truly applying the pardon, according to the Kings intention, have the benefit of it, as ſurely as if all their names had beene ſet therein.

Object. II. Object. Many that apply the generall promiſe to themſelves, are deceived and faile; yea, every wicked man ſaith, he beleeveth in the ſonne of God, wherein he is deceived.

Anſw. Anſ. Many indeed faile in their ſpeciall application, but it is only unbeleevers; but they muſt prove that none truly can apply the promiſe ſpecially, which all true beleevers doe.

Object. III. Object. They ſay: In regard of God we muſt beleeve, but in regard of our ſelves wee muſt doubt.

Anſw. Anſ. Yea, in regard of our ſelves we muſt not onely doubt but deſpaire: yet beleevers being found not in themſelves but in Chriſt, may prove themſelves whether they be in the faith or no, 2 Cor. 13. 5. For whoſoever repenteth, knoweth that he doth repent: We know wee are of God, 1 Joh. 5. 19. Object. But all men in the world are full of doubting, and how can doubting ſtand with the certainty of ſalvation? Anſ. Conſider faith firſt, as it is in it ſelfe; ſo it is certaine. Secondly, as it is in us, and ſo it is mingled with much doubting, which is not of the nature of faith, but contrary unto it; and yet theſe may and muſt ſtand together in the beleever, for doubtings may diſturbe, but not deſtroy true faith: for the Lord (notwithſtanding them) accepteth our weake faith as perfect, and our will to beleeve for beleefe it ſelfe, where hee ſeeth griefe conceived for doubtings, ſtrife againſt them, and endevour to have our faith increaſed. Object. But to beleeve pardon for our ſinnes is to enter into Gods counſell. Anſ. That is falſe, becauſe pardon of our ſinnes is revealed. Ob. But your Church (ſay they) abhorreth revelation. Anſ. Neither the Scripture, nor our Church condemneth Revelations contained in Scripture, but thoſe that are without, beſide, or againſt Scripture: Epheſ. 1. 7. The Spirit is called the Spirit of Revelation: ſee alſo 1 Cor. 2. 12. As for this revelation of pardon of ſinne to the beleever, it is contained in the Scripture, and is no more a prying into Gods counſell, than it is for a Traytor to beleeve that hee is pardoned when certaine newes of his pardon is brought unto him from the King, of whom none can ſay hee entreth into the Kings counſell. Hence wee conclude, that ſeeing the doctrine of the Papiſts overthroweth this maine ground, we muſt take heed of joyning our ſelves unto them.

Object. Anſw. Object. Anſw.

15 Ground. The 15 ground is: That a ſinner is juſtified by faith, without the works of the Law, Rom. 3. 28. Wherein conſider firſt the meaning; ſecondly, the weight; thirdly, the adverſaries. For the meaning, three things muſt be knowne: Firſt, what it is to be juſtified. Secondly, what it is to be juſtified by faith. Thirdly, what workes are to be excluded from juſtification. Concerning the firſt. In juſtification there be three diſtinct actions of God; firſt, the freeing of a ſinner from his ſinnes for the merits of Chriſt: Act. 13. 39. From all things, from which they could not be juſtified by the Law of Moſes, by him every one that beleeveth is juſtified: that is, acquited from them. Paul oppoſeth it thus to condemnation, Rom. 8. 33. which is nothing elſe, but a binding of a man to juſt puniſhment. The ſecond action is, the reputing and the accepting of a ſinner as juſt for the merit of Chriſt. Eſay 5. 22. Woe unto him that juſtifieth a wicked man: that is, not to make but accept him as juſt; and in the Goſpell, Wiſdome is juſtified of her children, that is, approved and acknowledged. The third is, the acceptation of a ſinner to life everlaſting in Chriſt. For after that God hath abſolved a ſinner, and reputed him as juſt; there muſt follow this acceptation to life, which is therefore called the juſtification of life, with the reaſon rendred in the ſame place: for that like as Adams ſinne is imputed unto all, by which death entred; ſo Chriſts obedience imputed to beleevers, bringeth life and juſtification. Out of which three actions wee may gather a true deſcription of juſtification, to wit, It is an action of God the Father, abſolving a ſinner from his ſinnes, for the merit of Chriſt, accounting him as juſt, and accepting him to life everlaſting. Rom. 5. 18.

Object. Anſw. Object. Anſw.

II. Point. What it is to be juſtified by faith. For the cleere underſtanding of this weighty point, we muſt anſwer two queſtions: Firſt, what is the very thing for which a ſinner is juſtified? Anſ. It is the obedience of Chriſt the Redeemer and Mediatour, paſſive and active: the former ſtanding in ſuffering the death of his body, and the paines of the ſecond death in his ſoule; the latter, in fulfilling the Law. The truth of this anſwer appeareth thus: Since our fall wee owe to God a double debt: we breake the law, and thereby are bound to make ſatisfaction. Secondly, being creatures we muſt fulfill the rigour of the law, and performe what it requireth: neither parcell of which debt ſeeing wee (being bankerupts) are able to pay, we flie to our ſurety who muſt pay both for us: the former hee doth by his death, being made a curſe for us, and ſo redeemed us from the curſe, Galat. 3. 13. the latter by perfect obedience unto the law: that ſo in him, wee doing theſe things, might live in them, verſ. 12. The ſecond queſtion is: Seeing the obedience of Chriſt is the matter of our justification, and is out of our selves; how commeth it to be made ours? Ans. To make it ours, first, God must give it us: secondly, we must receive it. First, God giveth it unto us, when he giveth us Christ himselfe: for it is given with him, and it is made ours, when God in mercy esteemeth, judgeth, and accounteth it to be ours, for it is ours by imputation: which appeareth by these two reasons: First, as Christ is made our sinne, so we are made his righteousnesse, 2 Cor. 5. 21. but he is made our sinne by imputation, and therfore his justice being inherent in him, is made ours by imputation. Secondly, as the first Adams disobedience is made ours, so Christs the second Adams obedience is ours, Rom. 5. 17, 18. but that is ours by imputation, and therefore Christs obedience also. Secondly, to make this obedience ours we must receive it, and that can be only by faith, which is the hand of the soule receiving into it the things that are given us of God: where note by the way, that a sinner is not justified by the dignity of his faith, but as it is an instrument whereby Christs obedience is applied unto the soule.

Note.

III. Point. What works are excluded from justification. Ans. The works of the Morall and Ceremoniall law, workes of nature and grace. That even workes of grace are excluded, appeareth by these reasons: First, a sinner must so be justified, that al cause of boasting may be cut off, Rom. 3. 27. But if a man were justified by works of grace he might boast still, yea though he acknowledge the workes to be of God: see the Pharisies example, Luk. 18. Secondly, if a man were justified by the workes of the law, then our justification should stand by the law; but that it doth not, Rom. 4. 14. for then the promise were made void; yea, the tenour of the whole Chapter proveth, that Abraham having store of good workes, was yet justified by faith without the workes of the Law; the which thing also that objection in chap. 6. 1. witnesseth: What then, shall we continue in sinne? drawne out of the five former chapters thus: If a man may be justified by faith without works, we may continue in sinne; which objection were no objection, if that had not beene the intent of the Apostle, to prove justification by faith onely, without the workes of the Law. Thirdly, Paul was not justified by any workes: 1 Cor. 4. 3. I know nothing by my selfe, yet am I not thereby justified; where he noteth two things of himselfe; first, that he had a good conscience within him: secondly, that he was not thereby justified, where he debarreth all works of grace. Fourthly, we are saved by grace without works: these workes excluded are workes of grace, for they are all such as God hath prepared to walke in, Ephes. 2. 8. Fifthly, a man must first be justified before he can doe a good worke: and therefore works follow justification, and cannot cause it. Yea, and as all works are excluded, so all vertues also excepting faith are here rejected. For as in a man that standeth to receive a gift, no part doth any thing to receive it but the hand, yet having received it, all other parts testifie thankfulnesse, the tongue, the feet, and all the bodie: even so we receive the matter of our justification by faith alone, not by hope, or love; but after the receiving of Christ, these with the other graces worke and shew themselves.

The second point in this ground is the weight of it, appearing herein that he that overthroweth it, overturneth the faith: Rom. 4. 14. If they of the Law be heires of life, faith is made void, and the promise of none effect. And Gal. 2. 21. If we be justified by workes, Christ died in vaine.

Adversaries hereof. First, the home-adversarie is the common sort of ignorant people, and all naturall men, who with the young man say, What shall I doe to be saved? They say they will be saved by faith in Christ, but when it commeth to the point, they will bee doing somewhat, and stand much upon their good meaning and righteous dealing. Secondly, the forren enemy is the Popish doctrine and Romish religion, which teacheth that there be two justifications: First, when a man of an evill man is made a good man; this is by grace of the holy Ghost put into the heart: the latter is whereby a man is made of good, better, which is by good works. But what Church soever holdeth this, is fallen from grace. This is a peremptory sentence, (will some say) and no generall Councell hath so determined. Ans. The more is the pitty. But Gods word hath peremptorily determined it, Gal. 5. 4. They are abolished from Christ, and fallen from grace, whosoever will be justified by the law, as the Roman Church at this day. They say our doctrine maintaineth loosenesse of life, by excluding all works from justification. Ans. Though we exclude the best workes from justification, yet wee debarre them not from Christian conversation, but therein require them as fruits of the spirit plentifully. Ob. But it is absurd (say they) that one man may be justified by the righteousnesse of another. Answ. Adams sinne is made ours, and they marvell not at it; what greater absurdity is it, that the second Adams obedience, answering to the first Adams sinne, should bee ours in like manner.

The 16. ground is this: Except a man be borne anew, of water and of the holy Ghost, hee cannot enter into the kingdome of God, Joh. 3. 5. In which observe first the meaning, secondly, the weight; thirdly, the adversaries. In the first consider two points: first, what it is to be borne againe: secondly, of what necessity it is. For the former, wee must know, that there must bee in him that is borne againe three things: first a reall change from one to another. Secondly, there must be a root from whence this change may arise. Thirdly, a new life. First, the change is, when a man of a meere naturall man is made a new new man, not in regard of his body or soule, or powers of them, all which a man retaineth the same after regeneration, but in regard of Gods Image restored and renued by Christ, Eph. 4. 24. This is the restoring of that new quality of righteousnesse and holinesse lost in Adam, for so the Apostle describeth this new birth in the place alleaged. This change is attributed to water and the holy Ghost, wherein [by water] our Saviour alludeth to some speeches of the old Testament; as Ezek. 36. 25. where the Prophet speaketh of the cleansing of the Church, by powring cleane water upon it: that is, infusing new graces into the heart, which take place of the old corruption. And by the holy Ghost he sheweth that this cleansing of us is by the inward working of the holy Ghost.

Object. But it will be said, if a man bee a new man, he must have a new soule. Answ. This new quality of righteousnesse is as it were a new soule, for in a regenerate man there is a body and soule, besides the spirit, which is the grace of sanctification opposed to flesh, and corruption of nature, Rom. 8. 10. This is as it were the soule of a soule renued.

Secondly, that a man may come to this estate, there must be some root and beginning whence this change must arise, and that is no other than Christ crucified, the Redeemer and Mediatour, of whose body beleevers are members, of his flesh, and of his bones, Ephes. 5. 30. for looke as Eve was made of the side of Adam, so is every beleever of the bloud of Christ, and as every man, so farre as hee is a sinfull man, springeth from the first Adam, so doth every man so farre as hee is renued, spring from the second Adam Christ Iesus. Now that a man may spring out of Christ, hee must first (being taken out of the wilde Olive, the old Adam, Rom. 6. 5.) beset and ingrafted into the second Adam as a new stocke, and that by faith wrought in the heart by the Spirit of God: by which incision hee receiveth from Christ two things: first, in regard of his soule, holinesse: secondly, in regard of body, incorruption, seeing that the whole man is united unto Christ, and so both soule and body receive immortality and glory.

Thirdly, in this new birth there must bee a new life, by which if any live not, hee is not borne againe: for the distinct knowledge of which life, we must distinguish of life: life is uncreated and created: uncreated life is the life of God, yea God himselfe, of which kinde this is not. Created life is either naturall or spirituall: Naturall is that which wee live by naturall meanes, as meat, drinke, sleepe, physicke, &c. of which kinde this new life is not: but this is that spirituall life, whereby a man in this life is ruled by the Spirit of God according to the Word: and it standeth in two things: First, when the Spirit dwelleth in the heart: Secondly, when the Spirit ruleth the heart: or more plainly, this life hath two degrees: First, when a man beginneth to savour, affect, and will spirituall things, loveth them, and chiefly affecteth them, Rom. 8. 5. when they have some savour and relish unto him. Secondly, when a man in all estates liveth by a justifying faith, and ordereth his life thereby. The just man (saith Habakuk) liveth by faith, and this is, as it is truly called, life eternall; the beginning and first degree of which every beleever hath possession of, even in this life.

The second point in this ground is the weight of it; for which observe the necessitie of the new birth in the former words, where it is said, that without it a man shall never see the Kingdome of God, much lesse enter into it. No man is in Christ (and so consequently out of the state of salvation) who is not a new creature, 2 Cor. 5. 17. No outward prerogative can bring a man in request with God, unlesse he be a new creature, Gal. 6. 15. It is a constant truth of Christ, John 13. 8. If I wash thee not, thou hast no part in me.

The third point is, The Adversaries: who are first, every man by nature, the wisdome of whom herein is enmitie with God. For every one naturally is willing to yeeld unto God some externall service and ceremoniall worship, as if the Church to draw neere to God with their lips: but when they should come to their renuing, and the mortifying of their lusts, O then they storme and swell, and cast off this yoke, because they say it abridgeth them of their ease, liberty, and pleasure, and they cannot be their owne men for it. Secondly, the Roman religion which for many hundred yeares hath stood in ceremoniall & bodily actions, rites, gestures, apparell, and most of all in outward penance, borrowed partly of the Jewes, and partly of the Heathens: but all this doctrine of the new birth, of mortifying hidden lusts, and denyall of a mans selfe, is dead and buried among them: little hereof is spoken or written in the great volumes of their greatest Clerkes. But the doctrine which is from God is spirituall, as God himselfe is, and most concerneth the inner man. Secondly, they are great adversaries hereof in teaching, that man (though captive to sinne) hath a power in his nature, whereby if the holy Ghost free him, hee can of himselfe will and doe that which is good: which if it were so, then hee is but in part new, and so is no new man. Secondly, a regenerate man must be a new creature: now creation is a framing of something out of nothing, not of something into something. Thirdly, thus a man should be but halfe dead, and so could not be borne again, but onely strengthned, even as a man in a swoune, of whom wee cannot say properly hee is revived, because he was not dead, but recovered.

Adversaries.

Roman religion leadeth not to the new birth, and therefore goes not to Heaven.

The 17. ground is out of Gal. 5. 1. Stand fast in the libertie wherewith Christ hath made you free. For the meaning of which wee must know, that Christian liberty which we are exhorted to maintaine, standeth in a double free-dome:

dome: First, from the morall Law: secondly, from the Ceremoniall. From the Morall Law two waies: first, from the curse of the Law, Rom. 8.1. There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ: Secondly, from the rigour of it, which requireth personall and perfect obedience: this rigour is moderated by Christ, whence followeth a freedom from justification by workes, Rom. 5.1. Gal. 5.4. The second freedome is from the Ceremoniall Law, which having an end put to it by Christ, bindeth no man: but our liberty is procured to us in meats, drinkes, and all things indifferent with good conscience, seeing to the pure all things are pure, Tit. 1.15. Where we are commanded to stand fast: we see the weight of it to be such as may not be departed from nor forsaken: forthen we become debters againe to the whole Law, and so are fallen from Christ.

Adversaries.

Adversaries hereof, are first the Libertines; as the Family of love, who being (as they say) deified, are so carried by the holy Ghost, that they cannot sinne, no though they should commit fornication: but no man is freed from obedience to the Law by Christ, although he be from the curse and rigour of it. Secondly, all that take liberty to sinne, because they say, God in Christ is mercifull: but Christ freed from sin, not unto it. Thirdly, the Roman Church, holding that the Pope hath power to make Lawes binding conscience properly, prescribing such things to be done, the observing of which is the worship of God, and meritorious; as on the Popish fasting daies, yea, and Wednesdaies and Fridayes, not to eat flesh, even this Law bindeth the conscience of a Papist: and such abstinence (say they) is a worke of merit, and a worship of God. But it will bee said, that Princes and Magistrates make such Lawes of meats, drinkes, apparell, and must be obeyed. Anſ. These lawes binde not conscience, but the outward man. Secondly, they doe not abrogate our liberty, but moderateth the over-common use for the common good: but Popish doctrine accounteth the breach of any of these mortall sinne. Ob. Yea, but they forbid flesh for temperance sake, because it stirreth up lust. Anſ. But they forbid not the hottest wines, spices, Conserves, and such meats and drinkes, which more stirre up lust than flesh; and therefore this is but a shift.

Popery maketh moe sinnes than ever God made.

18 Ground.

The 18. ground is in Matth. 18. 18. Whatsoever the Church bindeth in earth, is bound in Heaven; and whatsoever it looseth in earth, is loosed in Heaven. In which ground observe first, the meaning; secondly, the moment; thirdly, the adversaries. First, to know the meaning, two things are to bee handled: first, what is this power of binding & loosing, which the Church hath. Secondly, what is the ratification and efficacy of this power out of these words, is bound and loosed in heaven. Concerning the former: This power of binding and loosing, is that authority given by God to his Church on earth, whereby it pardoneth or retaineth unpardoned the sinnes of men: for mens sinnes are cords and bands which bind them, Prov. 5.22. and chaines of blacke darkenesse, wherein men are reserved unto damnation, 2 Pet. 2.4. and hence fitly when mens sinnes are pardoned, are they said to bee loosed, and bound if they bee not. This power is called Matth. 16. the power of the keyes of the kingdome of heaven: for mens sins are as locks, yea, bars and bolts, shutting upon them the doores of Heaven: and hence also when the Church pardoneth sinnes, the doores of Heaven are said to bee opened; and when it retaineth them, heaven is shut against the sinner. Indeed pardon of sinne is properly granted and given by God; but yet men are truly said to pardon and retaine sinne, when ministerially they pronounce that God pardoneth or doth not pardon. Ob. It will be said, that men upon earth know not whose sinnes God will pardon, and whose he will not. Anſw. It is possible for man to know whose sinnes God will pardon, and whose he will not: for God hath generally made known that he will remit the sinnes of all beleevers and repentant sinners, but will retaine their sinnes who goe on in the same. Now we may know particularly who these bee that doe repent and beleeve; for the tree is knowne by the fruit, according unto which the Church may pronounce a true sentence. Further, to know more distinctly what this power is, the parts of it are to be considered, and they be two: for it standeth partly in the ministery of the Word, and partly in the jurisdiction of the Church upon earth. The ministery of the Word is either publike or private. First, the publike ministery of the Word is called the preaching of it; in which is this binding and loosing, opening and shutting, it being an ordinance of God, in which Ministers are called of God to pronounce in the Name of God pardon of sinne to the penitent, and condemnation to the obstinate: and here must be noted, that this binding and loosing, in the publike Ministery, is generall unto all, but with exception of faith and repentance. Ob. But seeing it is generall, it is of no great force. Anſ. It is: for every hearer must apply this generall doctrine to his owne person, and say with the Virgin Mary, applying to herselfe the Angels speech, Be it unto mee according to thy Word; this maketh it forcible in the conscience. The private Ministery standeth in two things: first, private admonition: secondly, private comfort. Private admonition is Gods ordinance, whereby the Minister in Gods Name bindeth a man to judgement for his sinne, except hee repent: thus Peter dealt with Simon Magus, Act. 8.21,22. Private comfort is, when upon true repentance the Minister pronounceth upon the beleever pardon of sinne without condition. Thus dealt Nathan with David, 2 Sam. 12.22. David said, I have sinned; Nathan hereupon telleth him, his sins are forgiven. Secondly, concerning the Iurisdiction of the Church: It is

Object.

is a power given of God to the Church, whereby it uſeth correction upon open ſinners for their ſalvation; and it ſtandeth in excommunication and abſolution. Excommunication is a ſentence excluding open and obſtinate ſinners out of the Kingdome of God, and conſequently from the ſocietie of the Church: for this followes the former, If hee will not heare the Church, let him bee an Heathen. Paul calleth this ſentence a giving up of man unto Satan.

Object. Ob. But no man can exclude another from the Kingdome of God.
Anſw. Anſ. The Church excludeth not properly, but by declaring that God hath excluded ſuch. Ob. But the true childe of God may be excommunicated, and yet is not ſhut out of Heaven. Anſ. In ſome ſort and for a time he may be ſaid to be ſhut out of Heaven, but conditionally & untill repentance. The contrary hereof is publike abſolution, when open ſinners repenting, are by the Church openly declared to be members of the Kingdom of Heaven, and ſo admitted & received againe into the Church. This power of the Church differeth from the power of the civill Magiſtrate in foure things: Firſt, the power of the Church is ordered only by the Word, but civill power by other civill Lawes alſo. Secondly, the former correcteth only by voice, in admonition, ſuſpenſion, & excommunication; the latter by reall and bodily puniſhments. Thirdly, all ſpirituall correction, as excommunication it ſelfe, ſtandeth at the repentance of a ſinner, and proceedeth no further: but the puniſhments of civill power ſtay not at repentance, but proceed on even to the death of the malefactor, (notwithſtanding his repentance) if he be a man of death. Fourthly, in the civill power bee three degrees of proceeding: firſt, the knowledge of the cauſe. Secondly, the giving of the ſentence. Thirdly, the execution of the puniſhment. In Eccleſiaſticall are the two former, but the laſt belongeth to God alone.

The ſecond thing in the meaning is, to know what the ratification of this power is: namely, to be bound and looſed in Heaven; that is, when the Churches judgement following the judgement of God, doth acquite, or condemne a ſinner, God in Heaven hath done it already and ratifieth it. For in abſolution (as alſo in the other) pardon of ſinne is firſt given in Heaven: ſecondly, the Church pronounceth this according to Gods will: and thirdly, God ratifieth it thereupon in Heaven, and confirmeth it as ſure as if on earth he had pronounced the pardon.

The ſecond point. The weight of this ground may appeare, Matth. 16. 18. where the maine promiſe of the Goſpell for the ſtabliſhment of the Church is contained: Vpon this rocke I will build my Church, and the gates of hell ſhall not prevaile againſt it: and the ground of our aſſurance thereof, is added verſ. 19. I will give thee the keyes of the Kingdom. This maketh the Church prevaile againſt the gates of Hell, becauſe it openeth and ſhutteth Heaven. Secondly, hereby the Word and Sacraments are preſerved from pollution and prophanation, the ſoules of men pulled out of the ſnares of the devill, and Gods Kingdome ſet open unto them: which being taken away, there will bee no difference left betweene the Kingdome of God and the kingdome of the Devill. Which power of the keies in opening and ſhutting Heaven by the miniſtery of the Word, ſeeing we have eſtabliſhed by the Lawes of the land, wee have the ſtate of a true Church, and therefore no man can in good conſcience ſeparate from us as no Church and people of God: indeed, if it had not the power to open Heaven unto men, it were time to ſeparate from it.

3 The adverſaries of this ground are firſt the ignorant people, who Popiſhly thinke that this power is onely given to Peter, whoſe office is to open and ſhut Heaven. But this power was given to all the Apoſtles as well as Peter, and in them to all Miniſters, Churches, and Congregations: yea, and it is not exerciſed in Heaven but in earth. Secondly, all Atheiſts and Epicures that contemne and ſcorne the Word, Sacraments, and all holy things, yea, even the power of the Church it ſelfe. Thirdly, all Papiſts and the Romiſh religion, who aboliſh all binding and looſing in the publike Miniſtery, and have brought all to a private ſhrift and abſolution, which in truth is nothing elſe but a racke and a gibbet to the conſcience: for firſt, men muſt ſeeke for it at the hands of the Prieſt: ſecondly, they muſt confeſſe all their ſinnes to the Prieſt: thirdly, they muſt make ſatisfaction to the juſtice of God, even ſuch as the Prieſt ſhall injoyne them. But all this is directly contrary to the Word: for firſt, Miniſters muſt offer pardon of ſin before it be ſought for. Secondly, in Chriſt pardon is offered freely, wee need no ſatisfaction of our owne. Thirdly, they impoſe a heavier yoke than ever Chriſt or his Apoſtles did upon men, when they injoyne them to an enumeration of all their ſinnes before they can be pardoned: the depth of which policie hath beene founded. Secondly, that Religion hath turned this power Eccleſiaſticall to a Civill power, whereby they take upon them to excommunicate Kings and Emperours, not onely out of the Church, but alſo out of their Kingdomes and Empires, whom (they ſay) they may ſet up and depoſe at their pleaſure, as having power to wreſt the Scepter out of the hands of whatſoever Monarch ſhall not ſtoope under their Popes authority. Theſe be the maine enemies of this ground, againſt whom we muſt for ever contend.

In ſtead of the two keyes, Popery hath deviſed the pick-locke of Shrift.

That nothing the Pope ſhould bee unlike the Devill, he ſaith with him, All theſe are mine, and I give them to whom I will.

The 19. ground of faith is, There is, hath beene, and ever ſhall be a Church out of which is no ſalvation. This is an Article of our faith, and a maine ground of Religion: for if there bee not ever a Church of God, Chriſt is ſometime no Redeemer, no King, becauſe there ſhould be no people redeemed, nor ſubject to the rule of his Word and Spirit. Of which conſider two things: firſt, what this Church is: ſecondly, who who be the adversaries of this ground. For the first: The Church is a company of men chosen to salvation, called, united to Christ, and admitted into everlasting fellowship with him. See Heb. 12.23. and 1 Pet. 2.9. Compare these two places, and this description will easily be gathered. The properties of this Church are these six which follow: First, being the Spouse of Christ, shee is one onely indeed, although distinguished in regard of time, as the Church of the old Testament and of the new. Secondly, of place, as of England, Scotland, &c. Thirdly, of condition, as the Militant and Triumphant: all these make but one body of Christ. Secondly, it is invisible, not to bee seene but beleeved: for election, vocation, redemption, can onely bee beleeved; yet some parts of it are visible, as in the right use of the Word and Sacraments appeareth. Thirdly, to this assembly and no other belong all the promises of this life; and the life to come, especially forgivenesse of sinnes and life everlasting. Fourthly, it consisteth onely of living members, quickned by the Spirit of Christ, not of any hypocrites or wicked persons. Fifthly, no member of it can be severed or cut off from Christ, but abide in him and with him for ever. Sixthly, it is the ground and pillar of truth; that is, the doctrine of true Religion is alwaies safely kept and maintained in it. Ob. The Churches in earth are true Churches, and yet in these are many hypocrites and Apostates, who fall from their profession. And therefore all are not living members. Ans. In visible Churches are two sorts of men: Just men, and Hypocrites; who although they be within the Church, yet the Church is not so called of them, but in regard of them only who are truly joyned unto Christ, who are the better part, although not the greater: Even as a heape of wheat and chaffe together is called an heape of wheat, or a corne heape, of the better part.

Six properties of the Church.

Adversaries.

Adversaries hereof are Papists, who frame not the Church by these true properties, but by other deceitfull markes, as succession, multitude, antiquitie, and consent; for when the Church first beganne, there could bee none of those, at least not the three former, and yet was there a true Church. Secondly, all these agree to Heretikes, as among the Jewes what was more challenged than these? and yet Christ saith, they were blinde leaders of the blinde. But the true marke is the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles truly taught and beleeved. A note of Christs sheepe is the hearing of his voice, Joh. 10.27. And, Ye are in the Father and the Son, if ye abide in the word which yee have heard from the beginning. 1 Joh. 2.24. See Ephes. 2.20.

Papists here take their markes amisse.

The 10. ground is: That there shall bee a resurrection of the dead in the end of the world. This was one of the six grounds of Catechisme in the daies of the Apostles: Heb. 6.12. Hymeneus and Philetus destroyed the faith of certaine, in teaching that the Resurrection was already past.

A

Adversaries hereof are the Family of love, who hold that there is no Resurrection but onely in this life.

Adversaries.

The last ground of doctrine is: There shall be a generall judgement of all flesh. It is one of the grounds. Heb. 6.2. In which judgement every mans workes shall be tried, and every man accordingly shall receive sentence of life or death eternall.

21 Ground.

The adversaries hereof are first the Atheist, who denieth God himselfe, and consequently his judgement: Secondly, the drowsie Protestants, who in judgement denie not the last judgement, but yet plainly shew in their lives that they are not perswaded of it: for then would they make more conscience of sinne, and pleasing God in all things. These are the maine grounds of beleefe, unto which all other may be reduced. Now follow the grounds of obedience and practice.

Adversaries.

B

The first ground of practice is, Luke 13. 3. Except ye repent, ye shall perish. In which two things are to be observed: First, the duty required, that is, Repentance, the necessity of which appeareth, in that without it men perish. Secondly, the adversaries. Concerning repentance two things must be taught: first, what it is: secondly, what is the use of it. For the first; Repentance (as Paul describeth it) is a conversion whereby a sinner turneth himselfe unto God, and bringeth forth fruits worthy amendment of life. There be two kindes of conversion of a sinner: First, that whereby God turneth man. Secondly, that whereby a man being turned by God, turneth himselfe by grace: the former is no repentance properly, but the latter. Jer. 31. 18. Convert thou me, and I shall be converted. Surely after that I converted I repented. Quest. In what part is this conversion made? Ans. It beginneth in the minde, but it is of the whole man, the minde laying off all purpose of sinning, the conscience calling backe from sinne, the will not seeking to fulfill the lusts of it; but the whole man endevouring to please God through his whole conversation: further, repentance is attended with divers fruits worthy newnesse of life. These are the duties of the Morall Law, performed in faith and truth without hypocrisie, which because they proceed from the same beginning, are approved of God as repentance is. The second point in this duty is, the use of repentance; and that is not to be a cause of salvation, but only a way wherein men must walke to life everlasting. We are slandered by the Popish Church, while they exclaime that our doctrin requireth nothing but faith to be saved by, and so we become enemies to all good workes. But this is not our doctrine: for wee hold the workes of repentance to be the way of salvation. Indeed when we speake of the instrument whereby we lay hold upon Christ, that we say is faith only, not hope, love, or any workes; but when wee speake of a way to life, then faith is not alone, but repentance is required, hope, the feare of God,

God, and every good worke. So women are said to bee saved through bearing of children, 1 Tim. 2. 15. namely, as a way wherein they practise their faith and obedience. Thus Abrahams faith and works went together, Jam. 2. 22.

Secondly, The Adversaries of this ground are professors of Religion, who content themselves with a fained repentance; for most men being pricked and stung with the sense of their sinnes, for a while will hold downe their heads like a bulrush, breake off their company, come to Church, pray, heare the Word, and performe other duties: but when the remorse is once past, they returne to their former course of licentiousnesse, and this is thought a sufficient repentance: whereas it is but ceremoniall, and a figge leafe whereby men seeke to cover themselves: for true repentance changeth the minde, will, affections, conscience, yea, all the actions of life.

A patterne of popish doctrine.

Secondly, the Romish Church, which for many hundred yeares hath overturned this doctrine: as first in generall above these 500. yeares, penance and publike confession of persons excommunicated, hath bin by them taken and deemed to be repentance it selfe; any other hath bin scarce taught or knowne in these parts of the world. Secondly, repentance is by them turned into a judiciall proceeding and sentence of the Court, wherein the Minister must bee judge, the sinner must come under confession: the Minister must passe sentence, and the other must make satisfaction accordingly; which is an high abuse of this doctrine. Thirdly, they hold the workes of Contrition, Confession, and Satisfaction, to merit, yea, and to conferre pardon of sinne, and so abolish the merit and satisfaction of Christ. Secondly, the world hath bin by that Church deceived in divers particulars concerning this doctrine; as namely, first it hath beene taught that repentance, for the originall of it, is partly from nature, partly from grace; partly from God, partly from our selves; which is a false foundation, joyning light with darknesse, it being wholly from grace. Secondly, remorse of conscience (which the very Devils may have) is made a part of repentance; Saul himselfe, nay, Iudas wanted not his contrition, which is no grace, but a preparation unto it. Thirdly, they make Auricular Confession, whereby every man is bound to confesse all and every one of his sinnes, with their circumstances in the Priests eare, so necessary unto repentance, as without which he cannot have pardon; which is a very gibbet to the conscience. Fourthly, they turne their canonical satisfaction into satisfaction of Gods justice for sin, wherein blasphemously they overthrow the most perfect satisfaction of the Son of God. We are therefore to praise God who hath taken from our necks this yoke of the Roman Church, which neither we nor our Fathers were able to beare.

1 Ground.

The second ground of practice is concerning the exercise of repentance: Luk. 9. 23. If any man will come after mee, let him deny himselfe, and take up his Crosse and follow me. In which ground we will consider three things: first, the meaning; secondly, the moment; thirdly, the adversaries against whom we must contend. For the meaning; If any man will follow me] that is, will be my Disciple, (for Disciples used to follow their Masters and Teachers) he must learne three duties: first, Let him deny himselfe; secondly, take up his crosse; thirdly, follow mee. To the deniall of our selves three things are required: First, we must for the magnifying of the grace of God, abase our selves even to nothing. An example whereof we have in Paul, 1 Cor. 3. 7. I have planted, Apollo hath watred: but neither he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth increase: If the planter be nothing, much lesse the planted. We are not able as of our selves to think a good thought. And againe, All our sufficiency is of God. Secondly, wee must renounce our owne reason and will, and bring them under subjection to the will of God; wee must not strive to have wills of our owne, but let Christs will bee sufficient for us, his wisdome must be our reason. Thirdly, wee must esteeme all things as dung for Christ, and preserve within us a readinesse to leave and forsake friends, riches, honours, yea, our liberty, and life it selfe, (if need be) for his sake, and a good conscience.

The second duty is, To take up our crosse daily: unto which two things are required: first, every member of the Church must make reckoning of, and looke for daily crosses private and particular in his calling and in his profession. Secondly, when the crosse commeth it must bee taken up cheerefully, and borne with rejoycing: Matth. 5. 12. Rejoyce and be glad, namely, even when men revile and persecute you: Rom. 5. 3. Justified persons are able to rejoyce in tribulations; according to the exhortation, James 1. 2. Count it an exceeding joy. An example of the Saints, Heb. 10. 34. who suffered with joy the spoiling of their goods.

The third duty of a Disciple is, after the two former to follow Christ. For when Christ saith, And follow mee, it is as though hee had said: I goe before bearing my crosse, let my Disciples follow me step by step in bearing of this crosse. This containeth in it the maine duties of Christian Religion; to the performing of which two things are to be done: first, we must beare the crosse in obedience, as Christ did, who most willingly abased himselfe to the death, even the death of the crosse, in obedience to his Fathers will. Quest. But wherein stood this obedience of Christ? Ans. In the practice of three speciall vertues: first, Meeknesse, hee opened not his mouth, he reviled not being reviled, revenged not when hee might. Secondly, Patience; he grudged not to suffer those bitter torments for his very enemies. Thirdly, Love; he prayed for those that pierced him, and shed his heart bloud: in all which it is our part to imitate him.

Secondly,

Secondly, we must be conformable unto Christ being our head; which conformity consisteth in crucifying our body of corruption, even as he was crucified upon his crosse. We must arme our selves with Peters exhortation, 1 Pet. 4. 1. to suffer in the flesh as Christ suffred in the flesh. Which whosoever doth, he ceaseth from sinne: he liveth not henceforth after the lusts of men, but after the will of God, vers. 2. The learning of this duty helpeth forward our obedience under the crosse, which many cannot attaine unto (who in time of their peace are in some sort obedient,) because they beare not about in their bodies the dyings of Christ daily, 2 Cor. 4.

The second point. The moment and weight of this ground appeareth, Luk. 9. 24. Hee that will save his life shall lose it, that is, that will not take up his crosse to follow Christ, shall never bee saved. Againe, Baptisme is a maine ground, Heb. 6. 1. namely, as it is joyned with inward baptisme, for else outward baptisme may be wanting, so it be without contempt; but both together are a maine ground, especially in regard of that stipulation wee make, and that profession which wee receive upon us thereby, of forsaking even our selves, and following of Christ, without which can bee no salvation: which being the matter and substance of this ground, sheweth evidently the importance of it.

The third point. Adversaries of this ground are, first among our selves, such as are content to make Christ a Saviour and Redeemer, but not a patterne and example of imitation in his vertues: but Christ will not bee made a packhorse only to beare sinnes, seeing hee hath propounded himselfe a president to bee followed of those who looke for salvation by his sufferings: they must first be his Disciples before he be their Redeemer. Secondly, a more wicked enemy withstanding this doctrine is the Church of Rome, in exalting nature, and extenuating the grace of God; as first, holding that all sinnes deserve not death, but may be done away by a little knocking on the breast, or such like sorrow. Secondly, that by nature man hath free will in his conversion, and being helped by the holy Ghost, can move himselfe unto salvation. Thirdly, that after justification there is nothing in a man that God can hate. Fourthly, that a man may merit life, and performe workes of satisfaction to God; which devillish doctrines what else doe they but make the heart swell with pride, so as it can never be brought to the deniall of it selfe.

Popish doctrine suffereth not a man to set one foot forward towards Christ, because it resisteth deniall of a mans selfe.

3 Ground.

The third ground is taken from the Morall Law, Thou shalt have no other God before my face. The scope and meaning of which Law is, to direct us in chusing the true God onely to be our God; which is done, first, when wee know and acknowledge him as he hath revealed himselfe in his Word: secondly, when we give our hearts unto him, according to that precept; My son give me thy heart. Now the heart is given to God, when he is loved and feared above all, when he is alone trusted in, relied on in danger, when wee ascribe all power unto him, beleeve in him, subject our selves unto him in our very conscience; for whatsoever hath these is become our God. Secondly, that this is a ground cannot be doubted: for whosoever taketh not the true God for his God, is out of all way to salvation, seeing there is no covenant between God and him, and being out of the covenant, can have no part nor inheritance in Gods Kingdome.

Thirdly, Adversaries of this ground are, first the Romish doctrine, which committeth high treason against God, in giving his honour to other things; as to Saints and dead men, whom they make Gods, by teaching invocation to be due unto them, and so attributing an infinite power, wisdome, or presence unto them, which are Gods properties. Secondly, in teaching that men can merit, they make them Gods. For if Christ himselfe had beene a meere man, he could not have merited. Thirdly, in ascribing to dead creatures the vertue of the holy Ghost; as to water the power of sanctification, driving away devils, and washing away sinnes. Fourthly, in setting up the woodden Crosse for a God, which must bee worshipped with the same worship and affection as God himselfe is. The Virgin Mary they make a Goddesse and Queene of Heaven, whom they pray to command her Sonne. And lastly, the Pope, to whom they give power to pardon sinne properly, and to make lawes to binde conscience, as properly as Gods Lawes doe.

No marvell if that Religion teach to deny honour and allegeance due to our earthly gods.

The second adversarie is the common Protestant, who carrieth an outward profession of Christ, but in his heart setteth up many gods; as the belly, wealth, pleasure, yea, the Devill is the god of many men, as Phil. 3. 19. 2 Cor. 4. 4. others set all their hearts and study for the accomplishment of their sinnes: now sinne having the hold in their hearts, is become their God. Yea, and it is a common practice of many Protestants in their crosses to put off their confidence in God, and betake themselves to cunning men and South-sayers; so leaving the living God, and trust for their helpe in the devill himselfe.

4 Ground.

The fourth ground of practice concerneth the worship of God: Exod. 20. 5. Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any graven Image, &c. The first point. The meaning: This Commandement hath two parts: the former forbidding the making of Images: the latter, the worshipping of them. The former in these words, Thou shalt not make unto thy selfe, &c. In which is not simply forbidden the making of Images, as if they bee for politicall or historicall use, but the making of them in way of religion or conscience, to put us in remembrance of God, or to worship God in, by, or at the same. The latter in these words, Thou shalt not bow downe, &c. That is, thou shalt not so much as bow downe thy bodie before such an Image made by others thers, neither to worſhip it, nor the true God in it: which expoſition becauſe it is oppugned by a great part of the world, I will prove by ſome reaſons: Firſt, that which was the ſin of the Iſraelites in making Images, is here forbidden: but their common ſinne in the uſe of Images was to make them repreſentations of the true God, and to worſhip the true God in them, as appeareth, Exod. 32.4,5. The Iſraelites having made a golden Calfe ſaid, Theſe be thy Gods, O Iſrael, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt: that is, this is a repreſentation of that God who brought thee out of Ægypt: for they ſhould have beene worſe than mad men, if they had called that Calfe which was but one day old, that God which brought them many daies before out of Ægypt: beſides that, Images true or falſe are uſually called by the name of gods, as being ſo in the reputation of the worſhippers. Further Aaron ſaid, To morrow ſhall be the holy day of the Lord: ſignifying that the Calfe was made to repreſent the true God, whom in the Calfe they were to worſhip. Againe, Judg. 17.3. Michaes mother ſheweth that her intent was to worſhip God in the Image, when ſhe ſaith, that ſhee had dedicated eleven hundred ſhekles of ſilver to the Lord, to make a graven and a molten Image; and having made the Image, ſhe ſaith, Now will the Lord bleſſe me: though his fact was groſſe Idolatrie, yet he ſheweth that he worſhipped the Lord in the Image, whoſe bleſſing he boaſted of. Eſay 40.18. To whom will ye liken God? whence it is plaine, they made images of the true God to worſhip him in. Judg. 2.21. The Iſraelites were ſore afflicted for ſerving Baal and Aſhteroth, that is, Idols fetched from the Heathen: but herein their intent was to worſhip the true God in them, as appeareth, Hoſe. 2.16. Thou ſhalt call me no more Baali, but Iſhi. Yea, the very Heathen themſelves worſhipped the true God in their Images, Rom. 1.23. They turned the glorie of the true God, into the ſimilitude of a corruptible creature; much more then the Iſraelites who tooke their Idolatrie from them: and therefore in the ſecond commandement is forbidden the making of Images of the true God, and not of falſe onely, as the Papiſts would falſely teach us. The ſecond reaſon is in Deut. 4.15,16. where Moſes making a Commentary upon this commandement, and forbidding to make any repreſentation of any figure, addeth this reaſon; Ye ſaw no image in the day that the Lord ſpake out of Horeb: and therefore Moſes underſtood the Commandement as wee doe, namely, not to make any Image of the true God. The third reaſon is in the words, Thou ſhalt not make the Image of any thing that is in heaven above, &c. Seeing then that God is in heaven above, as alſo the Saints and Angels; we muſt make no Image to repreſent them: for even Images of the true God are Idols, hated of God, and condemned in the Scriptures: ſo the golden Calfe is called an Idoll, Act. 7.41.

The ſecond point, is the weight of this ground ſtanding herein, that whoſoever overthroweth this ground, overturneth this religion. For firſt, whoſoever reſembleth God in any Image, and worſhippeth him therein, he denieth the true God: Rom. 1.25. The wiſeſt of the Heathen, worſhipping God in their Images, turned the truth of God into a lie: ſo whatſoever men may beleeve of worſhipping the true God in an Image, the truth is, it will prove no better than a lie unto them. The Apoſtle affirmeth, that whatſoever the Gentiles ſacrificed to Idols, they ſacrificed it unto Devils, and not unto God. 1 Cor. 10.20. Some may aske, how can this be, ſeeing their intent was to ſacrifice unto God? I anſwer, that by offering to an Image, they denied God, and ſo not ſerving him, they became ſacrificers to the Devill: for whoſoever conceiveth of God, otherwiſe than hee will be conceived of, conceive an Idol, and not God; and he that will remember him in things wherein he will not be remembred, forgetteth him, as the Iſraelites, Pſal. 106.21. Secondly, profeſſed Idolatry maketh a ſeparation betweene God and his people, as adulterie doth betweene man and wife. For as a wife that ſeeketh to ſtrangers, denieth her proper husband; ſo the Church, which is the ſpouſe of God, going a whoring after Images and ſtrange gods, denieth God her husband, and procureth the Bill of divorce: ſee Hoſeah 2. and Jer. 3.8.

Thirdly, the Adverſaries of this ground are, the profeſſed papiſts: firſt, in allowing making of Images for Religious ſake; as the Image of Chriſt crucified, which they call the Crucifix; and of Chriſt glorified, which they call Agnus Dei: alſo Images of the Virgin Marie, and other Saints; yea, curſing and condemning all thoſe that forbid the making of them, and ſo curſe even the Lord himſelf: yea, and moſt blaſphemouſly in former times they were wont to make Images of the Trinitie, picturing the Father like an old man, the Sonne like a childe, the holy Ghoſt like a Dove, and yet much more blaſphemouſly than that, otherwiſe: but they are now aſhamed of ſuch wicked pictures. Secondly, they maintaine, yea, and command the worſhip of Chriſt in an Image, and condemne them who denie the worſhipping of Images, whether they be Images of God, or of Saints, Angels or dead men. Thirdly, they teach that a man is to worſhip the Crucifix religiouſly, yea, with the ſame worſhip and devotion with which Chriſt himſelfe is worſhipped, wherewith alſo they worſhip their breaden-God.

If the Pope had beene with Moſes in the Mount, hee would have demurred upon the admittance of the ſecond Commandement.

In former times their conſciences ſecretly checking them of their Idolatries, cauſed them to leave out the whole ſecond Commandement, and divide the laſt into two, to fill up the number: but of latter dayes, ſeeing they are conſtrained to retaine the Commandement, they have found out ſome ſhift, which we will examine. Firſt, they ſay there is a difference be- Obiect. 1.

tweene an Idoll and an Image, as the one is a Greeke word, the other a Latine: the former is a representation of the true God, the latter of false Gods. Answ. The difference is but in the Word, for indeed they be both one, Acts 7.41. Answ.

Object. 1. The calfe was an Image and an Idoll too. Ob. They make difference also of worship, which they say is of two sorts: the first is Latreia, this is a worship and reverence due to God onely: the second is Dulia, and this is a service due unto Saints, to the Crucifix, &c. Answ. But besides that the Scripture make these both one, they herein bewray their folly, in that, if either be greater, it is Dulia, which is a kinde of service most submisse, and that properly which vassals were wont to yeeld their Lord who had taken them in warre; and yet this must be given to Saints, and the woodden Crosse, being the greatest subjection. Answ.

Object. 3. But they intend to worship not the image of the Crosse, but Christ in it. Answ. No intention of man can institute a true worship of God, without warrant from God himselfe, who never authorized men to worship him in Images. Answ.

Object. 4. Englishmen kneele downe to the Chaire of Estate, the King not being in presence, and therefore wee may much more to Saints and Angels. Answ. First, this is a civill and politike worship, testifying the subjects allegeance; but kneeling to Saints is religious. Secondly, the King appointeth his Chaire of Estate to bee a signe of his presence, and willeth it; but no Papists can prove that ever Christ appointed a Crucifix to bee a signe of his presence: or that God willeth their Images to bee signes of his presence. Thirdly, the Chaire of Estate is a signe onely in the Kings absence; for himselfe being present, the civill worship is performed to himselfe: but Christ is never absent from his Church: and yet in his presence they set up an Image to remember him by. Thus that Church being an open Idolater must not be joined with; for shee is not joined to Christ any longer, but is a professed harlot; neither is it so indifferent (as some thinke) to find salvation there as well as by our Religion.

5 Ground. The fifth ground is, Matth. 4. 10. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. That this is a chiefe ground needs no proofe; and therefore wee will consider first, the meaning: secondly, the adversaries against whom wee must contend. To know the meaning, the words going before will afford us some direction; wherein Satan having moved Christ to fall downe and worship him with bodily worship onely, and requiring not the maine worship due to God, but a little bowing of the body; betokening that hee was the disposer of the Kingdomes of the world: this Christ denieth him with this reason ratified by Scripture, that it is a worship and a service proper to God, and to bee tendred to him onely. Secondly, the words themselves are to bee weighed: By [worship] is properly signified bodily worship in a bodily gesture: the meaning then is, thou shalt with thy body adore the Lord, for so it is suitable to Sathans demand. The word [serve] signifieth all worship due to God both inward and outward. [Onely] This word appertaineth to both the members, and so to the whole sentence: for els there should be no direct denial of Sathans temptation, requiring only the former and not the latter. But some will say, we may serve him lawfully, how then is service proper to God only? Object. 2. There be two kinds of worship, Religious and Civil. Religious is an action or actions of reverence and subjection, whereby a man doth acknowledg the Godhead it selfe, or the properties thereof, either in God himselfe truly, or in the creature falsely. These properties of God are, first, to bee an absolute Lord. Secondly, to be Almightie. Thirdly, to be present in all places at all times. Fourthly, to heare all men in all places at all times. Fiftly, to know all things past, present, and to come, yea, and the hearts of men. Sixthly, to be a giver of all good things, and the preventer of all evill. Now any action of reverence in signification of many of these properties, is a religious worship; the very intent of the minde in religious worship, being to ascribe either Godhead or divine properties to the thing worshipped. Civill or politicke worship is, when men performe actions of reverence & subjection unto others, as acknowledging them to bee preferred above themselves in gifts or authoritie. Thus bowing of the body is sometime religious, when it is done to God, in acknowledging his properties; and sometime civil, performed to a man in a respect of his eminencie in gifts and government. But these words of Christ are meant onely of the former, and not of the latter which belongs unto man. This ground thus truly conceived, affordeth us these two maine points of religion: first, that God is to be worshipped with a religious worship. Secondly, That all religious worship is proper to God, and due to him alone. Now religious worship is two-fold: first, inward, standing in two things; faith and inward obedience. Secondly, outward, when this inward worship is outwardly testified, consisting of three principall parts: first, in preaching, hearing, and reading the Word: secondly, in receiving the two Sacraments: thirdly, in prayer and thanksgiving publike and private.

Adversarie. Catholikes, the Catholike deprayers of Gods worship. The Adversaries hereof are the Papists, who pretend the Catholike Religion, but indeed overthrow it, depraving the outward worship of God, wherein the inward is testified. The first part whereof standing in the preaching, hearing, and reading of the word, they deprave: first, by mingling the pure Word of God with mans word and writings: and authorizing bookes Apocryphall as Canonicall Scripture. Secondly, by making unwritten Traditions Apostolicall and Ecclesiasticall (as they say) of equall authoritie with the Scripture. Thirdly, Πλεονασμὸς.

Thirdly, in that they teach in their catechiſmes, that the worſhip of God doth ſtand in obeying the Commandements of the Church, as well as the Commandements of God themſelves, and are neceſſarily to be practiſed unto ſalvation, and ſo they worſhip God in vaine, Mat. 15.9. Fourthly, in that they allow no Bible to be authenticall, but only the Latine tranſlation of Ierome, renouncing both the Hebrew and Greeke fountains: and yet learned Papiſts confeſſe that their Latine text is corrupted, and that therefore the true ſenſe is to bee fetched from the Popes determinations & from Councels, and no other ſenſe to be admitted. Fifthly, in that they make Images Lay mens books and teachers; and debar the people of the Scriptures publikely and privately in the vulgar tongue, and ſuffer it only to be read by them, and unto them in the Latine tongue unknowne unto them.

The ſecond part of outward worſhip ſtanding in adminiſtration of Sacraments, they likewiſe corrupt and aboliſh: for howſoever Baptiſme is preſerved for the ſubſtance of it in the Romiſh Church, which (as a lanterne carrieth the light) it retaineth not for it owne, but for the hidden Churches ſake within it; yet have they aboliſhed the Lords Supper for the ſubſtance of it: firſt, of a Sacrament they have made it a reall ſacrifice. Secondly, they have turned the Communion into a private Maſſe, where the Prieſt alone receiveth all, and the people nothing. Thirdly, although in a Sacrament there muſt bee diſtinction betweene the ſigne, and the thing ſignified, yet they make none, but overthrow all ſuch ſignification of the ſignes by their tranſubſtantiation. Fourthly, they have turned the body of Chriſt into a breaden God, which they carry about in boxes and worſhip; which is as vilde an Idolatry as ever was among the Heathen, not inferiour to the worſhipping of Cats and Buls, as gods among the Egyptians. Fifthly, they have added to Chriſts inſtitution five Sacraments, viz. Penance, Confirmation, Orders, Matrimony, and Annointing. But indeed Baptiſme is a Sacrament of Penance: the Lords Supper of Confirmation: and further they are deceived in the other.

The third part of outward worſhip concerneth Prayer and thanksgiving, this they overthrow likewiſe: firſt, they mocke God in praying in an unknowne tongue, not knowing what they ask, much leſſe ſeriouſly addreſſing themſelves unto the duty, which even earthly Kings would diſdaine. Secondly, in prayer muſt bee brought ſenſe of want, and contrition of heart; this they cannot bring, who are taught that they merit by prayer. Thirdly, prayer muſt bee made in particular faith, but this they make preſumption. Fourthly, they allow praying to creatures, and the mediation of Saints, and ſo deny the very ſubſtance of prayer, which is to make requeſt to God only in the alone mediation of Chriſt.

A The ſecond maine point of Religion out of this ground is this; That religious worſhip is due to God alone: for we may not give appearance of religious worſhip to creatures. Cornelius is reproved for giving to Peter exceſſe even of civill worſhip, Acts 10.25. for he knew Peter to be a man of God, and ſo ſeemed to mingle a kinde of religious worſhip with civill. This is a maine ground alſo, which whoſoever denieth he holdeth not the head Chriſt, Col. 2.18, 19.

Adverſaries. Popiſh prayers, fitter to be preferred to dead men than the living God.

The adverſaries of this ground alſo are the profeſſed Papiſts, who worſhip Saints and Angels, not onely by kneeling before them, but praying alſo unto them; which cannot be denied to be a religious worſhip, ſeeing it attributeth unto them to heare the prayers of all men, B at all times, in all places, yea, and to know the hearts of men upon earth. Secondly, they maintaine religious worſhip of Images, they goe on pilgrimage unto them, offer incenſe, creepe unto them, and kneel before them. Yea, they worſhip the Crucifix with the ſame worſhip whereby they would adore Chriſt, if he were living upon earth, as alſo the reliques of Saints. Out of all which we ſee what to thinke of that Church, which only hath the name of a Church: ſhee holdeth not the head Chriſt, ſeeing for ſo many hundred yeares ſhe hath diſplayed her fornication in worſhipping Saints, Angels, Images, and the Virgin Mary, ſo as her Bill of divorcement is juſtly given her, 2 Theſ. 2.10. Rev. 13.8. C from whom we muſt ſeparate, if we would not partake with her in her plagues.

6 Ground.

The ſixth ground of practice is, Eſai. 8. 13. Sanctifie the Lord of hoſts: which words containe the ſubſtance of the third Commandement: in which conſider firſt the meaning, ſecondly the weight, thirdly the Adverſaries. For the meaning: A thing is ſaid to bee ſanctified two waies; either when it is made holy; or when it is acknowledged to be made holy. Now this latter muſt be here underſtood, for Gods name cannot be made holy, which is holineſſe it ſelfe, and the firſt cauſe of all holineſſe; but it is ſanctified of us, when we acknowledge it holy: and this our ſanctification of God, either reſpecteth God himſelfe, or the gifts of God. Our D ſanctification of God himſelfe (the thing intended in this ground) is done two wayes: firſt, when in our minde we acknowledge and praiſe him in his attributes, of wiſdome, mercy, loving kindneſſe, power, providence, and ſuch like: 1 Pet. 3. 15. Sanctifie the Lord God in your hearts; that is, acknowledge him in his wiſdome, power, and other his attributes. Looke as good ſubjects ſpeaking of, and mentioning their Prince, will put off their hats in reverent opinion of him; ſo we religiouſly ſhould thinke and ſpeake of theſe. Iob fearing only and but ſuſpecting, that his ſonnes in their feaſtings had diſhonoured this name of God, ſanctified them. When Ezekias heard the blaſphemies of Rabſheka againſt God, he hũbled himſelfe, rent his cloathes and put on sackcloth, 2 King. 19. 1. Yea, wicked Ahab having heard (though falsely) that Naboth had blasphemed God, he rent his cloathes and proclaimed a fast: which sheweth (whatsoever his fact was) the use and manner of holy men in his time, when Gods name was dishonoured and blasphemed. Secondly, wee sanctifie God himselfe, when wee with reverence acknowledge his titles, as God, Lord, Iehovah, Father, Christ, Iesus, Holy Ghost; and not without religious and obedient affection speaking or thinking of them. Our sanctification of Gods gifts, which are many, as the Word preached, Prayer, Sacraments, Meat, Drinke, and all things serving for the good of body or soule, is not by giving or adding any holinesse unto them, which in themselves are all holy; but when we acknowledge them holy by preparing our selves to a holy use of them, and use them accordingly with good conscience; for every creature of God hath a double use: First, a lawfull use when God permits a generall use of his creatures: thus all may use meat, drinke, apparell, &c. Secondly, a holy use, when a creature in his lawfull use is used in a holy manner: for this includeth the former, though that may be without this. For example, all the Jewes kept the Passeover lawfully, but onely those celebrated it holily, who prepared themselves according to the commandement: which holy use is obtained by the word and prayer, 1 Tim. 4. The Word directeth us to use these gifts of God in obedience; and prayer obtaineth grace to use them according to the Word: unto which holy use of Gods creatures we are to be moved by these reasons: first, wee must distinguish our selves from the bruit beasts: the swine in the forrest eateth up the masse, but looketh not up to heaven, no not to the tree whence it falleth. Secondly, because we have lost our title to all the creatures in Adam, which onely is in this use restored. Thirdly, because they are the gifts of God, we must thus acknowledge them to be his, and in him learne to use them. Fourthly, that we may avoid the common abuse of them whereby he is provoked to displeasure.

The second point is the weight of this ground: which may appeare in the contrary, seeing the blasphemer doth what he can to overthrow the Godhead it selfe: whence every such one is called by such a name as signifieth a piercer of God, or one that thrusteth God thorow: and therefore the sanctification of God is a ground of moment. Secondly, the first petition of the Lords Prayer is, sanctified be thy name: wherein we are taught to preferre and pray for the hallowing of Gods name before our owne salvation. Thirdly, the scope of the third Commandement is the same, which whosoever observeth not, reverseth both the former. And lastly, the Lord is so jealous of his glory, that he will be sanctified of all them that come neere him, else he will sanctifie himselfe in their confusion, Levit. 10. 3.

Levit. 24. 14, 16.

Thirdly, the Adversaries of this ground are first, (though by Gods mercie) the religion of the Church of England is no adversarie unto it, yet the lives of the most fight against it: for although when we mention earthly Princes, we can use all reverence, yet Gods name is most fearefully abused, and tossed in wicked mens mouthes by oathes and cursed speakings; besides that, many abuse the same to Charmes, and Spels in their sorceries, and men thinke all is well, because herein they use good words: but the truth is, the better the words be, the greater is the sinne: yea, it is noted to be a signe of a low and base spirit not to sweare and blaspheme upon any occasion: many soldiers thinke they cannot be couragious enough, unlesse they pierce God, and rent Christ by detestable oathes, such as would cause wicked Ahab himselfe to rent his cloathes at the hearing.

Adversaries.

Secondly, the great adversarie is the Papist, and that divers wayes: first, in that they teach that the very doing of some worke is a sanctification of God; as the outward worke of Baptisme, yea, in it the very action of the Minister is a worship of God, and doth conferre grace, ex opere operato; this was their old doctrine, which now they colour with this addition, If the partie bee well and rightly disposed: but besides the use, yea, the lawfull and common use, there is by this ground required an holy use of any thing to make it acceptable to God, or rightly profitable to the doer himselfe. Secondly, their hallowing of Water, Bels, Palmes, Ashes, Spettle, is a meere mockery of God, seeing they have neither word nor promise from God, that these creatures should be thus hallowed to preserve from evill, body or soule. Thirdly, they erre in the foundation of religion divers waies; everie which such error is blasphemy. Fourthly, that Religion oppugneth the sanctification of Gods name in the use of a lawfull oath, teaching first that the Pope hath power to dispense with an oath. Secondly, that men may sweare by the Masse, and so doing make it a God. Thirdly, even the learned among them with one consent hold, that a man may sweare ambiguously even when he knoweth the thing to be otherwise.

Popish hallowing of the creatures dishonoureth the Creator.

The seventh ground is, Gal. 5. 15. The whole law is fulfilled in this one word, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy selfe. The meaning is not that wee should love our neighbour equally with our selves, and with no lesse affection, or degree of love; but that with the same cheerfulnesse, and willingnesse, and truth of heart that we performe duties of love to our selves, ought wee also to reach them out unto others. The weight of this ground appeareth, in that not onely Christ saith, It is like the great Commandement, but also in that it is the summe of the whole law: for the first Table must be practised in the second, and the love of God testified in love to men.

7 Ground.

The Adversaries of this ground be the Popish

Adversaries.

A fit principle for that religion, which wholly forsaketh it selfe.

pish Church, who thus expound it: First, love thy selfe, and then thy neighbour; making the love of our selves the foundation of the love of others: but sometime we may love our neighbour above our selves; as Ionathan loved David more than his owne soule, and Christ loved his enemies more than his owne life. Secondly, it teacheth that a man must not love particularly his particular enemie, nor salute him in particular, but generally, as if he salute a whole company together his enemie being there.

1 Ground.

The eighth ground: Exod. 20. 12, Honour thy father and thy mother, &c. In the words two things are to be considered: first, an ordinance of God: secondly, the meanes to preserve it. The ordinance is, that all men must not be equall in degree, but there must be orders of men, of whom some are to be in higher degree, as superiours; some in lower condition, as inferiours: the former are above others in regard of power to command, and to punish; the latter are in subjection under others, by whose discretion and will they are to be governed. This ordinance is described, Rom. 13. 1. Let every soule be subject to the superiour power: that is, be content to be under others which are above him in power: so here, some must be as fathers and mothers, some must bee subjected unto them. The meanes to preserve this ordinance, is the yeelding of honour unto whom it belongeth, which standeth in three things: first, in reverence towards the persons of superiours. Secondly, in obedience to their just commandement. Thirdly, in thankfulnesse for their paines in governing: thus is that golden sentence to be expounded. Matth. 22. Give unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsars; that is give him reverence, obedience, thankfulnesse; according to that, Rom. 13. 7. Give feare unto whom feare belongeth, honour to whom honour, tribute to whom tribute.

The weight of this ground is plaine, because without it can be no practice of true religion: for first, by it stand the three things, the Family, the Church and Common-wealth; all which are maintained by government, and subjection: wherefore the Lord set this Commandement the first of the second table, as whereupon hee would found all humane societies. Secondly, governours in any of these societies, are the keepers of both Tables, without whose helpe and authority Gods kingdome could have no abiding on the earth.

Such is the carriage of the Romane Clergie, as they had need keepe the civill magistrate off them, and be their owne judges.

Adversaries of this Commandement, are the Papists, who weaken the authoritie of the Magistrate, in exempting their Clergy from all Civill power of Magistracie, in causes both judiciall (that is, matters controversall) and criminall, that is, matters of trespasse, although the Apostle saith, Let every soule be subject. Secondly, that Church hath set up a power to bring into order and subjection all the Kings upon earth, namely, the power of the Pope, who challengeth to himselfe to overrule, yea, and to depose at his pleasure Kings and Queenes, who in their dominions are above all and only under God. Thirdly, that religion lesseneth the power of parents: for in the Councell of Trent they establish, first, Marriages, and Contracts made by children without consent of parents. Secondly, vowes also made by children under age, and without consent of parents, are held lawfull, and not to be broken.

9 Ground.

The ninth ground is, Micha. 6. 8. Hee hath shewed thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord requireth of thee: surely to doe justly, to love mercie, to humble thy selfe, and to walke with thy God. The meaning. Three vertues are here required: first, just dealing: secondly, mercy: thirdly, Humilitie. Touching the first, wee are commanded to doe justly: and this execution of justice betweene man and man hath five substantiall parts: First, to give honour to whom honour is due. Secondly, by thought, word, and deed to preserve the body and soule of our neighbour, that is, his life spirituall and temporall. Thirdly, his chastitie, which is the honour of body and soule in single life and Matrimonie. Fourthly, his wordly estate. Fifthly, his good name. This is the scope of all the commandements of the second Table.

Now because the due execution of justice must bee tempered with mercy, therefore is mercie required of man in the second place, which is a readinesse to releeue the miserie of the distressed. And thirdly, because justice and mercy without godlinesse are but civill vertues, we are in the last place commanded to walke in humilitie with our God; which containeth the summe of the first table, and standeth in three things: first, we must acknowledge our sinnes; secondly, intreat for pardon: thirdly, purpose not to offend God any more, but endevour to prevent sinne to come.

Concerning the weight of this ground, it appeareth in Micha. 6. 7. where the Lord testifieth himselfe to bee more delighted with the practice of love and mercy, than with oblations of thousands of Rammes, and ten thousand rivers of oyle: and else-where, I will have mercie, and not sacrifice. Yea, Titus 2. 12. this is made the end of the appearing of the grace of God, that wee would live soberly in regard of our selves, justly in regard of others, and godlily in regard of God. These vertues are so respected of God, that they are said to bee immediately, before his face, Psal. 89. 14. and so necessary among men, that without them no society can be preserved.

Adversaries.

The adversaries hereof are, first, the lives of most men, who seeke their owne things, and not to maintaine the lives, goods, name, chastitie of others; yea, too many preferre their private gaine before the common good of men in Church and Common-wealth. Secondly, the maine adversary is the Roman Religion, which defendeth the greatest injustice that can be, by establishing a Monarchy among themselves, not only controlling the soveraigne authority of Princes in their owne kingdomes, but also exempting their subjects from their allegeance at their pleasure: Of which usurped power debar them once, and that counterfeit Religion will fall with it, because it is onely underpropped by it. Secondly, that Religion overthroweth justice in chastitie: for first, it giveth power to the Pope to dispense with marriages within degrees of nature; it licenseth the brother by that dispensation to marry his brothers wife, and so is a patron of horrible incest. Secondly, it defendeth the tolleration of Stewes. Thirdly, by solemne decree it forbiddeth marriages to sundry orders of men, which Paul calleth a doctrine of Devils, 1 Tim. 4. Yea, they binde certaine men and women from marriage, and yet call it a Sacrament. Fourthly, the last Councell of Trent affirmeth, that all marriages not solemnized by a Masse-priest, and in the faith of the Romish Church, are of none effect. Thirdly, that Religion teacheth, that to steale a small thing, is a veniall sin; whereas the thought of stealing deserveth the curse of the law. Secondly, it defendeth begging; yea, and placeth holinesse in it: wheras the word teacheth that there shall bee no beggar in Israel. Fourthly, it teacheth that a sporting lie, or a beneficiall lie are veniall sins, flat against the ninth Commandement. Lastly, against the tenth Commandement it teacheth injustice, namely, that hurtfull motions intended against our neighbour (if there be no consent of will) are no sin. Whence we may see what to think of that Religion; yea, Christ himselfe sheweth, Matth. 5. 19. Whosoever breaketh the least of these Commandements, and teach men so to doe, he is the least in the kingdome of heaven; that is, he hath no part therein. But the Roman Church breaketh them, yea, and teacheth men to doe so, and therefore it is not of God, and the peremptorie teachers thereof have no part (without repentance) in the kingdome of heaven.

10. Ground. The 10 ground is, 1 Cor. 7. 20. Let every man abide in that calling in which he was called. First, the meaning. The scope of the words sheweth, that among the Corinths some who were slaves & servants, but converted to the faith (their masters still remaining Infidels) thought that now they were free from their masters, and might relinquish their service, and hence tooke occasion to live as they list; against which conceit of licentiousnesse, the Apostle Paul opposeth himselfe, and wisheth that this bee reformed, and that those who being called to the faith under unbeleevers, abide in that same calling wherein they were called. In which verse two things are contained: First, that every man that would live religiously, must have a double calling: first, the generall calling of a Christian: secondly, some particular vocation and calling wherein to converse. Secondly, that every man must abide in his particular calling: which that a man may doe, first, he must be contented and well pleased with his calling. Secondly, hee must walke diligently in the duties thereof; for these reasons: first the commandement of God, Gen. 3. 19. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread: which words though they be a threatning, yet they include a commandement bounded with a promise of blessing: Psalm. 128. 2. The man that feareth God shall eat the labour of his owne hands, and blessed shall hee bee, Exod. 20. Six dayes shalt thou labour, enforced by Gods owne example, for in six dayes the Lord made heaven and earth. Quest. May wee not use recreation in the six dayes? Answ. Yea, so it bee moderate, and helpe to make us fitter for our callings; for labour it selfe being commanded, every thing also which upholdeth it is commanded. Such commandements are usuall in the New Testament also: Ephes. 4. 28. Let him that stole steale no more, but rather let him labour with his hands the thing that good is. So, 2 Thess. 3. 12. men are commanded to eat their owne bread. Secondly, examples in the Scripture: God enjoyned Adam in the state of innocencie this double calling: first to serve him: secondly, to dresse the garden. The second Adam, Christ himselfe, while hee led a private life till his baptisme, which was the space of thirty yeares, lived in his father Iosephs calling. The Angels themselves are ministring spirits for the good of the godly, and ascend and descend upon the sonne of man, and live not out of their calling. Thirdly, it is the ordinance of God, that men should be his instruments for the common good of the societies wherein they live; even as every member in the body endevoureth it selfe, not onely for it owne good, but for the benefit of the whole: So should every member of the body politike.

This ground is of great weight for the maintaining of three maine societies; for neither familie, Church, or Common-wealth can stand without distinction of particular callings and labour in the same: for which cause the Apostle would not have him to eat, that will not labour, 2 Thess. 3. 3.

Adversaries. The adversaries hereof are, first, many amongst us; as those who spend their lives in gaming, and they who spend their wealth in bezelling and drinking: and they also who being strong to labour, spend their time in begging: all which are vile courses of life, and enemies to all good societies. Secondly, the Romane religion; first, in maintaining a Monkish life, whereby a man cutteth himselfe off from all society, and lives in prayer and fasting: but we are taught not onely to practise duties of the first table, but of the second also, and without the speciall calling, the generall is nothing. Secondly, in maintaining looseneſſe of life, and idlenesse: for God having appointed 52 Sabbaths in the yeare, wherin men are to lay aside their ordinary callings, & no moe, they have added (as may appeare in their callender) fifty two moe, which they cal holy daies, & so spend more than a quara quarter of a yeare in rest and idlenesse, whereby they become adversaries of this ground.

11. Ground.

The eleventh ground is, 1 Tim. 1. 19. Keepe faith and good conscience. The meaning. By faith wee must understand, the wholesome doctrine and religion, delivered in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles; further, this faith must not goe alone, but must have his companion, which is a good conscience; the property of which is to excuse and justifie a man in all callings before God and man: and it is knowne by a two-fold testimony: first, of the life past: secondly, of the life present, and to come. The testimony of the life past is, that a man hath repented him of all his sinnes past, and is turned unto God. The testimony of the life present and to come is, first, that a man hath a purpose never to offend God, but endevours to please him in all things. Secondly, that when he hath slipped and sinned against God, it was not wittingly and willingly, but of humane infirmity: thirdly, that a man hath his generall testimony which is required to a good conscience. Psal. 119. 6. I shall not bee confounded, when I have respect to all thy Commandements. Jam. 2. 5. Hee that breaketh one Commandement, is guilty of all: that is, he that wittingly and willingly against the knowledge of his conscience, breakes one of the Commandements of God, will, if occasion be offered, willingly and of knowledge breake them all: so as a good conscience must testifie on a mans side concerning all sinnes, and all obedience. Examples whereof wee have in Hezekiah, Esay 38. 3. Remember, Lord, how I have walked before thee with a perfect heart. And in Paul, 1 Corin. 4. 4. I know nothing by my selfe. The weight of the ground appeareth in the words following, where the Apostle saith, that while some put away good conscience, they have made ship-wracke concerning the faith: where hee compareth our conscience to a ship, our religion and faith to our treasures laid in it. Now as a hole in the ship loseth the treasures by sinking the ship: so cracke the conscience, and the treasures of religion suffer shipwracke: whence it is that Timothy is willed to keep the mystery of faith in pure conscience, 1 Tim. 3. 9.

Adversaries.

The Adversary of this ground is the Romish Religion, who overthroweth true testimony of conscience, which is ever joyned with true humiliation, and repentance for sinnes past; in teaching, that many sinnes are in themselves veniall, or no sinnes, as those lusts against the last Commandement, which killed Paul himselfe: and in extenuating mans corruption, and extolling nature, whereby (they say) a man may work his salvation, being holpen by the holy Ghost: whereas indeed no true peace of conscience is to be found till nature bee wholly debased, and grace take the whole place. Secondly, they teach that a man cannot be certaine of his salvation in this life, but may conjecture and hope well; which is the very racke and torment of the conscience. Thirdly, while they teach that a man must merit his salvation by his workes, they torture the conscience, and leave it destitute of this testimony: for how can the conscience quiet it selfe, when he knows not how many works will serve the turne, nor when it hath sufficiently satisfied the justice of God? and this is to be marked, that the chiefest of that religion, whatsoever they hold in their life time, yet when they lie on their death-bed, they flie from their owne merits to the merit of Christ. Notable is that speech of Stephen Gardiner at his death to convince it; who having beene a great persecutor, and being much perplexed on his death-bed, by a friend of his visiting him, was put in minde of that justification which is by the meere mercy of God in Christ: to whom he answered; You may tell me, and those who are in my case of this doctrine, but open not this gap to the people: So as they are glad to entertaine our doctrine for the true peace of their conscience, which in their owne doctrine they can never finde.

And Sir Chr. hlunt at his execution.

Thus have we shewed in part that faith is a most precious treasure, beset with many enemies, against whom we must alwayes contend; which we shall yet more cleerely see, in beholding the use of this treasure, which is two-fold: first, to reveale from God unto man all things needfull unto salvation concernig doctrine or manners: wherein it excelleth all mans learning: for first, all the lawes and learning of men reveale the Morall law only in part, and mingle it with superstitions, and ceremonies: but they reveale no part of the Gospell: only this doctrine of faith revealeth in the ful perfection both the Law and Gospel. Secondly, the Laws and learning of men know nothing (much lesse reveale) of mans misery, neither the cause nor the remedy thereof; but this doctrine of faith knoweth and revealeth both; namely, the first cause to be the sinne of our first parents, and the proper and perfect remedy to be the death of Christ. Thirdly, mens lawes and learning speake at large of temporall happinesse; but know nothing of eternall: but this doctrine not onely knoweth the true happinesse of men, but teacheth and describeth the ready way thereunto. The second use of this doctrine of faith is, that it is a most perfect instrument of the holy Ghost for the working of all graces in the hearts of men; I meane not the letters and syllables, but the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles taught, and beleeved. Paul calleth it the power of God to salvation: and Christ himselfe saith, that his word is spirit and life, that is, the instrument of the spirit, whereby life eternall is procured: for which two notable uses it is most precious treasure. Whence we learne, first to be swift to heare this doctrine, taught in the publike Ministery, as Iames counselleth, chap. 1. 19. because in it God openeth his treasure to dispence the same unto us. Secondly, it being a precious treasure, we must hide the same in the coffers coffers of our hearts, Psal. 119. 11. I have hid thy word in my heart. It must bee an ingrafted word in them, Iam. 1. 21. And this duty wee practise first, when we have care to know it: secondly, to remember it: thirdly, when we set the affections of our hearts upon it, as men doe upon their treasures. Thirdly, if it be the treasure of the Church, then it bringeth to the possessors of it, wealth, honour, and pleasure as other treasures doe. For as the house of Obed-edom was blessed for the Arke; so is that heart which holdeth true wisdome within it: see Prov. 3. 13, 14, &c. We in this land have good experience of this truth, who by Gods blessing have above forty yeares enjoyed wealth, peace, honour, and above all, Gods protection: and whence have these flowed, but from the true faith and religion set downe in the Prophets and Apostles, maintained and defended amongst us? which if we would have continued, wee must all continue to hold and affect this truth as a treasure unto the end.

The true treasure of the Church committed to the Saints is the true doctrine of salvation, and not Reliques or merits of dead men. D

The second point or head of the Exhortation is; that the Saints are the keepers of this treasure of faith, to whom it was once given. Whence we may learne, first, that it is an infallible note of the true Church of God, to keepe, maintaine and defend the wholsome doctrine of Religion, delivered by the Prophets and Apostles. It was noted to be the chiefe prerogative of the Jewes, that to them the Oracles of God were committed, Rom. 3. Hence 1 Tim. 3. 15. the Church is called the ground and pillar of truth, because in her publike Ministery shee maintaineth and preserveth the same, Cant. 3. 7. she asketh Christ where she shall be sure of him, and not misse of finding him in her necessity; hee maketh answer, shee shall be sure of him in the Tents of shepherds. Whence may bee truly concluded, that neither are the assemblies of Turkes nor Heretikes the Churches of God, because they fight against the truth; neither is the Church of Rome a true Church of God, because the truth of doctrine is for substance reversed amongst them. As also wee may bee confirmed that our Churches are the true Churches of Christ by this infallible note: A Register is known by his Records; so our Church is known to be Gods Register, because it keepeth faithfully the records of the Prophets and Apostles. Secondly, that it stands us in hand to whom this treasure is now committed, so faithfully to keepe it, that it be not taken from us, and given to others who will keepe it better; which wee shall doe by making this use of it, that we bring forth the fruits of it in amendment of life, else our unthankfulnesse shall justly bereave us of it. Concerning that circumstance in the text [once given] and not often, it may beare a double sense: first, it was given (as we say) once for all, that is, perfectly, sufficiently, as never after needing any alteration or addition. Whence wee note, first, that all revelations in matter of salvation and religion given since, are frivolous A and superstitious; for there is but one edition of true faith; and no after edition of revelation besides or without the word; such as the Papists have devised, to confirme their Purgatorie, prayer, and almes for the dead, masse, &c. seeing all necessary doctrine to salvation was once given perfectly. Secondly, that all Church traditions in matter of religion and doctrine of salvation, are meere prophanations of true doctrine, and argue it to bee unperfect; as those of the Masse; of receiving the Communion in one kinde; of the Popes supremacy; of workes of satisfaction, and many moe. Secondly, it may bee thus understood, Once given to the Saints, that is, not in writing, but in the hearts of the Saints, when they are truly enlightened: and B therefore if after enlightening it be quite lost, it is not given the second time, and consequently cannot be recovered. Heb. 6. 4. If a man who hath beene once enlightened and tasted of the good Word of God, fall away, it is impossible that hee should bee renewed againe by repentance. From which we must learne, to beware of Apostasie, and falling from the faith: yea, and of all steps and degrees leading thereunto, as of declining from our grounds of religion; for better had it been for us never to have knowne the way of truth, than after the knowledge of it to forsake the holy Commandement. 2 Pet. 2. 22. Which is the more to bee remembred, because religion hath beene more cherished than now it is, and the declining from it a great deale lesse. If it be C asked, how may wee prevent Apostasie? I answer, never call any ground into question. Here Cyprians rule is to bee learned, that divine matters admit no deliberation.

The third part of the Exhortation is, the office of the Church of God, and every member of it: and that is to maintaine, yea, to * fight for the maintenance of this treasure; and this is not a bodily fight by strength of arme or bow, but a spirituall fight by spirituall duties, which every member of the Church must take up; and namely, by foure duties. First, by doctrine; for every man in his place and calling must bee a Prophet; as Joel 2. 28. and must teach all under him: the father must teach the children, the Master his servants, and thus keepe out Satan and D all Satanicall doctrines. Secondly, by confession; every man being called must stand against the gates of hell, by constant witnessing of the truth. 1 Peter 3. 15. Sanctifie God in your hearts, and bee ready alwayes to give an account of the hope that is in you. Thirdly, by example of a good life and unblameable, suitable to the doctrine. Philip. 2. 15. This maketh men shine as lights in the world. Fourthly, by prayer, that the Lord would send forth labourers into his harvest to withstand all false doctrines and heresies, that so the faith and religion wherewith hee hath honoured us these many yeares, may be maintained unto us, and continued unto ours for ever.

* The word is not ἀγωνίζεσθε, but ἐπαγωνίζεσθε, signifying, an instant contention. The weapons of our warfare are not carnall. 2 Cor. 10. 4.

verſ. 4 For there are certaine men crept in, which were of old before ordained to this condemnation: ungodly men they are which turne the grace of our God into wantonneſſe, and denie God the onely Lord and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Here the Apoſtle proceedeth to confirme his exhortation, by a reaſon drawn frō the ſtate of the Church in his time, and it is thus briefly framed. There bee certaine men which ſecretly ſeek to undermine & overthrow the faith, therfore you ought the more earneſtly to contend for it. And that theſe adverſaries lurking amongſt them might the better be deſcried, hee deſcribeth them by five ſeverall adjuncts: firſt, by their hypocriſie, in creeping in. Secondly, by their eſtate before God, they are of old ordained to this condemnation. Thirdly, by their religion; Ungodly men they are. Fourthly, by their doctrine, They turne the grace of our God into wantonneſſe. Fifthly, by their lives; they deny the onely Lord. For the firſt, There are certaine men crept in] That is, there be men who ſecretly have inſinuated themſelves into your ſociety, profeſſing themſelves to be teachers of the true faith, but are indeed the deſtroyers and diſturbers of it. In which words two ſinnes are laid to their charge: firſt, that they cunningly joined themſelves unto the Church, pretending themſelves to bee the ſervants of Chriſt, and of the Church, and yet were enemies to both. Here marke the ſubtiltie of Satan, who cauſeth prophane men to joine themſelves to the ſocieties of the Saints, that by this meanes mingling his inſtruments with the members of the Church, he may by degrees corrupt the faith and overthrow the Church. The Parable, Matthew 13. ſheweth, that whereſoever the good husbandman ſoweth his good ſeed, this malicious man ſcattereth his tares. In Abrahams houſe ſhall be an Iſmael; in Iſaacs, an Eſau; in the Arke a curſed Cham; in Chriſts family a Judas. In the Primitive Church the devil raiſed up of all ſorts of Heretiks great numbers. In our owne Church the devill ſtirreth up daily troopes of Atheiſts and Papiſts, to the corrupting and depraving of true faith and Religion.

Vſe. Firſt, we muſt not take offence when we ſee ungodly men in the Church, much leſſe cut our ſelves from it by ſeparation: but rather conceive of the policy of Satan, who for the hindrance of the faith thruſteth them in. When the Iſraelites entred into the land of Canaan, they muſt not dwell alone, but be mingled with the Cananites the enemies of the Church, leſt the land being too much diſpeopled, wilde beaſts

A ſhould prevaile and devoure the people of God: So the Lord (ordering the malice of Sathan to the good of the Church) ſuffereth ſeducers in the Church, both to exerciſe the faith and patience of his, as alſo to prevent greater dangers, which they might in their ſecure condition fall into. Secondly, hence we ſee that ſuch hypocrites as theſe bee, though they bee in the Church, yet are they not of it; they are no members of that body (as the Romiſh Church teacheth) for they onely creepe into it.

The ſecond fault that is laid to their charge is, that they are intruders, thruſting themſelves into the office of teaching, not being called thereto, but creepe into the calling. Whence wee note, that it is moſt neceſſarie that thoſe who are to teach publikely in the Church, B
A ſhould be firſt called thereunto. Reaſons. Firſt, beſides the avoiding of this ſinne of creeping into the Church, it is the order that God hath ſet in the ſame; that he that is to teach ſhould firſt be ſent, Rom. 10. 14. And, No man taketh this honour (that is, lawfully) to himſelfe, except hee bee called as Aaron was. Secondly, the Miniſtery is Gods, and not mans, becauſe the Miniſter ſtandeth in Gods roome, and ſpeaketh in his name; which hee can never doe truly unleſſe God ſend him, and depute him in his ſtead. Thirdly, the Miniſter muſt maintaine that which he teacheth; unto which hee had need (as in all the parts of his calling) of Gods ſpeciall protection; for the which he muſt be alwaies inſtant in prayer, which he can never be C aſſured of, if he be not perſwaded of the truth of his calling. Fourthly, the people cannot heare with comfort and profit, if they bee not perſwaded that God hath called the teacher to inſtruct them: Rom. 10. 14. How can they heare, &c. This truth extendeth it ſelfe alſo to all other offices as well Civill as Eccleſiaſticall; all which are to be wielded and executed by men lawfully called unto the ſame. All entrance then into any office in Church or Common-wealth by money, favour of men, or any unlawfull meanes, is intruſion; and ſuch are not called of God, but are to bee ranged among theſe ſeducers, who creepe into places, and come not in by Gods call or approbation.

D The ſecond adjunct whereby the ſeducers are deſcribed, is their eſtate before God; being men of old ordained to this condemnation] that is, they were before all times, locked, enrolled, or billed unto condemnation, even as though their names had beene ſet downe in a booke. By condemnation is meant judgement, as the particle This doth plainly ſhew: which maketh this the plaine meaning: They were of old ordained to this judgement in this life, to trie, to exerciſe and moleſt the Church of God, and ſo conſequently to procure unto themſelves at length their owne juſt condemnation.

In which words wee are taught: firſt, that God keepeth his bookes of Regiſtrie and records, in which all things are ſet downe, the perſons, persons, behaviours, and eternall estate of all men; which bookes are of three sorts: first, the bookes of his Providence, containing all particulars of things past, present, and to come, in which the Lord saw the members of David when he was yet unformed, Psal. 139. 16. In the same booke, the number of the haires of our heads, and the falling of sparrowes to the ground, are recorded. The second booke, is of the last judgement; in which the persons and sinnes of all men are enrolled, Dan. 7. 9, 10. The thrones were set up, the ancient of daies did sit: thousand thousands ministred unto him, and ten thousand thousands stood before him: the judgements was set and the bookes opened, Rev. 20. 12. I saw all great and small stand before God; and the bookes were opened, and another booke was opened. The third is the booke of life, in which are written the names of those who are to bee saved: Phil. 4. 3. Paul saith of Clement and other his fellow-labourers, that their names were written in the booke of life. Now by these bookes wee may not grossely conceive materiall books, such as men note what they would remember in: but the counsell, election, providence, pleasure, and knowledge of God, wherein all these things are so certainly set downe as if any man should write them in a booke.

Out of which we note two things: first, that in regard of God there is no chance, neither any event by it; in regard of men indeed who know not the causes of things, many chances may be: but Gods providence, and chance are contrary; he having all things written before him with their causes. Secondly, that nothing comes to passe without the decree of God, no not the wicked actions of men. Which God not onely foreseeth, but decreeth: for this Iude insinuateth, saying, they were ordained to this judgment: and even that which is against the will of God commeth not to passe without his will, God willing the being of that which he willeth not to effect; and though hee esteeme not evill to be good, yet hee accounteth it good that evill should be.

Further, where hee saith [ordained of old to this condemnation] we learne, that as God hath before all worlds decreed the electing of some to salvation: so he hath decreed the refusall and rejecting of others to condemnation. 1 Pet. 2. 8. Many were disobedient: unto the which they were even ordained. 1 Thess. 5. 6. God hath not ordained us to wrath, but to obtaine salvation through Christ: shewing that some are ordained to wrath, who are not to obtaine salvation through Christ. Rom. 9. 22. God is compared to a potter, framing vessels of honour and dishonour, vessels of mercy, & vessels of wrath. In the same place; I have loved Iacob, and hated Esau; that is, I have decreed so to doe. For the whole Ch. speaketh of Gods counsell & unchangeable decree. Object. If this be so (will some say) then God dealeth unjustly, that absolutely ordaineth some men to condemnation and perdition.

Predestination then is not onely to be referred to the time.

Object.

Answ. We must know, that we are creatures, and may not presume to prescribe a law of justice to the Creator; whose will is justice it selfe (whatsoever we may conceive) and maketh the thing willed good, because it is willed, and not willed because it is good. Secondly, though God refuse and reject men, yet he doth it in most wise order and just proceeding, in these two degrees: first, he vouchsafeth to some men the riches of his grace tending to life everlasting; which speciall abundant grace he denieth to some other, passing by them, who left of him unto themselves, fall into sinne. Secondly, for sinne God decreeth judgement and condemnation, so as he doth not simply and absolutely ordaine his creature to hell, but in regard of sin: not that sinne is a cause of the decree moving him unto it, but that he decreeth not condemnation without respect of sin and relation unto it: which speech we need not feare to speake, because the holy Ghost so speaketh.

Vse. First, if some men be passed by of God, wee must humble our selves under his mighty hand, and with feare and trembling worke our salvation. Rom. 11. 20. Some are cut off, thou standest by faith, be not high minded, but feare. Secondly, we may not be offended when we see the Gospell not received, yea hated of men, and the professors of it persecuted: for many are of old ordained to be underminers of the truth, even to this condemnation, which by disobedience they hasten upon themselves. If the Gospell be hid to any, it is to them that perish. Thirdly, many Divines overshoot themselves, that seeke to obscure or overthrow this doctrine of reprobation, teaching that God for his part electeth all, and that man himselfe is the cause of reprobation; so as man is either the saviour or damner of himselfe, by receiving or refusing grace offered; whereas the Scripture speaketh otherwise; and here teacheth us, that some men were enrolled to certain judgement by God before all worlds. The darkning of this doctrine breedeth securitie of spirit, wherein grace is made so large, and salvation so easie, that if men will they may be saved: whereas our doctrine leadeth to the feare of God, and a care to walke as in his presence continually.

Lastly, in that it is added, they were preordained of old, note first the time of the rejection of some men: namely, before all worlds. Secondly, the proper cause of the decree of God, which must needs bee in himselfe, because it was before the creature was. Rom. 9. 11. Before they had done good or evill: that is, before he considered of their good or evill in his decree, he decreed to love the one and hate the other. So Ephes. 1. 9. whom he chuseth, he chuseth in himselfe. Not informing his judgement, nor framing his counsels as man doth from outward respects, he goeth not out of himselfe for any motive to chuse or refuse, but as Mat. 11. 25. Because his good pleasure was such. This confuteth the popish error, which affirmeth that God did decree according to his foreſight of faith or infidelity, the ſaving of ſome, and refuſing of other: but this cannot ſtand, ſeeing Gods decree is in order and time before the creature; which being the latter, cannot be the cauſe of the former.

The third adjunct or property of theſe ſeducers is; their want of religion [Ungodly men they are.] Ungodlineſſe is a ſin much ſpoken of, but not ſo well knowne, and therefore it is requiſite to ſhew the nature of it, that we may know who an ungodly man is: the rather becauſe it is a grievous ſinne, much greater than any of the ſeven deadly ſinnes of the Papiſts, being the ground of them all. Secondly, becauſe it is rooted in the bottome of the heart, and cannot be ſo eaſily diſcerned as others, though as dangerous as any. Thirdly, becauſe it is a ſinne more ſpirituall againſt the firſt Commandement of the firſt table, directed againſt God himſelfe, robbing him of his due honour. For the cleere knowledge of which, conſider three main parts or properties of ungodlineſſe: Firſt, that it denieth God the honour due unto him, and that 3. waies: firſt, by ignorance it cauſeth the ungodly man to rob him of his honour, in that hee acknowledgeth not the Godhead, but in his heart he inwardly denieth the providence, the preſence, the juſtice, mercy, power, and the other attributes of God, Pſal. 14. 1. The thought of the heart of the foole, that is, of every ungodly man, is, that there is no God: not that in conſcience he is not convinced of the contrarie, but by reaſon of his wicked heart, upon occaſion offered he is willing to acknowledge none. Secondly, by not ſubjecting the conſcience and life to the written wil and word of God, but rejecting and renouncing ſubjection thereunto. Thus Iob bringeth in the ungodly man, ſaying to the Almightie, Depart from us, wee will have none of thy waies: which is too outragious to be the ſpeech of the tongue, but of the heart caſting off the Lords yoke. To whom the King ſhall ſay; Thoſe mine enemies that would not have me to raigne over them, bring them hither, and ſlay them before mee, Luk. 19. 29. Thirdly, by not lifting up the heart by invocation of God for bleſſings needfull, and in thankſgiving for benefits received; the propertie of the ungodly man is, that hee calleth not upon God, Pſalm. 14. 4. This point of Atheiſme maketh a man like a beaſt, which looketh not up from whence his food falleth.

The ſecond propertie of ungodlineſſe, to attribute and give this honour, which it denieth God, vnto ſome thing elſe than God; as when the ungodly man ſetteth his love, joy, feare, or any other affection upon any thing beſides God. Thus the covetous man becommeth an Idolater. And 2 Tim. 3. in the laſt times men ſhal be lovers of pleaſures more than of God.

The third propertie of it is, when it giveth God his due honour, to deny him the true manner; which cauſeth the ungodly man to content himſelfe with a forme and ſhew of godlineſſe, outwardly bearing himſelfe as godly, but inwardly wanteth the power of it; the heart is not ſingle, but full of fraud, of doubling and deceit before God, who looketh into it, and delighteth not with the approaching of the lips, when the heart is removed. By which wee ſee the practice of the ungodly man, ſundry waies robbing God of his due honour, which one ſinne entertained, breedeth and nouriſheth ſinnes of all ſorts: and ſo much we are given to underſtand in the placing of it here, as the firſt ſinne of the ſeducers producing a great number of ſinnes more, noted in them thorow the Epiſtle; neither can any other be looked for but that the life ſhould bee plentifull in all ſinnes, where the heart is poſſeſſed of this ungodlines. Rom. 1. 26. the Gentiles acknowledged not God, and therefore he gave them up to vile affections; and this was the ground of all thoſe ſinnes reckoned there, above twentie in number. Abraham thought not amiſſe that hee might eaſily be ſlain for Sarah his wife, (whom therefore he durſt not confeſſe) if the feare of God were not in Abimelechs Court, Gen. 20. giving us to know, that where the feare of God is not in the heart, there is no bones made of any ſinne in the life, no not of murther it ſelfe.

Vſe 1. We are hence taught to ſpie out in our ſelves this hidden and ſecret ſinne, and heartily to bewaile it above all other ſinnes, as the mother ſinne of the reſt. But ſome may ſay: Wee are not tainted with this ſinne, wee abhorre to be counted ungodly. Anſ. It is too common a ſinne among all ſorts: we have indeed an outward forme of godlineſſe; wee come to heare the Word, to pray, to receive the Sacraments, but the moſt want power of it in their hearts: for firſt, the lawes binde our outward man to this outward forme: but the hearts of men remaine ſecure, ſeldome thinking of their ſinne and damnable eſtate by it, and ſeldome ſorrowing for the ſame, and ſaying, What have we done? Secondly, many have the forme of godlineſſe, whoſe harts are filled with the cares of this life, which choke up the power of godlineſſe, and will not ſuffer it to ſeat it ſelfe there, ſeeing the love of the world and the love of God cannot ſtand together. Thirdly, many having this form cannot abide to ſubject their hearts and lives unto the lawes of God; yea, they would exempt their ſpeeches and affections from ſuch ſtrictneſſe, and count it too much preciſeneſſe: theſe are all fruits of the ungodly heart, of which the fewer we can ſee in our ſelves, the more they be, and the more to be bewailed.

2. Vſe. Further, hence wee are to take out that leſſon which the Apoſtle teacheth, 1 Tim. 4. 7. to exerciſe our ſelves unto godlineſſe: for if ungodlineſſe be ſuch a mother ſinne, we muſt endevour our ſelves to the contrary. For which purpoſe, we muſt firſt prepare our ſelves thereunto (elſe we ſhall faile in the whole exerciſe) by by learning to acknowledge Gods providence, preſence, mercy, and juſtice in every thing. Gal. 4. 8. when the Galatians knew not God, they worſhipped them which by nature were no gods: no godlines can ſtand with the ignorance of God; neither can it be exerciſed in particular actions, unleſſe we behold him thus in the particulars. Secondly, to this exerciſe of godlineſſe we muſt firſt inwardly worſhip God in our ſpirits, ſoules, hearts and affections; not in lips onely, ſpeeches, and outward actions: For the right worſhippers, worſhip him in ſpirit and truth: Paul ſerved God in his ſpirit. Queſt. How ſhall a man doe this? Anſ. True inward worſhip ſtandeth in two things: firſt in faith, ſecondly, in the actions of faith. Faith is that whereby a man generally beleeveth the whole Word of God, containing the Law and the Goſpell, to be the truth of God it ſelfe; & particularly concerning himſelfe three things: firſt, Gods mercy in the forgiving of his owne ſins. Secondly, his preſence in all his actions. Thirdly, his providence over all events, good or bad, that befall him. The actions of faith are two: firſt, ſubjection of the heart unto God, in three reſpects: firſt, to Gods judgement, that ſeeing he paſſeth ſentence againſt our ſinnes, we alſo ſhould call our ſelves to account for them, confeſſe them, condemne our ſelves for them, and intreat for mercie. Secondly, to his Word and Lawes of both Tables, by hearty and conſcionable obedience, willingly taking up his yoke, and ſuffering our ſelves to be directed by all his lawes. Thirdly, to the good pleaſure of God knowne by the event, whether ſickneſſe or health, want or abundance, in departing from our owne wils, and patiently, yea, thankfully ſubmitting them unto his bleſſed will. The ſecond action of faith is, the elevation or lifting up the heart unto God inceſſantly, both in ſuing for his grace and aid in the ſeaſonable ſupplie of our neceſſities; as alſo in bleſſing him for bleſſings received. In theſe ſtand the practice of the true worſhip of God in the ſpirit, which is true godlineſſe: unto which we may be incited by theſe reaſons: Firſt, becauſe this godlineſſe hath the promiſe of this life and the life to come, 1 Tim. 4. that is, the godly man hath title to all bleſſings of all kindes. Secondly, Godlineſſe is great gaine, 1 Tim. 6. Every man affecteth gain, but if any man would attaine it, let him be godly. Men are often croſſed in the world, and things ſucceed not with them, they doe not proſper in their callings and duties of it, and ſeeing no reaſon of it, marvell why they ſhould not thrive as well as others; whereas indeed being ungodly men, they want that which ſhould bring in their gain. Thirdly, let the conſideration of the laſt judgement, joyned with the diſſolution of heaven and earth, move us hereunto: 1 Pet. 3. 11. Seeing all theſe things ſhall be diſſolved, what manner of perſons ought we to be in holy converſation and godlineſſe? As though he had ſaid, ſeeing nothing elſe ſhall ſtand us in ſtead but godlineſſe, how are we to frame our ſelves to the practice of it. Fourthly, the appearing of grace teacheth us to deny all ungodlineſſe, and to live godlily in this preſent world, Tit. 2. 12. If this be the end of the Goſpels appearing, and wee have beene they to whom it hath appeared with peace and proſperity above forty yeares, how can we be but unexcuſable and ſpeechleſſe before God, if wee remain untaught in this duty, and continue ſtill in the waies of ungodlineſſe?

John 4. 23. Rom. 1. 9.

Wee muſt condemne our owne ſinnes, leſt God condemne us for them.

The fourth adjunct whereby the ſeducers are deſcribed, is their doctrine, in theſe words; They turne the grace of God into wantonneſſe. In which conſider two points; firſt, the ſinne or vice here condemned. Secondly, the duty or contrary vertue commanded. Before we can know the former, we muſt ſearch out the meaning of the words. And firſt by [grace] is meant the doctrine of the Goſpel, called in the former verſe by the name of faith; ſo it is called, Tit. 2. 11. The grace of God hath appeared, teaching us, &c. becauſe it teacheth us, that remiſſion of ſinnes, and life everlaſting are obtained onely by the meere grace of God in Chriſt. By wantonneſſe] is properly underſtood that ſinne whereby men addict themſelves wholly to intemperancie, incontinencie, and unlawfull pleaſures; but here it muſt be taken generally for a licentious prophane kinde of living and liberty of ſinning. Turne] that is, they diſplace the grace of God, applying it from a right to a wrong end, and that not onely in practice of life, but in propounding of doctrine tending thereunto. As though he had more plainly ſaid, that whereas the doctrine of grace in the Goſpell, teacheth men free juſtification by faith in Chriſt, without the workes of the Law, theſe men pervert this gracious doctrine, and teach that therefore men may live as they liſt, and ſo themſelves doe alſo; by which ſame ſinne ſuch ſeducers are elſe-where noted in the Scripture. Rom. 3. 8. ſome gathered from Pauls doctrine the ſame liberty, ſaying, Why doe we not then evill, that good may come of it? And 2 Pet. 2. 19. ſome ſuch are mentioned, who beguiled divers with wantonneſſe through the luſts of the fleſh, promiſing unto them liberty. Eccleſiaſticall hiſtories mention many ſuch who ſprung up after the Apoſtles daies; as the Libertines, Simon Magus, and his Diſciples, who taught that men might lawfully commit fornication. So alſo the Diſciples of Baſilides, Eunomius, and the Gnoſtickes, Heretikes who taught that men might live as they liſt, ſeeing now ſuch liberty was procured them, being freed from being under the Law any longer: which ſinne died not with thoſe curſed heretikes, but the Devill hath in theſe laſt dayes revived it, eſpecially in foure ſorts of men: Firſt, the Libertines of this age; who hold with the former, that being under grace, wee are free from the obedience of the Law. Secondly, the Anabaptiſts, who upon the conſideration of abundant grace & peace in the new Testament, and of the liberty obtained by Christ) teach, that Civill jurisdiction and Magistracy is unlawfull: as also to make war, and to take an oath before a Magistrate; which sort of men are not so well knowne here as in other Churches, but are dangerous enemies wheresoever both to the grace of God, and good of man: for where the civil sword doth cease, there can no society stand in safety. Thirdly, another kinde of Libertines are the Papists, and the Popish Church, with the whole Roman Religion, themselves being open enemies unto the grace of God, and their whole religion turning it into wantonnesse, and liberty of sinning, and that divers wayes. First, God having of his grace given unto the Church a power of the keyes to open and shut heaven, that Religion hath turned it into an instrument first of profanenesse, in setting up a new Priesthood to absolve and loose mens sinnes properly, in offering a sacrifice for the quicke and dead, so abolishing the sacrifice of Christ. Secondly, of injustice: for by it they depose Kings and Princes, they free subjects from their allegeance, they stirre them up and encourage them to conspiracies, rebellions; and maintaine in other states, factions, civill warres, and seditions, and all by vertue of their power. Thirdly, of horrible covetousnesse: for by it they sell pardons for thousands of yeares, the which sales have brought to the Church of Rome the third part of the revenues of all Europe: which one practice, if there were no more, proveth plainely, that that Church turneth the grace of God to the liberty of sinne.

A Papist may buy the sale of all his sinnes for any money.

Secondly, their whole religion is a corrupted Religion, and maketh the receivers of it the children of Satan more than before: for first, it maketh men hypocrites, requiring nothing but an externall, bodily, and Ceremoniall worship, without any inward power of it; as in fasting, it requireth onely a shew of it, as to abstaine from flesh and white meats, but they may use most delicate fishes, the strongest wines, and sweetest spices; and in other parts their religion is no lesse hypocriticall. Secondly, it maketh men proud and arrogant, teaching the freedome of will unto good, if the holy Ghost doe but a little helpe it; that a man can merit by his workes, that hee can satisfie Gods justice by suffering for sin, yea, that he can performe some works of supererogation: who can hold these things and be humble? Thirdly, it maketh men secure, teaching that they may have full pardon of all their sins by the power of their keyes for money; and that though they have no merits of their owne, they may buy the merits of other men: yea, although in their death they faile of repentance, yet for some money he may be eased in Purgatory. What shall any rich man now care how he live or die, seeing all shal be well with him for a little mony? Fourthly, it maketh men in their distresse desperate, teaching that no man can be assured of his salvation without some revelation. Fifthly, it reviveth the old sin of these seducers, teaching that divers men & women may not marry, that were adultery; and yet openly tolerating stues and uncleanenesse. Which what is it else but to maintaine wantonnesse? wherby the chiefe teachers of that Church witnesse themselves the right successors: not of the Apostles (as they pretend) but of these seducers, and other wicked heretikes old and new.

The fourth sort of Libertines are carnall and formall Protestants; who first turne the counsell of Gods election into wantonnesse, by reasoning thus: If I be elected to salvation, I shall be saved, let me live as I will; or if not, I cannot be saved, doe what I will or can; because Gods counsels are unchangeable: and thus conclude to spend their daies in all wantonnesse. Secondly, they turne the mercy of God into wantonnesse, thus reasoning in their hearts; Because God is mercifull, therefore I will deferre my repentance as yet; for what time soever a sinner repenteth, God will put away all his sinnes out of his remembrance? what, young Saints, old Devils. Thus the timely acceptance of Gods mercy offered, is become a reproach: besides many moe, who, because the Lord deferreth punishment, set their hearts to doe evill. Thirdly, others under pretence of brotherly love, mispend all that they have in wantonnes, riot, excesse, company keeping, gaming, to the beggering of themselves, and undoing of their owne families, unto which they ought to shew their love in the first place. Fourthly, others under pretext that the Jewish Sabbath is abrogated, and that Christ hath brought such libertie as hath abolished distinction of times, take liberty to keepe no sabbath at all; whence many tradesmen will doe what they list on this day and dispatch those businesses, which they can find no time for in the week daies: fifthly, some because they would humble themselves, commit divers sinnes, and continue in others: these say in themselves, Let us continue in sinne, that grace may abound: all these sorts of men turne the graces of God into wantonnesse, and practise the vice here condemned.

The 2. thing to be considered is, the contrary vertue; and that is to make a godly and holy use of the grace of God, and to apply it to the right end for which God vouchsafeth it unto us; to wit, that we might be thankfull unto him, and testifie the same in obedience to all his lawes. Which appeareth, first, by testimony of Scripture: Luk. 1. 74, 75. We are delivered out of the hands of our spirituall enemies, to serve him in holinesse and righteousnes. Rom. 6. 16. We are under grace, therefore let us give up the members of our bodies, weapons of righteousnesse. Tit. 2. 11. The grace of God hath appeared, teaching us to deny ungodlinesse. Secondly, the end of all Gods grace is, that wee should bee furthered in holinesse of life; wee are elected that wee might be holy: the end of our calling is, that we may be hath not attained the life of glory for any who first liveth not the life of grace.

Saints: Justification freeth from punishment of sinne; Sanctification from corruption and sinne it selfe; Faith purifieth the heart; Love containeth us in obedience; he that hath hope purgeth himselfe; and so of all other graces. Thirdly, Christ is a Mediatour two wayes: First, by merit, to procure life and worke our salvation: secondly, by efficacie, that is, wherby his death is powerfull to cause us to die to sinne, and his resurrection to raise us from the grave of sinne to a new life; and he is no Mediatour by his merit to those who are destitute of this efficacy.

Use. We have in this land beene many yeares partakers of this grace of God; our duty then is to make a holy use of it, and walk thankfully before God. Roman. 12.1. I beseech you by the mercy of God (which hee had in the former chapter mentioned) that ye give up your soules a holy sacrifice to God: no more forcible argument can be urged to stirre up men to thankfull obedience than this: for if Gods mercy in Christ cannot move, what will? Let this then perswade us likewise; if wee beleeve God to bee our Father, that is a great grace; let this grace move us to walke as children before him; let the grace of our redemption move us to walke as redeemed ones, rescued out of such captivity wherein we were enthralled to sin and Satan, seeing it were a madnesse to returne to such bondage againe. If Christ be dead for us, let that grace move us to die to sinne; if hee being risen againe sit at Gods right hand, that wee might sit there with him, let that grace move us to walke as those that are risen with him, and have our conversation in heaven, seeking (even while wee are below) the things that are aboue; and so of the rest.

Further, the Apostle to make those seducers more odious, saith not simply they turne the grace of God, but [of our God] into wantonnesse: which noteth the indignitie of their fact: in which consider three things. First, by what meanes God becomes our God: and that is not by any merit of ours, but by meanes of the gracious covenant propounded in the Gospel, promising pardon and remission of sinne in and by Christ. Jer. 31.31. this is called the new covenant, which the Lord contracteth with his people, where writing his law in their inward parts, hee becommeth their God, and they his people. Secondly, what must wee doe to say truly and in assurance that God is our God? Ans. We must for our parts make a covenant with him, unto which is required a consent on either partie; first, on Gods part, that hee will be our God; which wee shall finde, not in any revelation besides the Scriptures; but generally in the word, and more specially in the Ministerie of the Gospell, and administration of the Sacraments, annexed as seales unto the covenant: in which God doth as surely covenant with us, as if he should from heaven speake unto us. Secondly, on our part is required consent, of which there be two degrees: first, whē we make an outward professiō of faith

A heare the word, receive the Sacraments, Baptisme, and the Lords supper; which serve to distinguish us from Jewes, Turkes, &c. this is somewhat, but not sufficient to make God our God, seeing it is common to the very hypocrits themselves. Secondly, seeing hee is not a Jew which is one outwardly, but which is a Jew within, there is required in our consent a further degree, which standeth in an outward consent of the heart: whereby a man taketh God for his God; which is then begun, when first a man acknowledgeth and bewaileth his sinnes: Secondly, when he endevoureth to bee reconciled to God; Thirdly, when he purposeth never to sinne againe: when this covenant is thus concluded by consent of both parties, a man

B may safely and truly say, that God is his God.

Now seeing wee know these things, our dutie is, to labour to bee setled and assured in our conscience that God is our God: for first in this assurance is the foundation of all true comfort; all the promises of God are hereupon grounded, and herein accomplished, that God is our God: see Isay 41.10. Bee not afraid, I am thy God: yea, Christ being upon the Crosse, having the pangs of hell upon him, herein stayed himselfe, My God, my God: so David, Psalme 22.1. and being ready to bee stoned to death, comforted himselfe in the Lord his God, 1 Sam. 30.6. And not onely is it the foundation of all our comfort in this life, but of all our happines after death it selfe, being the ground of those two

C maine Articles of our faith, the resurrection of the body, and the immortality of the soule: for by vertue of this Covenant alone shall wee rise againe after death to life, glory, and immortality; as Christ himselfe disputing against the Sadduces, from hence proveth the resurrection, in that, God is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob. Secondly, it is the ground of all obedience; Psalm. 95.7. the Prophet exhorting men thereunto, useth this as a reason: For he is the Lord our God, and wee are the people of his hands: the Preface of the morall law enforcing obedience laieth the same ground, For I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Ægypt: see also Psal. 50. 61. and whosoever is truly perswaded that God is his God, cannot

D but obey him.

The fifth property of these seducers is, That they deny God the onely Lord, and our Lord Iesus Christ.] Thus are they described by their manners. The translators of this Epistle were (as it seemeth) of opinion, that these words are properly spoken of God the Father, and of God the Sonne also; but by the tenour of the words in the original, it seemeth that they are all to be understood of Christ, and not of the Father; and are thus to be read, Which deny the onely Ruler, who is God and our Lord Iesus Christ. Againe, the tenour of the words being borrowed from the Epistle of Peter, may thence be rightly expounded: now Peter speaking of the same sinne of these seducers, applyeth it only to be a deni-

all

all of Christ, 2 Pet. 2. 1. They deny the Lord that bought them. In the words then consider two things: first, the sinne here condemned, namely, to denie Iesus Christ. Secondly, a description of Christ. For the first, To denie Iesus Christ, is to renounce and forsake Christ, and so much as in a man lieth to make his death voyd and of none effect. Now because this denial presupposeth a redemption (as Peter mentioneth) They denie the Lord that bought them; this question is to bee cleared, how these men being reprobates, can be said to be redeemed by Christ? Ans. We must not thinke that they were in Gods decree ever redeemed, for then had they beene saved: (hee doing whatsoever hee willeth, Psal. 115. 3.) but it is to bee meant in regard of themselves, and other men: for both in their owne conceit and judgement they were redeemed, as also in the judgement of others, who are to bee led by the rule of charity in passing their judgement upon men, and to account of them as redeemed, leaving all secret judgments to God. Secondly, the description of Christ, by three things; first, that he is a Ruler, yea, an onely Ruler, a Lord and Ruler over all things in generall, in heaven, earth, and hell: and more specially a Lord over his elect only: and in that he is said to be an onely ruler, it must not be meant as excluding the Father and holy Ghost, but all false Gods, and false Caristes; as John 17. 3. the Father is called the onely God: for all outward actions of the trinity are common to all the persons. Secondly, that he is a God: which is a notable place against all Arrians to prove the godhead of Christ. Thirdly, hee is said to bee our Lord: Ours in two respects especially; first, of the free donation of his father, who gave to him a people to bee Lord and King over before all worlds. Secondly, in regard of his worke of redemption which hee wrought for them, who were of the Father given unto him.

Out of that which hath beene here said, wee may note these two points: first, how these seducers deny Christ: namely, not openly and plainely, for then the Church should have espied them; neither in word nor speech, for in word they professed him: but in their deeds denied him, living after their lusts, and encouraging others in the same course, Titus 1. 16. And this sinne is revived and renewed in this our age, wherein too many outwardly and in word professe Christ, come to the Word and Sacraments; but covertly and in their deeds deny him, whose lives are very full of Epicurisme, and earthlinesse, and mouth filled with blasphemies and reproaches against true obedience, which of them is counted too much meenesse and preciseneſſe. These are the Disciples of the old Heretikes, whom (without repentance) the like fearefull judgements await, which befell them. Secondly, wee may observe in what regards they deny Christ; namely, first, in regard of his God-head, by withstanding the meanes of that power of Christ, whereby (having redeemed them) hee would sanctifie their hearts to obedience. The merit of his redemption is welcome to them, but they will none of the efficacie of it, which sanctifieth and renewath the inner man, subdueth sinne, and quickneth the life of God in them. Secondly, in regard of his Lordship, by denying him obedience, which as to a Lord is due unto him: A Redeemer they would have him, but not a Lord: for every man would have portion in Christs redemption, but their lusts must be their Lords, and they servants to sin and Satan: but these be those enemies that will not that he should reigne over them, who shall be brought and slaine before him. Our part then is, (if ever wee would finde comfort in Christ) to make him our Lord; his counsell is, that those that are laden should come unto him for ease: but the next words are, take my yoke upon thee: and if we would have him our justification, let him become also our sanctification.

We easily acknowledge Christ Iesus, but hardly a Lord.

Luke 19. 27.

v. 5 *I will therefore put you in remembrance, for asmuch as yee once knew this, how that the Lord after hee had delivered the people out of Egypt, destroyed them afterward which beleeved not.

The Apostle having propounded his principall exhortation to contend and fight for the faith, v. 3. with the reason thereof; v. 4 doth here begin to answer a secret objection which might be made against that reason, thus: These seducers professe Christ, and looke for salvation by him, what danger then can redound, if wee should joyne our selves unto them? This objection is answered from this fifth verse unto the twentieth: in all which verses hee disputeth at large that there is great danger herein; seeing their end shall bee destruction: the summe of which disputation is contained in this reason: All such persons as give themselves libertie to sinne, shall be destroyed; But these seducers give themselves liberty to sinne; and therefore shall be destroyed. The former part of which reason is contained in the 5, 6, 7. verses; and the latter from the 8. unto the 20. The former proposition is not plainely set downe in so many words, but the proofe of it onely by an induction and enumeration of all examples of sinners which have beene destroied; and they be three in number: first, of the Israelites, in the 5. verse: secondly, of the Angels in the 6. verse: thirdly, of Sodome and Gomorrha, in the 7. verse.

In this 5. ver. are two things to be considered; first the Preface, in these words, I will therefore put you in remembrance, for as much as you once knew this. Secondly, the first example whereby the point in hand is proved in the words following. The Preface serveth to prevent an objection which might be made by the Church reading these examples; that Jude teacheth them nothing but things which they knew well enough before: to which he answereth, that his intent is not to teach them any new thing, or any unknowne thing, but to bring knowne things to their remembrance: and in it three things are to be observed; First, the Apostles practice, I will therefore put you in remembrance.] Where note the office of all Pastors and teachers, which is not onely to teach things unknowne, but to repeat and to bring into remembrance things knowne before. This was Peters care, 2 Pet. 1 12. Though they had knowledge to put them in remembrance and chap. 3. 1. To stirre up and warne their pure mindes; giving us to understand that knowledge in the minde lieth as embers under ashes, and needs daily stirring up. Which admonisheth al hearers not to be offended if they heare the same thing often, seeing it is the dutie of Ministers to teach the same thing often. Yea, hearers which have understanding in the Scriptures, must bee content if they heare nothing but that which they have beene out of the Scriptures acquainted with before, seeing the Apostle thinketh it meet to teach nothing else.

Secondly, in this preface observe the propertie of the Church, which is to know the histories and examples of Scripture. Christ commanded his hearers to searche the Scriptures: the Apostle wisheth that the Scriptures dwell plenteously in men; which exhortation (no doubt) stirred them up to have the Scriptures familiar unto them, even as Timothie knew the Scriptures of a child. The estate of our times is far otherwise: for Ministers cannot say as Jude speaketh, For as much as you know these things, I will put you in remembrance: but our people plead and professe ignorance, yea, that the knowledge of the Scriptures belongeth not unto them (they being not booke-learned) but to schollers and ministers that live by it. But wee ought to account it a propertie of every Saint of God, who is justified and sanctified, to know the Scriptures, which onely are able to make them wise unto salvation.

The third point in the Preface is a second propertie of the Saints, namely, that they once know;] that is, they know certainly, unchangeably, and once for all, never to revoke or alter this knowledge: which first informeth us what to thinke and judge of those men, who because of diversitie of opinions, will be of no religion, nor beleeve any thing untill it bee determined by some generall Counsell: these want this property of the Saints, and are plaine Atheists. Secondly, it teacheth us to hold our religion certainely receiving it once for all unchangeably. In humane things we may often without danger change our mindes, and deliberate; but A grounds of religion must be out of all question, and admit no deliberation.

Now followeth the first example, whereby the first part of the former reason is proved, and that is of the Israelites, who wittingly and willingly sinning against God were destroyed, as appeareth, Num. 14. In which example consider foure things: first, who were destroyed, [the people.] Secondly, the time when, [after that he had delivered them out of Egypt.] Thirdly, for what cause, [which beleeved not.] Fourthly, the manner of the speech. For the first, the persons who were destroyed were the people; by which word is meant a speciall people, a peculiar and chosen people, the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, a people privileged above all people of the earth; to whom belonged the covenant, B sacrifices, worship, of which Christ came according to the flesh, Rom. 3. 2. and 9. 4. notwithstanding all which prerogatives the Lord destroyed them. If it had been a Heathen people against whom this destruction had prevailed, it had beene worthie observation, but much more when it is against Gods owne people.

Here then we learne, that no outward privilege can availe us; nor any outward meanes of salvation be effectuall or fruitfull to our good, out of their right use in faith and repentance. Rom. 2. 25. Circumcision is nothing unlesse thou keepe the Law. Gal. 6. Neither Circumcision availeth, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature. Judas had many great privileges, and yet perished. This made Paul, though he had many privileges, to account them all as dung, in regard of the knowledge in Christ, Phil. 3. 8. We must not then content our selves with the means of salvation in the Word and Sacraments, but use them aright in faith and repentance; otherwise they (being out of their holy use enjoyed) shall turne to our destruction and greater condemnation, as they did to this people, who (notwithstanding them) were destroyed. C

He is a Iew that is one within.

The second thing in this example is, the time when the Israelites were destroyed; that is, after their deliverance out of Egypt. God had diversly testified his love to this people, having chosen them out of all the people of the earth; he called himselfe their God, and he gave them many pledges of his love, but especially in that their great deliverance out of the bondage of Ægypt by such an outstretched arme: yet for all this not long after they sinned against him, hee destroyed them. Whence learne, that after many great blessings, men not walking worthy of them, but provoking the Lord by their sinnes, commeth a great vengeance. The whole booke of the Judges is a worthy proofe of the truth; where wee shall see the people still forgetting their deliverance, and are forthwith left to Tyrants to bee afflicted for ten, twenty, forty years together. The same appeareth in the common-wealth of Israel under the Kings: in the dayes of Salomon, the state was D

Great vengeance followeth the unthankfull receit of great blessings.

most flourishing and glorious, enjoying a most happie peace: but Salomon once forgetting the Lord and his Commandements, and falling to the Idolatrie of his outlandish wives, there followed most fearefull accidents; as the division and rent of the ten Tribes from Iudah, a long dissention and hot war between Rehoboam and Ieroboam, whose Idolatries brought much evill upon their severall lands, and at last utter desolation; the ten Tribes being carried into Syria captives, and there ended their daies; the other two Tribes into Babylon, & there remained 70. yeares; which judgements overtooke them above 400. yeares after. Iacob when he went over Jordan made a vow to the Lord, that if God would blesse him, and give him but food and raiment, he would in way of thankfulnesse returne to the Lord the tenth part of his goods, Gen. 28. 22. God blessed him so farre as hee became a mightie man, having the substance of a Prince: in this abundance he forgat his vow, or neglected it: but what followed of it? was there no horrible confusion in his family? Dinah was defloured; Ruben ascended to his fathers bed, Hamor was slaine, and the Lord is glad to call to minde his vow, Gen. 35. 1.

Vse. This doctrine concerneth us neerly, in this land, who by Gods mercy have enjoyed many of his best blessings in this our long peace, having beene delivered from the Ægypt of Rome, and have sat under the Lords protection all the day long: but as our blessings have been and are many and great, so have been and are our rebellions raging amongst us, especially that sinne of falling away from our first love, so as lesse love of God and religion is to bee found amongst us than heretofore; besides that our peace causeth men to make their heaven upon earth, and to embrace and affect things below: these sins unrepented of, will bring upon us dayes of affliction, wee having no more privilege than this people had, who after their deliverance were destroyed.

The third point in this destruction, is the cause of it; namely, because they believed not: here first observe what kind of unbeleefe this was. To the answer of which wee must know, that first God had promised to Abraham, that after 430. yeares he would give to his posterity the land of Canaan for their inheritance: this promise they all knew well enough. Secondly, it was often repeated, and renued, and namely, to Moses; unto whom the Lord promised that he should be their guide, yea, and that himselfe would protect them in their journey, and safely conduct them thither. Thirdly, God sealed this promise by many and sundry signes & miracles, both in Ægypt, at the red sea, and in the wildernesse: yea for all this they believed not, that God would accomplish these promises unto them, to bring them to that good Land: and further seeing the Land of Canaan was a type of that heavenly Canaan, they believed not God would bring them to heaven, and give them inheritance in that eternall rest by meanes of the Messias. This unbeleefe then of the promises of God, was the cause of their destruction.

Secondly, why are they destroyed for unbeleefe, rather than for their murmuring, fornication, and divers other sinnes which we reade of to have beene rife among them? Answ. Although they murmured, blasphemed, tempted God, reviled their guides, &c. yet this sinne of unbeleefe was the foundation and ground of them all; the which doth the more displease God, in that it was the first sinne that ever was in the world, and the mother of transgression. Secondly, this sinne in a more speciall manner dishonoureth God in making him a lyer, and to touch the his honour more neerely.

Thirdly, what was this destruction? Ans. It was the destruction of their soules and bodies, for their carcasses were left in the wildernesse where they fell, and their soules have their portion in the lake prepared for unbeleevers, Rev. 21. For the further hatred of this sinne, see 2 Kin. 7. 19. the Prince who would not beleeve the word of the Lord was troden to death: and Moses not waiting, but failing in his faith, was barred the Land of Canaan, and onely saw it a farre off.

Vses. Seeing destruction followeth unbeleefe, we must labour to see our unbeleefe, and take out that exhortation, Heb. 3. 12. Take heed lest there bee in any of you an evill heart of unbeleefe, to depart away from the living God: which place well considered, sheweth what are the degrees of falling away, which are studiously to be declined: as first, when a man is deceived by sinne, and giveth himselfe liberty thereunto. Secondly, when the heart is hardened, and made an evill heart. Thirdly, when infidelitie taketh possession of the heart to rule it, and cause it to call in question Gods promises and providence. Fourthly, then followeth a totall & departure from God: now we must beware of the least and lowest of these degrees of this defection and departure from God. Secondly, if they were destroyed for unbeleefe, we must on the contrary exercise our faith daily, and more in the dayly apprehension of Gods providence, power, protection, justice and mercy; and thus walking and staid, we which have thus beleeved, shall enter into the rest prepared for the people of God, when as many shall not enter for unbeleefes sake, Heb. 4. 3. & 6. Even as Caleb and Iosua only entred into that good Land, because they beleeved that God could and would bring his people thither. Thirdly, this must teach us obedience: for upon this ground that they were destroyed for unbeleefe, David inferreth this consequent, Psalm. 95. To day therefore if ye will heare his voice, harden not your hearts; which Moses also maketh the ground of this exhortation to the people to feare the Lord, because these men were destroyed for unbeleefe, Deut. 1. 32, &c. Fourthly, in that destruction of body and soule followes of unbeleefe, let such persons as (when judgements are upon themselves, wives or children) runne to Witches, and Wizzards for ease, as though they were bewitched, and make that the ground of their harmes, bee enformed that their owne wretched hearts have bewitched them; which being full of unbeleefe, bring plagues of all kindes, not onely upon their bodies, but their soules also. Art thou strangely diseased? the witch that hath brought it upon thee is thine owne wicked heart, which knoweth not to relie it selfe on Gods promises and protection: fifthly, were they destroyed because of their unbeleefe? let us not judge of our sinnes by the crooked rule of our owne reason, but by the law of God; wee can judge murther, theft, and adultery, great sins, but wee never espy the mother sinne of all, which is our infidelity, the maine sinne of the first table, and the nursery of other sinnes; wee never bewaile it, wee account lightly of it, and therefore the Lord taketh the revenge of this sinne into his owne hands, and punisheth it with destruction both of soule and bodie; so odious it is in his eyes, and ought therefore to bee as heinous in ours also.

The wretched heart of unbeleevers, is the Witch that afflicteth them.

The fourth thing in the example is the manner of the speech, which at the first seemeth to be generall, as though all they had been destroied which beleeved not; whereas indeed it is speciall, for all that beleeved not were not destroyed, seeing that all under twentie yeares were exempted and saved, Numb. 14. 19. who were reserved, that God might still have his Church among them, and that there might bee of them a people left to possesse the good land, according to the promise: where note that to be true which Habacuck ascribed to God, that in his justice he remembreth mercy: by which mercy the younger sons are here spared; which warranteth us to pray in common judgements, that the Lord powre not out his whole wrath upon us; neither in our temptations utterly forsake us, and give us over to Satans malice, seeing he hath manifested such goodnesse towards his Church, that in judgements he hath remembred his mercie. But here it may be asked, how this can stand with equity, that even these men should bee destroyed, for it seemeth that they repented of this sinne, Numb. 14. 40. yea, they confessed it, and mourned for it, and offered to passe into Canaan, yea, and were very ready to hasten into the land? Answ. They repented indeed, but faindly, it was farre from true and sincere repentance and sorrow; for even in the very same place it appeareth that they disobeyed God; for when he had passed sentence against their sinne, commanding that they should returne into the wildernesse of Arabia, verse 25. and there abide fourtie yeares, and die there; they would not submit themselves to that sentence, but in all hast they would goe forward to Canaan, according to the promise: although against a particular commandement: yea, Moses himselfe could not stay them: but that brought on their neckes a more speedy destruction, as appeareth in the end of the Chapter. Whence note the wicked nature of the deceitfull heart of man, which in distresse when Gods hand is stretched out against it, can faine a false repentance and counterfeit humiliation: which causeth many a man in sicknesse to vow amendment of life, if ever God raise him againe; and yet as soone as the scourge is overpassed, he forgetteth the hand of God, his owne vowes and promises, and falleth backe into the same bad courses againe: which consideration may move us to watch over our hearts, and suspect them of this deceit, wherby they can frame and faine a false repentance, when indeed there is nothing lesse than soundnesse in it.

Hab. 3. 2.

The fifth point in this judgement is the generall use of it; namely, that wee should frame our selves to repentance for this particular sin of unbeleefe, upon which wee behold such a fearefull destruction in Gods owne people. To the practise and performance of which we must doe foure things: First, lay aside the common perswasion of the fulnesse of perfection of our faith; wee must come to the discerning of this sinne in our selves, which is the first step to repent of it, and the rather because it is our mother sinne. Now because this sinne is so inward and secret, and so hardly to bee discerned, for our helpe herein some directions may be given for the espiall of it in some signes and fruits thereof; which every man may finde in himselfe lesse or more. For first, wee beleeve not as we ought the particular presence of God in all places and times towards us: for we are ashamed to doe and speake many things in the presence of men, which in the presence of God (men not being by) we make no bones of, either to speak or doe; so as mans presence keepeth us in some awe, which Gods presence cannot doe.

Unbeleefe unmasked in many particulars.

Secondly, we beleeve not the particular providence of God, watching over us; but either not regard it at all, or not as wee ought; which appeareth by these three things: first, if we have health, wealth, friends, favour and meanes, wee are well contented, we can thinke our selves very well, and can relie our selves on God; but if God take these away, oh then we are troubled, much disquieted and discontented: the reason whereof is, because the heart is not setled in the perswasion of Gods speciall providence: which if it have a pledge of God, can trust him: otherwise not at all: but as the usurer trusteth not the man but his pawne: so men relying themselves on the pledges, trust neither God himselfe, nor for himselfe. Secondly, in any distresse let our friend promise us helpe, wee are well cheered: but let God in his word promise supply of all good, and ease in our troubles, wee reape little or no comfort from thence: this is a manifest fruit of inbred unbeleefe. Thirdly, in sicknesse, or any judgement, any meanes is used for for ease and freedome; yea there is too common running and riding to witches, Charmers, Cunning men and women: for men wait not on God, nor expect the same hand in healing them which hath smitten them. Hee that beleeveth maketh no hast (saith the Prophet:) which if it be true, then this hastinesse to be disburdened of the hand of God, is a token of distrustfulnesse of God, and want of faith. Nay, this practise argueth not onely want of a true faith, but a presence of a false and Satanicall faith: for if there be no faith in the charme, it will not worke.

Thirdly, we beleeve not the Lord to be the Lord of body and soule, as one having Soveraigne Lordship and power, to save and destroy: for let any civill man be pressed by temptation unto sinne, hee will be easily brought to make no bones of very dangerous sinnes: what other is the reason hereof, but that he esteemeth not the Lord to be his Lord? and accounteth of his Commandements but as dreames, not serious or given in earnest? whereas if Gods Lordship were rightly acknowledged, sinne would not be so ripe and rife as it is.

Fourthly, we beleeve not the mercy of God in the pardon of our sinne as wee ought: for howsoever in our peace wee thinke our faith strong enough for any incounter, yet let a temptation assault us, then we begin to doubt whether wee be the children of God or no, and are full of impatience. Example hereof wee have even in Iob himselfe, who before his triall thought himselfe safe in his nest; but when Gods hand was heavy upon him, then he brake forth in speeches full of impatience: as that God was his enemy, and did write bitter things against him: wherein hee bewraied his want of faith, and his crooked and cankered incredulity: and the same weakenesse may the deareſt and strongest of Gods children one time or other espy in themselves.

Fifthly, we know not as we should the agony and passion of Christ: he suffered the first death, and the paines of the second death for our sinnes, they were the speares that pierced his heart: but wee carrie up our heads and can take delight in them, as though there were no danger in them: whereas the remembrance of them should make our hearts to bleed, and faith in the heart should cause us to die to sinne, seeing those who are Christs are crucified with him: but because men will not depart from their sins, which are not killed, but live and are strong in them, and no man saith, what have I done? it is a plaine evidence that the life of faith is not to be found in the lives of most men.

Sixthly, wee beleve not that we did rise with Christ, and ascended with him into heaven: because in this our long peace, our thoughts are set upon the world, and we mind earthly things still; whereas if we were risen with Christ, we would seeke the things that bee above, Coloss. 3. 1.

Seventhly, we doe not beleeve as wee ought the last judgement: because we are not smitten with feare and reverence in speaking and meditating of it. Paul speaking of it, calleth it the terrors of the Lord, 2 Cor. 5. 11. and this made him so forward in all good duties, yea this same consideration of the last judgement made him endevour to keepe a good conscience before God and all men: but men make no conscience of their waies.

Eighthly, wee beleeve not aright our owne death and resurrection in the last day: for men commonly deferre their repentance and amendment of life, till the last day of their dayes, and then they call and crie on the bed of their sorrowes; which argues a counterfeit faith: for if a man did beleeve his death, it would drive him to the daily amendment of his life. By these notes we may easily discerne this secret sinne of unbeleefe within our selves.

Secondly, when we have thus found out this sinne, we must bewaile it, and mourne for our unbeleefe, as being the mother of all our sinnes, confesse it before God, and crave increase of faith, as the man in the Gospell; Lord, I beleeve, helpe my unbeleefe: and with the Disciples, Lord, increase our faith.

Thirdly, we must set before our eyes and acquaint our selves with the promises of the pardon of sinne and life everlasting by Christ: also all other dependant promises, whereof some concerne our prosperous successe in our waies, and Gods protection in our labours & callings, and others concerne afflictions, promising happie issue & deliverance therfrom, with strength in temptation, to the which all promises may be referred; which we must alwaies have in our eie, that our faith may ground it selfe upon the.

Fourthly, wee must truly relie and rest our selves in these promises, settle and content our hearts in them: that looke as the earth hangeth without prop or pillar in the middest of the world, only by the Word of God; so must our hearts be staied in the same Word & promise of God; yea, if we should see nothing but destruction before our eies, our faith then must be our subsistence: and when our unbeleefe would unloosen our hold, and make us give backe, let our faith in these promises make resistance: as David, Psal. 42. 5. My soule, why art thou so disquieted within me? trust still in God: especially seeing we have promises which assure us in our troubles, either of their mitigation, or removall: after all these followeth the subjection of faith, when the heart and life are conformed to the obedience of all the Commandements of God. And thus we purging our hearts of unbeleefe, shall escape such fearefull judgements, as the first example hath put us in minde of.

v. 6 The Angels also which kept not their first estate, but left their owne habitation, hee

hath reserved in everlasting chaines under darkneſſe, unto the judgement of the great day.

Theſe words comprehend the ſecond example, whereby the firſt part of the former reaſon is confirmed: namely, that whoſoever give themſelves liberty to ſinne, ſhall be deſtroyed; here proved by this example of the Angels themſelves. In which conſider three points: firſt the perſons that ſinned, The Angels.] Secondly, the ſinne or fall of the Angels; which kept not their firſt eſtate, but left their owne habitation.] Thirdly, their puniſhment; hee hath reſerved in everlaſting chaines.] In the perſons ſinning, we have ſundry conſiderations; as firſt, that it pleaſeth the ſpirit of God to chuſe this example of the Angels to prove his purpoſe, and that moſt fitly; becauſe they are the excellency of all creatures, for ſo the Scriptures every where ſpeake of them; as when the higheſt praiſe that belonged to the inferior creatures is attributed unto them in Scripture, the ſpeech is drawne from the glory of Angels. Gen. 33. Iacob commending the favourable countenance of Eſau, being reconciled unto him, ſaith, hee ſaw his face as the face of an Angel. So Manna is called Angels food: that is, a moſt excellent food, that if thoſe excellent creatures ſhould need food, they could wiſh for no better. 1 Cor. 13. 1. Though I ſhould ſpeake with the tongue of men and Angels; ſignifying that if Angels had tongues, they muſt needs bee moſt admirable, divine, and excellent. David ſpeaking of the glory that man once had, and in admiration of it, being not able to containe himſelfe, breaketh out into a ſpeech, full of paſſion: O Lord, what is man that thou art ſo mindfull of him! thou haſt made him little inferiour to the Angels; ſhewing that the chiefe glory of men in their beſt eſtate, is inferiour to the excellent condition of Angels. Yea, further, it is a part of the glory of God to bee attended of them, and a part of our glory after the reſurrection to bee like them. Whence note the ſcope of the Apoſtle, which is hence to teach us, that no glory, beauty, or excellency of the creature, can exempt it from the puniſhment of ſinne, when it falleth thereinto; nay, the more glorious the ſinfull creature is, the more grievous puniſhment may expect it, if ſinne bee found therein; as the Angels here: which may inſtruct thoſe who are in theſe ſchooles of the Prophets, in which many men excell in rare gifts, of whom in regard of their wiſdome and knowledge may bee ſaid, as the woman of Tekoah ſaid of David, 2 Sam. 14. 17. My Lord is as an Angell of God, to heare good and bad. And they are the Angels of the Lord of hoſts, Malac. 2. 7. Yet for all this let them not bee puffed up hereby, but walke in feare and trembling, not emboldening themſelves to ſinne: for bee it they were as the Angels in gifts, yet if they ſin, they ſhall be as Angels in puniſhment alſo.

Pſal. 8. 5.

Secondly, hence note that Angels are ſubſtances though inviſible, having being, life, ſenſe, and underſtanding, and are not only qualities; for pure qualities neither can ſinne, nor bee capable of puniſhment, as the Angels are here ſaid to be. Ob. It will bee ſaid, ſeeing they are capable of puniſhment, they muſt be bodily ſubſtances. Anſw. No: it is ſufficient they be ſubſtances to be capable of puniſhment, though ſpirituall; for the puniſhment of hell is ſpirituall. Where we ſee the Sadduces and others even of our dayes are deceived, who thinke Angels to bee nothing but motions and melancholy paſſions: and the Libertines alſo, who thinke they are nothing but good and bad ſucceſſe.

Thirdly, the name Angell is not a name of nature, but of office: which ſignifieth that their office was to bee the meſſengers of God, who were to ſtand round about him as attendants, ready to be ſent forth at his pleaſure for the execution of his will, in all the parts of the world. In which function of theirs they are propounded as patternes to us, and examples for our imitation: who ought accordingly to ſet our ſelves in the preſence of God, as preſt and ready to performe his will; for ſo we pray daily, Let thy will bee done in earth as it is in heaven; that is, give us grace with cheerfulneſſe and readines to performe thy will here on earth, as the Angels in heaven doe: for whoſoever would be like the Angels in heaven, muſt bee herein like the firſt in earth. Now in that this name is here given to the devils and wicked ſpirits, it ſheweth two things: firſt, what their office was in the creation, unto which they were fitted & deputed. Secondly, the juſtice of their puniſhment for the neglect of the execution of the ſame.

Fourthly, obſerve the diſtinction of Angels; of which ſome kept their firſt eſtate, others (of which he here ſpeaketh) left their firſt conditiō: ſome ſtood and ſome fell; the ground of which diſtinction Paul mentioneth, 1 Tim. 5. 21. I charge thee before God & his elect Angels. Some therefore are elected, and (becauſe election preſuppoſeth a refuſall) others are rejected; no other cauſe of this diſtinction is knowne to man but the will of God, and his good pleaſure. Ob. If any man ſay, it was becauſe God foreſaw that ſome would fall, and others would ſtand. I anſwer, that is no cauſe: for God did not onely foreſee the fall of ſome, but decreed alſo before all worlds to confirme ſome in their ſtate, and to paſſe by others in his juſtice; ſo as the cauſe ſhall ever reſt in his good will, which willing the ſame maketh it moſt juſt, not giving us any leave otherwiſe to diſpute of this doctrine, or curiouſly to ſearch out the ſecrets of it, but rather to ſtand in admiration, and ſay with Paul, O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdome and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgements, and his wayes paſt finding out?

Rom. 11. 33.

Now

Now followeth the second point, namely, the fall of the Angels: in which observe three points: first, the cause; secondly, the parts; thirdly, the measure of the fall. The cause of their fall in these words; which kept not their first estate, but left their habitation; themselves were the cause of their owne fall; which is thus proved: Either God must be the cause of their sin, or man, or themselves; but neither God, nor man, and therefore themselves. First, God cannot be the cause: for that were injustice to condemne them for that which himselfe caused: how unrighteous were it, first, to cause them to fall, and then to punish them for falling? Object. But it will bee said, that God did fore-see their fall, and might have prevented it, and so not hindering it, he seemeth to be a cause of it. Answ. Whosoever fore-seeth an evill and hindereth it not when he may, is accessary unto it, so he bee he be bound to hinder it: but God was not bound to hinder it, being a most absolute Lord, not bound to any of his creatures further than hee bindeth himselfe. Object. But God did not confirme them in that grace which he gave them: whereupon they fell: whereas if he had confirmed them, they had stood; whence carnall reason concludeth God to bee the cause of the fall. Answ. God gave them grace in creating them righteous, but confirmed them not therein; he gave them a power to will to persevere, but gave them not the will nor perseverance it selfe; & yet he is not to be blamed, because he would not doe it. Quest. Why would he not? Answ. I answer with the Apostle, What art thou O man that disputest with God? Let us without further reasoning stay our selves in these two conclusions: first, that God is an absolute Lord: neither bound to any action, neither to give reason of any: Secondly, that hee doth all to the glory of his name, in the manifestation of his mercy and justice. Secondly, as God is no cause or author of this fall of Angels, no more is man: for the Angels fell first, and were the cause of mans fall, and therefore themselves were the proper cause of their owne fall. Quest. How can this be? Ans. The Angels had in themselves the proper cause, and beginning of their owne fall; and that was a free and flexible will, whereby for the present they willed that which was good, and might will to persevere in it: but that will being mutable, they might also will evill, and so fall from GOD, this being the same will that Adam had in the state of innocency.

Object. Good trees cannot bring forth evill fruit: therefore the Angels being good, could not sinne of themselves. Answ. A good tree remaining good bringeth forth good fruit; but being changeable may bring forth evill. So much of the cause of the fall of Angels.

The second thing in their fall, is the parts of it, which here are two: first, They kept not their beginning. Secondly, They left their owne habitation. First, they fell from their first estate: which words are expounded Joh. 8. 44. they stood not in the truth. By this truth, is meant the Image of God in righteousnesse and true holinesse, Eph. 4. 24. and this Image is truly called (truth.) because it never deceived men as unrighteousnesse doth; which maketh a glorious shew of pleasure, or profit, but indeed it deceiveth men, who finde nothing lesse therein. Secondly, because herein is no hypocrisie, it maketh no shew or appearance of other, than indeed it is, as the manner of falshood is. The sense then is, that the Angels voluntarily departed from their originall condition, and stood not in that image of God wherein they were created. The second part of this one sinne is, that they left their habitation; which a man might esteeme but a small matter, but the sinne is not small; for God in the beginning appointed most excellent places for his severall creatures; wherein they were to performe their service and homage unto God; as heaven was the proper place assigned to Angels: to man Paradise in his innocencie; as after his fall the families of the Patriarchs: before, and in Christs time the Temple: since that time, the societies and congregations of the faithfull are these places appointed for man to set out the special praises of the creator in. Now the Angels leaving their place, incurred two grievous sinnes: first, they left the presence of God: secondly, their office and calling in which they ought for ever to have beene imployed in the glorifying of God. Object. But doe not the Devils keepe in the aire? Answ. Some of them doe by Gods permission, but not as in their proper place, or first habitation: for that was in the comfortable presence of God in heaven. The third point in this sinne, is the measure of it; They left: that is, wholly and totally [their condition:] They quite forsooke God, his Image, heaven it selfe, and that office which therein they were assigned unto. Object. Here it may be objected: If the Angels in their innocencie and excellency fel wholly & utterly from God, much more may sinfull men, although beleevers, wholly fall from God, and utterly cut themselves by sinne from Christ. Ans. But hereunto I answer, that there is not the same reason of the grace of creation, as is of the grace of regeneration: for that commeth farre short of this: by the former the creature hath a power either to stand or fal, to abide with God, or depart from him, and this power is in it selfe: but by this latter grace of regeneration, such feare of God is put into the hearts of the regenerate, that they shall not depart from God, Jerem. 32. 40. and this power of not falling is in them indeed, but not from themselves: neither is it strange that there should bee such difference betweene the state of nature, and that which is above nature. Againe, as the grace of creation and regeneration is different, so there is a difference of the will created, and regenerate. * Created will hath a freedome to will that which is good: so hath the will regenerate also. Secondly, created

* So called not because the other is not also created, but because this is in the subject by creation, the other is not.

ted wil hath a power to wil to persevere in that which is good: so also hath the will regenerate. The created will hath not the will it selfe, neither the act of perseverance; wherein it differeth from the wil regenerate, which hath both these. Here the Schoolemen deceived themselves and others, in that they taught that in the conversion of a sinner, the will hath a freedome to receive grace, or not to receive it; so placing it in the will of man, and putting it in his owne hand and power to beleeve, or not beleeve. But the truth is, that in the first conversion of a sinner, he will rebelleth and resisteth; For none commeth to the Son, unlesse the Father draw him: it is not the will it selfe, but the conversion of it that frameth it to willingnesse, making it of unwilling, willing to entertaine that which is truly good. It is untrue that the will of man is now as the will of Angels was before their fall, having a power to fall, or not fall.

Use. First, in that the Angels were condemned for forsaking their first beginning, we must bewaile this same sinne in our selves, for wee also had the same first beginning with them; the same Image of God was ingraven upon us, which wee have willingly departed from, and that remaineth for us to doe, which belongeth not to them; to use all means to obtaine our first beginnings againe, that this Image may bee restored unto us, and renued upon us: unto which three things are required: first, that our spirituall understanding bee cleared and enlightened: secondly, that a good heart and conscience bee gotten and preserved: thirdly, a subjection in our whole conversation unto all the lawes and commandements of God.

Secondly, though wee have the same beginning by creation, which is lost by our fall; yet we have another beginning, by a new birth and regeneration, which they want; we have beene borne, baptised, and brought up many years in the true faith, and profession of Christ; now our duty is to be more wise than before, to bee wary lest wee fall from this beginning, as wee have done from the former; but cleave to our faith, and stand to our vow made in our Baptisme: for otherwise our estate becommeth as remedilesse as the condition of the Angels themselves, who are shut up in the chaines of condemnation for ever.

Thirdly, we see how far the Scriptures may be said to bee sufficient to cleare all doubts and determine all controversies, seeing here it onely propoundeth a generall sinne of Angels, and nameth no particular, as Peter also saith, they sinned; and John, that they stood not in the truth. Thus contenting it selfe with generall tearmes, without particularizing the proper sinne deserving this judgement; and determineth not that great question controverted amongst Divines, of whom some say it was a sinne in thought: others, that it was actuall; others, that it was envy: some pride, &c. which maketh the Papists say, that the Scriptures are not sufficient to determine all hard questions. But we must not imagine the Scriptures to be such a Judge as decideth all doubts, which the curiositie of mans braine may cast within it selfe; whereof there are innumerable among the ancient Schoolemen, such as this is by Scripture indeterminable: nay of purpose the holy Ghost cutteth off all cause of such curiositie by silence in such unnecessarie matters, that we might the rather attend to more necessarie: yet is the Scripture a Judge sufficiently able to resolve any spirituall minded man concerning conscience, or in any matter concerning salvation; all which it is the sole and proper determiner of: now as for the particular sinne of Angels, it is not necessarie to salvation to know it; but seeing the Scripture concealeth it, it is a safe and learned ignorance to be rested in, without further desire to know that which the Lord hath hid in secret with himselfe.

Fourthly, we are hence taught to seeke to enter into our habitation and true resting place, which is not the earthly Paradise, for that was our dwelling place before the fall; but Heaven it selfe, which since the fall is assigned and prepared to be a rest for the people of God: this was the citie which Abraham looked for, Heb. 11. so the Saints departed are said to bee at home with the Lord being in heaven. Christ tels his Disciples he goeth to prepare them these dwellings in heaven, Joh. 14. which else-where hee calleth everlasting habitations. Make you friends of unrighteous Mammon, &c. Now for our better practice hereof, this must bee marked, that howsoever this our habitation be in heaven, yet the suburbs & the gates of it are here on earth: for all the assemblies of the people of God are the doores and gates of heaven it selfe, yea, the verie entrie into it. Iacob when hee saw the testimonies and tokens of Gods presence and favour, built an altar in the place for his worship, and called it Bethel, and said it was the very gate of heaven, Gen. 28. 17. and therefore we must while we live here seeke to enter, if we would be admitted within that glory hereafter. Quest. But what meanes may wee use to helpe us forward herein? Ans. These five. First, we must alwaies endevour to bee found readie to enter into that heavenly habitatiō: for which purpose our hearts must bee at this our home, yea, our whole conversation must be in heaven, whilest our selves are upon earth; our walking must be in the path of life everlasting, still cōtaining our selves in the waies of repentance, obedience, and daily mortification, wherby we deny our selves, take up our crosse and follow Christ. Secondly, we must love the assemblies of Gods people, & joine our selves unto them in the holy use of the Word and Sacraments, whereby wee draw neere unto heaven it selfe: yea, and keepe at the gates of this City, and with David, thinke it a speciall privilege to be a doore-keeper in the house of God, Psalm. 84. Moses chose rather to suffer with the people of God great afflictiō, fliction, that to enjoy the treasures and honours of Pharaohs court: yea, even wicked Cain himselfe thought of this as the greatest part of his punishment, and which hee most complained of, that he was cast out from the face of God, that is, out of Adams family, whereas Gods face was to bee seene in his worship. Thirdly, wee must weane our affections from our earthly inheritances, which are but Tents, that they may bee fixed upon this sure habitation in heaven: without the assurance of which, all earthly revenues and treasures can adde but little comfort to the heart. Cain built a Citie, hee had besides great Lands and faire possessions; but yet even then the holy Ghost brands him with the name of a vagabond; because he was cut off from Gods people, and cared not to joyne himselfe unto them againe by repentance. Fourthly, wee must every day addresse and prepare our selves to our death, seeing our death is a meanes to bring us home to this habitation: every new day must occasion us to renew this our preparation: and this will cause us neither to feare our owne, nor excessively to sorrow at the departure of our faithfull friends, seeing they have passed these first things, and are onely gone before to their longed for habitation. Fifthly, if God call us thereunto, we must be content to leave and forsake goods, friends, native countrey, and all for the assurance of inheritance in this our countrey; and if wee cannot finde the doores hereof in our owne countrey, we must seeke them else-where, where we may enjoy them, making light reckoning of all things for this one thing of highest account.

The gate of heaven is set open here upon earth.

We ought rather to be serious in consideration of our owne fall, than curious in theirs.

The last use of this doctrine is, to teach us from this sinne of the Angels our contrary dutie: they by their office were to doe homage unto God, and performe all duty and reverence as children to their Father: for so Iob calleth them the sonnes of God; but this office they departed from: wee now being by adoption the sonnes and daughters of God, being called unto holinesse, are to take great heed of this sinne of forsaking our calling; yea, on the contrary to walke worthy thereof, as the sonnes of God, approving our faithfulnesse unto him. And it standeth us in hand so to doe, seeing the contrary hath such vengeance attending upon it, as now in this example wee are in the next place to behold.

The third point in this example, is the punishment of the Angels, which hath two degrees. First, their custody, in these words: Hee hath reserved them, namely, in durance. Secondly, their full punishment; unto the judgement of the great day. The former is set forth in two things: First, in that they are reserved in chaines. Secondly, under darknesse. By these chaines are signified, first, that mighty power of God, which bridleth and restraineth the might and malice of the Devils themselves; as Revel. 20. the old Dragon was bound for a thousand yeares: the power of God was the chaine that curbed and over-mastred him; and this is one part of his present punishment. Secondly, the chaines signifie also that guiltinesse of the Angels, which by the tenour of Gods justice bindeth them over to destruction; these bonds be upon the conscience of the wicked Angels, they know they are adjudged to damnation for their sinne; so as let them bee where they will in the earth, or ayre, or whersoever, these chaines of guilty consciences binde them over to judgement: where wee are taught two things; first, to beware of guilty and accusing consciences: for these are Gods chaines binding body and soule unto everlasting vengeance: and therefore for time past, if thy conscience accuse thee, seeke in due time to bee loosed and freed by Christ, that thou maist be able to say with Saint Paul; I know nothing by my selfe: and for time to come, beware of sinne, even small sinnes as well as great: for so many sinnes as thou committest, are so many chaines binding thee over to just damnation. Secondly, hence we also learne, that the service of God is a most happy and sweet liberty, any libertie else is strait bondage; men thinke that to bee tied to the daily service of God, is a yoake and bondage intolerable, and they must needs have liberty to sinne; but they deceive themselves, for while they seeke for liberty, by this meanes they plunge themselves into captivitie, and lay chaines upon themselves, yea, bolts which hold them in eternall bondage. The liberty which is sweet unto those who are freed by Christ is, that they can walke before God in the compasse of their callings, without those accusing consciences, which continually vex and torment the wicked men and Angels themselves. Further, these chaines are called here eternall, because the wicked Angels stand guilty for ever, without hope of recoverie or redemption; seeing Christ tooke not upon him the seed and nature of Angels to redeeme them, but Abrahams seed: where note Gods infinite mercy to mankind, who being fallen, have found a meane of redemption, published in the ministerie of the Word: whereby Gods people (being bound before) are loosed from their chaines; but the Angels those glorious creatures being fallen, found no Saviour, nor any meanes given by God to loose them, for their chaines are eternall: which infinite mercie towards us, should stirre up our dead hearts to thankfulnesse, and continuall praise of Gods free mercie, who hath given us the bloud of his Son to loose these chaines; when we as little deserved it, as the Angels unto whom such favour was denied.

Christs yoke is easie, and Gods service is perfect libertie.

The second part of their custodie is, that they are kept under darknesse: which darknesse signifieth the wrath and anger of God, and want of the blessed favour which David prayed for: and calleth it by the contrarie name, the light of his countenance, Psalm. 4. And as these these Angels are said to be in darknesse; so the Saints are said to be in light, Col. 1. 12. that is, in Gods favour. Object. But the wicked are not wholly cast out of Gods favour, for they have faith, and therefore some favour and grace of God. Answ. The devils indeed beleeve, but they have not their faith by the gift of illumination as men have, but it riseth of the remnant of naturall light and understanding left in them since their fall: wherby they can perswade themselves of the truth of the word of God: so as their faith is not from any grace since their fall, neither common nor speciall. Besides this reserved light lighteneth not, nor ceaseth, but increaseth their torment.

Use. Seeing the misery of the Angels is, to be kept under darknesse, which is to be cast out of Gods favour; we learne to place all our happinesse in the fruition and enjoying of this favour of God, and instantly to pray that the Lord would still lift up the light of his countenance upon us; in that our whole felicitie must bee placed in the apprehension of Gods mercie, in the pardon of sinne, and life everlasting.

The second degree of their punishment is, that they are reserved unto the judgement of the great day, wherein the fulnesse and extremity of their torment is expressed: for by judgement is meant that fearefull and finall condemnation and torment, which they are adjudged unto, which abideth them, and is reserved for them. Where wee see, that howsoever the devils are already entred into divers degrees of their punishment; yet their full punishment, and the full wrath of God is not powred upon them till the last judgement; this themselves know, as Matth. 8. Art thou come to torment us before the time? That time is called here the [great day] because the greatest workes of God shal be accomplished in that day. For first, an assembly of all men and Angels shall bee made by the sound of a Trumpet, who shall be cited before Gods judgment seat, though they were resolved into dust many thousand years before. Secondly, all the workes and intentions of men, good or bad, shall be in that day revealed, Eccles. 12. 14. Thirdly, another great worke is, the giving of a most upright sentence upon all men: of Absolution unto the godly, and of condemnation upon the wicked Angels and men. Fourthly, the reward shall bee given to every man according to his worke: to the godly, free reward of life and glory: to the wicked, deserved condemnation. Fifthly, then shall Christ, God and man, give up his kingdome unto his Father, and shall cease to raigne, not as God, for he shall be still equall to his Father; but as Mediator: for an end shall bee put to all families, societies, Civill and Ecclesiasticall distinctions of governments, so as in regard of outward government and administration, this his kingdome shall cease.

The great workes which shal be performed on the great day.

Use. Let the remembrance of this great day strike us with feare and reverence of it. Shall every worke be brought unto judgement? Then Let us feare God, and keepe his Commandements; it is the use that Salomon maketh, Eccles. 12. and considering those terrors of the Lord, what manner of men ought wee to be in all holy conversation? saith the Lord. Yea, the Devils themselves beleeve and tremble in remembrance of this terrible and great day; but how many Atheists bee there worse than the Devils themselves, that make a mocke of these great works, not fearing nor acknowledging the Scriptures, Heaven, Hell, God, Devill, nor this great judgement day; but experience shal teach such fooles, who in the meane time might learne so much of the Devil himselfe, (but that God hath given them into his hand to bee led by his will) to tremble at the remembrance of this dreadfull day; and let all that love the Lord shake off security, and stand in awe, and feare with another feare: let their hearts be smitten with a reverent feare, that this day overtake them not unawares.

Atheists scoffe at that which maketh the very devils to tremble.

v. 7 *Even as Sodome and Gomorrha, and the Cities about them, which in like manner as they did, committed and followed strange flesh, are set forth for an example, and suffer the vengeance of eternall fire.

In this verse is laid downe the third and last example, proving the first part of the former reason, and it is the first part of a similitude. The words [Even as] signifying that the holy Ghost here instituteth a comparison, the former part or proposition whereof is in this verse, & the reddition or second part in the two next following. In the example consider three things: first, the people who were destroyed. Secondly, the sin for which they were destroyed. Thirdly, the destruction or punishment it selfe. First, the people destroyed, were Sodome and Gomorrha, and the rest of the Cities about them; which Cities are named, Deut. 29. 23. Admah and Zeboim: the reason of whose destruction is noted by the Apostle, because they followed the sinnes of Sodome and Gomorrha, They sinned in like manner; so as they being found in the same sinnes, they were wrapped up in the same judgements. Here first marke that the holy Ghost mentioneth not the persons who were destroyed, but their Cities, to signifie an universall destruction, an utter ruine, and a totall overthrow of them; the which heaping up of so many words, expressing ſing the ſame thing, giveth us likewiſe to underſtand that place in 2 Pet. 2. 6. he turned their cities into aſhes, condemned them, and overthrew them. Whence we may note, that there is a difference betweene the people of God, and thoſe who will not bee obedient to his word, theſe meet with utter deſtruction. Gods people may be deſtroyed indeed, but not utterly: for wee muſt alwayes beleeve the Catholike Church upon earth. Elias in his time could not behold it; but yet there were ſeven thouſand reſerved from that generall Apoſtaſie of thoſe dayes. When the Lord viſiteth his owne houſe in judgement, his manner is to leave ſome remnants whom hee ſaveth, leſt their deſtruction ſhould be like this of Sodome and Gomorrah. So Iſaiah acknowledgeth: Except the Lord of hoſts had reſerved unto us even a ſmall remnant, we had beene like to Sodome, and the people of Gomorrah.

Vſe. This may teach every one of us true humility in regard of our owne deſervings, and true thankfulneſſe in regard of Gods gracious dealing with us: both of which muſt be often acknowledged of every member of the Church, and every man muſt confeſſe, and ſay with the Church, Lam. 3. It is the Lords mercies that we are not utterly conſumed. Secondly, in theſe people obſerve the juſtice of God, and his ſeverity in ſuch an univerſall deſtruction, ſparing none, but deſtroying even the children with the Parents, who ſinned not in following ſtrange fleſh as their fathers did, which maketh this a ſtrange and unſearchable judgement: whence the Atheiſts condemne theſe bookes of Moſes (whence this judgement is fetched) as attributing to God cruelty, and juſtifying in him injuſtice. But herein to cleare the juſt proceeding of the moſt righteous God; wee are to know, firſt that the child is Gods creature, and the life of it is Gods (hee being the Lord of life) ſo as he may take it away when he pleaſeth, having power to doe with his owne what he will. Secondly, children are parts of the parents, and therefore the Lord may juſtly infold them in the puniſhment of their fathers ſinne, to manifeſt his greater deteſtation of it. Thirdly, children are borne in originall ſinne, and therefore God may juſtly inroll them with their Parents, not onely in temporall puniſhments, but in everlaſting condemnation alſo.

Thirdly, in this people who are made examples, note that as wicked a people as theſe have had mercy offered them. Iſa. 1. 10. the Prophet cals the Jewes Princes, the Princes of Sodome, and their people the people of Gomorrah; that is, ſuch Princes and people as matched Sodome and Gomorrah themſelves in wickedneſſe; and yet hee inviteth them unto repentance, with proffer of mercie and promiſe of pardon; yea, though their ſinnes were as red as ſcarlet, he would make them white as ſnow, verſ. 18. Whence wee may learne, that the mercy of God every where matcheth his juſtice: in juſtice hee overthroweth Sodome and Gomorrah, and in mercy ſaveth thoſe who were every whit as wicked as they; his free grace bringeth thoſe to heaven, who by their ſinne equalled themſelves to thoſe whom his juſtice had detruded into hell. Yea, it offereth and giveth repentance to them which are holden in the ſnare of the devill, and ruled at his will, 2 Tim. 2. 25. Manaſſeh himſelfe who broke off his covenant with God, by making league with the devill, found mercy with God upon his repentance. 2 Chron. 33.

Vſe. Let not the greatneſſe of our ſinnes diſmay us from ſeeking the Lord: thy ſinnes are not above the ſinnes of Sodome and Gomorrah, for which mercy hath beene obtained; uſe thou alſo meanes to turne unto God, and there is mercy in ſtore; but ſee thou abuſe not this mercy unto ſinne.

Fourthly, note that in the ſame time this people of Sodome and Gomorrah was deſtroyed, Lot eſcaped, though hee was in Sodome: for at the time of the execution, the Angel led him out from among them, and not before. Which teacheth, that although the Lord ſeeme ſometime to neglect his deare children and ſervants, and leave them in tribulation: yet the inſtant time of their neceſſity ſheweth his gracious and ſeaſonable regard and remembrance of them. The Iſraelites had a promiſe, that after foure hundred and thirty yeares, they ſhould be delivered from bondage in Ægypt; which promiſe the Lord was not unmindfull of, neither for the ſubſtance nor circumſtance of time; for in the very ſame night that the time was expired, their deliverance was wrought according to the promiſe. Our duty hence is, to learne in the middeſt of our affliction, with quiet hearts to reſt and rely our ſelves upon God, waiting his time wherein hee will come in mercy unto us.

Fifthly, note that with this people of Sodome and Gomorrah, the other cities Admah and Zeboim, becauſe they followed their ſinnes, were likewiſe deſtroyed. Where we learne to avoid the wicked manners and faſhions of the world, not imitating theſe leſſer cities, which imitated the greater in their wicked manners; but on the contrary, follow the example of David, in ſhedding rivers of teares when hee beheld men not keeping the lawes of God. We ſhould not with drie eyes behold mens impieties; yea, for this end our hearts ſhould be like unto Lots: when wee ſee the ſinnes of our people breake out as the ſinnes of Sodome and Gomorrah, our righteous hearts ſhould be vexed within us, in the daily ſeeing and hearing of ſuch uncleanneſſe. And thus much of the people puniſhed.

Follow not the multitude to doe evill: neither let the common error prejudice the truth.

Now followeth the ſecond point in the example: namely, the ſinnes for which Sodome and Gomorrah were deſtroyed, in theſe words: They committed fornication, and followed ſtrange fleſh. Firſt, they committed fornication. Secondly, they committed sinnes against nature it selfe, following strange flesh. To understand the vilenesse of these sinnes consider two things; first, the cause and occasion of them: and that was abundance of prosperity and plentifulnesse of Gods blessings. For Sodome was as a Garden of God, enriched with variety of profits and pleasures: this caused Lot to chuse Sodome to dwell in. This ground nourished foure bitter roots, from which these sinnes of fornication and following strange flesh did spring, reckoned up by Ezekiel, chap. 16. 49. The sins of thy sister Sodome were first Pride, by reason of prosperity. Secondly, fulnesse of bread: that is, they gave themselves to eating and drinking excessively; for so saith Luke, 17.28. Thirdly, Idlenesse, which was the daughter of their security. Fourthly, unmercifulnesse, or contempt of the poore, and these must needs nourish all sinnes of uncleannesse: unto which adde a fifth sinne, mentioned, Gen. 19. 9. and 14. that is, contempt of heavenly admonition and instruction; for they scorned Lot while hee warned them of their danger.

The second thing in their sinne, is the measure of it, They sinned in like manner, &c. The originall signifieth and implyeth not only a bare committing of sinne, but a giving of themselves over to commit their filthy lusts, and that impudently and shamelessely; which the Prophet Esay noted also, chap. 3. 9. They declare their sins as Sodome, and hide them not: shewing that they were past all shame in these most shamefull sinnes. Yea, they boasted and gloried in them; both which may be gathered in Gen. 19. 5. and 9.

Doctr. 1. By these sinnes wee are taught to take a view of these last times, unto which that of Ezekiel unto Jerusalem may be properly applied, Thou hast justified thy Sisters (namely, Samaria and Sodome) in all their abominations. So these last times justifie Sodome in her abominations, which I prove thus: First, the Church of Rome is that Sodome wherein the two Prophets were slaine, Revel. 11. 8. it is there so called, because it matcheth Sodome in her sinnes, in that it teacheth the sinnes of Sodome in making lawes to inhibit lawfull marriage in sundry sorts of men, to tolerate fornication, and such filthinesse: yea, not onely by the Scriptures, but in many other sundry, ancient, and some of their owne records, it is manifest, that Rome is Sodome. Whence wee see not onely the duty of every Lot, and righteous person, namely, to hasten out of her, but also the end and destruction that abideth her to bee everlasting fire. Secondly, againe in these times is must be verified, and is also, which was applied by Christ unto them of his age, Luk. 17. 28. It is in these latter times, as it was in the dayes of Lot, men eat and drinke, buy and sell, marry, and give in marriage, and thinke of nothing; and such is the wonderfull security of many professors, that many Cities in the middest of the

A Chuch herein may match, if not exceed even Sodome and Gomorrah themselves. Thirdly, whosoever (saith Christ) shall not beleeve and obey the doctrine of the Gospell, it shall be easier for Sodome and Gomorrah in the day of judgement than for them. Which sentence might move most men to tremble, who whilest they take themselves freed from Sodoms sinnes; fornication, and following strange flesh, they nourish a sinne within them, which maketh them as farre off their salvation as Sodome it selfe is, and that is the not receiving of the Gospell as they ought: most men content themselves to live civilly, and out of danger of humane lawes, but as for the doctrine of religion, and yet much more the power and life of it, it lieth horribly neglected. But Sodome her selfe shall be saved before such men.

B Doct. 2. In that fornication and following strange flesh are the sinnes of Sodome; we are taught to avoid this sinne of fornication, and all sinnes of uncleanenesse. For first, the heavy curse of God is passed not onely against Sodome and Gomorrah for these sinnes; but whersoever they be found, they be sins that burne to destruction, Job 31. 12. they set families on fire, and devoure them utterly, waste and consume them. Againe, no fornicators, adulterers, wantons, buggerers, shal ever be admitted into the kingdome of heaven: and in verse 13. the same Apostle propoundeth six reasons why we should flie fornication: first, our bodies are the Lords, and must be serviceable unto him. Secondly, wee looke they should be raised to glory in the last day, and therefore wee must in the meane time keepe them honourable. Thirdly, they are the members of Christ, wee may not then make them the members of an harlot. Fourthly, wheras all other sinnes are without the body, this directly is against the body. Fifthly, the body is the Temple of the holy Ghost, and these sinnes make it the devils stie and stewes. Sixthly, our bodies are bought with a price, and it is sacrilege not to glorifie God in the body, as well as in the soule, seeing both are alike his. Now if any man bee solicited by temptation unto these sinnes, and would know how hee might overmaster them, he must begin with his heart, and obtaine and retaine within it the feare of God, which only is able to over-rule him. This grace alone preserved Ioseph, being daily enticed by Potiphars wife: How shall I doe this wickednesse, and sinne against God? Gen. 39. 9.

C D The third point in this example, is the punishment in selfe; in which three things may be noted: first, the matter of it; they suffered the punishment of eternall fire by fire, we must not understand our fire, not such materiall and bodily fire as ours is, but an eternall fire: that is, the endlesse and comfortlesse apprehension of Gods wrath for sinne eternally burning, that is, alwayes terribly tormenting the sinner; called fire, because as burning of fire is the most horrible and sensible torment unto nature, so

1 Cor. 6. 9.

so much more terrible is this torment: which elsewhere is called by other names, as the worme that never dieth, &c. Where in the fearefulnesse of the punishment, marke the grievousnesse of this sinne: it were therefore to bee wished that whoredome might bee punished with death. The theefe doth not more, if so much harme against families and Common-wealths, as sinners of this kinde and qualitie. The second thing is the time of their punishment, namely, when they gave themselves wholly to fornication, and were come to the height in their sinnes. Where note, that though the Lord bee very slow to wrath, yet hee recompenseth that slownesse with the heavinesse of it when hee commeth; seeing hee commeth not till he must needs, and that is not till sinne bee at the height, and must of necessity be taken downe: as appeareth in those foure hundred yeares allotted for the filling up of the Amorites sinnes. Let us then beware of abusing Gods patience, by adding to our sinnes; for then hee is adding unto, and heaping his judgements; and wee shall finde that though hee come slowly, yet hee will strike surely, if wee give not such a stroke to our sinnes by repentance, as in due time his judgements might be prevented. The third thing noted here, is the use of his punishment; namely, herein they were made an example to the whole world. Which teacheth us that Gods judgements are so many reall Sermons against the sinnes of the sonnes of men: for God teacheth not only vocally by his word in the ministery of it, but really also by his workes in the execution of his judgements. Iob saith, that God speaketh to men once or twice: therein teaching that corrections are the speeches of God in mens eares; so as no person or people can goe cleare away with that plea, that they wanted all meanes of instruction, seeing the whole earth is filled with the judgements of God.

The Lord is slow to anger, but much in wrath.

Gen. 15. 16.

To avoid Gods stroke, strike downe thine owne sinnes.

Gods judgements are reall Sermons.

v. 8. Likewise notwithstanding these dreamers also defile the flesh, and despise government, and speake evill of them that are in authoritie.

Now the Apostle commeth to the proofe of the second part of the former reason: namely, that these seducers are they which take liberty to sinne: and therefore they shall bee destroyed. This is proved in this, and some verses following, by a particular rehearsall of certaine sinnes apparent in these men.

In this verse three things are offered to bee considered of us: First, the setting downe of two vices unto which these men are addicted: first, they defile the flesh: secondly, they despise government. Secondly, the fountaine of these and other their sinnes in this word, dreamers. Thirdly, the manner of their sinnes, in these words; Likewise notwithstanding; namely, in two things: first, as Sodome and Gomorrah sinned, so sinned these likewise, no otherwise than they. Secondly, they did not onely sinne as they of Sodome did; but notwithstanding they knew what had befallen Sodome and Gomorrah, they not being afraid of those judgements, rush into these sinnes: and hereby they are convinced to bee dreamers; seeing they sleepe securely in the midst of such judgements.

In handling the words we will first speake of the fountaine, because it is first in nature, and then secondly, of their sins flowing from thence. The originall of these sinnes, is that they are dreamers; which word leadeth us to a double cause of them; first, that they are sleepers made heavy with sleepe; and secondly, in this sleepe of theirs they are deluded with dreames. Wee are then to understand, first, what this sleepe is; and in the next place, what bee the dreames which in their sleepe delude them. This sleepe is not that naturall sleepe which oppresseth the body; but a spirituall sleepe, like unto that in divers things going over the soule, binding up the faculties of the same, and bringing a heavinesse or deadnesse rather into all the powers of

C man; so farre forth as they ought to moving in spirituall actions and affaires. It causeth the minde never to thinke seriously of God, or a mans owne estate: the conscience never or seldome to accuse for sinne committed; the will never or seldome to will that which is truly good; the affections never or seldome to bee moved at Gods word or workes. Thus it goeth over the whole soule, and casteth it in a dead sleepe, so as it is altogether unfit to goe about the actions of an heavenly life. Example hereof wee have in the old world; they ate and dranke, &c. and knew nothing till the flood came: they dreamed continually of many other things, but never of their owne destruction. Dives also was cast on such

D a sleepe; he fared deliciously every day, he never thought of heaven, for hee was never to come there; nor of hell fire till he felt the flame. This spirituall sleepe is three-fold; first, the naturall sleepe of heart by which every one is overtaken; so as by nature no man can so much as move himselfe to the least good, till God awake him, and say to him, Awake thou that sleepest, and stand up from the dead. The second sleepe is a slumber, and indeed the remainders of this naturall sleepe in the children of God, being awakened out of their dead sleepe; for even they are overtaken often with a spirituall slumber, by reason of remainders of sinne in them. So the Spouse acknowledgeth, Cant. 5. 2. I sleepe, but my heart waketh. The third sleepe is the increase of that naturall sleepe and deadnesse of heart by the custome of sinne, when as the heart is made past feeling, and altogether senselesse through continuance in sinne, Ephes. 4. 19. This last kinde is that which is attributed here to these seducers, for so the word notwithstanding importeth: for although they knew the judgements of God against sinne, yet they are senselesse and careless in the middest of them.

Now in the next place, let us see what these dreames are here spoken of; and they be nothing else, but wicked, carnall, and vaine imaginations arising from an impure heart, and conceived in a corrupted minde, which in the end deceive, and delude men no otherwise than a dreame, which while a man sleepeth seemeth to have some truth in it, but as soone as one awaketh, it vanisheth away, and indeed hath in it nothing at all. An example whereof we have in the rich man, Luk. 12. 19. who in his fulnesse and increase of riches, dreamed of an happinesse and continuance in it many yeares, when that night his soule was taken away. The Angell of the Church of Laodicea dreamed that he was rich, increased with wealth, and stood in need of nothing; whereas he knew not that he was blind, poore, miserable, and naked, Revel. 3. 17. So the Pharisie dreamed that he was another manner of man than the poore sinfull Publican; but it was a meere dreame, for the other departed away justified.

Doct. Hence we may note the cause why so few entertaine the doctrine of the Gospell, so few forsake their sinnes and turne unto God; and that is because men are dreamers, being cast and lulled asleepe in their sinnes, and therein deluded with many false imaginations which draw them from God. As first, some plead that they were never booke-learned, they could never write nor reade, therfore they must bee excused in their ignorance, as not being bound to know the word of God; they need not frequent so many Sermons, or if they doe, they are not greatly to care to carry them away. Secondly, others dreame that because they have lived thus long, and yet never had any such crosse, as they see befal others, therfore they are most happy men, and God loveth them; they finde the blessing of God upon them in every thing, and therefore they serve God well enough, or so much as serveth their turne. Thirdly, others have learning and knowledge, and begin to dreame that therefore they want nothing, they blesse themselves in their naked knowledge, and never have care in their hearts to receive Christ. Fourthly, others are prophane and dreame that the Master will not come yet; God will not yet call them, they shall have time enough to repent in; for they crave but one house on their death-beds, and that they shall have; in the meane time they give themselves over to riot and excesse, never regarding though all the world cry shame upon them, untill their Master take them unawares. Lastly, it is a common dreame amongst men, that the promise of eternall life is but a dreame, and so many make but a dreame of the whole word of God, and all religion; that looke as Sarah did not so much regard the promise as shee ought to have done, because she tooke it for a dreame, and made a matter of laughter of it, Gen. 18. 12. and as those who were reduced from the captivity of Babylon, entertained the promise of their returne but as a dreame, by their owne confession, Psal. 126. and Peter when hee was delivered by the Angell out of prison, could not bee perswaded that it was so, but that hee had seene a vision, or dreamed a dreame, Act. 12. 9. Even so, men hold the doctrine of the Gospell but as a dreame, seeing they can hold it in opinion, but never endevour to reforme their lives by it: but such dreames disappoint men commonly of salvation; which while men bring to the hearing of the Word, it is no marvell if we have such just cause of complaint for want of profiting under it, as appeareth every where at this day. The most powerfull Ministery shall little prevaile, so long as men come with their hearts full fraught with their carnall imaginations, and with such heavinesse of Spirit. Secondly, in that these dreames are made the causes of all sinnes, wee are taught to learne the lesson of the Apostle, Ephes. 5. 14. Awake thou that sleepest, and stand up from the dead. And, 1 Thess. 5. 6. Let us not sleepe as others doe: which that wee may doe, consider, first, the reasons, and meanes which may be effectuall to awaken us; and secondly, the notes to know when wee are wakened. For the former, consider, first, the infinite justice and wrath of God against the least sinne; which made the Apostle say, It is a fearefull thing to fall into the hands of God. Secondly, the greatnesse of our sins, and the number which is like the sand upon the sea shore. Thirdly, the uncertainty of the day and houre of our death, which as it leaveth us, so shall the last judgement finde us. Fourthly, our vow in Baptisme; wherein we promise to forsake the Devill, and all our owne lusts. Fifthly, Christs passion and his bloudy sweat, not for his owne, but our sinnes, which made him cry, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Sixthly, that the night is past, and it is now day, the Sunne is up, even the Son of Righteousnesse is risen upon us; and therefore we are to be raised out of our sleepe, and walke as children of the light, Rom. 13. 12, 13.

Secondly, if a man would know whether he begin to be awakened, let him observe whether his heart have begun to move in spirituall actions or no. For that body is wakened, out of bodily sleepe, which can move it selfe in bodily actions. Quest. When doth the heart begin thus to move it selfe, and how shall I know it? Answ. When thou beginnest to turne thy eyes inwardly into thy selfe, and canst finde, and espy the priuy corruptions which lurke within thee.

Most men dreame that the doctrine of the Gospell is but a dreame.

Dreames of men waking.

Heb. 10. 13.

thee. Secondly, when thou art inwardly and heartily displeased with thy selfe, and grieved for thy sinnes. Thirdly, when thou canst humbly and heartily sue to God for pardon, and canst hunger and thirst after Christ and his merits above all earthly things. Fourthly, when thou beginnest to endevour to doe the will of God, and please him in all things, then assure thy selfe thou art wakened out of thy sleepe of sinne, and not before.

Die every day, that thou maist die once well on thy dying day.

Thirdly, if dreaming be the fountaine of all sin, we must learne the contrary vertue, namely, that being once awakened, we strive to watch and be sober, 1 Thess. 5.6. For the practice of which duty these rules are to be marked: first, we must daily and diligently observe our selves, our hearts, and sinnes; and seeing what sinnes we are most prone unto, there must wee double our care and watchfulnesse: for otherwise where we are weakest, Satan soonest maketh a breach, for there he makes his greatest assaults. Secondly, we must daily looke for an evill day, so as we forecast every day to endure the worst that it can bring forth against us and our profession: out of which forecast in vaine shall any man purpose to keepe faith and a good conscience. We may cry peace, peace; for then commonly sudden desolation commeth upon us. Thirdly, wee must esteeme of every day as our last day, that so wee may be daily prepared to our death: daily living as though we were daily dying, carrying our selves in the midst of our affaires, as though we were cast upon our death beds: the good servant expecteth still the comming of his Master, whereas the evill servant his property is to deferre it.

Lastly, seeing we are all by nature such sleepers as these were, and our hearts as ready to be deluded by such dreames, our care must be that the word of God may dwel plentifully in them, which alone can take up the roome of them, and keepe out these dreames and false imaginations, without which care our owne hearts (being full of guile) can doe nothing but deceive us: yea, our naturall reason is nothing but a dreame, upon which we may not rely our selves, for then we deceive our soules; but onely upon the sure word of the Prophets and Apostles, and the directions thereof.

The second point is, the induction of the two sinnes, which are laid to the charge of these deceivers: the first is filthinesse of the flesh: the second contempt of Magistracie. The former is in these words [These also defile the flesh:] that is, they abuse their bodies by fornication, and sins of that kinde, even as Sodome did, of which we have spoken in the seventh verse, and therefore passe this sinne over without further handling. Onely, let this one thing bee here remembred; that seeing it is a sinne of Sodome to defile the body with the sinnes of the seventh commandement, our duty is to reserve within us that speciall care whereby our bodies may be preserved in holinesse and honour; 1 Thess. 4.3.4. This

A is the will of God: The body must be given up as an holy sacrifice to God, else it shall not bee acceptable, Rom. 12.1. Wouldest thou have thy body rise up unto glory and fellowship with God and Christ at the last day? then let thy care be to lay it downe in the grave in honour, by preserving it a pure member of Christ; for without holinesse, no man shall ever see God, that is, have fellowship with him being a most holy and chaste spirit; yea, the contrary things ought not to be named in the Church of God, Eph. 5.3.

The second sinne followeth in these words; and despise government, and speake evill of those that are in authority.] In which words their contempt of authority is set downe in two branches: First, in their judgement and opinion, [they despise] that is (as the word signifieth) they refuse and put away, yea, and so farre as they can put downe all Lordship, government, civill power and dominion. Secondly, in their practice they speake evill, &c. First, in their judgement they put downe government, by teaching (for otherwise they could not) and maintaining that after men were converted to the faith, being now become Christians and beleevers, they were no longer to be under Magistracie or authority; but their necks were to be eased from that yoke: and this errour was dangerously sowne by the malicious man in the Primitive Church, and called some trouble and labor upon the Apostles themselves in their times: as appeareth 1 Cor. 7.21. where the Apostle answereth this case, which servants themselves were bold to call in question being converted; Art thou called a servant? care not for it: So Tit. 3.1. Put them in remembrance that they be subject to principalities and powers. So as it was a lesson not wel learned in those first ages of the Gospel. This was the judgement and opinion of the false Teachers, which even the word [despise] implieth and presupposeth. Now whereas some might say, that they must needs (will they nill they) be under authority: for Rulers and Princes would and did keepe them under: The Apostle addeth, [and speake evill, &c.] that is, although they cannot shake off government so easily as they would, yet they can easily manifest their malice against it, in reviling them that are in authority.

First, then we are to speake of their doctrine, and then of their practice. In the former consider three things: first, what is this rule or government which they despise: secondly, upon what ground refuse they to bee under authority: thirdly, upon what ground doth Iude condemne them for this refusall. First, to know what this authority is, we must distinguish all government into divine and humane: The Apostle Peter acknowledgeth this distinction, 1 Pet. 2.13. Submit your selves to every humane ordinance. Divine government is the absolute power of God, whereby hee maketh lawes to binde the conscience, and that under paine of life and death eternall. This is the power of all the Trinity; but the administration of it is given to the Sonne. This power is not here meant; for had they denyed this they could not have carried a face or shew of Christians. The other (which here is understood) is humane, or civill rule and dominion, whereby man is set over man, which may bee thus described: Civill government is a state of superiority, consisting in the power of commanding, and in the power of the sword for the common good of mankind. That it is a state of superiority appeareth, Rom. 13. 1. Let every soule be subject to the higher power. Further, I say it consisteth in a double power: first, of commanding, that is, of making edicts and lawes, of calling and conventing. Secondly, of the Sword, and that in foure things: first, in arresting: secondly, imprisoning: thirdly, putting to death: fourthly, making war in way of protection or otherwise. This second power, namely, of the Sword, is added: first, to put a difference betweene the authority of the Magistracie and Ministery; which difference standeth in three things: first, the Magistracy hath a power in it selfe, whereby the Civill Magistrate may command in his owne name. The Ministery hath power onely to pronounce what God commandeth, and that in his name. Secondly, the authority of the civill Magistrate is in himselfe; the authority of the Minister not in himselfe but in Christ: so as the Civill Magistrate may command obedience to himselfe, but the Minister commandeth it to God. Thirdly, the Civill government hath an absolute power to compell, and inforce the outward man; but the Ministery hath a power onely to counsell, perswade, exhort. Secondly, this power of the Sword is added to distinguish it from all private power, as in Schooles, families, which have a power of commanding, but not of the Sword. Lastly, I adde for the common good of mankind: Rom. 13. 4. the Magistrate is the Minister of God, for thy wealth; that is, procuring the welfare of soule and body: which standeth in two things: first, true Religion: secondly, civill Justice; both which are by Magistracie maintained. It may be here demanded; but how farre doth this civill government extend it selfe? Ans. It extendeth it selfe to two things: first, over all causes, things and words of men Civil and Ecclesiasticall; for temporall causes there is no question: that it extendeth it selfe also to the causes of the Church, appeareth, in that the Kings must have the booke of the Law before them, Deut. 17. 18. he must reade it, and execute it accordingly: yea, he must doe all the Law, that is, see it to be done. Iosiah kept the Passeover himselfe, and gave commandement concerning the preparation and performance of the same, 2 Chron. 35. and saw it done. But here two differences in this authority must be marked: First, that civill authority doth not after the same manner order causes ecclesiasticall as civill: for in civill causes it ordereth all, and executeth all likewise; but in Ecclesiasticall it hath power to order all, but not to execute them. The Magistrate indeed ordereth and prescribeth in all, but the Minister is hee that executeth in Ecclesiasticall causes. Secondly, that civill authority hath power over all the things of men, but not over the things of God; as the Word and Sacraments, faith, conscience, the graces of God in the heart: Civill power hath no rule over these; concerning which, Christ commanded to give unto God the things of God, and unto Cæsar, Cæsars. Secondly, the authority extendeth it selfe to all persons, as well Ecclesiasticall as Civill, but so, as it stretcheth onely unto the outward man, to the body, life, conversation, and outward things, but not to the soule and conscience, of which God is the only Lord and Governour. If it be asked, what are the kinds of this power? I answer, it is of three sorts: first, in one person man or woman, which is a Monarchy: secondly, in moe, when the government is in a few states and Peeres: thirdly, in the body of the people, which is a popular government: by one of these three is every Common-wealth governed. These are the Governments despised by these seducers.

The authority of the Magistrate and Minister farre different.

The second point followeth, namely, upon what grounds they despised government. Ans. Their grounds may bee knowne by the Heretikes of this time, the Anabaptists, who are given up to the same errour; and they may be reduced to these foure heads: First, subjection (say they) came in with sinne: and therefore Christ having taken away sinne, hath taken away subjection also. The former they prove out of Gen. 1. 26. Man in innocencie was to rule over the fish of the sea, the fowles of heaven, over the beasts, the earth, and al creeping things, but not over man: but after the fall, Eve is put under subjection to Adam, Genes. 3. Answ. There be two kindes of subjection: the first, Servile: the second, Civill. The former is the subjection of a slave or vassall, who is onely to seeke the proper good of his Lord and Master. The latter whereby one man is subject to another for the common good. The former came in by sinne: the latter was before sinne, in innocencie. Eve was subject to Adam in innocencie: thus the Apostle reasoneth, 1 Tim. 2. 12. Let the woman be subject to the man: for shee was taken out of the man. Againe, in innocency it was said, Increase and multiply; and therefore in the light of nature it is a plaine distinction betweene the father and sonne, and an inequality.

The first place is mis-alleaged, Gen. 1. 26. because it was spoken not of man alone, but of all mankinde, even women as well as men; who have also dominion given over the unreasonable creatures. As for the second place, Gen. 3. 16. Hee shall rule, and thou shalt bee subject: It is not spoken because the ordinance of God

God ſimply conſidered in it ſelfe was not before the fall: but becauſe now the ſubjection was joyned with feare, griefe, and ſorrow, which it wanted in innocency: for then it was a pleaſure, and this makes ſubjection a curſe in ſome reſpect; but it is not ſo (no not ſince the fall) in it ſelfe conſidered.

Obiect. Secondly, they reaſon thus: Every beleever is in the Kingdome of Heaven, even in this life: Now in Heaven there is no King but God, and therefore no beleever is to bee ſubject to any but God and Chriſt. Anſw. There bee two kinds of governments upon earth; one ſpirituall and inward, this is the Kingdome of Heaven and of Chriſt within man, ſtanding in peace of conſcience, and joy in the holy Ghoſt: in regard of which regiment of Chriſt, there is no diſtinction of perſons, no difference of bond or free, Maſter, Servant, Father, Son; but all are one in Chriſt. The other is a civill regiment, wherein orders and diſtinctions of men muſt be maintained; as ſome muſt be Princes, ſome ſubjects, ſome fathers, ſome children, ſome maſters, ſome ſervants. Whence it is that every man ſuſtaines upon him two perſons; and is to be conſidered firſt, as a beleever, and as a member of the Kingdome of Chriſt: thus is he equall to any beleever, and any beleever equall to him. Secondly, as a member of the Common-wealth wherein he liveth; thus he is either a ſuperiour or inferiour. Their reaſon were ſomewhat, if every beleever were onely in the Kingdome of Heaven; but every of them living here in earth is alſo a member of ſome Common-wealth.

Obiect. Thirdly, Civill government is full of cruelty, which having the power of the ſword deſtroyeth the bodies and ſoules of offenders, in not giving them time of repentance: and therefore is intolerable among Chriſtians. Anſ. Moſes and the Levites by Gods commandement ſlew 3000. of the Iſraelites for worſhiping their golden Calfe, and never gave them ſpace to repent. Secondly, the malefactor that is not moved to repentance at the ſentence of preſent death, there is little hope ever he would repent after, if he had longer time. Thirdly, Gods wiſdome and commandement muſt take place of mans reaſon; he commanded that the malefactor ſhould die, and thereby that the evill be taken away; better it is that one ſhould be deſtroyed than an unity; better that one bee removed, than a multitude by the contagion of his example infected.

Obiect. Fourthly, they plead liberty by ſome places and teſtimonies of Scripture, Gal. 5. 1. Stand faſt in the liberty wherein Chriſt hath ſet you free. Anſw. The liberty which Chriſt hath procured us, is liberty of conſcience, freedome from the power of ſinne, Satan, death, hell, and condemnation; and therefore ſpirituall: but not from temporall and civill ſubjection.

Obiect. Rom. 13. 8. Owe nothing to any man but love: therefore not obedience. Anſ. There be two kinds of debt: firſt, a civill debt occaſioned by contract and bargaining betweene man and man: the ſecond is a debt to which we are bound by Gods Law and covenant; the place is meant of the former, ſo farre as it lies in our power: but we are bound ſtill to obedience and ſubjection by the latter.

Obiect. Matth. 17. 26. The Kings ſonnes are free from tribute; and therefore from ſubjection. Anſ. Chriſt ſpeaketh that of himſelfe, who by his birth was heire to the Crowne and Kingdome of the Jewes: and therefore by right was to pay none; neither did but for avoiding of offence: what is this to free other men from obedience to the Magiſtrate?

Obiect. 1 Cor. 7. Ye are bought with a price, be ye not the ſervants of men. Anſw. The meaning is, that ſervants ſhould not ſubject themſelves to men as to abſolute Lords; for we muſt doe ſervice one to another for Gods ſake; and not only for God but in God.

Obiect. Beleevers are able to governe themſelves every way, and need not any government of man. Anſ. One thing it is what we doe, another that we ought to doe; we ought indeed ſo to live, as not to need governours, but wee doe not; yea, and if beleevers could, yet were the reaſon naught: for the Church containes as well bad as good, hypocrites as well as ſincere Chriſtians; and therefore the beſt Churches need Magiſtracie for the puniſhment of the evill doers, and the praiſe of them that doe well. Yea, the Church lying open to the malice of Satan and the wicked, ſtandeth ever in need of Magiſtracy to protect it by force and warre, or otherwiſe.

The third generall point is; upon what ground doth the Apoſtle here blame and condemne theſe ſeducers for deſpiſing civill government? Anſ. The ground is, becauſe it is a ſolemne ordinance of God; called therefore by Peter, a creation or creature, which bindeth every ſoule unto ſubjection to the higher power, Rom. 13. 1. and that for conſcience ſake, which reſpecteth not ſo much the rule it ſelfe, as Gods Commandement, ſubjecting not onely Civill but all Eccleſiaſticall perſons thereunto. Chriſt himſelfe taking upon him mans nature, was ſubject unto authoritie, ſubmitting himſelfe unto Caiphas and Pilate, yea, to apprehenſion, arraignment, condemnation, and execution, Matth. 26. Paul himſelfe, whoſe Apoſtolicall authoritie and ſpirituall weapons were able to bring downe every oppoſition; yet acknowledged that he muſt be judged by Ceſar, Act. 25. 11.

Obiect. Jerem. 1. 10. I ſet thee over Nations and Kingdoms to plant and plucke up; the Prophets therefore and their ſucceſſors are not to be ſubject unto civill Magiſtracy. Anſw. The Prophet is ſet over nations and kingdomes, not to governe by the civill ſword, but the ſword of the Spirit in his mouth; and he is to plant and plucke up kingdoms no otherwiſe, than by declaring that God would plant or pluck them up.

Regni mundi & regni Christi est mutua subj ctio. Bucer.

Object. Esay 60. 10. Kings shall come and serve the Church in the new Testament; and therefore the Church is not to bee subject unto Princes, but they unto it. Ans. In the Church are two things: first, the persons of men: secondly, the things of God. Now Kings are subject to the Church; but how? not to the persons of beleevers, but to the things of God, namely, the Word, Sacraments, faith, &c.

Object. Kings and Magistrates are as sheepe; Ministers are Pastors and Shepherds; therefore they are under the Ministers, as the flocks under the Shepherds. Ans. In the Prophets, Pastors, and Ministers, consider two things; first, their persons; secondly, their ministery. In regard of their persons all of them are subject to their own Princes, and that for conscience sake: but in regard of their Ministery, Princes, and Magistrates are to be subject thereunto, as where in the Word is taught, and Sacraments administred: Even as a meane man being a Sergeant, may arrest a Baron, Earle, or Duke, who may not resist him, because hee commeth with the Princes authority, unto which he must yeeld himselfe, though not unto the person of the Sergeant: so must Magistrates to the Ministers, comming not in their owne, but in the name of God. For this also must be marked, that Magistrates are not simply subjects to the Ministerie, but so farre as the Word is rightly taught, and Sacraments duly administred; for else they have power either to reforme or dispose such Ministers as shall faile in their administration: for even in this regard themselves are shepherds. As Jsay 44. 1. Cyrus is called a shepherd, though otherwise he be a sheepe, so farre as he is truly taught and directed by the Minister. So much of the ground.

The Pope the arch-rebell of the world.

Vse. By this doctrine we may discover the wickednesse and horrible rebellion of sundry persons in this age. First, of the Bishop of Rome that most ancient Rebell, who hath for many hundred yeares taken upon him an usurped supremacy over all civill government in the earth; which is the highest rebellion which ever the world hath heard of, seeing there is not a soule which must not be subject to the higher power. Object. Yea, but that place is meant of those that are to be subject, but the Popes themselves are exempted. Ans. But besides that the Text commandeth every soule to be subject, it is made a note of Antichrist, to exalt himselfe above God, and all that is called God; that is, all Magistrates.

Object. But they alleage the example of Vzziah the King, 2 Chron. 26. 20. who taking upon him presumptuously the office of the Priest, Azariah the Priest resisted him, cast him out of the Temple, and deposed him from his kingdome. Ans. Azariah resisted the King not by force or violence, but by word only and admonition, whereby he caused him to depart the Temple; neither did he depose him from his government; but being by God stricken with a leprosie, he was by the Law shut out from the company and society of men, and so disabled to governe; although the right of it still belonged unto him.

Object. Ob. They alleage likewise the example of Iehoiadah the high Priest, who deposed Queen Athaliah from her kingdome, and set up young Ioash to bee King, 2 Chron. 23. therefore the Pope hath authoritie to depose Kings and Emperours. Ans. Iehoiadah the high Priest was next to the King in bloud, 2 Chron. 22. 11. and was one of the States of the Land; who deposed her not alone, but by common consent of all the States and Peeres of the Land; as chap. 23. 1, 2. Hee indeed is chiefly named, because he was the chiefe of them in bloud; neither did he set up Ioas, but helped to maintaine his right which was usurped by Athaliah: in a word, he protected the right heire, but could not himselfe, nor did not dispose the Kingdome unto him. And of this kind are all their allegations: which yeeld no patronage at all to that usurped Papall authority, but even the Pope himselfe ought to bee subject to his Emperour, if hee would avoid his most just title of a most unjust usurper.

Object. Vse 2. Hence also may be observed that the exemption or immunitie of the Clergie from the authority of the civill Magistrate, is wicked, and a kinde of rebellion: and this is the condition of the whole Roman Clergie. Ob. They plead that Kings and Princes of their bountie have granted these privileges unto them. Answ. The Law of Nature acknowledgeth a civill subjection; the Law of God straitly enjoyneth it, and no Law of any man may offer violence, or derogate from either of these.

Thirdly, the Pope usurping a power to free subjects from their allegeance, and their oath of obedience hath beene for many hundred yeares a most wicked instrument of rebellion, as the Kingdomes of Europe have had too wofull experience of. If here they say, the Pope may dispense with the Lawes of Kingdomes: I answer, were it so that he could dispense with humane Lawes of Kings and Princes in their Countries and Provinces, (which is grosse usurpation) yet with what face dare he challenge to dispense with the Lawes of God and nature?

Popish religion urgeth men to forsweare the honour of the King.

Fourthly, wee see hence what wee are to esteeme of the Roman Religion: namely, as of a religion to be abhorred, as are these seducers themselves, because it is cleane contrary to Christian Religion: which teacheth to feare God and honour the King; but Roman Religion pretendeth to teach men to feare God, but putteth downe the honour of the King: nay, he that professeth that Religion, must sweare the flat contrary to the Kings honour.

Fifthly, we are hence directed what to think of that oath of the Supremacie unto the Bishop of Rome, namely, to bee such a one as fighteth directly against the Law of God and nature:

nature: ſeeing it giveth all Eccleſiaſticall government unto the Pope, which belongeth properly to Kings and Princes in their ſeverall dominions.

Sixthly, if every man muſt be ſubject to the power of the Magiſtracie for conſcience ſake, then all wandring beggers and rogues that paſſe from place to place, being under no certaine Magiſtracie or Miniſterie, nor joyning themſelves to any ſet ſociety in Church or Common-wealth, are plagues and banes of both, and are to be taken as maine enemies of this ordinance of God: and ſeeing a moſt excellent Law is provided to reſtraine them, it is the part of every good ſubject or Chriſtian to ſet themſelves for the executing, ſtrengthening, and upholding of the ſame.

And ſpeake evill of them which are in authority.] In theſe words the Apoſtle ſheweth how theſe falſe teachers pull downe authoritie by their practice, as in the former they did by their judgement: for when they cannot quite put downe all authority and Magiſtrates, they ſpeak evill of them, and blaſpheme thoſe that exerciſe the ſame: that is, (as the Word ſignifieth) thoſe that are in dignities and glories: for that is his meaning when hee calleth Princes by the name of Glories. Here two things are to be conſidered: firſt, their ſinne, [ſpeake evill:] ſecondly, the amplification of their ſinne, partly in this verſe, and partly in the next. The ſinne is mentioned and condemned in Exod. 22. 28. Thou ſhalt not ſpeake evill of the ruler of thy people. Eccleſ. 10. Curſe not the King, not in thy heart, for the birds of the aire ſhall bewray it. Which ſin we ſhould be ſo farre from, as that we ſhould not receive any accuſation againſt any Elder under two or three witneſſes. 1 Timoth. 5. If wee may not receive ſlanders againſt Rulers, much leſſe may we raiſe them.

Vſe 1. See here as in a glaſſe the common ſinne of theſe daies, wherein the common practice, yea, and table talke of men, is the cenſure of the doings of the Magiſtrate, and the doctrine of the Miniſter. Paul when he called Ananias a painted wall; being reproved, anſwered, that hee knew him not to bee the high Prieſt, for then he would not have reproached him: that is, hee acknowledged him not, but knew him rather to be an Vſurper, which made him uſe that boldneſſe. Secondly, if a man may not ſpeake evill of a Ruler, then much leſſe may any private man take a ſword in hand to take away the life of a Prince or Magiſtrate. David knew that he was to ſucceed Saul in the Kingdome, and that Saul ſought his life daily, and yet his heart ſmote him when finding Saul at advantage, hee cut off but the lap of his garment, whereas hee might as eaſily have taken away his life: the ground of his griefe was, becauſe he was the Lords anointed. Where take notice of the Spirit that leadeth and ruleth thoſe Romiſh vaſſals, who are ſent out into Chriſtian lands with Commiſſion to take away the lives of the Lords anointed ones, who will not ſtoope to that Antichriſtian tyrannie. Inſtruments of Satan they are, inflamed by Diabolicall furie; fighting for their Babylon with the weapon of moſt monſtrous and unnaturall crueltie. Thirdly, wee are on the contrary taught hence to bleſſe our Magiſtrates, eſpecially the Lords anointed over us: as alſo other inferiour Magiſtrats, who although their perſons may be meane, yet are under the Supreme, as he under God is a Steward and Deputy for our wealth. The Apoſtle Paul willeth that prayers be made for all men, but eſpecially for Kings and Princes, and thoſe that are under them in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godlineſſe and honeſty. Ieremy wiſheth the people in captivity to pray for Nebuchadnezzar an Heathen King, that under him they might have peace. Hence is that good order commended unto us, whereby in our publike prayer we make ſolemne mention of our lawfull Magiſtrates, teſtifying both our deſire of their good, and our thankfulneſſe for their government.

Romiſh vaſſals authoriſed to take away the lives of the Lords anointed ones, the laps of whoſe garments they ought not to touch.

Secondly, the amplification of their ſinne ſtandeth partly herein, that they ſpeake evill of Dignities, Glories, Majeſties; that is, of thoſe whom God hath adorned with theſe; in detracting and detaining from them their due honour.

It may bee here asked, why doth the Holy Ghoſt call Magiſtrates by the names of Glory and Dignity? Ans. For two cauſes: firſt, becauſe the Lord hath ſet them in his owne roome and place, and accordingly honoureth them with titles befitting the ſame: Pſal. 82. 1. God ſtandeth in the aſſembly of Gods, that is, of Magiſtrates; called Gods, not onely becauſe he hath ſet them in his place; but alſo becauſe they have received a particular charge and commandement, and therewith a power of executing his owne judgements amongſt men upon earth as his deputies. 2 Chro. 16. 6. They execute not the judgements of man, but of the Lord. Secondly, theſe titles are given them, becauſe the Lord doth uſually furniſh them with worthy and peculiar gifts (though not alwaies of ſanctification) yet of regiment and government to bee anſwerable to their former deſignment, as of wiſdome, courage, zeale, &c. 1 Sam. 10. 9. when Saul was made King, the Lord gave him ſuch princely gifts, as it is ſaid, God gave him another heart, his heart was changed in regard of other gifts than formerly hee had: ſo when David was anointed King, and when Samuel had powred the horne of oyle upon his head, it is ſaid, 1 Sam. 16. 13. that the ſpirit of God came upon him, which furniſhed him with gifts both of regeneration & regiment alſo. In like manner the Lord tooke of the ſpirit of Moſes, and put it on the ſeventy Elders, Numb. 11. 17. whereby they were furniſhed with gifts of government, and enabled to beare rule, and judge juſtly, as Moſes was: ſuch titles therefore as theſe are not aſcribed unto them without juſt cauſe.

Yea.

Yea, how can they be fitlier called than Glories? ſeeing there is no greater glory in earth than to ſupply Gods roome, and to be enabled with gifts for the ſufficient diſcharge of it.

Hence learne, that it is lawfull for Princes to beare an outward pompe, in diet, buildings, coſtly apparell, and troopes of men: for they are dignities, and their dignitie being outward in regard of men, they may maintaine it by outward pompe, to procure more reverence and awe of men thereunto. So Agrippa and Bernice came with great pompe, and entred into the common hall: which pompe is not there diſcommended, but rather approved, as by the circumſtances of the Text appeareth. Act. 25. 23.

Secondly, Magiſtrats ought eſpecially to honour God, becauſe hee eſpecially honoureth them; this muſt they doe by diſcountenancing and puniſhing vice, and by ſetting up and maintaining true religion and vertue.

Thirdly, being in Gods place, they are to execute juſtice, without corruption or partialitie in the face and feare of God: 2 Chr. 9. 7. Seeing the judgement is the Lords, let the feare of God be upon you, take heed and doe it. Deut. 1. 17. Ye ſhall have no reſpect of perſons in judgement, but ſhall heare the ſmall as well as the great: ye ſhall not feare the face of man, for the judgement is Gods: and herein ſtands a great part of their glory.

Fourthly, we are in all lawfull things to yeeld free ſubjection and obedience unto our Magiſtrates and governours, even as unto God himſelfe, whoſe roome they are in; which duty the childe oweth alſo to his father, the ſervant to his Maſter, becauſe they alſo are ſet over them in Gods ſtead.

Fifthly, hence alſo is it lawfull for us to give to Princes the titles of Majeſtie and Grace, becauſe it hath pleaſed the holy Ghoſt to aſcribe them unto them, and by their titles to commend their perſons and places unto us; yea, and to furniſh them with ſuch gifts of Magiſtracie, as that they become not onely naked titles, but juſt ſignifications of the true honour which God hath graced them withall.

v. 9 *Yet Michael, the Archangel, when hee ſtrove againſt the Devill, and diſputed about the body of Moſes, durſt not blame him with curſed ſpeaking, but ſaid, The Lord rebuke thee.

In this verſe is laid downe another reaſon, amplifying the ſinne of theſe ſeducers, by a compariſon from the greater to the leſſe: and thus it ſtandeth: Michael the Archangel durſt not ſo much as raile on the Devill himſelfe, much leſſe may theſe upon Magiſtrates who are Gods; and conſequently their ſinne is heinous, who dare open their mouthes to revile Princes and Magiſtrates. Here one queſtion is moved; namely, whence the Apoſtle had this hiſtorie of the diſputation betweene Michael and the Devill, concerning the body of Moſes, ſeeing it is not to bee found in the Scriptures? I anſwer, the ſubſtance of it is in the Scripture, although not the circumſtances. For in Deut. 34. 6. is ſaid, that the Lord buried Moſes, but no man knoweth of his ſepulchre till this day. There is the ground of the hiſtory; the other particular concerning the contention of the Arch-angell and the Devill, with this manner of rebuking, is not found in the old Teſtament. Queſt. Where then had he this? Anſ. Either from ſome book then extant amongſt the Jewes, which is not now to bee found; or elſe from ſome tradition which paſſed among the Jewes from hand to hand, as many things did; as that 2 Timothy 3. 8. where the Apoſtle ſaith, that Iannes and Iambres withſtood Moſes; the hiſtory of which is not found in the old Teſtament.

Hence the Papiſts conclude, that the Word written is not ſufficient and perfect in and of it ſelfe, unleſſe the unwritten word be added unto it; that is, that word which is given by tradition: both which (ſay they) make a perfect word, but neither is perfect or ſufficient alone; grounding their opinion hence, that Iude alleageth an example out of a tradition, which is not found in Scripture. But that is an hereticall doctrine and untrue, ſeeing the perfection of things is not to be meaſured by every thing that is wanting unto it, but by the perfect end of it: for perfection is taken from the end. Whence I reaſon thus: If the written Word bee perfect and ſufficient to the end for which it is ordained, it is every way perfect: But it is perfect and ſufficient to that end: namely, to the glory of God, in working out perfectly the faith and ſalvation of man: and is in nothing wanting for the atchieving of this end, but ſufficiently teacheth all things to be beleeved and done, and giveth perfect directions concerning faith and manners. Joh. 20. 31. Theſe things are written that ye might beleeve, & beleeving might have life through his Name. Rom. 15. 4. Whatſoever things are written, are written for our learning, that wee through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope: and therefore the Word written is every way moſt ſufficient, and abſolutely perfect, and need no addition or tradition to helpe forward this end.

Ob. This place is a tradition and not written, and many other true traditions were never written: beſides that the Church may make traditions. Anſ. Wee grant many true traditions are not in Scripture, but ſuch they are as a man may be ignorant of, and not prejudice his ſalvation. Againe, the Church hath a power, and hath had privilege to make Conſtitutions and Lawes, Lawes, which were to be knowne and received: but theſe are ſuch as onely concerne the orderly government of the Church, and are not neceſſary to ſalvation.

Ob. But ſome traditions are neceſſary to ſalvation, which are not contained in the written Word, and they alleage two: firſt, in Rom. 12. 6. that Gods Word muſt bee tried by the rule of faith, and ſo alſo by the ſame rule expounded. This rule of faith is nothing elſe by their expoſition, but a generall conſent in the hearts of all true Catholikes; together with the Pope aſſenting with them, which of neceſſitie wee muſt beleeve; and yet (ſay they) it is not in the Scripture: and therefore ſome things muſt of neceſſitie bee beleeved which are not in the Scripture. Anſ. The rule of faith is not ſuch a crooked rule as they would thruſt upon the world by their wicked expoſition, but the right rule of faith is the plaine Word of God, every way abſolutely directing in all points of faith and love. 2 Tim. 1. 5. Paul wiſheth Timothy to keepe the true patterne of wholſome words in faith and love: which is nothing elſe but the teſtimony of Scripture, in points of faith and love, comprized in the Decalogue and Apoſtles Creed. The rule of faith therefore in expounding Scripture is Scripture it ſelfe. The ſecond thing neceſſary by their doctrine to bee beleeved, not contained in Scripture, is, that the canonicall Scripture is Gods Word: which truth is abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation to bee beleeved, but cannot otherwiſe be knowne or beleeved but only by the tradition of the Church. Anſ. As every other Art and Science hath certaine principles of truth to prove all other precepts by, but themſelves are to bee proved by none; ſo alſo hath Divinity the chiefe of all other Sciences: of which kinde this is one principle; that Canonicall Scripture is Gods Word, which not granted, inferreth a deſtruction of all other divine rules; this is a truth therefore confirmed, not a thing teſtified from ſome other, but as a ground of it ſelfe. Secondly, in divine matters, faith goeth before knowledge, which in humane things is cleane contrary: for if a man would know whether fire be hot, let him put his hand unto it, hee ſhall have experience of it, and then he ſhall beleeve it: but in divine things firſt a man giveth credit, and yeeldeth conſent to the Word, and then hath experimentall knowledge: for although faith hath this knowledge, yet experimentall knowledge followeth faith. Abraham beleeved above hope, here faith went before knowledge. Joh. 7. 27. If ye doe the will of my Father, ye ſhall know whether the doctrine bee of God or no. Thus then we may conceive it, the tenour of the word of God is this, Thus ſaith the Lord: If the queſtion now be whether the Lord ſay thus or no? I anſwer, to beleeve the Church herein before God is ſacrilege: but herein we are firſt to yeeld aſſent unto God, and then after this experimentall knowledge will follow, that Canonicall Scripture is the Word of GOD. Thirdly, wee know that Scripture is Gods Word, by Scripture, and not by the Church; out of which being in humility taught and acquainted with the excellent matter of it, and manner of writing, the end the glory of God, and our owne ſalvation; we cannot but have ſufficient perſwaſion of the author of it, and that it can proceed from no other but God himſelfe. Thus notwithſtanding the allegations of the adverſaries, the written Word retaineth that perfection, which needeth no traditions to ſtrengthen or further it in that end to which it is appointed. Now to the reaſon it ſelfe, amplifying this ſinne in this verſe, which containeth three points to be conſidered: Firſt, the perſon that durſt not raile. Secondly, the goodneſſe of his cauſe, which was very juſt, and yet hee durſt not raile upon the Devill himſelfe. Thirdly, the manner of his ſpeech, The Lord rebuke thee.

The perſon that durſt not raile was Michael the Archangel, whom ſome affirme to be Chriſt himſelfe: others, that he is ſome chiefe, arch, and principall Angell; which opinion is more probable. For firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of him as in ſubjection, and ſtanding in awe, not daring to breake the Law of God; for he durſt not revile the Devill. Secondly, in 1 Theſſ. 4. 16. the Lord Chriſt ſhall come to judgement with the ſound of a Trumpet, and the voice of an Archangell; where is a plaine diſtinction betweene Chriſt, who ſhould come in the clouds, and the Archangell. Thirdly, Peter explaineth it ſpeaking the ſame thing, and ſaith, The Angels give not railing judgement againſt them, 2 Pet. 2. 11. It is more probable then, that by Michael was meant a principall Angell, rather than Chriſt.

Doctr. Firſt, from the perſon we learne, that there bee diſtinctions and degrees of Angels; there be Angels and an Archangell. Queſt. Is there but one Archangell? Anſ. The Scripture ſpeaking of Archangels, uſeth alwaies the ſingular number, never mentioning more than one: and where the Scripture reſolveth not, wee are not to determine: yet I condemne not thoſe who have probably held that there are more than one. Secondly, wee have here an example of Angelicall meekneſſe and modeſtie. Titus 3. 1. Put them in remembrance that they bee ſubject to principalities, and ſpeake evill of no man, but ſhew all meekneſſe unto all men: the contrarie practice of railing, ſlandering, and obtrecting, is a property of the Devill, whence hee hath his name, Revel. 12. 10. the Accuſer of the brethren: and the Adverſarie, 1 Pet. 5. 8. who is ever ready with one accuſation or other to ſtand up againſt everie man: the malicious man, whoſe malice cauſed him to ſtand up againſt Iob, and falſly accuſe him of hypocriſie unto Gods owne face. Let ſlanderers and backbiters of their brethren ſee hence whom they imitate, and moſt lively reſemble.

Secondly,

Secondly, conſider the goodneſſe of Michaels cauſe, which was this; it was the will of God that Moſes bodie ſhould be buried in a ſecret place unknowne to any man, to prevent and avoid all occaſions of ſuperſtition and idolatry among the Jewes. The devill on the contrarie would diſcover it, that ſo the Iſraelites might fall to idolatry before it; herein the Archangell reſiſted him, and ſtrove with him for the performance of the will of God, and the maintenance of his true worſhip; and yet in this good cauſe Michael durſt not revile the Devill himſelfe. In this cauſe conſider two things: Firſt, the fight and contention betweene Michael and the Devill: Secondly, the cauſe and occaſion of it, about Moſes body. In the former wee may obſerve that there is a ſharp and ſerious contention betweene good and bad Angels; in which the good Angels labour to defend all that are in Chriſt, againſt the rage and fury of the Devill and his angels. As Pſal.34.8. The Angels of the Lord pitch their tents round about thoſe that feare him. And on the contrary, the Devill and wicked ſpirits caſt about how to deſtroy the bodies and ſoules of men: 1 Pet.5. Our adverſary the Devill goeth about continually ſeeking whom hee can devoure. This combat concerneth and is converſant about either firſt the perſons, or ſecondly the ſocieties of men. The fight about the perſons, concerneth either infants, or men of yeares. Firſt, for infants, the devill ſeeketh how to ſpoyle and deſtroy them (eſpecially thoſe of elect and faithfull parents) in regard of their weakneſſe and tendemeſſe both of minde and body: but the Angels of the Lord have charge given them to defend them againſt this malice of Satan. As, Pſalm.91.12. They ſhall beare thee up in their armes, that is, they ſhall bee as nurſes to beare them in their armes, preſerving them from danger: Mat.18.10. Deſpiſe not one of theſe little ones: for their Angels alwaies behold the face of my Father which is in heaven. Secondly, concerning men in years, the Devill and his angels ſtrive to drive them out of their waies and callings, and to lead them into crooked paths; as he would have had Chriſt to have leapt off from the top of the pinacle, although he had an ordinary way to goe downe; and have made ſtones bread: but the good Angels on the other ſide are given us to keepe us in all our wayes, Pſal.91. and ſo under the protection of the Almighty. The ſecond ſtrife, namely, about ſocieties, concernes either firſt families; ſecondly, Churches; or thirdly, Common-wealths: all which the Devill ſtriveth to overturne; as the good Angels to preſerve and maintaine them. Firſt, the Devils endevour is utterly to overthrow all families, of Chriſtian men eſpecially: hee robbed Iob of all his ſubſtance, ſlew his ſervants, and children; but the good Angels guard and defend them. Iacob had the Angels of God defending him and his family from the furie of Eſau, Gen.31.1. Pſal.91.10. when the plague and peſtilence prevaileth againſt the ungodly, the good Angels keepe it off from comming neere the tabernacles of the righteous. Secondly, in Churches and congregations, the wicked angels ſtrive to corrupt the Word, Sacraments, and all the Miniſtery; or to make it fruitleſſe, every way to their power hindering the good ſucceſſe thereof. The Devill offereth himſelfe to be a lying ſpirit in the mouth of all Ahabs Prophets: Zach.3.1. He ſtandeth at Iehoſhuah his right hand, to withſtand him in his office. He ſoweth tares in the field, where the good ſeed of the Word is ſowne, Matth.13. Hence are thoſe falſe doctrines of forbidding meats & mariages, called the doctrine of devils, 1 Tim.4.1. He hindred Paul once or twice from his journey to the Theſſalonians to confirme them, 1 Theſſ. 2. 18. Hee raiſeth perſecution againſt the Church: for he is ſaid to caſt ſome of the Church of Smyrna into priſon, Rev.2.10. The good Angels on the contrary fight againſt them for the good of the Church, the furtherance of the Goſpell, and preſervation of the true worſhip of God. The Law was given by their miniſtery, Gal.3. The tidings of ſalvation, and the doctrine of the Goſpell was firſt preached by Angels, Lu.2.9. The Angel brought Philip to inſtruct the Eunuch, Act.8.26. as alſo to baptize him, verſ.38. delivered Peter out of priſon, Act.12.11. Thirdly, the wicked angels ſeeke to ſupplant Common-wealths and Kingdomes. Satan moved David to number the people, by which ſinne hee waſted 70000. of his people. The good Angels fight in their defence. The Angel told Daniel that he fought againſt the Prince of the Kingdome of Perſia for the Jewes, Dan.10.13. The Angel ſmote of Zenacheribs Army in one night, an hundred foureſcore and five thouſand, who were enemies to the Church, 2 King.19. Ob. How can the Devill thus furiouſly fight againſt perſons and ſocieties, ſeeing hee was never ſeene, neither can this fight be perceived of us? Anſ. As he is a Spirit, ſo his fight is ſpirituall, not eaſily diſcerned by the eye of fleſh: for wee fight not againſt fleſh and bloud, but againſt principalities and ſpirituall wickednеſſes. Againe, hee fighteth not onely in his owne perſon, but by his inſtruments and complices, whom he daily raiſeth up againſt the perſons of men, and all humane ſocieties: and this fight we may in part perceive.

Vſe. Firſt, note hence the dignitie of every beleever who have the Angels, yea, and as here the Archangels, to put themſelves in gariſon for their defence: for from Chriſt it is. Secondly, we are with all thankfulneſſe to acknowledge Gods providence and protection eſpecially in this land, whoſe peace and proſperity hath bin ſo long eſtabliſhed unto our perſons and ſocieties, our families, Church, and common-wealth; whereas if Satan had might to his malice, not one of theſe ſhould ſtand a moment. Thirdly, in all dangers our comfort muſt hence be raiſed, that though Satans cruelty bee never never ſo great, yet we have the guard and defence of the good Angels to keepe us in all our wayes; and theſe are too many and too ſtrong for him, and all the power hee can raiſe againſt us. Thus was Eliſhaes ſervant comforted; There be more with us than againſt us: the good Angels are more powerfull for our good, than the wicked are to harme and hurt us. Fourthly, hence learne to make conſcience of every ſinne in thought, word, and deed: for admitting and committing any ſinne, wee treacherouſly turne againſt thoſe that fight for our defence, and doe what wee can to grieve and drive them away from us, and ſo put our ſelves into the power of Satan to be led at his pleaſure into ſinne, as alſo into the dangers of it.

The ſecond point in this cauſe of contention is, the occation of it, namely, it was about Moſes body. Michael would not ſuffer the devill to reveale where Moſes body was laid, ſo to ſow the ſeeds of idolatry, whereby Gods true worſhip might be overturned: for he cared not for the body of Moſes, but to bring Idolatry by the means of it. Hence note that the wicked angels fight not ſo much againſt the bodies of men, as againſt their ſoules; nor contend ſo much to overthrow them in their outward eſtate, or to deprive them of their goods, meat, drinke, &c. as in their inward, to wreſt from them their ſpirituall things, namely, Gods true worſhip, and the things and means which tend to the maintaining and preſerving of the ſame. We have to fight againſt principalities, and powers, and ſpirituall wickednesſe in high places, Eph. 6. 12. But it may as well be read in ſpirituall things: for therein bend they their principall forces. The drift of the Devill is to blind the minds of infidels, that the light of the glorious Goſpell of Chriſt ſhould not ſhine upon them, 2 Cor. 4. 4. This ſame ſerpent that beguiled Eve, through his ſubtilty, ſeeketh how to corrupt mens mindes from that ſimplicity which is in Chriſt, 2 Cor. 11. 3.

Vſe. First, we muſt keepe that which is committed us, 1 Tim. 6. 20. The treaſure which God hath put into our hands is his true worſhip, ſound doctrin, right uſe of the Sacraments; all which ſeeing Satan moſt deſireth to breake off or corrupt, we ought accordingly to ſtrive how we may preſerve them to our ſelves, and have them continued in their purity to our poſterity. Secondly, in that Satan ſeeketh to deprive the ſoule of ſpirituall things, wee muſt watch our graces, and become more vigilant in maintaining, and adding alſo unto our knowledge, faith, love, hope, and other our graces; ſeeing Satan will ſift us to make us as chaffe, we muſt watch and pray continually that our faith faile not.

Thirdly, marke who is the author of Idolatry, namely, the Devill himſelfe, and of that ſpeciall part of it, which then hee could not effect; but hath now obtained in that Idolatrous Church of Rome, namely, in worſhipping of Images, ſtockes and ſtones, reliques of Saints, and of the woodden Croſſe; yea, armes, legges, hands, feet, and fingers of Martyrs: whence is all this but from the Devill himſelfe, who for the ſame purpoſe would have revealed where Moſes body was buried by God? Yea, ſo farre have they gone on in this deluſion, that they are become ſpectacles of folly to the whole world: for if Iohn Baptiſt had had ſo many heads as the Papiſts brag of, he had bin a monſter of men: beſides, though the Croſſe whereon Chriſt was crucified, was no greater than an ordinary man might beare; yet ſo many ſeverall peeces thereof they pretend themſelves to have in ſeverall places, as would load a ſhip. Object. They ſay they had all theſe reliques by revelation from heaven. Anſ. Theſe revelations are but diabolicall illuſions to maintaine Idolatry: beſides, that now (the word being a moſt perfect rule in all matters to bee beleeved or done) unwritten revelations are no proofes of doctrine, but are juſtly to be ſuſpected.

The third thing in the verſe is the manner of his ſpeech, in which obſerve three things: firſt, what ſpeech the Archangell would not uſe, He would not ſpeake evill. Secondly, what ſpeech he uſed; The Lord rebuke thee. Thirdly, the reaſon or cauſe of both; becauſe hee durſt not ſpeake evill.

First, of this cauſe, as being firſt in nature, which is ſaid to be feare. Now to know what kinde of feare it was, conſider that there is a threefold feare: firſt, from entire nature: ſecondly, from the corruption of nature: thirdly, from grace. The firſt is a naturall property, whereby the creature ſeekes to preſerve it ſelfe, and to ſhun danger; which feare is no ſinne in it ſelfe; for it was in Chriſt when he ſaid his ſoule was heavy even unto death: and, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſſe from me: but this is not here meant. The ſecond feare proceeding from corruption of nature in men and Angels, is that ſervile feare, when the creature feareth nothing but due and deſerved puniſhment, the conſcience being guilty unto it ſelfe, and accuſing for ſinne, and the heart deſtitute of faith and love of God, which if it were preſent would caſt out this ſlaviſh feare; which is no other than the feare even of the Devils themſelves, who beleeve and tremble, Jam. 2. 19. but neither was this the feare of the Angel. The third feare is from grace, and it is a gift from the ſpirit of God (who therefore is called the ſpirit of feare) working in men and Angels a feare to pleaſe, and a feare of diſpleaſing God in all things: this is the feare here meant which was in the Angel. In which conſider three things further; firſt, the beginning of it, which is faith even in the Angels themſelves; whereby they beleeve the power, juſtice, ſoveraignty, and Lordſhip of God over them; and that they muſt be ſubject and obedient thereunto: but in man it is a faith, apprehending the mercy and favour of God reconciled by Chriſt: this feare in Angels and Men therefore is the fruit of their faith. Secondly, the property of it; which is to make the subject of it to feare the offence of God as the greatest evill in the world, to feare sinne properly, and first of all; because by it God is displeased: and in the next place it breedeth a feare of judgement consequently, but not in the first place. Psalm. 119. 12. My flesh trembleth for feare of thee, and I am afraid of thy judgements. This was the religious feare of David: first, a fearing of Gods offence, and then a standing in awe of his judgments: thirdly, the use of it; which is to make man and Angel make conscience of sinne: Exod. 2. it made the Midwives spare the Hebrew children; it will not suffer the Angel here to revile the Devill. The feare of God (saith Salomon) causeth to shun every evill way: yea, it frameth to obedience, and is pure, because it keepeth the heart from defiling it selfe. Our duty hence is to pray that the Lord would put into our harts this religious feare, which may containe us in awe of his Majesty, and so keepe us from offences, wherein wee may resemble this Angel; as also to be a welspring of life unto us, not onely to escape the snares of death, but to quicken and provoke us in the wayes of life everlasting. Secondly, wee must avoid the sinne which the Angel was afraid of, namely, the boldnesse of sinning, especially in these dayes wherein men adventure and rush upon sinne without feare or shame.

The devill hath prevailed with the Papiſts, and drawne them to that idolatry which he could not bring among the Iewes.

Prov. 14. 27.

Psal. 19. 9.

The second point herein is, what speech the Archangel would not use, that is, cursed speaking, or railing judgment. Which to know what it is, observe the differences of judgement; which is two-fold, either publike or private. Publike judgement is, when a man is called by God to judge the creature; and this is two-fold: first, of the Magistrate; secondly, of the Minister. The Magistrate is called by God to seeke out the misdemeanours of men, and according to the offence to pronounce a righteous sentence, even to the taking away (if the cause so require) of the temporall life it selfe. The Minister is also in the name of God to pronounce the curse of the Law upon unrepentant sinners; and the promise of the Gospell unto the penitent. Secondly, private judgement is, when one creature passeth judgement against another without calling from God, but upon private grudge, anger, stomacke, and revenge; this is here called railing judgement; and it is practised three wayes: First, in speaking falshoods and untruths against others. Secondly, in speaking truth, but with intent of slandering, and detracting from the good name of others. Thirdly, in misconstruing mens sayings and doings to the worst part, when they may be taken in the better: this railing speech the Angel durst not use.

Hence we learne to make conscience of this sinne of slandering, reproaching, and reviling others, from which the Archangell abstained dealing even with the Devil himselfe: but many of us who can utter the proverb, That it is a shame to belie the Devill; are contented, yea, and ready to belie, and detract from the children of God our brethren by this railing judgement. Some will say, what may wee never use this kind of judgement? Ans. Never, no not against the Devil: but if we would take up judgment against any creature, let it be against our owne selves for our sinnes; here wee may passe sentence freely, and so escape the judgement of God: as for others we are to judge by the judgment of love, which hopeth, speaketh, thinketh, and suspecteth the best, and covereth the worst even a multitude of sinnes.

The third point, is the speech which the Archangell used, in these words; The Lord rebuke thee. Which words are a forme of praier, in which hee commendeth and remitteth revenge unto God, desiring the Lord, to whom judgement belongeth, would restraine, correct, and repay the Devil for his malice. Here it may be asked: what shall wee doe when wee are wronged. Ans. Learne of the Angel not to requite and repay evill for evill, neither in action, speech, or affection; but leave all revenge unto the Lord. Zachariah being stoned to death unjustly, desired no revenge, but said, The Lord see and require it: Christ himselfe being accused before Pilate, answered nothing; and when he died, he prayed for those that crucified him, Matth. 17. Againe, when a man will needs revenge himselfe of a wrong done against him, hee takes upon him the person of the accuser, witnesse, judge, and executioner; which is against all justice and equity: besides that the Lord challengeth this as his owne prerogative; Vengeance is mine, and I will repay.

Object. But did not Elias pray for fire from heaven in way of revenge whereby he destroyed his enemies? Ans. He did: but by instinct from God, which is as much as a commandement.

Object. But Christ when he was smitten said, If I have well said, why smitest thou me? Ans. We must put a difference betweene lawfull defence of our selves in our good cause, and the offence of our adversaries. Far was Christ herein from revenge, and so must we.

Object. But this is hard and impossible unto flesh and bloud. Ans. Yea, but we professe our selves to bee children of our Father in heaven, and therefore wee are to have more than flesh and bloud in us; even that grace of God which carrieth beleevers further in Christs schoole, than flesh and bloud can lead them. Use. Schollers and learned men that are to defend Gods cause and the truth of religion, yea, even against very heretikes, must abstaine from reviling speeches; if we be reviled by the pen of the adversary, wee must commit the injury to God. Secondly, people that goe to law with others, for most part herein offend, that they doe it in way of revenge, and to wrecke their malice lice upon their adversary: whereas the right use of suit in law, is only to defend a mans right, all revenge laid aside. Thirdly, hence men of valour are taught not to take a challenge into the field, it is an honour not to accept of it, seeing revenge is to be left unto God, let the wrong be never so great. Fourthly, when men be at ods and difference, it is not lawfull to chide, braule, contend, crie, and lift up the voyce in threatnings, seeing all these are degrees and kindes of revenge, which we must leave unto God. Quest. What must a man doe that is to encounter with the Devill, either by temptation, possession, or otherwise? Ans. He must follow the practice of the Archangell, even to flie to God by prayer, and intreat him to rebuke him. The like practice must be taken up by those who are to deale with heretikes, who seeke the overthrow of religion; the Lord must be intreated to restraine the malice of the Devill, that hee may not in himselfe or instruments prevaile to corrupt or represse, much lesse suppresse or supplant the truth.

verſ. 10 But theſe ſpeake evill of thoſe things which they know not, and whatſoever things they know naturally, as beaſts which are without reaſon, in thoſe things they corrupt themſelves.

In the former part of this verse is laid downe a third argument, which amplifieth the sinne of these deceivers; thus framed: For a man to give sentence, and condemne that which he knoweth not, is a point of great injustice and rashnesse; But these men condemning Magistracie, condemne a thing they know not; and therefore are justly accused of rashnesse and injustice. The like sinne of these seducers hath beene too usuall in all ages. In the dayes of the Apostles themselves, the Gentiles accounted the doctrine of the Gospell but foolishnesse; the Jewes an offence; and yet neither of them knew what it was. The same rashnesse is at this day to be descried in the Church of Rome, who have denounced the sentence of excommunication against our Churches, and condemne the Protestants for heretikes, when the most of them never knew our doctrine, nor ever heard what we could say for our selves; yea, most injuriously they mistake us in sundry maine points of doctrine; as when we teach that workes doe not justifie a man before God, they cry out and say, we condemne all good workes. The same fault is exceeding rife amongst us in these dayes: for let a man make conscience of his wayes, and endevour to please God, he is presently branded with names of reproach, by those whose tongues are nimble to speake evill of things they never knew; who are to know that a man cannot be too precise in keeping the commandements of God, and that themselves have made a promise in Baptisme to walke in no other wayes, and ought to renew the same so often as they come to the Lords table.

And whatsoever things they know naturally.] In the rest of this verse is set downe the third sinne of these deceivers, which is the sinne of intemperance, standing in the immoderate use of meat, and drinke, apparell, &c. Touching this sinne two things are propounded: first, the proper cause of it, that is naturall knowledge, in these words; Whatsoever they know naturally.] Secondly, the sinne it selfe, or the property of it; In those things they corrupt themselves. The cause is, because they are guided with a naturall knowledge, like the brute beasts which are without reason. There bee three kindes of knowledge incident unto the creature; first, naturall knowledge, arising from the instinct of nature common to man and beast, and consisting in the senses of sight, taste, touching, &c. by the benefit whereof the beast it selfe, can discerne what is food fit for it selfe and what is not: what is profitable, and what is hurtfull and unprofitable for it: unto which is joyned a naturall appetite, by the benefit of which the creature can chuse or refuse his food and meat in season. The second is reasonable knowledge, proper to man, and is nothing else, but the light of understanding, whereby hee reacheth farre higher, and discerneth meat, drinke, apparell, and rest, to be Gods good gifts, and knoweth the civill use of them; with the which is joyned election of will, whereby he can chuse or refuse the civill or uncivill, honest, or dishonest use of them. This knowledge is in all men, for even the Gentiles themselves doe by nature the things contained in the law. Rom. 2. 14. that is, civilly and outwardly: thus many of the Heathen have excelled in civill carriage, and practice of justice, temperance, and other civill vertues. The third is spirituall knowledge, not proceeding either from naturall instinct, or reason it selfe, but from the inlightning of the spirit of God; and it hath sundry fruits. First, it enableth men to know these things in their right causes, as that these gifts of meats, drinks, and such like proceed from God, not as hee is the God of nature onely; but as by grace in Christ he is our God, yea, our Father, and so they become pledges of his speciall mercie; seeing they are now restored againe to the beleever, having bin formerly lost in Adams fall. Secondly, this knowledge causeth men to know them in the due measure of their goodnesse and excellencie, rightly discerning them from spirituall blessings: so as the heart shall not beeset upon them in the first place, but upon the other as of farre higher esteeme; yea, they shall bee counted as dung in regard of these. Thirdly, it instructeth men in the right use of them; namely, when it worketh this perswasion in their hearts, that till their persons please God, they can never use them well; and then onely he is pleased in their use of these, when as their persons first please him. Quest. What is the thing then condemned in these seducers? Ans. The very sinne condemned is, that in the use of the creatures of God, they are not guided by reasonable, much lesse this spirituall knowledge; but only by nature, sense, and appetite, as the beast is, and no otherwise; which is the cause of all intemperance.

Hence note the proper cause of the abuse of all Gods blessings unto covetousnesse, pride, surfeting, drunkennesse, and other sinnes of that kind; namely, because though men have by nature the use of reason, yet in the use of these things they lay it aside, and follow their owne sense and appetite: so farre are they from being guided by that higher knowledge which is wrought by the spirit of God.

Secondly, from the reprehension wee are taught to labor for spirituall knowledge, whereby wee may bee led into the right use of these temporall things; for then and not before, shall wee use them as pledges of Gods mercie in Christ unto us (as the beasts cannot) and shall hardly be drawne to their abuse in riot and intemperance, as these seducers were.

Thirdly, in that they are said to bee guided only, as the beast which is without reason, that is, by nature, sense, and appetite: note the practice of the Devill, which is to keepe men (if he can) in their naturall knowledge, and will not suffer them to attaine to that which is spirituall: yea, and which is more, he corrupteth also that naturall knowledge which men have. A notable experience hereof we have in the Church of Rome; which of a famous Church is become hereticall and schismaticall; the reason of it is, because the Devill hath turned all their religion and doctrine into a naturall doctrine and religion: the maine points whereof are grounded upon naturall reason, and the learning and Philosophy of the Heathen and Gentiles. As justification by workes, merits, Purgatory, with the rest. Others, not a few amongst our selves also are deluded by this subtilty of Satan; who suffereth many men to live civilly and honestly among their neighbours, but will not brooke that they rise higher; they must content themselves to live by naturall knowledge. Hence many men plead they know enough; namely, to love God above all, and their neighbour as themselves: and that God is merciful, &c. which is nothing but a slight of the devill, still to hold them in their naturall knowledge, and so within his owne power.

The second point is the sinne it selfe, and property of it, In those things they corrupt themselves.] This sinne of intemperance causeth men in the abuse of meat, drinke, and apparell, to corrupt themselves,: here then are two things to be spoken of, wherein the whole nature of intemperance is sufficiently comprised. First, of the abuse of the creatures: secondly, of his corruption that thus abuseth them. Concerning the former; the abuse of the creatures is foure waies; first, in excesse: when men use them beyond their calling, hability, or that which nature requireth; this maketh the heart heavy: forbidden by Christ, Luk. 21.34. Secondly, in curiositie, when men are not content with ordinary meat, drinke, apparell, but devise new fashions of apparell, and new kinds of waies of stirring up and whetting of appetite. Thirdly, in affection, when men so addict themselves to meats and drinkes, as they cannot be without them. The Minister must not bee one that loveth to sit at the wine, nor given to wine. The affection is here condemned, when he cannot sit without the pot at his elbow: for else it is indifferent, and for his health sake he may drinke a little wine. Paul willeth that the joy in the creature bee as no joy. Those also are reproved that drinke not for strength, but for drink sake: for although they neither are drunke nor surfet, yet this very affection is a sinne. Fourthly, in time, when these good creatures are used unseasonably. Eccles. 10 16. Woe be to the land whose Princes rise early to eat. A woe is also denounced against those, that rise early to drinke wine, Isa. 5. 11 that is, out of season. The rich man for that he was clad in purple; and fared deliciously every day, is branded with a note of intemperance, in not observing this distinction of times. These be the waies whereby the creatures are abused.

1 Tim. 3.3. 1 Cor. 7.30.

Eccles. 10.17.

The second point is, how intemperate persons in these things corrupt themselves: namely, foure wayes: first, in regard of their bodies, upon which by their sinne of intemperance, they call sundry sicknesses, diseases, yea, and hasten their death. Secondly, they deface Gods image, making themselves worse than the beasts themselves. Thirdly, they destroy their soules; for no drunkard, or riotous person shal inherit heaven, 1 Cor. 3. Fourthly, they overthrow their families, in wasting their substance to the maintaining of their intemperance, and so bring ruine to the places where they live.

Vse. In these seducers we have a glasse, wherein to behold the state of our dayes and times; in which intemperance hath taken place not onely in profane houses, but even in religious places, and where reformation is professed. A common practice it is to drink with glasses without feet, which must never rest; also by the bell, the die, the doozen, the yard, and other measures, & then use Tobacco or other means to sharpen appetite still: an horrible sinne, exceeding this sin of these seducers themselves. Secondly, seeing intemperance bringeth just corruption, and in the end destruction upon the offenders, wee must make conscience of sobriety and temperance; this is the end of Gods grace which hath appeared to reach teach us to live soberly, Tit. 2.12. And whosoever cannot obtaine this much of himselfe to deny the abuse of creatures, will never attaine to the denial of himselfe for Christ his sake, and is as yet a man of no religion.

But for the defending of this murthering sinne, some things are alleaged.

No face is so foule but shall finde some painter.

1 Ob. Gen. 43. ult. Joseph and his brethren did eat and drinke, and were drunke together. Haggæ 1.6. The people are threatned to drinke but not to drunkennesse: wherefore drunkennesse is not unlawfull: yea, it is a curse to drinke and not to be drunke. Ans. These places may indeed be thus translated; but then drunkennesse is taken two wayes: first, for excesse in drinking, of which the places alleaged speake not. Secondly, for liberall and plentifull drinking, and this may be done in an holy manner. So Joseph with his brethren ate and drank liberally and plentifully, but not excessively: so the people were threatned in Haggæ to drinke, but not to satiety and plentifulnesse.

2 Ob. Joh. 2. It is said, that the guests had well drunke; yet Christ turned water into wine still, and commanded the Ministers to draw forth. Ans. This onely sheweth what we may doe, namely, use the creatures of God in plentifull and liberall manner, upon such occasions as this; but justifieth not intemperance, or excesse in the use of them.

3 Ob. It is an ancient rule, that in some old and lingring diseases it is good to bee drunke, therefore it is lawfull upon some occasion to be drunke. Ans. This cannot be done in good conscience, being an unlawfull meanes to cure any disease, though old and used.

4 Ob. But some say they can drinke and never be drunke, they can beare more away than two or three. Answ. Woe unto them that are strong to drinke wine and strong drinke; there is a curse of God against them who use needlesse drinking, though they never surfet nor bee drunke. Quæst. For what ends may wee use the creatures, and in what manner? Ans. The lawfull end of their use is twofold; first, for necessity to preserve life and health: secondly, for our lawfull and honest delight. Psalm. 104.14, God giveth bread to strengthen the heart, and oyle also to make his countenance glad. Christ suffered a woman to powre a box of precious oyntment upon his head: himselfe was at a feast in Galily, and forbade not the use of wine. Secondly, for manner and measure we must know that one man cannot herein bee a rule to another, one mans stomacke and health craveth more, another mans lesse. But every man must observe this rule of sobriety: that hee have alwaies an eye to spirituall exercises; as prayer, hearing of the Word, meditation, as also to the workes and duties of his speciall calling; and so much as fitteth a man unto these is his measure: and when a man by the creatures maketh himselfe heavy and unfit for these, hee hath exceeded his measure.

V. 11 Woe unto them, for they have followed the way of Cain, and are cast away by the deceit of Balaams wages, and perish in the gaine-saying of Core.

In the former words of the verse, [Woe unto them] is laid downe the conclusion of the principall argument of the Epistle, namely, that these seducers shall be destroyed: having taken unto themselves liberty of sinning; which hee hath already proved by a particular enumeration of the sinnes, unto which they were addicted: and further amplifieth that second part of the reason, by the reckoning up of divers other sinnes, both in this verse, and in the rest unto the twentieth. First, of the conclusion; Woe unto them. Here first it may be demanded, why or how the Apostle dare pronounce such a peremptory sentence against them, and that of everlasting condemnation, seeing the Archangell durst not passe judgement against the devill himselfe? Answ. There be two grounds of this practice: first, God giveth to all Prophets, Apostles, and Ministers, the power of the keyes, whereby they retaine and binde up some mens sinnes to destruction, as also to remit and loose the sinnes of some others; in both which they pronounce judgement generally. Secondly, God gave yet a further power unto Prophets, and Apostles (which is denied now to ordinary Ministers) whereby revealing unto them his speciall judgements against particular persons, he made them his instruments to pronounce these his judgements against men, even in particular. Thus David, Psal. 109. cursed particular persons. Paul curseth Alexander the coppersmith, 2 Tim. 4. and Gal. 5.12. Would to God they were even cut off that trouble you; and by the same spirit of revelation the Apostle discerned this woe most certainly to befall these seducers. Use. Hence the Papists conclude, that Prophets, and Apostles, and consequently the Popes, may make lawes to bind the conscience, because they have power over it; it being lawfull for them to curse body and soule. Ans. A creature may be cursed two wayes: first, by imposing a curse and inflicting it upon the body, soule, or conscience: this is the peculiar curse of God resting in his power alone, and is not committed to Prophets, Apostles, or Ministers: for it argueth such a power over the soule as may save or destroy it. Secondly, by foretelling and pronouncing a curse to come, which God will inflict: and this is that which belongeth to Prophets, Apostles, and Ministers: but this argueth no power at all over the conscience. Secondly, some hence conceive that they have warrant hence to curse other creatures, man or beast, seeing the Apostle useth it. Answ. This practice of the Apostle (having an extraordinary spirit of revelation) is no rule for any man, no not for the Minister ordinarily called. Our rule left us by Christ is to blesse and not curse, Matth. 5. 44. Rom. 12. 14. which must be understood of particular persons, for otherwise the Minister hath authority to accurse impenitent sinners in generall; but not this or that particular person; no not in Gods cause: for hee knowes not what shall be the future estate of this or that man in particular: much lesse may privat men in privat causes use cursings or imprecations against others: which condemneth their wicked practice, who in their anger and impatience breake out into cursing of their children, servants, friends, yea, or enemies; our contrary duty must be to blesse, as wee are called unto blessing. Thirdly, marke the Apostles dispositions; they were themselves most meeke in dealing with men, who called others unto meekenesse; their owne patient minds were knowne unto all men in all the matters of men: but when Gods glory was called into question, and the salvation of men likely to be hindered, they lay aside their meekenesse, and put on severity and roughnesse, their zeale in Gods matters would not admit such lenity and patience, as towards men in mens matters they were willing to exercise. They had an Apostolicall rod, which in such cases they used against offenders. Moses the meekest man upon the earth, when hee saw the Israelites worship the golden Calfe, was so incensed with wrath, that hee brake the Tables which were in his hands, and tooke his sword, and together with the Levites slew three thousand of them the same day, Exod. 32. 27. Christ himselfe though hee would not breake a bruised reed; yet dealing with the Scribes and Pharisies, who had corrupted the whole law, laded them with woes and curses, Matth. 23. Paul, who otherwise was all things to all men; yet when Gods glory was impayred by Elymas his withstanding of him, he stroke him blind: and cursed Alexander out of a rightly ordered & holy zeale: all which examples teach us the religious affection, that when Gods honour is in hazzard, our zeale should be inflamed; when mans salvation is likely to be hindered, our meekenesse must be for the time set aside, that the zeale of Gods house may even consume us, Psal. 69. 9. as it did Christ himselfe when hee saw his Fathers house dishonored, and of a house of prayer made a denne of theeves, unto whom wee are daily to be conformed.

Christian meeknesse must be tempered with Christian zeale.

They have followed the way of Cain.] In these words the Apostle returneth to the former part of the reason, whereby he hath already by three forenamed sinnes proved that these seducers are they which take liberty to sinne; and unto them addeth this fourth: That they have followed the way of Cain. In which, first, we will shew the meaning of the words; and then observe the doctrines. In the former A consider two things: first, what is the way of Cain: secondly, why they are said to walke in this way of Cain. The way of Cain is that course of life which Cain tooke up to himselfe, in following the lusts of his owne heart against the will of God. It is described in Gen. 4. of which way there be seven steps or degrees, but every one out of the right way. The first step was his hypocrisie: he worshipped God by offering sacrifice as Abel did, but his heart was not a beleeving heart as Abels was; his worship was outward and ceremonious, but not in spirit and truth, for his heart was an evill heart of unbeleefe. The second his hatred of his owne, onely, and naturall brother, prosecuting him with wrath and indignation, testified by the casting B downe of his countenance upon him; the reason of all which was, because his own workes were evill, and his brothers good, 1 Joh. 3. 12. so as (his brothers offering being accepted, and his rejected) hee feared that Abel might get the birth-right, and become the Priest, Prophet, and King in the family, and every way (as hee deserved) bee preferred before him: for thus much is signified in these words, Gen. 4. 7. that if he did well, Abels affection should be subject unto him, and he should hold his rule over him. The third, his murther whereby he slew his righteous brother. The fourth, his lying unto God, saying, he knew not where his brother was, having slaine him; and extenuating his sin, denied himselfe to be his brothers keeper. The fifth, his desperation, after that God had convicted C him, and pronounced sentence against him: for being cursed for his sinnes hee cutteth off himselfe from the mercy of God, in saying, My punishment is greater than I am able to beare. The sixth, his security and carelesnesse; hee regardeth not his sinne, nor the conscience of it, but busieth himselfe in building a City, and calleth it after the name of his childe: that seeing his name was not written in heaven, hee might yet preserve his name and memory in the earth. The seventh and last, which was the highest step of his way, was his prophanenesse: for from thenceforth hee cast off and contemned all the care and practice of Gods worship; which appeareth, Gen. 4. 26. Then men began to call upon the name of the Lord. Which words have re- D lation to the whole Chapter concerning Cain and his posterity, who had utterly rejected the service of God, and betaken themselves to other affaires: Cain himselfe to his building; Lamech to his lust, being the first founder of Polygamie; for he tooke unto him two wives: Iabal to the framing and pitching of Tents: Iuball to Musike: Tubal-Cain to other curious workes. But when Enoch was borne, then men began to affect better things, to call upon the name of the Lord; then the true worship of God (formerly neglected) began to be restored. This is the path wherein Cain walked.

The second point is, in what regard these seducers seducers are said to follow Cains way, and that is in regard of all these seven sinnes: but especially in the hatred and cruelty which he practised against his brother; for as he was bloudily, and maliciously minded towards his brother, though he gave him good words, till he saw his time convenient to execute his conceived malice: so is it with these seducers, they may seeme for the season otherwise affected, yet indeed, they carry a hatefull affection to the Church of God, and against those also that endevour in the building up of the same.

Doct. Hence first note that the way of Cain is the high and broad way of the world. The Turkes and Jewes follow Cains footsteps in the profession and practice of all prophanesse, in that they deny and despise the Messias the Sonne of God, yea, and persecute with a deadly hatred all Christians, and are never satisfied with the spilling of their bloud. The way of the Papists also is the way of Cain, carrying within them the same heart towards Protestants, which Cain did towards Abel; without any conviction of them either of heresie, or of wickednesse; and (no otherwise than Cain) they now carry themselves quietly and silently till opportunity may serve them: which if it were offered, wee should feele and have fearefull experience of the fruits of a Cainish heart in them, as Abel did. Besides, the doctrine of the Romish Church teacheth the way of Cain, for it standeth wholly in outward Ceremonies, borrowed partly from the Jews, partly from the Heathen; yea, it traineth up men to be Hypocrites, because it is onely a dumbe and dead shew, without any power of life, of godlinesse. Again, it teacheth desperation, in that by it no man ought to be assured of his salvation, (for that were presumption) as also that a man must satisfie the justice of God for his sinnes, and can never obtaine pardon without confession of all his sinnes in the eare of his Priest. And to come neerer home, even among our selves, this way of Cain is not unbeaten; our hypocrisie, lying, malice; but above all, our prophanesse will convince us hereof. Doe not men goe backward in Religion, as those that shake off the waies of God? Is not the Gospell of farre lesse reckoning among us, than it hath beene heretofore? Is that wholsome doctrine not lesse respected now, than it was twenty yeares agoe? and much lesse therefore obeyed? which is a manifest argument that Cains way is generally the beaten way of this age.

The way of Cain beaten in Popery, as is seene in infinite causelesse massacres and cruell murthers of Protestants.

2 Doct. Secondly, we must bee warned to turne out of the way of Cain, into the waies of God. Quest. Which is the way of God that we may walke in it? Ans. It is altogether contrary to the way of Cain: for first in Gods way is sincerity. God is worshipped in the Spirit, and not in hypocrisie. Secondly, love of God and men, testified in word & deed, opposed to Cains hatred. Thirdly, in Gods way is faith, which resteth upon Gods mercy and providence, even against feeling, both in life and death; opposed to Cains desperation. Fourthly, repentance whereby the heart is stirred up to seeke Gods Kingdome, peace of conscience, inward joy, and in the second place for the things of this life. Fifthly, in Gods way is faithfulnesse and constancy; men that begin in the Spirit, end not in the flesh, but are faithful to the death; whereas the way of Cain is to begin with sacrifice, but end in profanenesse. This is the way of God in which we must walke: using all good means whereby wee may be both set and contained therein; especially the word preached, and the Sacraments; which meanes the very Pharisie himselfe could acknowledge, when he said to Christ, Master, thou teachest the way of God truly. So the Prophet Esay saith, Ye shall heare a voice behinde you, saying, This is the way, walke in it: this voice is nothing but the voyce of the Spirit in the ministery of the Word.

3 Doct. Thirdly, note what these seducers are blamed for, namely, for two things: first, for making choice of Cains way: for walking and going on forward in it; which is a propertie of the wicked. It is true, that the childe of God by the frailty of the flesh may slip into Cains way, as David did in slaying Vriah; but he doth not stand, goe on, and keepe a course in that way, as the wicked doe, being branded to be such as stand in the way of sinners, Psal. 1. We on the contrary must preserve a care to recover our selves out of the way of Cain, if at any time we shall be misled into it; that if wee cannot keepe from all sin, yet we may be kept from a course and trade in sinning. Let this Christian care preserve our paths in the waies of God, and returne us unto the obedience of his will, when through many weaknesses and slips we are often turned aside: and the rather because Cains end attendeth Cains whole course; who was haunted with an evill and accusing conscience, whose sinne lay at the doore as a wilde beast ready to teare him, and pull out the throat of his soule: besides that, he was accursedly cast out from the presence and face of God: that howsoever hee was a Prince, and mighty amongst men, yet he was a vagabond and runnagate on the face of the earth: which curses let them not looke to avoid, whosoever will follow his way, no more than Cain himselfe could.

And are cast away by the deceit of Balaams wages.] In these words is set downe the fifth sinne of these seducers: the meaning of which is first to be knowne. Cast away: The word signifieth they are powred out, or powred away; which forme of speech is taken from water, the which distilleth not out of a vessell drop by drop; but is powred out in abundance, till so all is quickly spent. Whereby the Apostle would give us to understand, that in the affection of their hearts they were violent, and even carried headlong to commit their wickednesse. By the deceit of Balaams wages: that is, they are thus forcibly carried to doe evill upon hope of wages; of which hope notwithstanding they are disappointed and defeated, as Balaam was. So as this fifth sin is covetousnesse, propounded in a similitude or comparison, of which there are two branches: first, as Balaam was carried headlong to curse the people of God in hope of wages; so the wicked men upon hope of reward are set to falsifie and corrupt the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles. Secondly, as Balaam was deceived and frustrated of the reward hoped for, as Numb. 31. 8. he lost his reward, yea, and after his life (for returning home hee was slaine with the Midianits) so shall these lose that reward which they expect, for falsifying that doctrine which they teach: and so much for the meaning.

That which was the sinne of these seducers, is the sinne of these times of ours, wherein that propheeie of Peter is accomplished; where is foretold that false teachers should come in the latter times, who through covetousnesse, with fained words should make merchandize of mens soules. Quest. But where shall we finde these covetous teachers? Ans. They are too easily found every where, but especially within the precincts of the Church of Rome. The Bishop of Rome and the guides of that Church, are the Arch-seducers, who through covetousnesse make merchandise of mens soules, teaching first that a man must confesse all his sins, or else hee cannot be forgiven; and when he hath reckoned up all, he must satisfie for them in that manner as they will prescribe; who commonly enjoyne men to bestow so much land, or such a summe or pension of money upon this or that Church, or Abbey, that so they may buy out a pardon. By which wicked doctrine through covetousnesse they have (by encroaching upon countries and kingdomes) enriched themselves, or rather craftily conveyed to themselves the greatest part of the revenues of all Europe. Secondly, they through covetousnesse maintaine the distinction betweene mortall and veniall sins, betweene the fact and the punishment, and hold that the sinne may bee remitted, but not the punishment: for which purpose the fire of hell is changed by them into a milder fire of Purgatorie, to bee suffered after this life; of which the Pope is Lord and King, indulgent to whom he please, especially to those that can pay well for the merits of others, or masses of their owne. This painted fire hath a long time kept the fire of the Popes kitchin so bright burning, which if it should goe out, his state were shaken. Thirdly, through covetousnesse they forbid many degrees of men from mariage which God forbiddeth not, that so they may the oftner dispense with those degrees which themselves have forbidden: for the more dispensations, the more wealth have they comming in. And thus is their whole religion contrived and plotted for gaine, compacted of falshood and covetousnesse. So as Peters prediction is most fully accomplished in these Balaamites of Rome: but especially herein the Pope is become a second Balaam, in that as Balaam cursed Gods people for gaine; so to maintaine his own pompe and state, by his Bulls and thunderbolts hath he assailed to curse even Kings and Princes, and some whole kingdoms, yea, all such as have shaken off his intolerable Antichristian yoke. The same accusation may be justly intended against very many that professe godlinesse and true religion; for these be the last daies and perillous times, wherein men shall be lovers of themselves, covetous, &c. 2 Tim. 3. 1. Such as Ieremy complained of, Ier. 6. 13. From the least unto the greatest every one is given to covetousnesse: from the Prophet unto the Priest they deale all falsly. The usuries, oppressions, injustice, the common and customable deceit in most trades, cry out of this sinne of covetousnesse in all estates. But some will perhaps here say, Yea, but you wrong Christians to charge them thus deeply with Balaams sinne, for they have better things in them. Ans. But it is no injustice, for Balaam had some as good things in him as many Christians: for when he was first solicited of Balak to curse the people of God, he would not till he asked leave of God; and when God had denied him leave, he answered him that he would not goe with him, if he would give him his house full of gold and silver. Further, he desired earnestly to die the death of the righteous, and that his end might bee like his. Iudas also had many good things in him, hee left all to follow Christ; he became a Preacher of the truth, none of the Disciples could accuse him, or could espy any thing in him, and yet was carried away with covetousnesse: so let no man object the good things in many Christians, which I grant they may have, and yet too eagerly hunt after the world, yea, and be powred out also after filthy lucre no otherwise than Balaam was.

Now for the avoiding of this sinne, let us observe three things, which the Apostle admonisheth in the words: first, in that hee saith they are powred out, we are given to understand that the affection of covetousnesse is a most violent headstrong affection, carrying a man headlong to sinne even against conscience, as it did Balaam; and causing him to powre out his heart unto wickednesse. Achans covetousnesse could not be curbed, no not by Gods speciall commandement, the wedge of gold and the Babylonish garment did so sway with him. Ahab was sicke of covetousnesse, no physicke could recover him, but Naboths Vineyard and life. Iudas for thirty peeces of silver was carried against all sense to the betraying of his master, and that after divers admonitions. Ananias and Saphira to save but a little money, make no bones of lying unto the holy Ghost. What is the cause of all treacheries, and those most cruell murthers, of fathers, of mothers, of servants & strangers, but the covetous heart set upon the booty.

booty, ſaying to it ſelfe; by this fact, this houſe, that land, ſuch a ſumme of mony ſhall be mine? which object in the eye putteth out all the light of religion, reaſon, and ſometime of nature it ſelfe. Thus the heart is eaſily powred out unto evill, when as firſt it is poſſeſſed with covetouſneſſe, which Paul calleth the root of all evill.

Secondly, the Apoſtle would have us conſider how hard a thing it is to bee recovered from this ſin, ſeeing ſuch a ſinner is powred out and caſt away by the deceit of it: and indeed little hope is there of the repentance of a covetous man, of whom Chriſt was bold to ſay, that as eaſie it is for a Camell to goe thorow the eye of a needle, as a rich man to enter into Heaven; the reaſon is, becauſe his covetous cares choke and hinder the Word from taking place in his heart, and ſo hee fruſtrateth all meanes of his ſalvation. Againe, hee hath renounced the true God, and ſet up another God in his heart. The Idols in our Church are defaced and deſtroyed by the Magiſtrate; but the Devill ſetteth up Idols ſtill in the hearts of men, which ought to be Gods temples, even Riches, the god of greedy men.

Gods juſtice againſt mans injuſtice.

Thirdly, obſerve that in Gods juſt judgement the covetous man is diſappointed of his hope, his wages are the wages of deceitfulneſſe: for either hee atchieveth not, or retaineth not the thing expected, as in the former examples: of Achan, who for the wedge loſt his life with it; ſo neither Ahab himſelfe, nor his poſteritie ever enjoyed Naboths Vineyard. Iudas brought backe the thirty peeces of ſilver, and hanged himſelfe. Ananias and Saphira deſirous to keepe a part of their poſſeſſion, loſt with the poſſeſſion both their lives; or elſe if he retaine the booty, and get and keepe alſo wealth fraudulently gotten and heaped up by oppreſſion; yet having the thing, he hath not the uſe of it; his covetous heart keepeth the key of it, and locketh it from his comfortable uſe: yea, and be it that he have ſome uſe of it, yet his gaine is ſmall for which he loſeth his ſoule; Thou foole, this night ſhall they fetch away thy ſoule.

Wee are all hence admoniſhed, eſpecially aged and rich perſons, to beware of this dangerous ſinne. It becommeth Saints not to have covetouſnes once named amongſt them, Eph. 6. Our practice is to varniſh it with tearmes of thriftineſſe and good husbandry, and the worſt it heareth of us is ſcarſe a ſmall diſlike, ſo as when we ſpeake of a wretched worldling, wee ſay he is an honeſt man, but ſomewhat hard or worldly: ſo as this ſinne is no diſgrace amongſt the moſt, as it deſerveth being both ſo odious unto God, and hurtfull unto the ſinner himſelfe. But let us conſider, firſt, that it eaſily draweth a man unto perdition, and enwrappeth him in the Devils ſnare. 1 Tim. 6. 9. Thoſe that will bee rich, fall into many temptations and ſnares. Whereſoever it ruleth, that man reſpecteth not commandement, reaſon, conſcience, no not common honeſty it ſelfe. Secondly, we

A profeſſe our ſelves to be members of Chriſt, the ſonnes and daughters of God; now ſuch a baſe ſinne beſeemeth not ſuch an high profeſſion: for a Nobleman or a Prince apparant to ſpend and triſle away his time in buying and ſelling Pins and Points were a madneſſe; what a baſe folly were it for us that hope to be heires of the kingdome of glory, to be ſtill poring on earth and earthly things? Whoſe hearts and affections ſhould be raiſed up higher, and taken up with heavenly Meditations, uſing weanedly this world as though we uſed it not. Thirdly, nature is contented with a little, and is ſurfetted with abundance; and yet grace is pleaſed with leſſe: and therefore if we have food and raiment for us and ours, let us be therewith contented, 1 Tim. 6. 8. Queſt. But what ſhall we doe then? doe not all men thus, and may not we ſeeke wealth as others doe? Anſ. The rule of the word muſt be our direction herein, and not the manner of the world: and that adviſeth us to make God our portion: which leſſon God himſelfe taught Abraham, Gen. 15. 1. I am thy buckler and thy exceeding great reward. David had learned this leſſon, Pſal. 16. The Lord is my portion. This is done by ſetting our love, our joy, our principall care, yea, our hearts and affections upon the Lord, as men doe upon their treaſures. By which meanes if riches increaſe, our hearts muſt not be ſet upon them, for they are not our portion; and if we be pinched and preſſed with adverſity, want, or loſſes, yet ſhall we not bee oppreſſed: for wee want nothing but that wee may well bee without, and have not as yet loſt any part of our portion.

Further, in the phraſe which the Apoſtle uſeth, They are powred away, note a difference between the childe of God, and a wicked man; when both of them are found in the ſame ſinne, the one powreth out himſelfe to wickedneſſe, giveth himſelfe leave to ſinne with full conſent, without reſtraint, yea, with greedineſſe; the other ſinneth with conſent, but not full conſent: for being regenerate, he is not all fleſh as the wicked man, but partly fleſh, & partly ſpirit, and therefore partly willeth and conſenteth to ſinne, partly nilleth and conſenteth not; he is not powred out without reſtraint, as the other is, but at length recovereth himſelfe by repentance, and obtaineth reconciliation with God. Secondly, we muſt beware of powring out our ſelves to wickedneſſe, but rather with Anna powre out our ſoules before the Lord in humble confeſſion of ſinne, and petition for pardon: that ſo the Lord may powre forth his mercie upon us, and ſhed his love abroad in our hearts. Thirdly, we may not content our ſelves with a few or ſome good things: for the heart may notwithſtanding be powred forth to ſinne, as Balaam and Iudas: but ſeeke carefully to have our hearts truly ſeaſoned with grace, with the love and feare of God, which for the preſent will cauſe us to decline every evill way: yea, to deteſt and hate every ſinne, and for time to come come with a resolute and constant purpose, and endevour never to offend God againe: for otherwise a shew of some good things may often deceive and delude us, and wee may perish for all them, as Balaam did. Lastly, we are hence taught never to give reines to our affections and desires; but curbe, crucifie, and mortifie them carefully: for if once they get head, and be yeelded unto, they will not eatily be subdued, nor suffer a man quiet till he have powred forth himselfe unto all wickednesse, and so brought him into the high way of perdition.

And are perished in the gainsaying of Core. In these words the Apostle layeth downe the sixth sinne of these seducers; to understand the meaning whereof, consider two things: first, the history it selfe: secondly, the application of it. The history is recorded in Numb. 16. wherein Moses mentioneth three things concerning Corah; first, the cause of his sinne, which was ambition and pride: for Core (being a Levite) affected the Priesthood of Aaron: and Dathan and Abiram (being heads of the Tribe of Ruben) strove to take the government of the people out of Moses his hand, who was appointed by God as King over the Israelites, Deut. 33. 5. Secondly, the sinne it selfe, namely in this their discontentment, they enterprised an insurrection against Moses and Aaron: they stood up against them, contradicted and gainsaid them in their offices; and charged them first, that they usurped authoritie, and tooke too much upon them, and lifted up themselves above the congregation without the Lord, vers. 3. and therefore they would not obey Moses commandement, vers. 12. and secondly, that Moses had dealt deceitfully with the people; and (onely in policy to make himselfe a King) had promised them a land flowing with milke and honie, whereas they saw no such matter; nay rather hee had brought them out of Ægypt, to destroy them in the wildernesse, vers. 13. 14. Thirdly, their punishment for their sinne, which was an horrible destruction upon them, and their company, being all of them partly swallowed up of the earth; partly devoured by fire from Heaven, ver. 32. 35.

Secondly, the history of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, is applyed to these false teachers by way of comparison, and they are compared in two things: First, as Core and his company most ambitiously and proudly gainsaid Moses and Aaron; so doe these false teachers the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles. Secondly, as they were destroyed for their such resistance; even so shal these perish in their gainsaying of the truth. Thus the meaning of the words is made plaine. This Epistle was written for a warning unto the last times, even unto us upon whom the ends of the world are come: and therefore that which is affirmed of these men, is verified in sundry in this age. For example; first, the Bishop of Rome is the next follower of Core: for looke as Core gainsaid Moses and Aaron, in regard of their lawfull authoritie; so doth the Pope gainsay Christian Kings and Princes, in striving to take out of their hands all their power and authority in causes Ecclesiasticall within their owne dominions: may, herein he goeth beyond Core, in that he usurpeth that power over them, which the Lord hath put in their owne hands, and so (being invested in their owne persons) most rightfully belongeth unto themselves. Secondly, his shavelings and Masse-priests, not onely gainsay & contradict Christ in his doctrine; but also attempt to usurpe his office, in offring a reall and proper sacrifice of attonement for the sins of the quicke and dead: yea, and (wherein they strip Core) they take upon them to become mediators betweene Christ and the Father, in praying the Father that he would accept the sacrifice of the Sonne, as hee did the sacrifice of Abel. Thirdly, of this sort are all Traitors and Rebels, either Priests or Jesuits, or other traiterously minded men at home or abroad, who (no otherwise than Core) gainsay the ordinance of God, and stand out in deniall or resistance of their lawfull and naturall Prince; whom the same punishment shal assuredly find out, which consumed Corah and his company in the end of their conspiracie. Fourthly, many amongst us who professe the Gospell, yet walke in the gainsaying of Core, of whom some will openly say, they care not what the Ministers speake, whatsoever it is they will withstand it: yea, many wretched creatures who come to the Lords Table, will not sticke to say, that they hope to see the day when they shall be hanged; which argueth them to be abetters in the wicked conspiracy of Core. Lastly, it were to bee wished that some of our students even of Divinity, had not a spice of this sinne of Core: for within this six or seven yeares, divers have addicted themselves to studie Popish writers, and Monkish discourses; despising in the meane time the writings of those famous instruments and cleare lights, whom the Lord raised up for the raising and restoring of true Religion; such as Luther, Calvin, Bucer, Beza, Martyr, &c. which argueth that their minds are alienated from the sinceritie of the truth: because the writings of these (soundest expositors of the Scriptures raised since the Apostles) are not savourie unto them: yea, some can revile these worthy lights themselves, which is a spice of Core his sinne.

The Pope the foreman of Cores company.

2 Doct. Secondly, hence we are taught to beware of ambition, and study to be contented with that condition of life wherein God hath placed us, not seeking things beyond our estate. David would not meddle with things beyond his reach, Psal. 131. 1. Paul had learned in every estate to bee content, to bee abased as well as to bee exalted. Our first Parents in the ambitious conceit of further highnesse, fel from a most happy condition, and brought ruine upon themselves, and us their posteritie. The vertue of contentation is indeed necessarie for for all men, but eſpecially let ſtudents ſeeke it at the hands of God; and the rather, becauſe that within theſe few yeares divers of them (not poſſeſſing the benefit of this vertue) being fruſtrated here of their expected preferments, which they thought were due to their gifts, have departed away diſcontented, and have growne to reſolution in Hereſie, Papiſtry, treaſons, and moſt deſperate attempts. Now that every man may learne to be contented with his condition, bee it better or worſe, let him thinke well upon theſe two conſiderations: firſt, that the preſent eſtate and condition of life, wherein every man is ſet by God, is the beſt eſtate for him: health is beſt in time of health, and ſickneſſe in time of ſickneſſe: riches when they are enjoyed, poverty & want when the Lord changeth his hand: life whileſt he liveth, yea, and death it ſelfe is the beſt, when as that change befalleth: and all this is, becauſe the Lord ſo ordereth and diſpoſeth unto every man out of his wiſe providence; which we for our parts muſt in all our thoughts be ſubmitted unto. Secondly, that in regard of our ſinnes we are leſſe than the leaſt of Gods mercies; unworthy to draw breath in the common aire, or to tread upon the earth: and therefore (being ſo unworthy) if we have but ſmall and few bleſſings, we may well content our ſelves: for by our deſerts we cannot challenge ſo much as we have. Iacob herein ſtained himſelfe in his want, that he was unworthy of the leaſt mercy of God: the baſeſt calling is too good for the beſt man, if he looke at his deſert. Obiect. But every man is preferred before mee, and yet I deſerve as well as they, or ſome of them. Anſ. Herein content thy ſelfe, God hath called them to ſuch condition; ſtay till he call theee; diſtract not thy thoughts herewith, but reſt in his revealed will.

Vnrectified affections overcaſt rectified iudgement and underſtanding.

3 Doct. Thirdly, it may ſeeme ſtrange that Core and his company ſhould gainſay Moſes and Aaron, and their authoritie, eſpecially beholding all the miracles whereby their calling was confirmed, the one to bee Prince, the other the high Prieſt; and yet we ſee it to be ſo: for his affection had blinded his conſcience: he knew very well that they were called by God: he ſaw their whole religious courſe, the great miracles in their hands; but yet the diſordered affections of his heart were they which blinded the underſtanding of his minde. In like manner, men may marvell that ſo many learned Papiſts, otherwiſe ſo wiſe & prudent, ſhould maintaine ſo many groſſe errors and hereſies, and thoſe againſt the foundation of Religion: but the caſe is with them as it was with Core; for let them be never ſo learned, grave, & wiſe, yet their wicked hearts and ambitious affections overcaſt their judgement and knowledge, and overcarry them againſt conſcience, yea, and often reaſon it ſelfe: they reade the Bible the word of truth, but ſee not the truth therein contained, becauſe the cloud of corrupt affections hath overſpred and darkened their underſtandings.

A Whence we may learne, that if at any time wee would with fruit heare, reade, ſtudy, or learne the Word of God, wee muſt bring with us not onely quicke underſtandings, ſharpe conceits, and firme memories, but honeſt hearts, calme, and tempered affections: without which it ſhall be with us as with the Jewes, who ſaw indeed and yet perceived not.

Fourthly, here Magiſtrates and Miniſters muſt learne not to be diſcouraged, if they bee gainſaid and contradicted by ſuch as Core, Dathan, and Abiram, who were great men in their Tribes; it was Moſes and Aarons lot. Chriſt himſelfe was a rocke of offence, and many ſtumbled at him; hee was made a wonder of men, and few of the great beleeved his doctrine, yea,
B few there were that did not gainſay it: it is not well with men when all men ſpeake well of them; meeke Moſes ſhall have his patience tried by very many ſuch in the world.

The worſt kinde of diſcontentment is in things concerning mans ſalvation.

Fifthly, Students eſpecially of Divinity muſt take heed of this ſpirit of contradiction and gainſaying, whereby no wholſome doctrine can eaſily pleaſe them, which was Cores ſinne: and content themſelves with that truth of doctrine and thoſe ſound grounds of Divinitie, which are propounded in the writings of thoſe famous and excellent inſtruments aforenamed, who were the reſtorers of pure religion; preferring them before all Popiſh writers and corrupt poſtillers (in whom a man ſhall meet with nothing ſooner than error and unſoundneſſe) and
C reading ſeriouſly their workes and writings, as the ſoundeſt and beſt grounds of Divinitie, and expoſitions of the Scriptures, which have beene ſet out ſince the dayes of the Apoſtles.

Sixthly, let inferiours hence learne obedience, and ſilent ſubjection unto ſuperiours: the ſervant or ſubject muſt not be a gainſayer, nay, not an anſwerer againe, Tit. 3. This cutteth off all diſputation betweene the Maſter and Servant, Father and Childe, Prince and Subject: for the very appearance of Cores ſinne muſt bee avoided.

Whoſoever reſiſteth Moſes, deſpiſeth Aaron alſo.

Seventhly, Core gainſayeth both Moſes and Aaron; the one in regard of his Magiſtracy, the other of his Prieſthood. Theſe two ſinnes goe
D hand in hand; hee that oppoſeth himſelfe to Moſes, deſpiſeth Aaron alſo; he that honoureth not the King, feareth not God; hee that careth not for the Word, is not loyall to his Prince: a rebell to God, is a rebell to his Prince: Seeing then loyalty towards God and the King are ſo linkt together in themſelves, let us not ſunder them, but rather conjoyne them in our practice; as the Apoſtle hath coupled them in one precept, commanding us to feare God, and honour the King.

Eighthly, it may be here demanded, whether have we done well in gainſaying and contradicting the Church of Rome, ſeeing our Church before the time of King Henry the 8. was a member of that Church? Anſ. When two are at ſtrife, ſtrife, both are not to be blamed, but the party in whom the cauſe is convinced to be: we have indeed departed from them; but the cauſe of our departure was not in us, but in themſelves: we have departed from them, as the Iſraelites by Gods commandement from the Tents of Core: they have firſt a long time gainſaid Chriſt, and therefore we have well done to gainſay them: we are not therefore the ſchiſmatikes, neither blame-worthy; but they in whom the cauſe of ſchiſme is: no more than Moſes was here to be blamed, the cauſe reſting in Core.

We have departed from the Papiſts, as the Iſraelites from the tents of Core, by Gods commandement.

Numb. 16 22.

Laſtly, it will be asked, what did Moſes all this while that he was gainſaid? Anſ. He fell on his face, and prayed unto the Lord. Wherein he became a fit preſident for us in this land, who have beene above fortie yeares aſſaulted by Popiſh Cores, enemies and rebels, without and within us; from whom we have beene defended, not ſo much by the ſword, as by Gods protection, obtained by the prayers of his ſervants: which teacheth us for time to come, to turne us to this moſt ready courſe, of ſubduing all gainſayers and enemies of our peace: for the direct way to diſcover conſpiracies, to ſubdue treaſons and rebels, and to purchaſe tranquillitie to a Church and land, is to commend the ſafety thereof unto the Lords favourable protection, whoſe eyes are ever watchfull over his people. And thus much of Core his ſinne.

The laſt point is their puniſhment; in which it may be asked how they periſhed? Anſ. It is commonly thought that Core, Dathan, and Abiram were ſwallowed up of the earth; but I take it, that all the men of Core, all his ſubſtance and his Tents, Dathan alſo and Abiram were ſwallowed up of the earth: but that Core himſelfe was burned with fire from Heaven, with the 250. men that offered incenſe, verſ. 35. for in the hiſtorie, Numb. 16. 27, 32. it is ſaid that Dathan, and Abiram, and the men of Core, were ſwallowed up; but Core himſelfe is not mentioned: ſo Deut. 11. 6. and Pſal. 106. 17. in both which places Dathan and Abiram are ſaid to be ſwallowed up with their houſholds; but in neither place is Core mentioned. Secondly, Dathan and Abiram were in their Tents, and ſo were the men of Core alſo, when the earth opened and ſwallowed them, ver. 17. But Corah and the two hundred and fifty men were at the doore of the Tabernacle with their cenſers, fire, and incenſe, and were devoured with fire from Heaven, v. 19. Ob. Num. 26. 10. The earth opened her mouth and ſwallowed them (that is, Dathan and Abiram) with Core. Anſ. The learned expound that place not of Cores perſon, but his ſubſtance and retinue.

Marke here the juſt judgement of God: Corah had abuſed himſelfe, (being a Levite) his office, and thoſe ſacrifices which he offered by fire; and the Lord deſtroyed him by fire. The ſame was the dealing of God with Nadab and Abihu, Levit. 10. 2. Looke in what things men ſinne and diſhonour God, by thoſe for the moſt part the Lord revengeth himſelfe upon them; ſo men glory in abuſing the creatures of God, as meats, wine, and ſtrong drinke, the Lord in the meane time ſecretly turneth the ſame to their owne deſtruction; that thoſe which are his good gifts, and ordained for the preſervation of nature, being by men abuſed, through Gods juſt judgement, are turned to the choaking and overturning of nature.

Note.

Secondly, hence learne the wiſe counſell of Salomon, Prov. 24. 22. Feare God, honour the King, and meddle not with the ſeditious; or with them that make alterations. For although it be lawfull for a ſubject (being called) to ſhew his minde, what he thinketh meet for the Church or Common-wealth; yet for a private man to attempt upon his owne head to alter any thing, ſtanding by Gods and the Princes Law, is no better than ſedition, and is a branch of Corah his ſinne.

Private men may not attempt to controll publike conſtitutions.

Thirdly, although Corah, Dathan, and Abiram are deſtroyed for this ſinne, yet Cores children are not deſtroyed, but ſpared, Numb. 26. 11. God in juſtice remembring his mercy; his care for the Miniſtery was ſuch, as could not ſuffer the Levites race to be rooted out, but preſerved for the uſe of the Tabernacle. Let Gods care teach us our duty in this behalfe, namely, to apply our beſt endevours for the maintaining and preſerving of the Schooles of learning, for the uſe and ſervice of the Church. Commendable hath beene the care of many Kings and Princes in this behalfe, whom wee ſhould imitate in preſerving theſe ſeed-plots of the Miniſtery: for herein they imitate the great King, even God himſelfe.

V. 12. Theſe are ſpots in your feaſts of love, when they feaſt with you, without all feare feeding themſelves.

In theſe words the Apoſtle ſetteth downe the ſeventh ſinne of theſe ſeducers: to know the meaning whereof the better, conſider foure things: Firſt, what is meant by feaſts of love and charity. Anſ. In the Primitive Church it was a cuſtome and manner to have a feaſt before the Lords Supper, made by the Communicants, unto which ſome brought honie, ſome bread, ſome wine, ſome milke, and every one according to their abilitie contributing ſomething thereunto. Theſe were here meant and called Love-feaſts, becauſe they were herein to teſtifie their mutuall love among themſelves; as alſo to the poore, who hereby were releeved; and to the Miniſtery it ſelfe, which was by theſe feaſts partly ſuſtained. Secondly, what is meant where theſe ſeducers are called ſpots in theſe feaſts, or rocks; for the word ſignifieth either, and more properly the latter: they are rocks, becauſe as rocks are perceived a farre off by the ſeafaring men; even ſo the infection of theſe wicked men men ſpreads it ſelfe very farre: and againe, as rockes are dangerous and troubleſome to them; ſo are theſe as rockes and ſtumbling blockes to the weake, hindring them from the profitable progreſſe in godlineſſe: they are alſo rightly called ſpots, becauſe as a ſpot defaceth the countenance, ſo their preſence is an eye-ſore and a diſgrace unto theſe Love-feaſts. The third thing is the cauſe why they are thus called; that is, becauſe in theſe Love-feaſts they feed themſelves: for laying aſide all care of the poore, and of the Miniſtery for whoſe ſake this contribution was made, they pampered and fed themſelves, rioutouſly waſting the goods of the Church. The fourth, is the cauſe of this their riot [without feare] that is, becauſe they have caſt off the feare of God and man. In theſe words therefore the Apoſtle chargeth theſe falſe teachers not onely with intemperance in generall, but alſo with a ſpeciall kind of riot in miſpending and waſting the contribution pertaining to the poors maintenance, and the ſuſtaining of the Miniſtery.

Vſe. That which is ſpoken of theſe men, may be applied to theſe laſt times, wherein divers men riotouſly abuſe the goods ſpecially provided for the maintenance of the Miniſtery and poore: as firſt, the Romiſh Clergie, thoſe Locuſts that come forth of the mouth of the beaſt; idle bellies, and ſlow backes, the moſt of which want learning, and are unable to teach people, yet feed themſelves without feare, ſo as their eyes are ſwollen with fatneſſe: wealth they want not, having craftily conveyed unto themſelves the third part of the revenues of Europe; but with it doe nothing but pamper themſelves. Secondly, ſuch Patrons are here included as feed themſelves with Church-livings, appointed for the releeving of the poore, and maintenance of the Miniſtery, in ſuch ſort as Gods people cannot bee faithfully and ſufficiently taught: they can be content to depart from ſome ten pounds a yeare to ſome unable man, ſo as they may of the reſt feed themſelves without feare, or elſe (as ſome doe) ſerve their luſts, in miſpending the Churches revenewes upon Hawkes, Hounds, and other unprofitable ravenous creatures. Thirdly, ſuch Students whether Fellowes or Schollers of or in Colledges as miſſpend their time in idleneſſe, gaming, or other improfitable exerciſes, come alſo within the compaſſe of the Apoſtles reprehenſion, as feeders of themſelves with that ſalarie or living, which was given for the maintenance of the Miniſterie.

The Romiſh Clergy hath better facility in feeding themſelves than others.

Here a queſtion may be demanded: namely, whether thoſe whom we call lay-men, having Church lands and livings impropriate unto them, may be ſaid with theſe ſeducers to feed themſelves without feare; or whether can any man impropriate any Church goods or livings, without ſacrilege? Anſ. The anſwer hereof is two-fold: firſt, though no good member of the Church can in good conſcience ſeeke the harme and prejudice of the ſame; yet the plaine truth

A is, that the Church-goods and lands may bee ſometimes upon ſome occaſions alienated; the ground of which anſwer is this rule; namely, that the governours of the Church are to content themſelves with things neceſſarie. For when the people had brought ſufficient for the building of the Tabernacle, Moſes biddeth them bring no more, ſeeing (ſaith he) there is enough: ſo as when the Church hath too much and exceſſe (as the Romiſh Church and theſe Churches of Europe gotten by maſſes, Purgatorie, Dirges, Sacrament of Penance, &c.) there may be admitted alienation and impropriation of Church-goods and lands; but ſo as two conditions muſt be neceſſarily obſerved; firſt, there muſt bee juſt cauſe: and that which is ſo alienated, muſt bee imployed to B ſome good uſe in the Church or Common-wealth; and this foure wayes: Firſt, in caſe of preſent neceſſity: for tenths have beene in ſome caſes of neceſſity lawfully payed in way of tribute, and otherwiſe neither Church nor Common-wealth could have bin preſerved. Secondly, in way of exchange, when the alienation of ſome lands ſhall bee rather more convenient both to the Church it ſelfe, and to whom ſuch lands are alienated. Thirdly, when as ſome great profit ſhall enſue unto the Church and Common-wealth: upon which ground King Henry the 8. of famous memory moſt juſtly alienated moſt of the Church lands called Abbey lands; that Monks, Friers, Abbots, and ſuch like idle C Drones ſhould never have more footing in this our land. Fourthly, in way of reward: for Kings and Princes that are the Patrons and protectors of the Church, may alienate Church lands (where there are exceſſe) unto ſuch as have bin faithfull in the defence of Church or Common-wealth, and that in way of requitall and reward of their ſervice. The ſecond condition is: that there muſt be reſerved a ſufficient releeſe for the poore, and maintenance for an able Miniſtery. Some there are which teach otherwiſe, and they reaſon thus: Tenths (ſay they) ſtanding by Gods law, are not to be alienated: but the goods and lands of the Church ſtand chiefly in tenths, and therefore admit no alienation. Anſw. In England tenths ſtand not by Gods lawes, but by D the poſitive lawes of the Land; ſo as if it pleaſe the King, he may appoint eighths, or more or leſſe as well as they: which if it were not ſo, no Miniſter were to meddle with the tenth of his Pariſh: for by Gods law tenths were brought to the ſtorehouſe of the overſeers, and diſtributed by them to the Levites, according as every man had need; but the Levites themſelves never medled with them. Again, if tenths ſtood now by the law of God, then the poore ſhould have every third yeare all the tenths of the earth: for ſo it was among the Jewes, while they ſtood in force by Gods Law. Secondly, they object that in the Proverbs, chap. 20. 25. It is a ſnare to devoure tenths. Anſ. The place is to bee underſtood of tenths then ſtanding in force by Gods Law, not of ours which stand by mans. Thirdly, they alleage that some decrees were made in the Primitive Church, that the alienation of Church-lands should become sacrilege. Answ. But those decrees concerned private persons who might not, nor may not on their own heads impropriate the Church goods; as also they debarred the taking away of necessaries from the Church, for then the Church was farre from that superfluity, which sithence it hath obtained: so that for a lay man to hold lands impropriate, the former conditions observed, is no sacrilege. Now if the question bee concerning the impropriations of Colleges, whether they lawfully hold them or no: then I answer secondly, that I take it, they hold them by a more speciall right; for they being given at the first unto the Church, they are not (being impropriate to Colleges) generally and wholly alienated from the Church; but remaine in this speciall use of the Church for the maintaining of the Seminaries of it, without which the Church must needs decay: and this seemeth a sufficient cause of reserving unto them this maintenance, so as care be had of the people and poore for their releefe and instruction. Secondly, whereas the Primitive Church first feasted, and then received the Lords Supper, wee note first the lawfulnesse of feasts, so as the poore be regarded, superfluity and riot avoided, and the right end intended, which is the praise and glory of God, expressed in thankfulnes for the abundance of his good blessings. So after the sacrifices and offerings, Aaron and the Elders of Israel came to feast with Iethro before God, Exod. 18.12. So Ezra 8. Goe your waies, eat the fat, and drinke the sweet, and send part to them for whom none is prepared: for this is the day of the Lord. Secondly, the Papists are deceived, who teach it necessary to come to the Sacrament of the Supper fasting, for these feasted before it. Thirdly, in the Primitive Church, and in the Apostles daies, there was no private Masse in which one Priest should eat up all alone, but there were feastings, which cannot bee performed by one man alone, but the whole congregation. Fourthly, hence we may note the end of the Lords Supper to bee the increase of our fellowship and communion with Christian men, as well as our union with God; and that we are to come together in love and Christian unity: for the testifying of which charitable affection, the ancient beleevers in the Apostles daies had these feasts of love before they came to the Lords Table.

Further, in that these seducers are called [spots in these feasts] I note first, that open offenders should be hindered and repelled from the Sacraments, being as spots in the face; which because they are blemishes, must bee washed away: so ought these by the censure of excommunication to be (untill their repentance) cut off from the face of the congregation. Secondly, that every one that professeth the faith is not a true member of the Catholike Church, as the Papists erroniously hold: that let a man bee what he will, if he professe the faith, it is sufficient to make him a member of the Catholike Church. Whereas open offenders are to bee accounted as spots, which no man will say are true parts of the bodie, but blemishes to be pared away, that their body may be the more perfect and entire.

Feeding themselves without feare.] In feasting we are to preserve feare within our hearts, which is two-fold: first, of God, secondly, of man. The former is seene, Exod. 18.12. The men of Israel feasted before the Lord. Iobs feare was, lest his sonnes should cast this feare of God out of their hearts in their feasting, and so offend God. The latter is prescribed, Prov. 23.1,2. When thou sittest to eat before a Ruler, put thy knife to thy throat; that is, bridle thine appetite: have respect not to passe the limits of sobriety, temperance and moderation. And as we are to eat and drinke, so also to season all other our actions with the feare of God and men; which one grace will cut off many graceless practices every where reigning amongst men. But a speciall thing here aimed at is, that we should never come to eat the Lords Supper without feare and reverence: which because the Corinths wanted, Paul complaineth that one came hungry, another drunke, and so prophaned that holy institution, 1 Cor. 11. 21. Object. But in that place it seemeth Paul condemneth these love-feasts, which Jude here dispraiseth not, where hee saith, Every man eateth his supper before, vers. 21,22. Answ. These Love-feasts were indifferent, and might bee used or not; Paul condemneth the great abuse of them in Corinth, because some were made by them drunke, and unfit for the Lords Supper, and the rich deceived the poore; but Jude commendeth them, because they were in other Churches rightly and religiously used. Doctr.

Clouds they are without water, carried about of winds.] These words contain the eighth and ninth sinnes of these wicked men: which the better to know what they are, let us a little consider the meaning of them. [Clouds they are without water.] It pleaseth the Spirit of God in many places of the old Testament, to compare Prophets and Teachers unto clouds; and their doctrine unto the dropping and distilling of the raine, and sweet showers falling from these clouds. So the Prophet Ezechiel is commanded to set his face towards the way of Teman, and drop his word toward the South, and his prophecie towards the forrest, Deut. 32.2. My doctrine shall drop as the raine, and my speech shall distill as the dew, as the showre upon the herbs, and as the great raine upon the grasse. Mich. 2.7. and 11. The word translated prophecie, signifieth properly to drop or distil. The reason of which comparison is rendred, Isa. 55. 10,11. Because as the rain falleth upon the earth, Ezech. 20.46.

and returneth not in vain, but moiſteneth it, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give ſeed to the ſower, and bread to him that eateth: ſo the word in the mouth of the Miniſters returneth not void, but accompliſheth the Lords will, and proſpereth in the thing whereto it is ſent; in becomming the ſavour of life to the ſalvation of ſome, and of death unto the death of them that periſh. The words then ſtanding upon this ſimilitude, beare this ſenſe; Though the propertie and uſe of clouds is to carry water and raine for the uſe of the earth, yet ſome clouds are without water: even ſo though all Teachers ought to be fitted and filled with ſtore of wholſome doctrine, to powre it out for the uſe of the Church; yet theſe ſeducers are utterly deſtitute thereof. And againe, as thoſe clouds without water are light, and fitter for nothing than to be carried about with winde: ſo theſe are altogether variable and unconſtant, carried about with every blaſt of ſtrange doctrine. The former of theſe ſimilitudes condemneth their ſinne of barrenneſſe and unfruitfulneſſe: the latter their ninth ſinne of inconſtancy and variableneſſe.

Concerning the former, ſeeing that the Apoſtle taketh it for granted that the clouds are naturally ordained to containe water; it may be demanded, how it can bee conceived that the clouds above being heavy with water, ſhould not fall to the earth; ſeeing every heavy thing naturally deſcendeth and tendeth downeward? Anſw. The clouds are heavy indeed, for even winds themſelves (being by many degrees lighter than they) have their weight, Job 28.25. No man therefore by wit or reaſon can reſolve this doubt, but only from the Word of God: which teacheth that it is by vertue of Gods commandement given in the creation, that the clouds fall not. Gen. 1.6. Let the firmament ſeparate the waters from the waters: by force of which commanding word, the water hangeth in the clouds, and the clouds in the aire, and need no other ſupporters. Iob ſetting out the Majeſtie and greatneſſe of God in his workes, here beginneth; That hee hangeth the earth upon nothing, he bindeth the waters in the clouds, and the cloud is not broken under them. Philoſophy is too defective to yeeld the true reaſon of this great worke of God, which commonly attributeth too much to nature, and too little to the God of nature; whoſe providence and power is herein to bee acknowledged, in that by his word he ordereth all his creatures, unto which he ſpeaketh the word, and they obey.

Secondly, hence we learne to conceive the right meaning of that place, Gen. 1.7. Let the firmament ſeparate the waters that be beneath, from the waters that be above. By the firmament is meant the aire, or the diſtance betweene the earth and the ſtarry skie: by the waters under this firmament, are meant the ſeas and floods; and the waters above, are the watery clouds, which are divided by the firmament or aire in which we breathe, called the firmament of Heaven: for it is the loweſt of the three Heavens, which the Scripture maketh mention of, reaching to the ſtarres; the ſecond being the ſtarry Heaven; the third being the Heaven of Heavens, the ſeat of God, where hee revealeth his glory to his Saints and Angels. Thoſe then are deceived, who out of this place dreame of a watery Heaven above the Starres.

Now further, in that theſe ſeducers are called Clouds without water, becauſe they are deſtitute of wholſome doctrine; we learne firſt that Miniſters ought to be ſuch as are able to teach wholſome and ſound doctrine, 1 Tim. 3. Mal. 2.7. The Prieſts lips ſhall preſerve knowledge: otherwiſe they are as Clouds without water, keeping the field of God barren and fruitleſſe: which abilitie ſuppoſeth, yea, and impoſeth the performance of diligence herein; or elſe whether they have knowledge or not, they come under the ranke of them whom Eſay 56.10. calleth dumbe dogs, which cannot or doe not barke. In former ages I grant indeed there were readers appointed in the Church, who could not otherwiſe teach: but yet none were called teachers into the Church, but ſuch as had this abilitie of watring Gods Church by doctrine more or leſſe, untill hereſie and ſchiſme came in. Secondly, Miniſters ought ſo to teach, as they drop and inſtill the graces of faith, repentance, and obedience into the hearts of the hearers: even as the clouds drop water upon the dry earth which ſinketh into the ſame. This was Pauls deſire to ſee the Romans, that he might beſtow ſome ſpirituall grace upon them, Rom. 1.11. This is the right handling and dividing of the Word, when men ſhew not words but power: 1 Cor. 4.14. That Teacher ſheweth learning that ſheweth men Chriſt, and can be a meanes to diſtill Gods graces into their ſoules: let this be the ſcope of theſe who are ſet apart unto this holy Miniſtery; elſe they ſhall be as unprofitable as clouds which containe no water in them at all. Thirdly, if the Miniſters muſt be as clouds having water in them; then muſt the people be as dry ground, not in regard of barrenneſſe, but of thirſt and deſire after theſe drops and dewes of grace diſtilling from the Miniſtery. Pſal. 143.6. My ſoule deſireth after thee, even as a thirſty land: unto which diſpoſition we are to preſerve two things within us: firſt, looke as in dry land parcht with the heat of the Sunne, there is a great want of moiſture; ſo in our ſoules muſt be retained a ſenſe of the want of the graces of God, with an hearty ſorrow of our want. Our hearts muſt bee perſwaded that in us, and of our ſelves there is no good thing that God can take delight in; yea, and the griefe conceived muſt not bee ſmall, but wee muſt feele our ſelves even dried and parched with the heat of his wrath due unto our ſinnes, untill theſe ſweet waters flowing from under the threſhold of the Sanctuarie have graciouſly refreſhed freshed us. Mary saith, that God filleth the hungry with good things: by the hungry are meant those who feele themselves void of grace, yea, as it were pined and starved for want of it. Luk. 1. 53. Christ telleth the woman of Canaan that hee came to the lost sheep of the house of Israel: that is, hee that knoweth himselfe not a wandring sheepe, but quite lost, even in the lyons paw ready to be devoured: such doth Christ take upon his necke, and like a good shepheard bring backe to his fold. Matth. 15. 24. For he was sent to preach the acceptable yeare; not to the mighty and states of the world, but to prisoners and captives; that is, such as could greeve and mourne for their captivity. Secondly, as dry land parched with drought, gapeth and openeth it selfe wide, as if it would swallow up the clouds for raine: so must our hearts preserve within them an earnest appetite and insatiable desire after Christ and his merits, above all the things in the world: more hungring after him, than after wealth, gold, silver, honours, health, or whatsoever is delightfull and highest prized among the sons of men. And this will follow of the former: for if we be once at the point, that we are out of all conceit of our owne goodnesse, wee will seeke earnestly for it at the hands of him, who is the fountaine of all goodnesse: if we feele our spirituall poverty once, we cannot but covetously hunt after those true treasures which onely inrich our soules to all eternity. The woman of Samaria did but prattle with Christ till he had told her of her sinne, and of her husbands, and that he which was now her husband was none of hers: then could she humble her selfe, and confesse him to be a Prophet, and quickly after came to acknowledge him the Messiah, and all her cavilling was laid aside: so till we be humbled, wee doe but cavill at the Word, and receive it not as dry land doth the showres which fall; but let the heart once be touched, it is turned presently upside downe, and we are become other manner of men than before.

Iohn. 4.

Clouds without water keepe Gods field fruitleſſe and barren.

Men muſt be as dry ground, not in barrenneſſe, but in regard of their thirſt after the drops of grace.

The ninth sinne blamed in these seducers is, that they are inconstant and unstable, carried like light clouds with the winds of strange doctrines; whence Teachers must learne to hold constantly the doctrine of salvation. Titus 1. 9. Holding fast the faithfull word: people also must not revolt or depart from it, nay, not bee unstable, or soone removed to another Gospell: Gal. 1. 6. Eph. 4. 14. Be no more children wavering and carried about with every wind of doctrine: but both Teachers and hearers must beware lest we (being by Gods blessing freed from the spirituall Ægypt, where wee were many hundred yeares detained) now after forty yeares and moe, looke backe againe, and fall from that faith into which we have beene baptized.

Beware of looking behind thee toward Sodome, out of which thou art escaped.

Corrupt trees, and without fruit, twice dead, and plucked up by the roots. ] In these words is the tenth sin of these seducers set down, and that is their incurable hypocrisie; illustrated and amplified by a comparison or similitude, from bad A and barren trees: containing foure steps or degrees of naughtinesse, every one worse than other. The first step, they are corrupt trees; which must bee understood not in regard of their substance, but in regard of their corrupt fruits: for the word translated corrupt, properly is applied to trees that beare no fruit, but in the fall of the leafe, which with the leaves fall off, being neglected and wither away, never comming to any good or gathering. The second degree, they are without fruit: which words are a correction of the former; for they are not only without good fruit, but utterly destitute of any fruit at all. Thirdly, they are twice dead: that is, certainly dead, hopelesse of any fruit. Fourthly, they are plucked up by the roots, that B is, utterly without hope, not of fruit, but of life it selfe; they are past living, and much more past fruit. This similitude then chargeth these seducers (to whom it is fitly applyed) first that all their works are but hypocriticall. Secondly, that they are utterly destitute of all good works which truly are good. Thirdly, that they have no heavenly and spirituall life or sap in them. And fourthly, that they are out of Christ, not rooted in him, but plucked up: and therefore they are most hopelesse of ever bearing fruit unto life, being proceeded so farre in the high way unto perdition. So much of the meaning.

Doct. In that these false teachers are justly condemned for this sinne of being corrupt trees without fruit: C we on the contrary must strive to become good trees of Gods delight; Isay 5. 7. Judah is the plant of my delight: trees of righteousnesse: Isay 60. 21. The planting of the Lord, laden with the fruits of righteousnesse: which that we may be, foure things are required of us; first, that we may be well rooted: secondly, that wee live in the root; thirdly, that we beare fruit: fourthly, that we beare good fruit.

First, we must be rooted. In this rooting two things are required: first, there must be a root; this root is Christ. Joh. 15. 1. He is the Vine, we the branches: Rom. 5. 6. If we be planted in him. Col. 2. 7. rooted in him. Here wee D must consider Christ not as GOD alone, or man alone, or the Sonne of God alone, but as God-man; as God made man; as an Immanuel, God with us, even our Mediator and Redeemer. Thus he is our root, in whom are hid the treasures of graces. Coloss. 2. 3. and of whose fulnesse we all receive grace for grace, Joh. 1. 16 The second thing is this rooting is ingrafting; for trees of righteousnesse grow not by nature. Psal. 1. A good man is as a treeplanted: for by nature the best men are but wilde Olives, and must be transplanted from the first Adam into the second. The Author of this ingrafting is God himselfe, who doth it by two actions: first, he giveth Christ truly & really in the Word and Sacraments, not out of the Word, but in and by it. So 1 Cor. 3. Paul planteth, Apollo watereth, that that is, God by their ministry ingrafted the Corinthians into Christ. Secondly, when on his part he giveth Christ, he giveth also a power to the beleever to apprehend him, and receive him with his merits unto salvation, and that by the onely hand of faith. Ob. But this can be no ingrafting, seeing Christ is in heaven, we are on earth. Ans. It is not indeed a naturall ingrafting, which cannot be but by the fit applying of two bodies one to the other, but spirituall, yet as sure and as straight as that is. Wee see in nature the minde is present and joyned with the thing it thinketh of, although it be distant many thousand miles: if this can be true in nature, then much more in faith, which is a worke supernaturall, and farre above the reach of nature. Againe, a man hath land given him in Spaine, Turkie, or America, many thousand miles off him, he was never at it, he never saw it, and yet is truly the Lord of it, and may say of it, it is his owne, by vertue of the donation. Even so God in his word giveth Christ and his merits to the beleever, who as he hath received him by faith, so he retaineth him by grace: by vertue of which donation, and acceptation, a man may as truly say, Christ is his, as though he were now in heaven already with him; yea, so sinne and certaine is this ingrafting, that it once being made, can never be dissolved, but is everlasting: for the root living and abiding for ever, so also doe the branches, being set into the same, and that by the hand of the good husbandman God himselfe.

The second thing required in a tree of righteousnesse is life, which is not the naturall life of other plants, but spirituall and eternall; for eternall life beginneth in this life. Gal. 2. 20. Now I live, yet not I now, but Christ liveth in me: and this life is by the faith in the Sonne of God, and then wrought in us, when the same mind which was in Christ whilest he was upon earth is also in us, Phil. 2. 5. for hee conveyeth his owne disposition into his members in part, who are daily made conformable unto him: of which conformity the Apostle maketh two parts, Rom. 5. 6. First, a conformity unto him in his death; that looke as he died for sin, so ought his members unto sinne: and as he by his death subdued sinne, and obtained victory over it; so ought they daily to be nibbling in the abolishing and mortifying of that sinne which presseth them downe, and hangeth so fast upon them, untill the day of their full conquest and finall deliverance. Secondly, a conformity unto him in his Resurrection; that as he rose againe from the grave, so should they from the grave of their sinnes; and as he rose to live for ever, so ought they by vertue of his resurrection to live to God in newnesse of life, as those that looke to live for ever with him. Thirdly, the tree of righteousnesse must bring forth fruits, to testifie the life of it, called Gal. 5. 22. fruits of the spirit, and there reckoned up; Love, peace, joy, long-suffering, gentlenesse, goodnesse, faith, meekenesse, temperance. Phil. 1. 11. Paul prayeth that the Philippians might bee filled with the fruits of righteousnesse, that is, the duties of the Morall law contained in the first and second Table. Fourthly, a tree of righteousnesse must bring forth good fruits, such as are pleasing to God. Quest. How shall a Christian bring forth good fruits? Ans. First, good fruit must come from a good heart, an heart penitent, and truly turned to God, Mat. 3. Bring forth fruits worthy amendment of life. 1 Tim. 1. 5. Love out of a pure heart. Secondly, it must be brought forth with intention, will, purpose, and endevour to obey God in his commandements, which the heart must respect. Thirdly, the end of this fruit must be the glory of God, not seeking our selves but Gods honour. In Levit. 19. 23. God requireth that the trees should be circumcised, which was thus performed: The three first yeares the fruit was to be cast, or fall away; the fourth it was to be dedicated to the Lord, and the fifth yeare the Israelites might eat of the fruit: even so we must first cast away in respect of our selves our fruits, and dedicate them unto the Lord, so he shall taste of them with delight, and not before. Fourthly, it must be brought forth to the good of others; as trees beare fruits not for themselves, but for men: so our fruits must be intended not so much for our private good, as the common good of the Church and Common-wealth.

Trees of righteousnesse must circumcise their hearts, seeing trees were to be circumcised by the law.

Doctr. 2. Seeing the faithfull are not such corrupt trees, but of Gods owne planting, they have here first a ground of comfort in the middest of sorrow, sicknesse, yea and death it selfe; for being ingrafted into Christ, the whole man is preserved safe and sound in him: yea, the dying body, nay, the dead body, and that which is rotting in the grave is planted into him, and is to live againe in him, who alwayes liveth, and will raise it to life eternall at the last day. Trees in winter are dead to mans sense; yet because the roots of them live, and have in them sap and moisture, in the spring they shall bud, blossome, and beare fruit againe: even so the rotten bodie at the time of refreshing shall revive againe and become a glorious plant, putting off mortality and corruption, no more to bee subjected thereunto againe, than the root into which they are set; who hath for his members chased them away. Secondly, seeing we must be planted, and cannot attaine this growth by nature: we must detest, and abhorre our selves in dust and ashes; renounce, and bewaile our natural condition, and be at no rest till we feele our selves set into Christ, by living the life of the Sonne of God: For know we not that Christ liveth in us, except we be reprobats? Thirdly, our Church hath herein resembled Iudah; having beene for many yeares a plant of Gods delight, who hath hedged and fenced it by his favorable protection: but many, yea, the most branches are barren, bearing no fruit; others beare lesse fruit than they have done, being withered and fallen backe: what will bee (think we) the end hereof? Surely the axe being already laid to the root of the tree, shall cut downe whatsoever branches beate not forth good fruit, and they shall be cast into the fire. It standeth us then in hand to become more fruitfull before wee bee cut downe. Fourthly, hence let every man learne subjection unto God in all his crosses and afflictions: we are trees or branches at least, of the Vine; the Father is the husbandman, and looke as the husbandman loppeth, cutteth, and pruneth, yea, and almost cutteth downe his trees to make them more fruitfull: so dealeth the Lord with his children, who therein are to rest well contented, for hee chasteneth them for their good: and although no chastisement seemeth joyous for the present, yet it bringeth afterward the pleasant fruit of righteousnes to those that are exercised thereby.

Twice dead and plucked up.] Some hence gather this, that we are once dead in Adam by originall sinne; and secondly, after regeneration or ingrafting into Christ, by some grievous sinne, wounding the conscience to death: and hence conclude, that a man regenerate may die againe, and fal from grace: urging for their purpose that in Rom. 11.20. Through unbeleefe they were broken off, and thou standest by faith; be not high minded, but feare. But this cannot be so understood; for by twice dead, is meant dead certainly; or dead twice, once in Adam by originall sinne, and the second time dead by their owne actuall sinne. As for that place in Rom. 11. I answer, there are two kinds of planting: first, outward: secondly, inward. The outward is, when God giveth the word unto a people without other his ordinances, and they publikely professe it. The inward is, when God giveth true faith, whereby men are set into Christ. Now the Jewes whom the Apostle speaketh of, were implanted by the former only, and therefore might be broken off: the other is everlasting, 1 Joh. 2.19. They went out from us, but were not of us: for if they had beene of us, they should have continued with us. Further, where it is said, Plucked up:] hence is gathered by some, that they were once in the root, and therefore a man rooted and set in Christ may perish finally. Ans. But we must know that this phrase in the Scripture, signifieth a manifestation of the things to be done, rather than the doing of them: they are therefore said to be plucked up, whom God manifesteth never to have beene rooted: as also men are said to be blotted out of the booke of life; not that they were ever written therein, but in that God manifesteth and maketh knowne to men that they were never written in it.

V. 13 *They are raging waves of the sea, foaming out their owne shame: they are wandring A

B starres, for whom is reserved the blacke darknesse for ever.

The Apostle in this verse proceedeth on in the further discovery of these wicked men by sundry other sinnes, set downe after the same manner as the former by way of similitude and comparison. And first hee compareth them to the raging waves of the sea; and secondly, to wandring starres. And in the end of the verse, For whom, &c. the conclusion is againe repeated, of which we have spoken in the 11. verse. The former comparison hath three expositions: for some will have their grosse hypocrisie hereby signified; and then the comparison standeth thus; Looke as the waves of the sea rage and swell, rising up towards the heavens, as though they would swallow and overthrow the earth, which they seeme to threaten: but drawing to the shore, they are broken to a little foame: so these seducers make a great shew of godlinesse, and piety, as though they onely would goe to heaven; yet is the matter nothing so, all is but froth, seeing they want the power and practice of religion, and godlinesse in the midst of such pretences. Secondly, others hereby expresse their unprofitablenesse and deceitfulnesse in their doctrine, thus: As the waves of the sea rise very huge and high, especially being stirred by the winds, and yet their effect is nothing but a little foame and mire, which C they cast up: so these lewd men being puffed up in themselves, promise great matters to their followers: as, much liberty, many blessings, and great good things; and yet the effect of all their shewes, is but to make men much more the servants of sinne than before. And thus Peter speaketh of them: In speaking swelling words of vanity they beguile with wantonnes, through the lusts of the flesh, them which were cleane escaped from them. This was truly spoken of them, and may as truly be applied unto divers of our times; as first the Libertines and Familists, fondly assuring their Disciples that they shall be illuminate and deified, such great matters they promise; whereas they make them the children of the devill sevenfold more D than they were before. Secondly, the Romish Clergie have beene as large in their promises unto their hearers: teaching them that they shall be able to satisfie the justice of God for their sinnes, yea, and merit life everlasting; and that many of them can performe works of supererogation, which the Law of God bindeth them not unto: but what is this but to foame out dirt and mire, and to teach men that for a little money they may breake all Gods commandements? The third exposition is this; As the Sea stirred by the winds and weather rageth, & from the foundation casteth up nothing but froth: so these men stirred and moved by the hand of God correcting them, amend not, nor profit thereby: but rather under the same, discover discover the wickednesse and unbeleefe of their hearts; which is the most agreeable and fittest exposition, explained in Isa. 57. 20. The wicked are like the raging sea that cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. From this sense consider these things; first, a worke of God: secondly, a practise of man. First, the will, worke, and appointment of God is, that men shall bee troubled, stirred, moved, and cannot rest in quiet, and have within them such disquietnesse, as if the raging waves of the Sea were within their soules. The minds of men both godly and wicked, their wills and affections are often so distempered, as is the Sea when it is troubled with boisterous winds and tempests. Jer. 46. 27. The Lord shall trouble Damascus, so shee shall become as a fearefull Sea that cannot rest. Iosh. 7. Iosh. said to Achan; Thou hast troubled Israel, and the Lord shall trouble thee. Iob saith, The Almighty troubled him, chap. 23. 16. Yea, Christ himselfe, although he was without sin, had his soule troubled in his agonie, in which his minde, will, and affections were disturbed; and this trouble God bringeth on men divers waies; sometimes by those of a mans owne house, as Iacobs sonnes troubled him, Gen. 34. Sometimes they of his companie, as Achan, Josh. 7. Sometimes by the Lords withdrawing of himselfe, Psal. 30. 7. Thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled. Sometimes a mans owne heart and conscience will rage against him, as Baltazer seeing the hand writing upon the wall, was troubled, and there was no life in him, Dan. 5. What then, will some say, is there no difference betweene the godly and the wicked herein? Ans. Yes, for every little crosse unto the wicked is a tempest breaking the rocks which maketh them to storme and rage, and send forth foame and mire: but the crosses of the godly are as calme winds, a little shaking them indeed, and for a little time: but are blowne over when they have a little exercised their faith and graces, so as they are bettered, yea, and furthered by them: 1 King. 19. Elias standing on mount Horeb, there passed by him a mighty tempest which rent the rocks; and then an earth-quake, then fire, but God was not in any of these; afterward there came a still and soft voyce, and God was in the voice. Afflictions are like that tempest, earthquake, and fire, namely, to the wicked, against whom the Lord commeth to shake and consume them; but to the godly are as a still voice to teach and instruct them: under which they quietly content themselves, because God is in that still voice, namely, by his grace and presence supporting and sustaining them even in the midst of their troubles.

2 Pet. 2.18.

Romish sea casteth out nothing but foame and mire.

Secondly, the practice of a wicked man is, when hee is troubled and stirred by God, to foame out his owne shame; even as the Sea his froth. Experience teacheth, that if a wicked man have any wrong or disgrace offered him, presently he discovereth the corruption of his heart, and breaketh out into railings, cursing, reviling, and all manner of revenge: so if God lay his hand upon him by sicknesse, or upon his family, he cannot cover his want of love of God, he cannot hide the infidelitie of his heart: for he breakes himselfe the next way to the Sorcerer, Figure-caster, or the next Wizzard, to flyeth from God as fast as his feet will carry him: and every way the lewd violent affection bewray themselves, which these seducers are charged withall.

Vse. Seeing this is the property of a wicked man being troubled, to foame out his owne shame, let the childe of God in his trouble quiet himselfe, restraine and bridle his corrupt eyes, let him shew forth his faith, obedience, meeknesse, and subjection unto God by prayer: as Iehosaphat being in a great straight on every side, turned his eyes unto the Lord, saying, I know not what to doe, but mine eyes are towards thee. And David flying from Absalom his sonne, reviled him not, nor stormed against him, but turned to the Lord, saying, If I please thee not, Lord here I am, doe with me even as thou pleasest.

The second comparison followeth in these words; They are wandring starres. By which words wee may not understand the Planets in the Heavens, neither the fixed starres, which keepe a direct and constant course; but such as were call shooting, falling, or gliding starres, which have some light, but it is soone obscured. The sense then is, that which was before mentioned, namely, their false and unstable doctrine, which can never direct men to heaven, no more than those shooting starres can direct either sailers by Sea, or travellers by land. Hence learne two things: first, that all true teachers must be starres. Secondly, they must be fixed, and not wandring starres: first, they must be starres. Oh, This cannot bee, seeing they have no light of their owne. Ans. Christ is the light which enlightneth every man that commeth into the world, called therefore the Sun of righteousnes, and the day-starre, from whom all Ministers receive their light. Againe, they may be fit instruments to carry light unto others (which is their office) although they have none of their owne, save that onely which is conveyed from Christ unto them: as a lanthorne hath no light in it selfe, but what men put into it.

Doct. First, all true Teachers must first have the Sun of righteousnesse to shine in their owne hearts, before they can enlighten others with his light: for as Paul was himselfe comforted that he might be able to comfort others, 2 Cor. 1. so no man can teach others, till himselfe first be taught. Secondly, if they be starres, they must shine to some what, and that is to the hearts of men: so as the principall care of Ministers ought to bee herein placed, that they may enlighten the minds, consciences, wills, and affections of men, so becomming the meanes of the rising of the Sunne of righteousnesse in mens hearts;

As Adam fled from God upon his sinne: so many a one fleeth to the devill upon the punishment of it.

2 Chr. 20. 12.

Ministers as starres must shine to mens hearts, and not onely sound to the eare.

not that they may fill the eare with words, but the heart with light, comfort, and refreshing. This was the scope of Pauls preaching, 2 Cor. 4. 2. in the declaration of the truth to approve himselfe to every mans conscience in the sight of God: so as if his Gospell were yet hid, it was not his fault; but of those men whose eyes the God of the world had blinded, that the light of the glorious Gospell of Christ should not shine into their hearts.

Vse This teacheth that all men by nature are the children of darknesse, without the knowledge of God; as unto whom God hath appointed Teachers to be as shining starres to enlighten them. We need not goe farre to prove this truth, for even our own country witnesseth that in the dayes of former Princes, our forefathers, wanting this light and these starres, sowed and reaped their fields, brought home their corne, baked their bread: which served them partly for food, and partly to make a breaden god of; a more palpable darknesse than that of Ægypt which might have beene felt. Secondly, seeing that darknesse is chased away, and we have the light and many bright starres to direct us, take the exhortation, Ephes. 5. 8. Yee are now light, walke as children of the light, namely, by accepting, entertaining, and embracing of the light. That wee may doe this, first we must know the light, and behold it with the love and affection of our hearts unto it: that as when the Sunne shineth, every man openeth his doores and windowes to receive the comfort of it: so we should open the doores of our hearts to entertaine, and retaine the light of Christ, to have them filled therewith: for then Gods favourable countenance is shining upon us. Secondly, having the light, we must doe the workes of the light, that is, of obedience: when the Sun is up and shineth, every man walketh in his calling, and whilest our Sunne of grace is over our heads, we are to walke as becommeth the calling of Christianity, to make conscience of all sinne; a shame is it at noone day to stumble and fall, and rush into a pit: so now is it for Christian men in such a sun-shine of the Gospell, to betake them to every worke of darknesse, and bee betaken with every snare of sinne, as though they had no light to direct them, but were left in darknesse.

Open the doores of thy heart, that the Sonne of righteousnesse may shine into the house of thy soule.

Secondly, true Teachers must not onely bee starres, but fixed starres, that is, constant and stable in the doctrine which they teach, and deliver out of the Prophets and Apostles: for if the Starres and Sea markes should change their places, and remove to and fro, the poore passengers that looke for constant direction by them, are likely to be carried and cast upon the quicke sands and rockes, and so to bee overthrowne and drowned: in like manner, if Teachers be variable, and changelings in their doctrines, the soules of all their hearers (not knowing where to have sure direction) are as likely to suffer shipwrack & sinke into the pit of hell.

A Vse. People ought to have their hearts stablished, and setled upon the doctrine of religion taught, and proved unto them out of the Word; by the direction whereof they are to be passed unto the haven of happines. If this be learned of the body of this land, our peace and prosperity shall bee stable within our walls, and palaces; yea, Gods protection shall bee a wall of fire round about us. So much of that verse.

V. 14. And Enoch also the seventh from Adam prophesied of such, saying: Behold, the Lord commeth with thousands of his Saints.

B The Apostle having in the latter part of the former verse repeated the conclusion of the reason, which is, that these seducers shall bee destroyed, (the blacknesse of darknesse being reserved for them) he confirmeth that conclusion by a worthy testimony of Enoch; who prophecied that the Lord would give judgement against all ungodly men: and therefore these ungodly men, vers. 4. must needs bee destroyed. In this testimony consider two things: first, the preface before it: secondly, the testimony it selfe. In the preface hee nameth the Author; who was Enoch: and commendeth him in that he was the seventh from Adam. Here two questions are to bee answered: first, whence had Iude this history, seeing it is no where recorded in the Scriptures? and how knew he it to be Enochs? I answer two waies: first, he either had it and learned it to bee his by some tradition which went from hand to hand: (or else written by some Jew) or secondly, he learned it out of some booke which went under Enochs name then extant in the daies of the Apostles, though now lost: it is certaine that one of these waies he had it.

C Hence the Papists gather, that the Jewes had unwritten traditions, and consequently all their traditions are to be observed. Ans. Wee deny not all unwritten traditions, of which some are true and profitable: but we renounce and deny D all those traditions which are made Articles of faith, and rules of Gods worship, necessary to salvation, (for all such doctrines are written in the books of the Prophets and Apostles, which containe perfect direction and rules concerning faith and manners) of which kind the Roman Church holdeth their traditions to be: this is of another kinde, it being no article of faith, nor necessary to salvation to know, whether Enoch writ this Propheſie or no. Again, from the second answer, others who are no Papists, conclude that some bookes of Canonicall Scripture are perished and lost. But this is untrue; for then first the fidelitie of the Church, which is the keeper of these Oracles, should bee called in question: and secondly, in the books of canonicall extant, not one sentence, or tittle, no not the sense of any sentence is lost: how then should whole bookes come to be lost?

It is alleaged that the bookes of Salomon are most of them lost. Ans. The books of Salomon which were lost, were bookes of humanitie and Philosophie: for he writ of all beasts, birds, trees, even from the Cedar in Libanus to the hyssop upon the wall; the books of humane truth might faile, but no part of Canonicall Scripture.

Ob. Mention is made in the Scripture of the books of the Chronicles of the Jewes or kings of Judah; but these are perished. Answ. They were politike historie, as are the Chronicles of England, or other Countries.

Ob. The bookes of Nathan, Gad, Iddo, Shemajah, and other Prophets are perished. Answ. All these (as is thought by the learned) are contained in the bookes of the Kings, Chronicles, and Samuel.

Ob. This booke of Enoch is lost. Ans. First, it is doubted whether it was a booke or no, or went by tradition. Secondly, if it was a booke, it was no part of Scripture: for Moses was the first penman of Scripture, who lived long after Enoch.

He was not the fourth from Adam, Cains sonne, Gen. 4 17. but the seventh of the posterity of Seth, Gen. 7. 18.

The second question: why doth the Apostle make choyce of this testimony of Enoch rather than some other Prophet? Answ. Himselfe giveth two reasons: First, hee was the seventh from Adam: it is therefore an ancient testimony, to be received and reverenced for the antiquity: but withall it sheweth what is true antiquity, namely, when a doctrine of religion can be proved from some Prophet or Apostle: for this testimony was a prophecie, and therefore that antiquity which the Church of Rome challengeth to her religion and doctrine, is but counterfeit; because they are not able to justifie the maine points thereof from any Prophet or Apostle: yea, in these wherein they dissent from us, they cannot bring their proofe and descent from within the first hundred yeares after Christ. It is then a vaine plea and false pretence of them to boast of the antiquity of their religion. The second reason is in the word prophesied: for Enoch spoke not this of his owne head or motion, but from God; for no creature, Angell, or man, can foretell things to come; being a prerogative properly belonging unto God. Object. Yes, but the learned Physician can truly foretell the death of the patient to come. Answ. He doth not properly herein foretell a thing to come; for the death of the party is present in the signes and causes of it. Ob. But the Devill could foretell Sauls death, 1 Sam. 28. 19. To morrow shalt thou be with mee, and thy sonnes. Ans. The Devill could not properly foretell it, but might see it in the causes, and signes. Againe, he might speake so to Saul, because God had made him an instrument for the execution of that judgement and destruction; so as God onely properly foretelleth that which is simply to come, and no man or Angell.

The second point is the testimony it selfe. Behold, the Lord commeth, &c.] In which observe three points: first, the comming of the Lord: secondly, the judgement of the Lord: thirdly, the cause of it, in the 15. verse; To give judgement against all men, &c. First, of the party comming, Behold, the Lord commeth.] Where the Apostle speaketh in the time present, which is put for the time to come: which forme of speech sheweth the certainty of Christs comming to judgement; who shall as certainly come, as if hee were now already comming. Concerning which certainty, it may be demanded first, whence commeth this comming of Christ to be certaine? Ans. From the unchangeable will of God, which hath certainly decreed the same. For hee hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousnesse. Acts 17. 31. And thus are all other the Articles of our faith most certaine, in that they are grounded on the unchangeable will and Word of God.

Secondly, how or from whence may wee know this will of God to be so certaine? Ans. From the manner of propounding the doctrine of it; wherein the evidence of the Spirit plainly appeareth, saying peremptorily, The Lord commeth; evidently expressing the certainty, as if it were now present. And the same may be spoken of the whole Scripture, which in it selfe is most sure and certaine, because it is the most unchangeable will of God. But how doe we know it so to be, will some say? I answer, by the evidence of the Spirit, the authoritie, puritie, majesty, effect, and ends of the doctrine: it need not seeke evidence else-where than from it selfe, not from man or the Church it selfe. The Romish Church confesseth it is of it selfe, and in it selfe sufficiently certaine, but not to me or thee, except the Church say so; but this is a false position. The Scripture is certaine both in it selfe and unto us, and we know it so to be, though never a man would acknowledge it; the heart seasoned with grace, will make the mouth confesse it.

Secondly, the Apostle speaking in this forme, he commeth, for he will come: wee learne to set before our eyes the comming of our Lord Jesus to judgement, and to make account of every present day as the day of his comming: the Scriptures every where commend watchfulnes unto us, which is to doe nothing else but to make reckoning continually of this day. But some will say we cannot make account daily of it, for we see it commeth not: neither may we inquire into the time of it. Answ. Although we cannot exactly make account of that day of generall judgement, yet we may reckon upon the day of our particular judgement, and the day of our owne death, that so we may be fitted thereto. For as this shall leave us, so shall finde us. A necessary doctrine and duty to be enforced forced in these drowsie daies, wherein every man almost putteth off the evill day, and maketh league and covenants with death and hell: the young man presumeth of length of daies: the old man dreameth hee may live one yeare longer: both of them deferre hereupon their repentance, in that they both are of one minde, namely, that their master wil yet defer his comming. Thirdly, we must not only carry within us a conceit and opinion of this day, but also must be inwardly affected with it, that we may walke in awe and reverence before God in regard of it. 2 Cor. 5. 11. Knowing therefore the terrors of the Lord, we perswade men, &c.

Now in the latter part of this verse, the attendants of the Lord in his comming are mentioned in these words; With thousands of his Saints: which must be understood not only of Angels, but men also, 1 Thess. 3. 13. at the comming of the Lord Jesus Christ with all his Saints. Quest. How can this be, and how shall the Saints come with him? Ans. All men shall rise with their owne bodies, good and bad, at the sound of the Trumpet; then shall the Saints bee taken up into the clouds to meet Christ, and shall be made a part of his attendance: but the wicked shall stand upon the earth, wishing the mountains and hills to fall upon them, and hide them from the presence of the Judge. Which affordeth a most speciall comfort unto all them who know themselves to be the members of Christ; they shall not need to be dismaied at that day, nor feare the face of the wicked, seeing they shall be received in the clouds into fellowship with Christ before the judgement begin; which manner of proceeding the Apostle having described, concludeth with the same, Wherefore comfort your selves one another with these words, vers. 18. Here also may be noted the Power, Majesty, and Omnipotency of Christ in his second comming: although his first comming was base and in the forme of a servant, now he shall come with many millions of Angels and Saints, whom all creatures cannot resist: let no wicked man thinke then either to absent himselfe, or escape his fearefull wrath: the onely way to avoid it is, in thy life time to meet him by repentance.

v. 15. *To give judgement against all men, and to rebuke all the ungodly among them, of all their wicked deeds, which they have ungodlily committed; and of all their cruell speakings, which wicked sinners have spoken against him.

The second point in the testimonie, is the judgement of the Lord, which together with thereunto is in this verse described. Concerning the judgement wee must know, that it is either generall or speciall; both of them here mentioned: the former in these words, To give judgement against all men; the latter in these words following, And to rebuke all the ungodly among them.] In the generall judgement it may bee asked, how Christ can bee said to give judgement against all men; seeing the Saints shall come with him, and hee will passe no sentence against them. Ans. The meaning is, hee will give judgement upon all men: for the godly shall receive and heare a sentence, but of absolution: and amongst all men he will rebuke the ungodly: all persons shall come unto judgement without exception, of what age, sex, or state soever they be. This universall judgement teacheth us, first, to redresse before this day come, whatsoever within us would when it commeth confound us, for every man must appeare in his owne person: no Proctor shall be allowed to speake or solicite for any man, the secrets of all hearts must be discloſed, and every man shall receive accordingly to that he hath done. It standeth men therefore in hand to reforme things amisse before hand, for they shall appeare nakedly even as they are. Quest. How shall this be done? Ans. 1 Cor. 11. 21. Iudge thy selfe before hand, and thou shalt not be judged of the Lord; arraigne, examine, cast, and condemne thy selfe, sue for pardon as for life and death, and thou shalt escape that fearefull judgement: For he that confesseth his sinnes and forsaketh them, shall finde mercy, Prov. 28. 13. Thus doe, and mercie belongeth unto thee. Upon the same ground Paul raiseth the same duty, admonishing all men every where to repent, because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousnesse, Acts 17. 30, 31. Secondly, seeing there is a day of universall judgement, seeke in the meane time to stop the mouth of thy conscience, that it may then stand with thee to excuse and acquit thee, and never dare to offend againe and wound it, for it is a deputy-judge under God: which if it condemne thee, much more shall God the great Judge, being greater than thy conscience. Thirdly, hence in all actions our care should bee to approve our hearts unto God, especially in hearing and speaking the Word, Prayer, use of the Sacraments; yea, and all other endevours should be to please and obey him, who one day will give an upright sentence upon them all. Thus the consideration of the judgement to come, made the Apostle Paul endevour to approve all the actions of his life unto God, 2 Cor. 5. 11. So Peter 2 Epist. 3. 11. seeing all these things shall be dissolved, What manner of men ought wee to bee in holy conversation and godlinesse, looking for the hasting unto the comming of the day of the Lord?

We must be condemned by our selves or by the Lord.

The speciall judgement is laid downe in the next words, and they containe two things: first, the the perſons who ſhall be judged; All the ungodly among them. Secondly, the manner of their judgement in the world, rebuke or convince. The perſons are ſet out by their propertie of ungodlineſſe, which is a ſinne directly againſt God: and the ungodly man is he who denieth God the honour due unto him: of whom (that wee might the better know him) the Scripture hath given five notes or properties: as firſt, that he knoweth not or acknowledgeth not the true God aright according to his Word. Pſal. 10. 4. All their thoughts be that there is no God, that is, they acknowledge him not, in his preſence, providence, juſtice, or mercy. Secondly, he ſubjecteth not his bodie, ſoule, and conſcience to the Lawes of God in all things: but taketh liberty to live as he liſt. Job 21. 14. They ſay to the Almighty, Depart from us, we will none of thy waies. Pſal. 50. 16. They hate to be reformed. Thirdly, in heart & life he dependeth not himſelfe upon the wil, power, providence, and good pleaſure of God; but on ſomething out of God in himſelfe, or ſome other creature: Abac. 2. 4. whereas the juſt man liveth by faith, the wicked man exalteth himſelfe, and is puffed up as bearing himſelfe upon ſomething beſides the Creator. Fourthly, he worſhippeth not from his heart the true God, he lifteth not up his ſoule in prayer, or thankſgiving: but as a beaſt receiveth bleſſings, contenting himſelfe within himſelfe, never looking higher to the hand reaching them out unto him, Job. 21. 15. Who is the Almighty that we ſhould ſerve him, and what profit is it to call upon him? Pſal. 14. He never calleth upon God. Fifthly, he hateth the Church and people of God, and when occaſion ſhall ſerve, he will teſtifie it by perſecuting the ſame. For he that loveth not God, loveth not his adherents. Pſal. 44. 5. They ſmite downe thy people, O Lord, and trouble thine heritage. Theſe be the notes of them againſt whom ſentence ſhal paſſe when they ſhall be judged: from whence two duties are to be learned. Firſt, to deny all ungodlineſſe, and to put far from us all the properties thereof. Secondly, to exerciſe our ſelves unto godlines, and all the duties thereof: as firſt, to learne to know God aright, both in his owne attributes, and alſo in his affection to us ward, never quieting our ſelves till we know him to be our Father, our Redeemer, our Sanctifier: and this knowledge of him is life eternall. Secondly, to ſubject our ſelves, our lives, wils, affections, ſpeeches, and actions, to all his Lawes: for to ſhake off the yoke of obedience to any part of his word, is rebellion. Thirdly, to go out of our ſelves, as being nothing in our ſelves; and in our hearts depend upon the will & good pleaſure of God, living by faith, making him our rocke, our tower, our fortreſſe, and ſtrong defence in all eſtates, yea, in life and in death our advantage. Fourthly, to worſhip him not onely outwardly (as hypocrites may doe) but to ſerve him in our ſpirits, giving him our whole hearts. Fifthly, to love all men, but eſpecially Gods Saints, and the houſhold of faith; affecting the particular congregations, and chiefly delighting in the Saints upon earth that excell in vertue. Thus walking with God, as Enoch did, wee ſhall eſcape this moſt wofull ſentence which ſhall bee pronounced againſt the ungodly ones of the earth.

The ſecond thing in this ſpeciall judgement is the manner of it, in the word rebuke.] God rebuketh two waies: firſt, in mercy, when as in juſtice he remembreth mercy, Hab. 3. Secondly, in juſtice, yea, in anger and wrath: Pſal. 6. 1. O Lord, rebuke me not in thy wrath: and this latter is here meant. So as thus much is here ſignified, that the Lord will powre out his fury, and his wrathfull indignation upon all the ungodly of the earth. This wrathfull rebuke hath two parts: firſt, the convicting of the ungodly in their owne conſciences, of all their wicked thoughts, words, and works, and this the Word alſo ſignifieth, Rev. 20. The books ſhall be opened, and all mens ſinnes ſhall be laid open: that is, they ſhall bee ſo diſcovered, as they (being convinced) ſhall not be able to deny them. Secondly, the puniſhment that ſhall follow that conviction. So David prayeth, Pſal. 6. Neither chaſtiſe me in thy heavy diſpleaſure.

Doct. Hence we learne that all things are fully and perfectly knowne unto God; and all things are open before him: Heb. 4. 13. yea, they are naked, and as it were unquartered before his eyes: for the Apoſtle alludeth to the cutting up of a beaſt, or the anatomizing of the creature, wherein men are curious to finde out every little veine or muſkle, though they lie never ſo cloſe: even ſo the Lord ſhall finde out every tranſgreſſion, although never ſo ſecretly conceived and concealed, and that in ſuch ſort as he ſhall convince the ungodly man, whoſe mouth ſhall be ſhut ſo ſoone as ever his booke is open: which ſhould teach us, firſt, in matter of religion to avoid all diſſembling and hypocriſie. Be that indeed what thou ſeemeſt to bee: for though thou maiſt delude men, thou canſt not deceive the Almightie, but hee ſhall convince thee. Secondly, let thy dealing before men be plaine, ſimple, without fraud, covin, or deceit; for though thou maiſt gloſe with men, who cannot convince thee, yet the righteous Lord ſhall rebuke thee for want of righteouſneſſe in thy dealings. Thirdly, humble thy ſelfe before God alwaies for all thy knowne ſins, yea, and for unknowne ſinnes alſo: for though they bee unknowne to thy ſelfe, yet they are knowne unto him, who will one day convince thee of them all, except thou prevent him by thy repentance.

Be as thou ſeemeſt, or ſeeme as thou art.

The third thing propounded in the teſtimony, is the cauſe of the judgement, in theſe words: Of all their wicked deeds which they have ungodlily committed, and of all their cruell ſpeakings, which wicked ſinners have ſpoken againſt him.] The cauſe is two-fold, the deeds & words of men: the deeds are diſtributed, firſt, by the

the propertie of them, being works of ungodlineſſe. Secondly, by the manner of performing them, they are ungodlily committed. By ungodly workes are meant all ſinnes againſt any part of the law of God, whether in the firſt or ſecond Table: for every ſinne (though it be directly againſt man) hath in it a defect, and a withdrawing of ſome duty due to God. Secondly, for the manner, theſe workes being ungodly and failing againſt the law, are done after an ungodly manner: and that worke is done ungodlily which proceedeth from an unrepentant heart, and a minde addicted and devoted to ungodlineſſe, which is knowne and diſcerned to be ſuch a one by three notes: firſt, becauſe it purpoſeth to commit ſinne before hand. Secondly, in the committing of ſinne it is delighted and taketh pleaſure in it. Thirdly, after ſinne it walketh in the ſame courſe, yea, runneth on in the ſame waies without remorſe or repentance: and this clauſe ſeemeth to be added to put a difference betweene the godly and wicked, who both of them may commit ungodlineſſe, and be found in ungodly actions; but not both committing them in an ungodly manner: for the childe of God, before he ſin, he purpoſeth it not, yea, he hath a purpoſe not to ſinne; ſo as he may ſay, It is not onely beſides, but againſt his purpoſe. Secondly, in his ſinne he hath a reſiſting, and ſtrife againſt it, and is not wholly ſwallowed up in the pleaſure of it. Thirdly, he lieth not in it, but renueth and recovereth himſelfe againe by faith and repentance: ſo as though he doe wickedneſſe, yet he doth it not wickedly, but weakly, being overcome and foiled by corruption. And hence is it that this wicked worke being found in the hands of Gods children, though it deſerve death: yet through grace it ſhall bee no cauſe of his condemnation.

Notes of an ungodly and unrepentant heart.

Doct. The principall cauſe of condemnation is not this or that ſinne, but the lying and trading therein, which argueth an ungodly heart: to commit ungodlineſſe indeed, maketh men ſubject to condemnation; but to commit it ungodlily, this bringeth ſwift judgement. Secondly, a wicked man ſinneth not of infirmity, for he committeth ungodlines in an ungodly manner, and tradeth in wickednesſe wickedly: the ſinnes of infirmity befall not the graceleſſe ſinner, but the regenerate onely, in whom frailtie faileth grace for a time; the drunkard may excuſe himſelfe and ſay, his ſinne is his infirmity; yet is it not, but a wickednesſe wickedly committed: ſo of the covetous perſon and other ſinners. Thirdly, marke Gods great mercy with much thankfulneſſe: in that the regenerate doing wicked actions as well as the wicked, are not condemned for them as the wicked are: For there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus, Rom. 8. 1.

The godly commit ungodlineſſe, but not ungodlily as the wicked.

The ſecond cauſe of the judgement is the ſpeeches of the wicked, ſet out by two properties: firſt, they are cruell: ſecondly, they are uttered againſt God. An example of ſuch ſpeech we have in Lamech, Gen. 4. Whoſoever killeth Cain ſhall be revenged ſeven fold: but whoſoever offendeth mee, I will revenge my ſelfe ſeventy times ſeven fold; a cruell and bloudy ſpeech vanting it ſelfe even againſt God himſelfe.

Vſe. Firſt, hence it followeth that wicked words and workes are cauſes of juſt condemnation. Ob. Then good words and works are cauſes of ſalvation. Anſ. The reaſon is not good: for wicked mens ſinnes be perfectly wicked, but the actions of the regenerate are not perfectly good. Secondly, wee are hence to bewaile the ungodly words and works that have paſſed us, which binde us over to condemnation, and above all things in the world to ſue to God by prayer for pardon: yea, to give our ſelves no reſt till we have within us the witneſſe of Gods Spirit, witneſſing to our ſpirits that we are graciouſly accepted, and that our ungodly workes are removed out of his ſight. Thirdly, wee are to marke thoſe perſons whoſe lives and mouths abound with ungodlineſſe, and communicate not with ſuch: but mourne for them as Lot did, whoſe righteous ſoule was vexed, not onely in ſeeing the wicked workes, but alſo in hearing the filthy ſpeeches of the uncleane Sodomites. My teares (ſaith David) have beene my meat day and night, while they dayly ſay unto mee, Where is thy God? Fourthly, our duty is to avoid every wicked way and word, and endevour to have our ſpeech ſeaſoned with ſalt, and miniſtring grace to the hearers. Fifthly, conſider hence what wee in this land may juſtly bee afraid of, ſeeing ungodlineſſe ſo exceedingly aboundeth, godlineſſe decreaſeth: the godly are taken away, the wicked reproach thoſe that are left even for Religions ſake, and for ſuch religious practices as ſtand both by Gods Law and the Lawes of the land, by ſuch ſpeeches as theſe: Thou art one that runs to Sermons; doeſt thou learne this or that there? thou art full of the holy Ghoſt, the Devill is within thee: and ſuch like moſt wretched and ungodly ſpeeches, juſtly deſerving fearefull judgements: The wickednesſe of inhabitants overturne whole Kingdomes, Prov. 28. 2. It behoves us then to betake our ſelves to ſpeedy repentance; leſt ſpeedy vengeance overtake us unawares.

v. 16. Theſe are murmurers, complainers, walking after their owne luſts, whoſe mouthes ſpeake proud things: having mens perſons in admiration becauſe of advantage.

In this verſe the Apoſtle returneth againe to his former purpoſe, and ſtill continueth the rehearſall of the ſins and vices of theſe falſe teachers, againſt whom he writeth; and againſt whom whom he hath already alleaged twelve severall sinnes; and in this verse addeth six more, of which some notwithstanding have beene touched in the sinnes formerly condemned. Herein we first shew the nature of the vices themselves, and secondly lay downe the contrary duties so farre as they shall concerne us.

These are murmurers] By murmuring we are to understand a certaine fruit of impatience, whereby men shew themselves displeased with the worke of Gods providence, especially when his hand is upon them, and they are under the crosse. Example whereof we have in the Israelites, who when Moses had brought them out of Egypt, they murmured and repined that they were fed with Manna only, and wanted their flesh-pots which they had in Egypt: see Deut. 1. 26, 27. where this sinne is called rebellion against God; and therefore is no small sinne. For avoiding and preventing of which sinne, wee must learne two duties: first, in silence and subjection to calme and quiet our hearts in the revealed will of God upon us, though therein our owne wils be crossed. Psal. 4. 4. Examine your selves, and be still. Psal. 37. 7. Be silent unto God, and wait on the Lord. Which is all one as if he had plainly said: Let Gods will be your will also. Isa. 30. 15. In quietnesse and confidence shall be your strength. Herein our strength must be exercised, not in resisting, but enduring the hand of God. Secondly, we must shewour selves truly thankfull to God in all things befalling us: yea, even in evill things, which otherwise may be occasionings of murmuring. Job. 1. The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken, blessed be his name. Object. But this may seeme harsh and contrarie to reason, to blesse God for crosses. Ans. Not a whit, if we conceive that according to our deserts, he might plunge us into the pit of hell: and therefore if he mitigate of that justice, and remember his mercie more easily correcting us, herein all the praise of mercie is due unto him.

Complainers] So called for two causes: first, because they are discontented with their present outward estate wherein God hath placed them; the portion that God hath allotted them liketh them not; they are displeased that they are not as others be, and that they have not as others have. Secondly, because upon the frowardnes of their disposition they are easily displeased, and hard to please againe, soone incensed, and not so soone satisfied; and thereupon are commonly complaining of the hard measure they seeme to receive at mens hands. But especially they are so called in respect of the former reason. This is not the sinne of that age onely, neither only of those persons, but is even a common sinne of our times, and that of the richer sort: for these are the poorest amongst men, ever whining, and complaining that their state is not so good as others, nor as they would have it: and although they know (as we say) no end of their wealth, yet know they no end of their wishings and desires. We on the contrary are hence to learne, first, to thinke well and speake well of that estate in which God in his providence hath settled us, be it better or worse. Phil. 4. 11. In what estate soever, I have learned therewith to bee contented. Heb. 13. 5. Bee content with that you have. First, carrie not covetous, aspiring, and malicious minds and affections: but if thou must needs be desiring, satisfie thy selfe with Jacobs desire: Only the Lord be with mee, and if he give mee food and raiment in this my journey, it is sufficient. Secondly, our hearts must be set to obey God even in povertie and affliction, and beare adversitie with an equall and moderate mind, our obedience must not only be active in doing, but passive also in suffering his will. Phil. 4. 12. I can want and abound; I can doe all things through Christ that strengtheneth mee. Heb. 10. 34. The faithfull could with joy suffer the spoyling of their goods. Thirdly, we must endevour to shew all meeknes to all men upon all occasions, putting off all morositie, waiwardnesse, and difficulty to be satisfied and appeased. Christs voice was not list up in the streets, he indured all wrongs, forgave all injuries; and all the members of his body put off likewise their wolvish dispositions: they cease to be Tigers, Lions, Cockatrises, and become Kids, Lambes, little children, easie to be handled, hardly offended, and quickly pleased: which disposition we must put upon us.

Gods will must be obeyed, in being both done and suffered of us.

Isa. 11. 6.

The third sinne; [walking after their owne lusts] is fitly expounded in Eccles. 11. 9. where the young man is ironically willed to walke in the waies of his owne heart, and in the sight of his owne eyes, &c. even so these men live in their sinnes, according to the leading and lusting of their owne corrupted hearts: which sinne is before in the fourth verse touched; and somwhat also is further to be spoken of it in the rest of the Epistle. Our contrary dutie is twofold: first, if at any time by frailtie we fall into any sinne, never to goe on in the same, but breake it off, and returne unto God: for to walke after his owne hearts lusts, is a note of a wicked person and an enemie of God. Psal. 68. 21. Surely, God will wound the head of his enemies, and the hairie pate of him that walketh on in sinne. Secondly, we are to frame our lives cleane against the lusts and inclinations of our own hearts; waging battell continually against them, ever crossing and thwarting them. Ro. 13. 14. Take not thought to fulfill the lusts of the flesh. Gal. 3. They that are Christs have crucified the flesh, with the lusts thereof: for whosoever beleeveth truly the pardon of his sins by Christs death, cannot but mortifie the lusts of his wicked heart; besides that the whole course of Christianitie is nothing else but a continuall conversion and turning unto God.

The fourth sinne. Whose mouthes speake proud or swelling things,] that is, they boast themselves of knowledge, holinesse, and things not to bee found in them. The same with the devils sinne, Luk. 4. All this will I give thee, for they are mine, and I give them to whom I will: wherein hee sheweth himselfe the father of lying and boasting. It is noted also to bee the propertie of Antichrist, as to whom was given a mouth which spake great things and blasphemies, Revel. 13. 5. which was meant of the Emperour indeed, but so as the second beast, which is that Antichrist, should doe all things which the first beast could doe before him, vers. 12. It is also the noted vice of all heretikes and seducers, 2 Cor. 10. 12. to exalt and praise themselves. The contrary duties are first, in common speech neither to praise, nor dispraise our selves, for vanitie lurketh in both: besides that modestie will not suffer the former; and the latter is to occasion others to praise us, which is but vanitie. Secondly, when in speech we compare our selves with others our equals, we must ever thinke and speake better of them than our selves. Phil. 2. 3. Let every man esteeme other better than himselfe. Paul comparing himselfe with the Apostles, said he was the least of them all; because he had beene a persecutor, 1 Cor. 15. 9. Thirdly, if any speake of his owne want when just occasion is offered, hee must speake even the most against himselfe. As Paul that he was the head and chiefe of all sinners. Fourthly, if a man upon just occasion bee moved to commend himselfe, first, he must doe it in all humilitie and modestie: so Paul speaketh of himselfe in another person: 1 Cor. 12. 1. I knew a man in Christ which was taken up into Paradise, &c. And in nothing was I inferiour unto the very chiefe Apostles though I be nothing, vers. 11.

The fifth sinne. Having mens persons in admiration.] The word person in Scripture signifieth the face and outward appearance of a man, and consequently the things belonging unto the person, as riches honours, dignities, for the which these false teachers have men in admiration. Quest. Is it not lawfull to admire a Prince, or other Potentates at all? Answ. Yes: but when men admire them onely for their person, riches honours, nobilitie, without respect of the feare of God or true vertue, this is unlawfull, and the sinne of these men: wherein is also included the contempt of the religious poore, yea, and also of the rich themselves, if they truly feare God. Jam. 2. 1. My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Iesus Christ in respect of persons: teaching us that it will not stand with true religion, nor with the faith of Christ to honour men onely because they are rich or noble.

A great miserie of great men to be most admired, but least admonished.

First, note here that no man carrieth so base a minde, and such slavish affections, as the proud ambitious person; he magnifieth the great man, and is servilely addicted unto him even for outward respects, not esteeming him for that which is indeed worthie to be respected. Secondly, the condition of great men (for the most part) is miserable, who have many to admire them, but few to admonish them: rich A men are admired for wisdome, whereas the same men, if they were poore, would carrie away no praise thereof. Ahab had foure hundred false prophets who thus admired his person, but only one Micha who faithfully admonished him. Thirdly, our dutie is to honour them that feare God, rich or poore, high or low: it being a note of a child of God to contemne a vile person, that is a wretched sinner, but to honour them that feare the Lord, bee they never so base: and yet the honourable much more, if they be found in the waies of religion. Psal. 15. 4.

The sixth sinne. Because of advantage.] That is, for profits sake: where their covetousnesse, which before was touched, is here againe taxed: the effect of which affection is to blind the B minde that it cannot judge aright of persons or things: it maketh a man account an enemie of God rightly honourable, and to deeme the things below of highest regard. Let us weed out of our hearts this bitter root of covetousnesse, which otherwise will so blind us, as wee cannot truly discerne the people and things of God, but take Egyptians for Israelites, and accept of the red pottage in stead of the blessing.

v. 27 But, yee beloved, remember the words which were spoken before of the Apostles of our Lord Iesus Christ.

C In these words the Apostle goeth about to answer an objection that might be made by the Church after this manner: We cannot bee resolved that these men against whom yee write, are so ungodly as you would make them: The answer whereto is framed in the 17. 18. and 19. verses. The effect of which is, that in the last times there shall be mockers, and these be no other than the men of whom he writeth: and lest they should yet doubt of the truth of that hee spake, hee bringeth in the testimonie of the Apostles in the confirmation of the same: so as his doctrine was no other than that which was before by them delivered. Where three things are to be considered; first, a preface to the testimonie, vers. 17. Secondly, the testimonie it selfe, D v. 18. Thirdly, the amplifying of it, v. 19.

For the Preface. But, ye beloved, remember, &c.] First, the Apostle Iude setteth out his own dutie and practice, in that whatsoever he speaketh it proceedeth of love: and he is not carried away in speaking or writing with sinister affections; and therefore he calleth them Beloved. This ought to be the practice of all Teachers, who out of their inward love to Gods people committed unto them are to utter whatsoever they teach: yea, and no man in any other calling may lay aside this affection in the discharge of the duties thereof, seeing it is the end of all the Commandements.

In the second word remember] is laid downe the dutie of the Church and faithfull people of God, which is to remember the words spoken by the Apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ. Which wee also in this age are to bee exhorted unto, for very weighty reasons: first, it is a notable remedie against all sin, and especially the forenamed sinnes: Psal. 116. 11. In my haste I said all men are liars; that is, when I remembred not the word of God, but forgat my own duty, and was carried away with the streame of my owne affections against faith, then I failed and was foiled. Psal. 119. I have hid thy testimonies in my heart, that I should not offend against thee. Secondly, this remembrance is a notable remedie against heresies, and schismes, and all false doctrines, and is of much use in these our dayes, wherein we are in danger to be seduced, partly by Atheists, partly by Papists, and partly by carnall Gospellers; against all whom we had need to be well fenced, and armed by the reading, knowing, beleeving, and remembring the words of the Prophets and Apostles, which only are as Davids sling to overthrow the great Goliahs. Thirdly, it is an excellent meanes to settle the conscience in the truth by perswading the same: and the rather to bee enforced, because many alleage that there are so many Religions and opinions, that they will bee of none, for they know not which to betake themselves unto. But if these were diligent in the words of the Prophets and Apostles, in reading, searching and sifting out the truth in humilitie, they should find wherein to settle themselves.

Secondly, by his second word all teachers are to take notice of their dutie, which is to whet the word of the Apostles upon the harts, minds, and memories of their hearers, so as they may learne and remember them: and the rather because in formerages religion was destroyed, and superstition prevailed, because that men laid away the Scriptures out of their hands, and betooke themselves to the exposition of other mens writings; and to glosse upon the sayings of their ancestors: whereby they brought a black darknes over these parts of the world. The Prophets and Apostles give another direction. Malachy the last of the Prophets referreth us unto Moses and the former Prophets; and Iude the last of the Apostles unto former Apostles, shewing what ought to be the scope of all teachers that would follow their steps.

Thirdly, hence all Students of Divinitie are taught what they must most remember, namely the words and writings of the Apostles: for these are the key of the old Testament and of the whole Scripture; which dutie if it were well observed, Poperie, superstition, and Atheisme could not so farre pevaile, but fall downe to the ground, as Dagon before the Arke.

Thirdly, he nameth the authors of the testimonie, who were the Apostles of our Lord Iesus Christ, implying their authoritie, and taking it for granted, that whatsoever they spake

A or writ must be received as an infallible truth, and may not be contradicted. Now the better to know both what the Apostles were, and what this Authoritie is, consider three points; first, their calling, and the greatnesse thereof; They were called by Christs owne mouth, Joh. 20. 21. As the father sent mee, so I send you: by which comparison he designeth them to a particular & weighty calling, standing in these points: first, as Christ was immediately called by the Father, so were the Apostles immediately called by himselfe. Secondly, as Christ was sent from the Father to preach to the whole world, being the great Prophet and Doctor of his Church; so Christ sendeth them into the whole world, for the whole world was their charge.
B Thirdly, as Christ was sent to reveale his Fathers will, which before was hid to the greatest part of the world; so they were sent by Christ to reveale the Fathers wil, partly in making things more fully known, which were before but darkly shadowed: and partly in foretelling things to come, they all being Evangelicall Prophets. In these three standeth that comparison: in regard of which manner of their sending they are above even the Angels themselves, nay the Angels were as it were but their schollers. Eph. 3. 10. Now unto principalities and powers in heavenly places is made knowne by the Church the manifold wisdome of God, that is, by the ministerie of the Apostles, the mysteries of God, concerning mans redemption, have beene revealed to the Angels themselves.

C Secondly, consider their Authoritie: which was most authenticall, seeing that neither in teaching or writing they could erre, being specially privileged therefrom: Matth. 10. 19. It shall be given you in that houre what yee shall say. The peculiar promise of direction belonging to the Apostles is recorded in Joh. 16. 13. The spirit of truth shall lead you into all truth; in which regard they were bold to joyne themselves with the holy Ghost. It seemeth good to the holy Ghost and us, namely, in ordering the Church affaires: yet here that distinction which is falsely applied to the Pope, is true in the Apostles, by reason of this assistance; that as they were private men, and in other causes they might, and did erre, but not as Apostles in performing their office Apostolicall. Act. 15. 28.

D Thirdly, their worke or office, they were master builders of the Church of the new Testament: yea, founders thereof, both by teaching doctrines, and informing the manners of men: farre passing all Evangelists, Pastors, Teachers, or ordinarie Ministers since their daies. 1 Cor. 3. 10. As a skilfull Master builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. For the furthering of which great work in their hands, they had given them first a power to worke miracles for the confirming of their doctrine. Secondly, of giving the holy Ghost by imposition of hands. Thirdly, an Apostolicall rod, to strike and correct obstinate offenders; by the which Peter smote Ananias and Saphira with present death: and Paul Elymas with blindnesse.

Use. Marke that now the Pope claiming authoritie Apostolicall from Peter; it is but a false challenge: for that authoritie ceased with that office; and served only to lay the foundations of the Church withall, being both extraordinary as the calling was: and personall, ceasing with the persons of the Apostles. So as if the Pope succeeded Peter in any thing, it is in the denying of Christ: it cannot be in founding the Church, which was done to his hand so many hundred yeares before him.

The Pope succeedeth Peter onely in deniall of Christ.

V. 18 How that they told you that there should bee mockers in the last time, which should walke after their owne ungodly lusts.

This verse containeth the testimonie it selfe, the preface of which was laid downe in the former: wherein two things are to be noted: first, the time when wicked men shall abound in the Church: in the last time.] Secondly, what manner of persons they are; namely, described by two properties: first, they are mockers: secondly, fleshly.

For the time: It is called the last time: which is the time from the Ascension of Christ unto the end of the world. It may bee asked, how could this bee called the last time, seeing it is sixteene hundred yeares ago? Ans. It is so called for two causes: first, because it goeth next before the end of the world, and shall bee closed up of the last day, 1 Cor. 10. 11. To admonish us upon whom the ends of the world are come. Secondly, in regard of former times, according to the severall ages of it, in which God altered the condition of his Church, and renewed his covenant from time to time unto the same: as first plighting it with Adam, and afterward renewing it to Noah: thirdly, to Abraham often repeating it: fourthly, to David: fifthly, at the returne out of the Babylonish captivitie: sixthly, at the comming of Christ. But now Christ being come, and that fulnesse of time wherein the former prophecies are fulfilled and accomplished, the shadowes and ceremonies are abolished, and the new covenant of grace established; there remaines no renuing thereof, neither any other alteration of it, but as Christ hath already appeared in his humilitie by his first comming; so nothing is to bee expected now but his second comming in glorie: and this is the proper and principall cause why this is called the last time.

Secondly, concerning the persons of the ungodly men they are described, first to be mockers. These are described by Peter, 2 Epistle, 3. 3. In the last times shall come mockers, which will walke after their lusts, and say, Where is the promise of his comming: that is, those that shall scorne all religion, and make a mocke of God, godlinesse, and godly men: than which there is not a greater height of wickednesse: of whom Salomon speaketh as being so farre gone that they are past all admonition, and therefore would not have them admonished; and David maketh this the highest degree of a wicked mans proceeding in his sinne, to sit him downe in the chaire of scorners, Psal. 1. 1. Prov. 9. 8.

Use. This part of the testimonie is most truly verified in our age. First, in the Romish Church, whose religion setteth up a plaine mockerie of God and of Christ, of Scripture and of true religion. First, for Christ they make but a mocke of him; the true Christ is a King, and so they say, but the Pope must controule him both in making lawes of his owne to binde the conscience, as also in adding and detracting from Christs laws what he will: the true Christ is a Saviour; but they make every man a saviour of himselfe, by meriting salvation; for they teach that Christ merited, that we might merit our owne salvation: yea, the true Christ is a mediatour, but yet Saints must be intercessors: and his mother, whom they intitle the Queene of Heaven, must command her sonne by the right of a Mother, to heare their prayers, and forgive their sins; what is this but to make his Mother Mediatour in his stead? Secondly, as for the Scriptures they renounce the originall Bible, and the Greeke and Hebrew text as corrupt, and will admit of none as authenticall, but the Latin translation; yea, and of that allow no sense, but that which the Pope authorizeth, and setteth downe: what is this else but to make a mockerie of the Scriptures? no Bible, no sense will serve, nor must stand, but the Popish sense, which is indeed to reduce all scripture to the Popes will and determination.

Popish doctrine a Mockerie of Christian religion.

Secondly, if we come home to our selves, we shall finde this Scripture verified among the swarmes of Atheists, which make but a scorne of the Word and Religion: tell any man almost of his dutie, hee will bee readie to say; How know you these to be Moses writings? and these to be the Apostles writings which goe under their names, and may not falsehood be written as well as truth? These are most prophane and blasphemous scorners: but such as were prephecied of before by the Apostles themselves.

Againe, among those that professe religion are many scorners; that let a man make but a shew of goodnesse, and begin to make conscience of his way, if he will not blaspheme and sweare as he was wont: if hee will not drinke with the drunkard: if he refuse such companie as he conversed with before, or will not doe as others do, he is presently condemned for a precise foole, or with such reproachfull termes; how then is not this prediction of the Apostle accomplished, when even the performing of mo-moral duties, yea, and ſuch as ſtand by the laws of God and the land is ſcoffed at, as a blemiſh? When ſcorners are ſo rife and bold even in the face of the Church? when where God hath his little flocke, the Devil hath a large kingdome? let us not bee offended too much, when wee heare and ſee theſe ſcorners: but then acknowledge the accompliſhment of this prophecie, and contrarily love and reverence the Word of God as a moſt precious treaſure.

The ſecond ſinne whereby theſe ungodly men are deſcribed, is, that they walke after the luſts of their own hearts, wherein two things are included: firſt, that theſe ungodly men ſhall have their harts filled with ungodly luſts. Secõdly, that they ſhall walk after theſe luſts. Concerning the former ſundry things are to be known. Firſt, what this luſt or concupiſcence is. Anſ. In the Scripture it is of two ſorts, either originall, or actuall: or it may be conſidered two wayes: firſt, as it is the fountaine or off-ſpring of all other ſinnes; or ſecondly, as it is a fruit of the corruption of our hearts. The former is an impotencie of the heart, whereby it is inordinatelie diſpoſed to the deſire of this or that evill: of which Iames ſpeaketh, Chap. 2. 14. Every man when hee is tempted, is drawne away by his owne concupiſcence: hence is the whole corruption of the heart, or originall ſinne called luſt, becauſe it principally ſheweth it ſelfe in theſe luſts. The latter is actuall luſt, that is, every inordinate and evill motion of the inner man againſt the law of God, which proceedeth as a branch or fruit from the former root. Rom. 6. 12. Let not ſinne reigne in your mortall bodies, that ye ſhould obey it in the luſts of it: where, by luſts are meant the flames and motions of luſts ſpringing from the former fountaine. This luſt I call firſt an inordinate motion, to diſtinguiſh it firſt from a holy luſting in the regenerate. David luſted after & deſired the commandements of God, yea, above gold and ſilver; and there is a luſt of the ſpirit againſt the fleſh, as well as of the fleſh againſt the ſpirit. Secondly, from a naturall luſting, which is an appetite after meat, drinke, &c. which in it ſelfe is no ſinne. Lazarus deſired without ſinne the crummes under Dives his table. Theſe luſts then are not to be condemned, but only luſts inordinate. Secondly, I ſay, every evill motion; becauſe luſt in the Scripture comprehendeth all thoughts and motions againſt Gods law, ſo is the cõmandement to be underſtood: Thou ſhalt not luſt. Epli. 2. 3. Among whom alſo we had our converſation in times paſt in the luſts of the fleſh in fulfilling the will of the fleſh, and of the minde. Where the Apoſtle inlargeth it unto al motions, inclinations, paſſions and perturbations of the heart, minde, will or affections: ſo farre as they are not directed by the law of God. This text muſt be underſtood of actuall luſt: of which there be two degrees: for ſometime it is ſudden, and ſometimes voluntary; the former is the firſt motion of the minde conceived, but without conſent. The latter is the motion conceived, but with conſent, purpoſe, and deliberation; which may bee made plaine in this ſimilitude. The eye is ſometimes caſt upon an object on a ſudden, without any purpoſe or intention of the mind: but ſometimes purpoſely and ſteadily upon the ſame: and as in the twinkling of the eye it is often ſhut without thought or purpoſe; but ſometimes againe of purpoſe and deliberation to prevent ſome hurt: ſo is it in the minde; the heart is a furnace of luſt, the flames whereof ariſe ſometimes upon the ſudden, and ſometimes upon leiſure and deliberation; both theſe degrees muſt here be underſtood. Concerning which luſts there bee three things further here to be conſidered. Firſt, the quality and nature of theſe luſts; in that they are ſaid to bee ungodly luſts: ſuch as their root is, ſuch are the branches; and therefore are in their nature properly ſinnes, yea, principall and maſter ſins, yea, and ſinning ſinnes, cauſing men to goe on in ſinne. Queſt. If they be ſinnes, what Commandement of the tenne condemneth them? Anſ. Sudden luſt before conſent of will is condemned in the tenth: but voluntarie with conſent is condemned in all the nine former. If this diſtinction be not held, wee cannot make ten Commandements. For in all the Commandements luſt is forbidden; neceſſarie then it is that luſt ſhould be thus diſtinguiſhed, and alſo referred, as wee have ſaid. Queſt. Some may aske: In what Commandement is originall ſinne condemned? Anſ. Some ſay it is forbidden in the whole law, which is not untrue; but yet it ſeemeth to be directly condemned in the firſt and laſt Commandements: for theſe two concerne properly, the heart of man: the firſt reſpecting the heart directly ſo farre as it concerneth God: the laſt ſo farre as it concerneth man, whether himſelfe, or others.

Vſe. This teacheth us to deteſt the Popiſh error, which teacheth us that inordinat luſts be no ſinnes, if conſent of will be not added: but that is falſe; for if they be conceived in the minde, they are the ſins of the mind, condemned in the tenth Commandement. Ob. But they ſay, there can bee no ſinne properly produced without conſent of will. Anſ. In civill matters the reaſon is good, that none can bee acceſſarie unto ſinne, unleſſe conſent of will be added: but in divine matters, and in the Court of Conſcience it is farre otherwiſe.

Secondly, in the luſts note the propertie of them, in theſe words; Which walke after; their propertie is to reigne in men, and to cauſe men to give attendance upon them; yea, and to walk after them. Where they are not reſiſted and repreſſed, they make that man a vaſſall and ſlave unto them. Rom. 6. Let not ſinne reigne in your mortall bodie, to obey the luſts of it. Where the Apoſtle inſinuateth ſo much that they force and compell men to the obedience of them, the whole order and courſe of which regiment is lively deſcribed, Jam. 1. 14, 15. by five degrees:

Gal. 5. 17.

first, lust tempteth, and that two waies: first, by withdrawing the heart from God: secondly, by inticing and intangling the mind with some delight of sinne. Secondly, lust conceiveth, when it causeth the will to consent and resolve upon the wickednesse thought upon. Thirdly, it bringeth forth, when it forceth a man to put in execution the things consented unto and resolved upon. Fourthly, it perfecteth the birth of sinne, urging a man to adde sinne unto sinne, untill he come to a custome, which is a ripenesse and perfection in sinning. Fifthly, it bringeth forth death, that is, everlasting vengeance and destruction: in all which he alludeth unto the beginnings, proceedings, and end of a man; who after he is past his full strength, decayeth againe, and dieth: by these degrees the lusts of the heart rise unto this raigne and regiment in the heart of every wicked and naturall man, where grace overcommeth not nature.

Thirdly, observe the number of these lusts. After ungodly lusts.] Where he speaketh in the plurall number as of many: for originall concupiscence is the seed of all sinne in every man: and looke how many sins there be in the world, so many lusts there are in the hearts of men: so as seeing there is no number of the evils in the world, even so are the lusts of the heart innumerable. Therefore truly may we conclude, that ungodly men have their hearts filled with ungodly lusts.

The second point in the words is, that these ungodly men shall walke after their lusts; which is then done, when men first suffer their hearts to be withdrawne from God by evill lusts and motions: secondly, give assent thereunto: thirdly, practise them: fourthly, keepe a course and trade in sinning, which is the perfection of it. Thus a man denieth the true God, and excludeth him out of his heart, and setteth up the devill, yea, his owne lusts for his God, unto which he becommeth a slave; so as this is no small sinne.

Doct. Hence note a defference betweene the regenerate and the reprobate: for if the childe of God be inticed and drawne away from God, he grieveth for it, and giveth not readie consent unto the temptation. Secondly, if through frailtie he be overcarried to give consent, yet it is not full consent; but he doth it against his will and purpose, for his purpose is not to sinne. Thirdly, if he put lusts in execution, he lieth not in them, he will not walke after them; but recovereth himselfe, because he is incorporated into Christ: he hath the root of grace, which shall not utterly die in him, the seed abideth in him which at last shall sprout up to repentance and amendment of life: and hereby may a man know whether he be the child of God or no.

Vse. First, whereas all men good and bad have innumerable lusts in them, we are to take notice of the vilenesse and uncleannesse of our nature, which is common to the good and bad, betweene whom there is no difference but by grace: our endevour must bee to see more and more these lusts stirring and moving themselves against God and man. Secondly, to mourne and bewaile them. Thirdly, to pray that God would burie them all in the death and grave of his Sonne, that they stand not up in judgement against us; being every of them sufficient to procure our eternall destruction.

Sinne will dwell in us while we dwell in the flesh, but it may not raigne as a commander in us.

Secondly, we must not suffer sinne to raigne in us, for this is the part of an ungodly person: true it is that lusts will bee in the heart whilst a man is in the flesh: but they must be resisted, that they may not raigne & rule in the heart. Quest. How shall we keepe under the lusts of the heart from raigning over us? Answ. Seeing sinne raigneth in the minde by evill thoughts, our thoughts on the contrary must bee framed according to the word, and ordered by the counsell thereof: according to the Apostles advice, Phil. 4. 8. If any thing be honest, vertuous, of good report, we must thinke of these things, Coloss. 3. 16. Let the word of God dwell plenteously in you. Againe, lust raigneth in the memorie, by remembring vanities, wrongs and wicked speeches and actions: we must therefore remember our sinnes, the number and greatnesse of them, the curse of the law against them, the day of our owne death, and the generall judgement; the remembrance of which shall be able to keep out, or at least to keepe under these ungodly lusts. Further, seeing it raigneth in the affections of pride, revenge, hatred, &c. wee must learne the exhortation, Phil. 2. 5. Let the same minde bee in you that was in Iesus Christ: that look as Christ was most milde, meeke, humble, patient, full of love towards God and man, so ought our unruly affections to be conformed unto his. And lastly, seeing it raigneth in the bodie by idlenesse, ease, sleepe in excesse, which make the bodie an instrument of sinne, we must alwaies diligently inure our selves to the duties of our callings; using fasting, watching, and prayer: by which meanes well observed, the lusts in the heart may still trouble and molest us; but they shall not rule and raigne over us.

Vse. If it be the propertie of a wicked man to follow after ungodly lusts, wee ought to purge our selves from all the lusts of the flesh and spirit, 2 Cor. 7. 1. lest these defile the bodies and soules, in the powers and parts of them: to doe which the better, remember that blessed are the pure in heart: secondly, to inure our selves unto the feare of God, seeing the feare of God is cleane, Psal. 19. that is, it cleanseth the heart, and breaketh the necke of all noysome lusts. Matth. 5. 8.

V. 19 These are makers of seds, fleshly, not having the spirit.

This verse containeth the application of the former testimonie unto the particular persons whom it concerneth: setting downe who they they be that are ſcorners and followers of their lusts: namely, ſcorners are they that make ſects, ſeparating themſelves from the people of God: and followers of their luſts bee thoſe who are fleſhly, and without the ſpirit: which words being applied to theſe ſeducers, faſten two ſinnes more upon them. The firſt whereof is, that they are makers of ſects. The ſecond, that they have not the ſpirit. For the former, the word ſignifieth a ſingling and ſeparating of themſelves from the Church and people of God, & conſequently the making of ſects to themſelves: neither may this ſeeme ſtrange, that there ſhould bee ſuch perſons that make ſuch ſeparation; ſeeing it is the nature of every ſinner to flie from the preſence of God, as Adam did: and Peter when he had ſeene a part of the glory of Chriſt, bade him depart from him, for he was a ſinner. The prodigall ſonne muſt have his portion apart, and will not be perſwaded to live with his father: and every ungodly man withdraweth himſelfe unto perdition, Heb. 10. 38.

Doct. Firſt, it is a great ſinne for a man to ſeparate himſelfe from the aſſemblies of Gods people: becauſe, firſt it is a flying from God and his preſence, whoſe face every one is commanded to ſeeke; ſeeing he preſenteth himſelfe in the Word and Sacraments, and whereſoever two or three are aſſembled in his name, &c. Secondly, it is a contempt of Gods ordinance, which whoſoever deſpiſeth, deſpiſeth God himſelfe. Thirdly, out of the Catholike Church is no ſalvation: the ſaying is true, Whoſoever will not have the Church for his Mother, ſhall not have God for his Father. Fourthly, the congregations of Gods people on earth are the ſuburbes and gates of the kingdome of heaven; whoſoever therefore ſhutteth the gates of this kingdome of grace againſt himſelfe here, ſhall never enter into the gates of the kingdome of glory hereafter.

Vſe. Our duty hence is, to joyne our ſelves to the aſſemblies of the faithfull, not forſaking the fellowſhip that wee have among our ſelves, Heb. 10. 25. but keeping the unitie of the ſpirit in the bond of Peace, Eph. 4. 3. being like minded one towards another, Rom. 15. 5. ſpeaking one thing as thoſe that are knit together in one minde and one judgement, 1 Cor. 1. 10. And if we would ſeparate our ſelves, then let us depart from the Atheiſts and Papiſts in their corrupt doctrine, and wicked converſation. Secondly, ſuch are juſtly reprehended who ſeldome come to heare the word, receive the Sacraments, and to call upon God in the congregation: for ſo much as they can they cut themſelves from the Kingdome of God, in rejecting the meanes of their ſalvation. Object. They alleage for themſelves, that if they ſhould come, they ſhould heare but a weake man like themſelves ſpeake unto them; and if Chriſt himſelfe or ſome Angell ſhould preach unto them, they would heare willingly. Anſw. Lay aſide all diſputing, and yeeld unto the wiſdome of God, whoſe ordinance it is that men ſhould bee taught by men, and not otherwiſe. Object. They ſay further, that they have the Bible, and the Sermons of the Prophets and Apoſtles at home, and none can make better Sermons than they: and againe, that they can get knowledge enough to ſalvation by themſelves: and ſome ſay they have knowledge ſufficient, and need no more. Anſw. Firſt, Gods ordinance muſt be acknowledged, and reverenced in the publike Miniſtery, and in the midſt of the aſſemblies: and private duties muſt give place to publike. Secondly, the word is not onely to be knowne, but affected: now although knowledge may be gained privately; yet the affections muſt bee wrought and moved in the publike miniſtery. Thirdly, thoſe that know the moſt, know but in part; and the Miniſtery is inſtituted not onely to initiate and begin men, but to confirme them in grace, and lead them to perfection: for which end the Lord hath given Paſtors and Doctors of the Church to teach men, untill they come unto a ripe age in Chriſt, which is not till death.

D

Now for the further clearing of this point, two queſtions are to be reſolved. 1. Queſt. Seeing it is a ſinne for a man to ſever himſelfe from the Church of God; where, and what Church is that to which a man may for ever joyne himſelfe with a good conſcience? Anſw. That people which heare, beleeve, and obey the doctrine of the Prophets and Apoſtles, are the true people and Church of God, unto which a man may ſafely joyne himſelfe. Divers notes there be, but the infallible notes of the true Church are, knowledge, faith, and obedience unto that doctrine; theſe were the notes of the primitive Church next after Chriſt, Act. 2. 42. Firſt, they continued in the Apoſtles doctrine. Secondly, in fellowſhip, wherein the duties of love are comprehended. Thirdly, in breaking of bread, that is, the adminiſtration of Sacraments; for the celebration of the Supper is put for both. Fourthly, in prayer, that is, invocation of God, with thankſgiving. In that Commiſſion of the Apoſtles, given for the gathering together of the Church of God, they are enjoyned, firſt, to teach all Nations: that is, to make them diſciples, namely, by the doctrine Prophetical, and Apoſtolicall. Secondly, to baptiſe them, that is, to bring and admit them into the houſe of God. Thirdly, to teach them to performe all things which they were commanded. In which Commiſſion, two of theſe notes are expreſſed, Eph. 2. 19. The Church is founded upon the doctrine of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Ioh. 8. 31. If yee abide in my word, yee are truly my diſciples. Joh. 10. 27. My ſheepe heare my voice and follow mee. Pſalm. 147. 19. Hee ſheweth his lawes to Iacob, and his ſtatutes to Iſrael, hee dealeth not ſo with every nation. Hence we note that we may not joyne our ſelves with the Jewes or Turkes, who renounce the words of the Prophets and Apoſtles: neither yet with the Papiſts; for though though in word and speech they hold this word, yet indeed and in the sense they corrupt it even in the foundation.

The second question. But what if there be errors in the Church, or things amisse; may we not then separate our selves? Ans. Things that may be amisse in the Church must be distinguished: for some faults concerne the matter of religion: some the manner: the former respecteth doctrine principally: the latter the manners of men. First, for things amisse in the manners of men, wee may not separate; but with Lot have our righteous hearts vexed, and grieved with the wicked conversation of those among whom we live. The Scribes and Pharisies sitting in Moses chaire, teaching Moses doctrine, must be heard, howsoever the corruptions of their manners be such as they may not be imitated, Matth. 23. 1. Yet here observe further, that although wee may not separate our selves from such corrupt persons in the publike assemblies, yet in private conversation wee may abstaine from them. 1 Cor. 5. 11. If any that is called a brother bee a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with such a one eat not: that is, eat not privately. Secondly, if the Church erre in matter of religion, then must wee consider whether the errour bee in a more weightie and substantiall point, or in matter of lesse importance. If it be in smaller points (the foundation being kept) wee may ndr separate our selves. 1 Cor. 3. 15. If any mans worke burne, hee shall lose, but himselfe shall be safe, yet as if it were by fire. Now if the error of the Church bee in substance of doctrine, or in the foundation, then we must consider whether it erre of human frailty, or of obstinacy: if of frailty, wee may not separate. The Church of Galatia was through frailty quickly turned to another Gospel, and erred in the foundation, holding justification by workes; yet Paul writeth unto it as unto a Church of God. So likewise the Church of Corinth erred grievously, and overthrew the Article of the resurrection; and yet Paul behaved himselfe accordingly unto it. But if the Church erre in the substance of religion obstinately, then with good conscience separation may bee made. 1 Tim. 4. 5. If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to the wholsome doctrine, from such separate thy selfe. An example hereof we have in Act. 19. 9. when Paul had preached in the Synagogue of the Jewes, and could not prevaile with them, but they began to blaspheme and speake evill of the wayes of God, then he withdrew himselfe and separated from them. 1 Chron. 11. 14, 16. when Ieroboam had set up the two Calves to bee worshipped, many of the best disposed Jewes departed from him and came to Rehoboam, and joyned themselves with Iudah and Ierusalem in the true worship of the God of their Fathers. Whence wee see, that no man may with good conscience separate himselfe from the Church of England; seeing it teacheth, beleeveth, and obeyeth the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles.

Whom we may not separate from in publike assemblies, we need not privately converse with.

Further consider the manner of the separation of these wicked men; there be three sorts of separation: First, by apostasie, when a man falleth wholly from his religion, from the Church, and from common grace. Heb. 6. 4. It is impossible that they which were once enlightened, if they fall away, &c. Secondly, by heresie, when men erre in the substance of doctrine and religion, and that of obstinacie. Thirdly, by Schisme; and that is when men hold the same faith and foundation, and yet disagree and separate in regard of order and ceremonie. These seducers separated themselves by heresies: their heresies were these: first, that men being in Christ might live as they list, and so they were Libertines. Secondly, that among the people of God there ought to be no civil Magistracy, and so they became also Anabaptists. Here observe, that even in the Apostles time and daies were many Heretikes; among whom was Hymeneus, and Philetus, 2 Tim. 2. 17. and many wolves entred even in their dayes, who spared not the flocke. Which may serve to stablish our minds against the Papists, who object, that our religion is the foundation of all heresies: as at the rising of which many heresies were revived; in so much as they call all our religion heresie, and the professors of it heretikes: by which reason they might as strongly prove, that the doctrine of the Apostles themselves was heresie, and that the Primitive Church in the Apostles time was heretical, and no Church: for in the first hundred yeares after Christ, the Church swarmed with heresies, sowen by Satans instruments, to the choaking of that holy doctrine which was sowne by the Apostles and their successors in the field of the Church: may, rather we conclude our religion to be Apostolicall, because the same heresies which arose up in the Apostles times against their doctrine, now revived againe upon the reviving of our religion.

The second sinne of these seducers in this verse is, that they are fleshly, or naturall men. For so it is explained in the last words [not having the spirit] wherin consider two things: first, who is a naturall man: secondly, that it is a sin to be a naturall man, for it is noted as a maine sinne in these seducers. Touching the former, a naturall man is he, who living a naturall life, is enduedwith a reasonable soule, and is governed by nature, reason, and sense only; without grace or the spirit of God: which may appeare, first, by the word naturall; which signifieth such a man, as in whom the best thing is nature, and in whom there is nothing more excellent than his reasonable soule, though corrupted. Secondly, by the exposition, or rather opposition in the words, wherein it is opposed unto the spirit, who is wanting unto such a one to lead him in the way of a heavenly life. Further, that yet we may know this matter the better, there be three things to be found in a naturall man: 1. Hee hath a body and soule united together in one person.

perſon. 2. In his ſoule he hath excellent powers and faculties, as will, underſtanding, affections. 3. He hath all the ornaments of man, yet ſo as without grace: ſuch as are, ſtrength of bodie and minde, memorie, knowledge of Arts and Sciences, civill policie and vertues, as Iuſtice, Prudence, Temperance, diſcretion to diſcerne what is meet to bee done, what not: theſe are ornaments incident to corrupt nature, ſerving not to aboliſh, but to reſtraine and bridle corruption, and containe men in order, for the preſervation of humane ſocietie. Now he that hath theſe three and nothing elſe, is but a meere naturall man.

The ſecond point is: Here it may be asked, how it commeth to paſſe that a naturall man offendeth God? Anſ. There be two things in every natural man to be diſtinguiſhed: firſt, there is nature; ſecondly, the corruption of nature: the former is from God: the latter from mans fall: which two may be indeed diſtinguiſhed, but cannot now be ſeparated: the one is not the other; but the one is not without the other: this corruption is that ſin which preſſeth us downe; and hangeth ſo faſt on, Heb. 12. 1. which corrupted the whole man, ſo as the whole frame of man, that is, his whole diſpoſition and inclination is corrupted and evill from his youth, Gen. 8. 21. his wiſdome is enmitie to God, that is, even the beſt thing that is, or can be in the fleſh, is hatefull to God, Rom. 8. 5. himſelfe is dead in ſinnes and treſpaſſes, Epheſ. 2. 1. having no more abilitie to move to any thing truly good, than hath a dead man to beſtirre himſelfe in and about the actions of life.

For the cleerer beholding of this corruption of mans nature, marke that there bee two degrees of it: the former whereof is a want of that goodneſſe and righteouſneſſe which at the firſt was, and now ought to be found in our nature. The latter is a proneneſſe and diſpoſition unto all evill which carrieth the heart on every occaſion thereunto: this corruption muſt be conceived as an ocean ſea, ſending out into every channell and veine of the ſoule, and whole man, ſtreames and floods of wickedneſſe: for looke into the principall powers of the ſoule, ye ſhall need to goe no further for the finding of this truth. For firſt, in the minde is ſuch an impotencie, as whereby it is unable to thinke or approve of any thing that is truly good. 2 Cor. 3. 5. We are not ſufficient of our ſelves to thinke of any good, but all our ſufficiencie is of God. 1 Cor. 2. 15. The naturall man perceiveth not the things of God; which is moſt manifeſt thus: firſt, he knoweth not God himſelfe aright; for although hee may know God as an infinite and eternall being, or in ſome other attribute, yet he cannot know him as a father to himſelfe. Secondly, he knoweth not, neither conceiveth the corruption of his owne nature, nor his ſins originall and actuall in the ſtaine and danger of them. Thirdly, he conceiveth not of the remedie of ſinne, the death of Chriſt: but accounteth it fooliſhnes that life ſhould be brought out of death. Secondly, as his minde is blinde, ſo a naturall mans will is rebellious, and is not ſubject unto the will of God, neither indeed can bee. Joh. 6. 44. No man can come to Chriſt, unleſſe the Father draw him: inſinuating our withdrawing of our ſelves, and reſiſtance of his call, untill he turne us, and make our wils of unwilling, willing wils, to will that which is truly good: whence the Apoſtle ſaith, that to will, namely, that which is truly good, is not of our ſelves, it is the gift of God. Now hence we may reſolve that queſtion: why it is a ſinne to be a naturall man? not becauſe a man hath nature in him: but becauſe his whole nature is tainted with originall ſinne.

Ob. The naturall man may plead, that hee cannot helpe it: he was borne ſinfull: why then ſhould he be blamed? Anſ. Rom. 5. 12. In Adam we all ſinned; for when he eat the forbidden fruit, we even eat it in him, and are no leſſe blame-worthie than he was. Obiect. But it will be ſaid; it is no reaſon that we ſhould be ſaid to ſinne in him, ſeeing then we were not? Anſ. Adam was a publike perſon repeſenting all mankind, and every particular perſon deſcending from him; and therefore what he did, all and every man did in him: Even as a Burgeſſe in the Parliament giving his voyce and aſſent, all the countrie or ſhire is ſaid to give their voyces though they be abſent, and not preſent otherwiſe then in his perſon. God then giving a prohibition unto Adam, hee gave it unto all us in him; and threatning him he threatned us and all mankind; this onely is the difference, that hee being the root or ſtocke, and wee the branches ariſing from him, he ſinned actually, and we by relation and imputation. If then the naturall man ſtil plead he was no cauſe, but was borne ſo, the anſwer is cleere, that himſelfe is a cauſe, although not in himſelfe, yet in Adam before he was borne he procured that he ſhould be borne a naturall man.

The naturall man procured that ſo he ſhould be borne in Adam, and is therefore excuſeleſſe.

Secondly, it may be pleaded againe: If I be a naturall man, I am Gods creature as I am; why then ſhould I be blamed? Anſw. The former diſtinction betweene nature and corruption of nature muſt be here retained; for by the former the naturall man is Gods creature, and not in reſpect of the corruption of nature: for this hee created not: as the other: but ſuffered it to paſſe by generation from man to man, for the execution of the puniſhment of the firſt ſinne.

Queſt. Why did not God ſtay this corruption in Adams perſon? Anſ. God could have done it, why he did it not, the reaſon is neither knowne, nor to be enquired; a ſecret it is, but yet a juſt judgement of God ſilently to be with reverence reſted in, and not with curioſitie to be ſearched out.

Uſe. Firſt, ſome may hence gather, if a man be juſtly blamed for being only a naturall man, and not having the ſpirit of God; then every one hath power to receive the ſpirit of God.

Anſ. This is no good reaſon, but is all one, as if becauſe a bankerout is blamed for not diſcharging his debts to his creditors; another man ſhould conclude, that ſurely he is therefore able to pay them. But theſe wicked men were blamed here, firſt, becauſe they profeſſed Chriſt, but yet had not his ſpirit: ſecondly, becauſe that in Adam they were the cauſes that they were borne without the ſpirit of God, and ſo made themſelves unfit to receive him.

Secondly, if naturall men be juſtly condemned, much more thoſe that are worſe than they, as Atheiſts, prophane perſons, thoſe which contemne the aſſemblies, and neglect the meanes of their ſalvation, and yet looke for ſalvation as well as others. The Gentiles who were without the law, doe the things of the law by nature, Rom. 2. 24. and yet many that profeſſe the name of Chriſt, and live under the Goſpell, goe not ſo farre as thoſe naturall men in doing the things of the law: ſo as even thoſe Heathens and naturalll men ſhall riſe up in judgement, and condemne many a profeſſor of Chriſt; of whom even many come ſhort of the Devil himſelfe, who beleeveth and trembleth; and yet not a few profeſſors neither know what the Devill beleeves; neither through hardneſſe of heart can tremble at the judgements of God as he can doe.

Thirdly, thoſe come farre ſhort that thinke themſelves in ſtate good enough, becauſe they live civilly and deale juſtly and neighbourly, as they ſay: for the naturall man can doe this, and yet ſhall be condemned: no plea ſhall ſtand at the great day of the Lord, but that which aſſureth of the pardon of ſinne, ſealed up with the bloud of Chriſt. Let a mans outward and civill righteouſneſſe be never ſo great, yea, if it could be equall to the righteouſneſſe of the Scribes and Phariſes, which for outward appearance was without all exception; yet if he bring not a righteouſneſſe exceeding that, hee can never be ſaved.

Fourthly, in that the naturall man is blamed for being a naturall man, this overthroweth all merits of congruity, which the Papiſts boaſt of; becauſe a mans perſon not being accepted before God, all his workes are ſinnes: the worke never pleaſeth God till the worker firſt pleaſe him.

Fifthly, every profeſſor of Chriſt muſt ſtrip the natural man, and become a ſpiritual perſon, that is, ſuch as the Spirit of God dwelleth in: for firſt, as the Father worketh our ſalvation, by giving Chriſt and his merits; ſo muſt the holy Ghoſt by applying the ſame unto us, elſe can we looke for no ſalvation. Secondly, as the ſoule giveth life to the bodie, which elſe were dead; ſo the Spirit of God is the ſoule of our ſoules, and quickneth them with new life being dead in ſinne. Thirdly, we can never know that we are in Chriſt, or belong unto him, but by the preſence of the ſpirit in our hearts; 1 Joh. 3. 24. Hereby we know that hee abideth in us, even by the ſpirit that he hath given us.

Queſt. But how ſhall a man know whether he hath the ſpirit or no? Anſ. Let him examine himſelfe, firſt, whether he inwardly love and feare God in his Word of promiſe and threatning: ſecondly, whether he ſubject his heart and life unto him: thirdly, whether his heart bee continually lift up in invocation, and thankſgiving. All theſe are the workes of the ſpirit of God: and they which be of the ſpirit thus ſavour and affect the things of the ſpirit, Rom. 8. Queſt. But I feare I have not the ſpirit, how ſhal I obtaine it? Anſ. By uſing the meanes of reading the Word, meditation and prayer eſpecially. Luk. 11. 13. Your heavenly Father giveth the holy Ghoſt to them that deſire him, Pſal. 143. 5, 6. I meditate in all thy works; and ſtretch forth my hands unto thee.

V. 20 But yee beloved, edifie your ſelves in your moſt holy faith: praying in the holy Ghoſt.

In this verſe unto the end of the 23. are ſet downe ſome means whereby all beleevers may bee fitted to the maintenance of the faith and true religion, unto the which the Apoſtle hath in the former part of the Epiſtle perſwaded. Theſe meanes are contained in five rules here preſcribed: firſt, concerning Faith: ſecondly, Love: thirdly, Hope: fourthly, Meekneſſe: fifthly, Chriſtian ſeveritie: the firſt of which is contained in this twentieth verſe, which is, that they ſhould build themſelves upon their faith; which is not barely propounded, but inforced and urged: firſt, by a motive in this word, moſt holy faith: ] ſecondly, by the meanes of it, which is prayer; praying in the holy Ghoſt. ] In the rule note two things: firſt, that faith is a foundation; ſecondly, that the dutie of beleevers is to build up themſelves upon this foundation. Concerning the former: firſt it may be demanded what is here meant by faith? Anſ. Here by faith is not ſo much meant the gift of faith, as the matter of it, namely, the doctrine of faith and religion compriſed in the writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles; in which ſenſe it is ſaid, that the Epheſians were built upon the fundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, that is, upon their doctrine, Epheſ. 2. The ſame was the rocke confeſſed by Peter, upon which Chriſt promiſed to build his Church; and yet in the ſecond place we muſt not exclude the gift it ſelfe; for although the doctrine be a foundation in it ſelfe, yet it is not ſo to us, unleſſe we beleeve it, and applie it to our ſelves by this gift. If any man aske what doctrine is this? I anſwer, the ſumme of it may bee reduced to three heads: the firſt whereof concerneth mans miſerie by his ſinne, originall and actuall: as alſo the dangerous fruits thereof. The ſecond, the redemption of man from this miſerie, and his freedome by Chriſt. The third

the thankefulneſſe which man oweth for this deliverance, and ought to teſtifie and expreſſe in newneſſe of life.

Hence learne firſt what is the infallible marke of the true Church, whereby it may be diſcerned from the falſe and Apoſtaticall Church, and that is the doctrine of the Prophets and Apoſtles; for this being the very foundation of the Church, where it is, there the Church muſt needs bee: and this note of it ſelfe is ſufficient to point out the true Church whereſoever. Secondly, ſeeing faith is the foundation of the Church, and not the Church the foundation of faith, beware hence of a damnable doctrine of the Popiſh Church, which teacheth that there can bee no certaintie of the points of religion, no nor of the Scriptures themſelves, but onely by the judgement of the preſent Church of Rome; and that Church muſt give what ſenſe ſoever ſhe pleaſeth to the Scriptures, elſe hath it none: wherein they play the part of prepoſterous builders, laying the foundation in the top of the building. Thirdly, it may be demanded, how any doctrine becommeth a foundation unto the ſalvation of men? Anſ. Properly to ſpeake, God and Chriſt is our foundation and rocke, Pſal. 18. 1. but becauſe God revealeth himſelfe, and the meanes of our ſalvation in the word, it becommeth hence a foundation: alſo ſecondly, becauſe Chriſt, who is the proper foundation, is the ſumme of the doctrine therein contained.

Popiſts fooliſh builders, laying the foundation on the top of the houſe.

Vſe. Firſt, let no creature draw us from Chriſt, for then we are drawne from our foundation. Secondly, the affections of our heart towards Chriſt muſt exceed all affections of any things beſides; our love, feare, hope, confidence and truſt, muſt ſettle themſelves upon him as upon a foundation.

The ſecond thing in this firſt rule is the duty of every beleever, which is to build himſelfe upon his faith; which that a man may doe, ſix things are required: firſt, hee muſt have in his heart a deepe ſenſe and feeling of his miſery in ſuch ſort, as not finding in himſelfe whereon to be founded, he may feele himſelf to be founded upon God and Chriſt; even as in laying ſtrong and ſure foundations men digge deepe, and if they finde ſure ground, proceed on in their purpoſe: ſo this wiſe builder layeth his foundation on a rocke, Luk. 6. 48. Secondly, hee muſt have knowledge of this doctrine of the Prophets and Apoſtles; for unleſſe it be knowne, it can be no foundation. Thirdly, a holy memorie, to lay up the Word of God in their heart as in a ſtore-houſe: for he that remembreth not the doctrine of ſalvation, can never build upon it. Fourthly, faith, whereby not onely we beleeve the truth of it, but apply it unto our ſelves; this knitteth us unto the foundation, without which the word ſhall be no more profitable unto us than the Jewes, who mingled it not with faith, Heb. 4. 2. for this onely applyeth it unto our hearts, Jam. 1. 12. Fifthly, the doctrine beleeved and applyed, muſt take a deepe rooting in the heart; it muſt deſcend into the affections, and there be imbraced untill it hath wrought out an experience of the ſweet comfort of it. Sixthly, there muſt be an unfained obedience unto the whole Word of God: Not every one that ſaith Lord, Lord: but hee that doth the will of my Father, Matth. 7. 21. This man buildeth wiſely upon the rocke. Queſt. But what is that which muſt be done of us? Anſ. Whatſoever is to be done of us, may be reduced to three heads: firſt, faith, whereby the beleever truly reſteth himſelfe upon God; cleaveth unto Chriſt for the pardon of ſin, and renounceth all other meanes in heaven and earth. Secondly, repentance, whereby he truly turneth from all ſin unto God. Thirdly, new obedience, whereby he endevoureth to obey God in all his Commandements.

Vſe. Firſt, here is reproved the carnall Proteſtant, who holdeth his religion but for forme and faſhion, or for feare of lawes: he is altogether without foundation, and in a pitifull condition: ſeeing when the great day of the Lord ſhall approach, whoſoever ſhall want Chriſt their foundation ſhal fall before him. Secondly, wee muſt never ſuffer our ſelves to bee drawne from our faith and religion; nor looſe our hold of the doctrine of godlineſſe, though we ſhould ſuffer loſſe of lands, livings, liberties, yea, our life it ſelfe: if this be once wreſted from us, we are fallen from the foundation, & have loſt our hold of happineſſe and life it ſelfe. Thirdly, we may not take any reſt till we be builded upon this foundation, it being the foundation and ground-worke of all our ſafetie and ſecurity: for Chriſtian men are as houſes built upon the ſea ſhore, who muſt looke for the waves and billowes of afflictions one in the necke of another: even as one ſurge in the ſea overtaketh another: how ſhould they hold out when this raine falleth, theſe floods come, theſe windes blow and beat upon their houſe, unleſſe they be founded upon this rocke? how elſe ſhould not their fall be great? but this ſure foundation eſtabliſheth the heart againſt all calamities of this preſent life, yea, in the houre of death alſo, which otherwiſe is the downefall to hell, yea, and in the day of judgement the ſentence ſhall paſſe on their ſides, who are laid in this foundation: they ſhall be found worthy to ſtand before the Lambe, when the devill and his angels, with all ſinners and ſinne it ſelfe ſhall bee caſt into the bottomleſſe lake. Now as every particular Chriſtian man is to bee a practicer of this duty in his owne perſon, ſo alſo may it be fitly applyed to the ſtate of the whole land, which by Gods bleſſing hath had for many yeares this foundation laid within it, through the which it hath beene able to withſtand, yea, and ſubdue many rebellions, treaſons, forces, and powers, intended againſt it: and beſides hath had ſecuritie and ſafetie under Gods protection, with much peace and proſperitie. Would we now know the way how this peace and securitie continued to us and ours? the way is to continue and abide upon this foundation, not looking backe to Poperie or superstition, but taking out the wholsome counsell of good King Iehoshaphat: Put your trust in the Lord, and ye shall be assured; beleeve his Prophets, and yee shall prosper. 2 Chr. 20. 20.

In this duty of beleevers marke further, first, how the Apostle ascribeth power to the beleever to build himselfe; for although by nature men want this power (for the naturall man cannot of himselfe so much as thinke one good thought) yet the regenerate whom the Lord by his spirit hath moved, have a power given them to move themselves, and build themselves: that which was before to nature impossible, is made possible by grace.

Secondly, note further the force of the word build up which requireth not onely a building, but a going on, and encreasing in building: as if he had said, Build up your selves more and more. A dutie which neerely concernes men in these dayes, wherein men doe clime to Atheisme, and Popery, (which also is but a painted Atheisme) when men can content themselves to goe backe, and fall from their former love, and are afraid to be found either hot or cold. This disease of our daies hath this Apostle forewarned us of in this Epistle, being one of the last farewels of the Apostles to the Church. Let us then take notice of our declinings, and doe our first works, and goe on forward to perfection, building up our selves daily, lest it come to passe that the Lord come against us, spue us out of his mouth, remove our Candlestick with his other blessings, and leave us unto our too late and untimely repentance.

The motive whereby this rule is inforced upon the Church, is drawne from a propertie of faith, which is that it is most holy. Wherein (to understand it) we will shew first what holinesse is properly: secondly, that faith is most holy. For the former, in this holines there be two things: first, a freedome from all fault and blame; secondly, an excellencie or perfection consisting of many divine vertues. Holinesse thus understood is two-fold: uncreated or created. Uncreated is the holinesse of God, which is nothing els but the perfection of his properties and attributes: this holinesse is incomprehensible, & infinit, yea, the fountain of al other holinesse. Created holinesse is a certaine gift of God, which by some proportion resembleth this uncreated holinesse of God; the subject whereof are Angels, man, and Gods ordinances, especially the written word: so as this holinesse of faith is this derived holinesse, and not the former.

Secondly, how is the doctrine of religion most holy? Ans. First, in it selfe, being without all fault and errour, and having sundry excellencies, being full of divine wisdome and truth, and the onely instrument whereby Gods infinit wisdome and goodnesse is made knowne unto us. Secondly, in regard of the effect and

A operation, which is to make the creature, but especially man holy: Joh. 17. 17. Sanctifie them in thy truth, thy word is truth. It sanctifieth men instrumentally, in that it maketh them resemble God in many graces: by this David became wiser than his Teachers, Psal. 119. and so resembled God in wisdome. Jam. 3. 17. This wisdome which is from above (of which the word is the instrument) is pure, peaceable, easie to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without judging, and without hypocrisie. Thus we see how it maketh men resemble God in all these, yea, and in all other vertues. Thirdly, it is most holy, because it sanctifieth all inferiour creatures to the use of man, so as he may use them with good conscience: 1 Tim. 4. 4. Every creature of God is
B good, sanctified by the word and praier. Where (by the way) may be noted the superstition of the Romish Church which halloweth Bread, Salt, Water, Palmes, &c. for the curing of diseases, casting out Devils, and working wonders; which practice of theirs, is nothing but the defiling and prophaning of the creatures, by superstitious prayer seeming to hallow them, yet without any word or warrant, either of promise or commandement: which is the principall instrument of sanctifying the creatures unto their lawfull ends and uses.

Papists account the word superfluous in sanctifying the creatures.

Hence learne first, that the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles is from God; because it is full of wisdome, without any follie, full of truth, void of all falshood; as also most holy both in it selfe, and in operation and effect, and
C in the author, as proceeding from him who is the fountaine of all holinesse: it is not of men, neither needeth the evidence of men; by this propertie only (if it had no more) it carrieth with it, and containeth within it sufficient evidence against the gates of hell, that it is from God, and holy as himselfe is. Secondly, the Word being most holy, it must dwell in our hearts plentifully, and our care must be that it may be written in the tables thereof, that it may be an ingrafted Word, bearing rule over our wils & affections, yea, over our whole lives: for where it ruleth, it sanctifieth the whole man. Thirdly, the doctrine of true faith sanctifieth us; but as it is received, beleeved and applyed
D by faith, and no otherwise: when it taketh place in us, then it sanctifieth us: it is not the rehearsing of the articles of it, nor the knowledge of it, nor carrying about with us the words of it, that can worke grace, but the hiding of it, and mingling it with faith in the heart: from which we gather, that it is a foule error of the Papists, to teach that the Sacraments conferre grace, by the worke wrought, and that as the penne writeth by the hand of the writer, and that of it selfe, the hand moving it; so the Sacraments of themselves sanctifie, being administred by the Minister: but this is erroneous, for the Word and the Sacraments are both of one nature, the Sacraments being none other but the word made visible: but the word read or uttered

fieth not by the worke done, but by being beleeved and applied by faith: therefore no more doe the Sacraments by being administred, but by apprehending Christ in them: grace must be conferred by the spirit of grace, and not by the vertues of any action in the Sacraments.

The last point in this first rule, is the meanes whereby beleevers are to build up themselves in their most holy faith, and that is prayer [praying in the holy Ghost.] Wherein every member of the Church is put in mind of a principall dutie, namely, that whensoever we feare, or foresee a falling, and defection from the faith, by reason either of weaknesse within, or persecution without, then time it is to repaire unto God by the prayer of faith, craving at his hands strength, and power not onely to be preserved from revolt, but also to bee confirmed in the faith and doctrine wherein wee stand. The Apostle having exhorted the Ephesians to stand fast and be strong in the Lord, and having prescribed some meanes tending to that purpose; in 18. verse hee concludeth the principall of the rest to be prayer: praying alwaies with all prayer and supplication in the spirit: and that it is so, appeareth by two reasons: first, by prayer faith is exercised, yea, and increased according to the increase thereof, the other graces of zeale, hope, patience, and constancie are likewise confirmed and animated. Secondly, faithfull prayer hath a faithfull promise made unto it, Aske and ye shall have, seeke and ye shall finde, knocke and it shall be opened unto you: these promises we must lay hold upon, and apply unto our selves, for the stirring up of continuall prayer, and strengthning of grace, especially in time of temptation, and in sense of trailtie, and then God will bee good in hearing and helping, as his promise is.

Eph. 6.10.

Now in the meanes observe the manner of making prayer in these words, In the holy Ghost, which are added for foure causes: first, to give us to understand that although a man be regenerate, yet he cannot pray as he ought, unlesse he bee still moved, helped, and stirred by the holy Ghost. God giveth sundrie graces in the conversion of a sinner: first, a preventing grace, which yet is not at all effectuall, unlesse it bee seconded and helped with a supplie of a second grace: for that is true even of the regenerate, without me ye can doe nothing, Joh. 15. God giveth first the will and then the deed, Phil. 2. 13. yea, and the continuance of the doing of that which is truly God: He that hath begun the good worke, will performe or finish it, chap. 1. 6. Here let grace be every way grace, lest it bee no grace at all, let God who is all in all have the glorie of all; as for the doctrine of mans merit and humane satisfaction, which robbeth God to entice man, it here falleth to the ground. The second is, because prayer is a singular and especiall worke in the holy Ghost in us, who stirreth up in us these grons and sighes which we cannot expresse, Rom. 8. & maketh us cry Abba Father: Zach, 12. 10. this spirit of grace and compassion is promised to bee powred out upon the house of David, and inhabitants of Jerusalem: and from hence a man may examine and finde whether he be the childe of God or no; for if he have the spirit of God he is his, and if hee have these holy motions and desires to pray, and can send out these cries unto God unfainedly, he hath the presence of the Spirit, and he that hath not this spirit in these blessed fruits of it, is none of his. Thirdly, these words are added, to teach us, that when we pray, we must do it from our hearts; for where the spirit of God dwelleth, thence must prayer proceed; but his abode is in the heart, and therefore prayer (that God may acknowledge it to proceed from the spirit) must be hearty: and so of all other spirituall duties: Colos. 3. singing with grace in your hearts: Rom. 1. whom I serve in my spirit: where the Apostle expresseth a reason why prayer should proceed from the heart, because prayer is of the same nature with faith and the spirituall worship of God, yea, indeed is a part of it answerable unto God himselfe, who is a spirit; but all these are seated in the heart, and spirit, and consequently prayer it selfe ought so to be: neither is it the outward action or words which is simply the worship of God, but so farre as they consent and proceed from the heart. Which teacheth us, that whatsoever religious duty we are to turne our selves unto, we are first of all therein to approve our hearts unto God. Fourthly, that there may be a distinction made between the true beleever and the hypocrite & carnall man. The hypocrite he prayeth outwardly for forme and fashion; the naturall man in affliction prayeth of compulsion, as a man that is racked and tormented, without any love of God at all; both of them without any inward sense, or rectified disposition of the heart: but the beleever he prayeth in the heart and in faith, the spirit of God disposing his heart aright unto prayer.

Quest. How doth the holy Ghost direct the heart. Answ. By five wayes or meanes, first by illumination, wherby he revealeth God to man, as also his owne estate; both of them in part. Secondly, by conversion, whereby hee turneth the heart unto God once made knowne. Thirdly, by direction, whereby he directeth the heart to deale as with God himselfe, taking it from outward meanes. Fourthly, by fervent and constant desires for things spirituall or temporall. Fifthly, by faith, whereby we can rest on God for the accomplishment of the thing, we have heartily desired.

Quest. Whether may we not pray to the holy Ghost, seeing here it is said, praying in or by the holy Ghost? Ans. We may not onely pray in or by him, but unto him: for although we have no particular example hereof in the Scripture, yet wee have sufficient warrant: for the three persons being undivided in nature, must be also undivided in worship, and one being worshipped, all must be worshipped. Secondly, wee are baptised into the name of the holy Ghost, as well as of the Father and Sonne, and therefore he is to be prayed unto, even as they are. Object. But we are not commanded to pray any where by the Father or Sonne, as here by the holy Ghost, which argueth that the holy Ghost is not the Author of our prayers, as they are. Anſ. The Apoſtle here would have us obſerve an order in the working of the Trinitie, for all the three perſons are Authors of our prayers; the Father and Sonne make us to pray, but by the holy Ghost; the holy Ghost maketh us pray, but more immediately, for he is the immediate author of our prayers: which teacheth, that when wee pray, it is not of our ſelves, but from the ſpirit which ſtirreth and ſendeth up heavenly requeſts for us; herein then we muſt renounce our ſelves, magnifie the grace of God within us, and ſhew our ſelves thankfull by entertaining carefully ſuch holy motions of this moſt holy ſpirit of God.

verſ. 21 And keepe your ſelves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt unto eternall life.

Theſe words containe the ſecond rule of the Apoſtle tending to the preſervation of faith, and true religion concerning love, and it is indeed of ſpeciall uſe, and direction for the framing of our lives: Chriſt calleth the love of God and men the ſumme of the whole law: Paul calleth it the end of the Commandements. This cauſed Paul to keep faith and good conſcience: 2 Cor. 5.14. The love of Chriſt conſtraineth us. Now for the better informing of our underſtandings, & our furtherance in obſerving this rule, five things are to be conſidered: firſt, what is meant by the love of God? Anſ. We are to underſtād by the love of God a divine vertue in the hearts of the beleevers, wherby they love God and Chriſt, properly and ſimply for himſelfe, reſt in him, and cleave unto him as the moſt abſolute good: for by Gods love in this place is not meant that love whereby God loveth man, but whereby man loveth God. Q. Why doth the Apoſtle here omit the love of man? Anſ. Becauſe the love of man to man is included and to be underſtood in the other as a fruit neceſſarily flowing from it: for firſt, when a man loveth his neighbour, herein after a ſort he loveth God, for then God is loved, not onely when our affection of love is directed unto himſelfe, but alſo when his ordinances, his creatures, image and other things pertaining unto him are loved. Secondly, the Apoſtle Paul calleth the love of the neighbour the fulfilling of the Law; which cannot bee unleſſe wee include alſo therein the love of God, or rather it within Gods love, and joyne them together. Now if the love of man bee the fulfilling of the Law, how much more is the love of God, which by the ſame reaſon muſt include the other? Thirdly, it is a true rule in Divinitie, that the firſt Commandement muſt be included and practiſed in all the nine following, as being the foundation of them all. Now the maine duty of the firſt Commandement is the love of God, which muſt goe with the practice of all the other, ſo as all the duties of the other commandements are included in the ſame.

The love of God groweth not naturally in our own grounds.

The ſecond point is, whether this love of God bee in man by nature, or given by grace? Anſ. It is not from nature, but a gift of grace following faith and juſtification. John 14.14. If yee love me, ye will keepe my commandements; both which proceed from one beginning: as no man then can by nature keepe the Commandements, ſo no man can by nature love God aright. Rom. 8. 5. The wiſdome of the fleſh (that is, mans beſt things, his beſt thoughts and affections) is enmity to God, therefore can there bee no true love of God in nature. 1 Tim. 1.5. The end of the Commandement is love out of a pure heart, and of a good conſcience and faith unfained. Againe, we muſt firſt beleeve that we are loved of God, before wee can love him, 1 Epiſt. Joh. 4. Wee love him, becauſe hee loved us firſt. It will be objected here, Luke 7.47. Many ſinnes are forgiven her, for ſhee loved much: where it ſeemeth that love is the cauſe of forgiveneſſe of ſinnes. Anſ. I anſwer, this word (for) doth not ſignifie here a cauſe, but a reaſon drawn from the ſigne, as it is alſo elſewhere uſed; this then is the ſenſe, many ſinnes are forgiven her, and hereby yee ſhall know it, becauſe or in that ſhe loved much.

Note hence firſt, that doctrine of the Church of Rome to bee falſe, whereby they teach that before juſtification there muſt bee a diſpoſition and aptitude in a man thereunto, ſtanding in a feare of hell, love of God, &c. for by this doctrine the love of God in man ſhould goe before juſtification, which is a fruit and follower thereof. Secondly, that is as falſe, that love is the ſoule and life of faith, for though in time they bee both together, yet in order of nature love followeth after faith, and therefore cannot be the forme and ſoule thereof. Thirdly, it hath beene the opinion of ſome, that faith apprehendeth Chriſt by love, and not by it ſelfe; but this is alſo erroneous; for love in order followes apprehenſion of Chriſt, and therefore Chriſt is not apprehended by love. Firſt, we beleeve, and being knit unto Chriſt by faith, then our hearts are knit unto God by love.

The third point is, what is the meaſure of love whereby we muſt love God and man. Anſ. According to the two diſtinct parts of the word of God, are preſcribed two diſtinct meaſures of love. The meaſure of the Law is to love God without meaſure, for it requireth that we love God with all the powers of our bodies and ſoules, and with all the ſtrength of all theſe powers, Luke 10.27. This meaſure is not now

Gal. 5.14.

our power to performe, no not although we be borne anew: for being still flesh in part, some of the powers of our strength are withdrawne from the love of God. The Gospell is a qualification of the Law, and moderateth the rigor thereof; it freeth a man not from loving God, but exacteth not this love in the highest measure and degree, but accepteth such a measure as standeth in 3 things: first, in beginning truly to love God; secondly, in the daily increase in this love: thirdly, in being constant in the same unto the end: this measure the Lord accepteth for perfect love, in those that be in Christ, in whom the imperfection is covered, Deut. 30.6. The Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, that thou maist love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and all thy soule: that is, as if the Lord had said, I will ingraft the true love of my selfe in your hearts which you shall increase in, and constantly proceed in the same, and then I will account and accept of it, for the full measure of love that my Law requireth: which distinction is the rather to bee considered, because the Papists teach, that the love which the Lord requireth of Christians, is the same for substance and measure which the Law prescribeth: and for the perfection of our love, they say a man may doe more than the Law bindeth him unto; as if hee give all his goods to the poore, it is more than ever God in his law hath commanded: and if wee love God above all creatures (which they say a man may do though imperfectly) it is the love which the law prescribeth. But all this is most false, and so the Apostle, Galat. 3.10. concludeth it, as many as are under the workes of the Law are accursed. If all men be condemned by the law, then is no man able to performe the love and duties which it requireth: but he taketh the former for granted for else his argument could not hold; and therefore that none can performe the love which the law injoyneth is true. Secondly, the common opinion of men is, that they ever loved God with all their heart, and it is pittie hee should live that doth not so: but it is a meere delusion, for if it were so, what needed any qualification or moderation of the Law by the Gospell.

Papists are none of them that can confesse that they are unprofitable when they have done all they can.

The fourth point is, wherein standeth the love of God? Answ. 1 Epist. John 5.3. This is the love of God, that ye keepe his Commandements. John 14. 23. Hee that keepeth my Commandements is hee that loveth me: the reason whereof is this, hee that loveth God, loveth his Word, and he that loveth his Word, will bewray his love in yeelding answerable obedience thereunto; and in one word this keeping of the Commandements standeth in these three things: first, in faith; for it must bee the worke of a true beleever: secondly, in conversion unto God: thirdly, in new obedience: which sheweth many a man how miserably hee hath beene heretofore deluded by Satan: for every man professeth and pretendeth the keeping of the Commandements, and yee the most are so farre from doing them, that they know them not, neither care to know them.

The fifth point is, how a man should preserve in him the love of God and of man? Ans. First, the meanes whereby a man may preserve himselfe in the love of God is two fold; first, every one must labour daily to have his heart setled in the sense of Gods love towards himselfe: for the more hee shall feele Gods love confirmed unto him, the more shall his love be inflamed and increased towards God againe; even as the more wee feele the heat of the Sunne, the warmer we are. Secondly, we must keepe a daily observation of Gods blessings spirituall and temporall, which is a speciall meanes not onely to confirme and augment our love, but preserve it constant to the end. Psalm. 18.1. I will love thee dearely, O Lord. Why, what made David thus resolve himselfe? The reason is rendred in the next words, The Lord is my rocke, my fortresse, my strength, and hee that delivereth mee. Secondly, men must use the meanes whereby they may preserve their love to man; and these are of two sorts, for some stand in meditation, others in practice. The meditations are foure. The first is the consideration of the spirituall and neere conjunction of all those that are true beleevers, of which number we professe our selves all to bee, who have all one Father, God? one Mother, the heavenly Jerusalem the Catholike Church; all begotten of the immortall seed, the word of God; all live by one faith in Christ, and all are heires of eternall life and glory. This was Pauls motive perswading him hereto: Ephes. 4. 3, 4. There is one Lord, one faith, one baptisme, one God and Father of all: see Philip. 2. 1, 2. The second meditation is, that the duties of love which man sheweth to man, especially the faithful, God accepteth as done to himselfe: so saith the Wise-man; Hee that giveth to the poore, lendeth unto the Lord. And Matthew 25. When I was hungry, yee fed me, &c. namely, in my members upon earth. The third meditation is the consideration of that curse, which is due to them that neglect duties of love to man, when occasion is offered; Matth. 25. Depart yee cursed, I was hungry, yee fed me not: to avoyd this curse, wee must embrace the Apostles counsell, to walke in love. The fourth is, to consider that the love of man to man is a grace of God, which leadeth a man by the hand to the first degree of happinesse: 1 John 4. 16. Hee that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him; that is, hee hath entred the first degree of happinesse, for hee hath fellowship with God: and verse 12. If wee love one another, Gods love is perfect in us. Now as nature it selfe can tell us a happinesse is to be sought for, so see this grace lead us to the degrees and beginnings of it.

The second sort of meanes stand in practice; and the rules of practice bee six. The first is the practice of the Law of nature, being the summe of the Law and the Prophets, by Christs owne testimony: Whatsoever ye would that men should doe unto you, doe you the same unto them. The meaning of which golden rule is this: Looke what wee would have other men to thinke, speake, and doe to us, that must wee thinke, speak, and doe unto them, and no worse: and on the contrary, consider what wee would not that man should thinke, speake, or doe unto us, that we must abstaine to speake, or thinke, or doe unto them. The practice whereof would cut off many wrongs, contentions, frauds, and injuries both in word and deed.

The second rule of practice is, in Gal. 5. 13. Doe service one to another by love: that is, let every man in his place and calling become servant to another, and so preserve love by the duties of love. The reason hereof is, because God (although he might if he had pleased preserved man without man) would have man preserved by man, and that every man should be his instrument for every mans good in regard both of body & soule. For which end he hath furnished men with severall arts, sciences, trades, and callings, that one man might stand in need of the helpe of another. Secondly, wee are placed in the world that here we might serve God indeed, not in speculation onely, but also in our whole practice in our standings and callings, he will be served of us in our serving of man, for those two must goe together, and as it were hand in hand, the service of God, and the service of man. Whosoever therefore imploy their callings principally for the purchasing of their profits, pleasures, honours, and not for the good of men, they abuse their callings, prophane their lives, and mistake the proper end of them, as though they were borne onely to live unto themselves, and serve themselves, and neither God nor man besides: from which too common a practice hath that devilish speech sprung, and by Satan put into the mouthes of many men: Every man for himselfe, and God for us all. A speech well beseeming those who are at open enmity with the duties of true love.

God will be served of us in our serving of man.

The third rule is in Phil. 4. 5. Let your moderate minde bee knowne unto all men. Wherein is commended that meeknesse of minde, whereby we can with moderation and equity beare with men for the preservation of love: see Phil. 2. 3. This moderation standeth in foure actions: first, in bearing with defects & infirmities of nature, as shamefastnesse, frowardnesse, desire of praise, slownesse, and such weaknesses: it is the part and property of an equall mind, not to be severe, or hasty against these, but rather to passe by them, as Salomon saith: It is the glory of a man to passe by an infirmity. Secondly, in covering many, yea a multitude of sinnes: yea, and if a man be called to reveale and discover them by way of testimonie, it causeth a man not to aggravate the crime, but equally to speake, even as the thing is. Thirdly, in construing mens meanings, words, and actions (if it be possible) in the better part, even so far as the word of God giveth us liberty: for it is a fruit of malice to misconstrue men, to make an offence where it is not given, or not to be taken, and that is, so long as the wickednesse is not apparant. Fourthly, in restoring him that is fallen into a fault, by the spirit of meeknesse, courtesie, and humanity: even as a Surgeon dealeth with a broken arme or leg, not with roughnesse, or anger, but with mildnesse, yea, and pity towards the offender, so setting him as it were in joynt againe.

The fourth rule is in Rom. 12. 10. Be affectioned one towards another with brotherly love. How may that bee done? Answ. In the next words, in giving honour goe one before another, not in taking honour as our nature is; but in preferring others before our selves: and here we must not conceive of this honour as a meere ceremony, standing in some outward gesture; but it is a reverent opinion conceived inwardly in the heart, whereby every man thinketh better of another than of himselfe, and accordingly yeelds him more honour. But some wil say here this is hard to doe, to esteeme of every man better than our selves, and how may we attaine unto it? An. Whosoever judgeth this so hard a lesson, let him enter into the serious examination of his owne heart, without partialitie, let him looke narrowly into himselfe, and he shall espy such a body of sinne for measure and manner as hee cannot finde in any man besides; so as in the true sense of his estate hee can never abase any man so farre as hee can himselfe, whereby hee shall come to judge every man worthy to be preferred and honoured before himselfe.

The fifth rule is in Ephes. 4. 26. Let not the Sunne set upon your wrath. A very necessary rule; for seeing wee bee but men, wee cannot bee without many sinfull motions, and especially of revenge upon occasion; but here wee are counselled forth-with to stay and represse them, yea, and to breake them utterly off: that although anger, wrath, and revengeful thoughts will arise up in our hearts, yet wee must extinguish them, and not suffer them to continue with us, no not for the space of a day. The same Christ himselfe hath taught, Mar. 11. 25. When ye stand to pray, forgive, if yee have any thing against any man. So often then as we are to pray (which is at the least daily) so often are wee to forgive injuries offered to us, for we pray to be forgiven as our selves doe forgive others: men content themselves to carry their wrath a whole yeare together, and if they forgive once a yeare at Easter, or at the receiving of the Sacrament once a quarter, it is as much (they thinke) as they need to doe: but they forget that the Sun must not goe downe upon their wrath.

The sixth rule, Roman. 15. 2. Let every man please his neighbour. Some will say, how can this be, for some will never bee pleased, if wee condiscend not to their corrupt and wicked desires? Ans. The next words expound the Apoſtles meaning; for good: What is that? Anſ. For his edification: ſo as the generall Commandement admitteth this limitation: that men muſt bee pleaſed, but onely ſo farre as it tendeth to Gods glory, their owne good, and edification. So, Rom. 12. 18. Have peace with all men: but yet with a double limitation: firſt, if it be poſſible: ſecondly, if it bee in you; or ſo much as lieth in you, wee muſt not carry croſſe and thwarte mindes, as being enemies unto peace, but apply our ſelves to the preſervation of it in our ſelves and others: thus ſhal we teſtifie our ſelves to bee admitted into Gods kingdome, wherein the Lion and Lambe play together, and the young childe with the Cockatrice. Iſay 11. Whereby thus much is ſignified, that men once converted ſhall be ſo changed and altred; that if they were never ſo fierce and cruell againſt the Church, and one againſt another before, yet now they ſhall bee framed to a peaceable and meeke diſpoſition towards all men.

Eeee

Pleaſe men in God, and for good.

Now to perſwade us to the practice of theſe rules, conſider firſt that theſe are the laſt times wherein moſt men are lovers of themſelves, and lovers of men for their owne advantage, even ſo farre as by them they may attaine and retaine their wealth, pleaſures and pompe; but few are they that love men for God, or his graces in them: now ſeeing the times more call for theſe duties, let us bee the more carefull in them. Secondly, love amongſt men is the bond of ſocieties; for what linketh man to man but love, which therefore the Apoſtle calleth the bond of perfection; and truly, for it maketh men ſpeake and think one thing, and perfecteth their ſocietie. Seeing then Chriſtian ſocieties are Gods ordinances and preſerved by love, wee are to labour the more in the preſervation of it. Thirdly, the office and action of love is moſt excellent, for the manifold gifts and graces which God beſtoweth on men for the uſe of the Church and Common-wealth, are all hereby made profitable thereunto, all ordered hereunto aright, and all hereby applyed to their right, ends and uſes: the gifts of knowledge, tongues, arts, wiſdome, and ſuch like, without love they puffe up, but it is love that edifieth, 1 Corin. 13. and which cauſeth man to apply and uſe theſe gifts to the good of man.

The third rule for the maintenance of faith concerneth Hope in the next words, looking for the mercy of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt unto eternall life.] Wherein is contained a deſcription of hope, which is this: Hope is a gift of God, whereby we wait for the mercy of Jeſus Chriſt to eternall life. For the better conceiving of which grace, conſider in the words three things: firſt, the perſon on whom wee are to wait by hope, namely, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, together with the properties of this waiting, which are foure: firſt, it muſt be certaine without doubting: for the Apoſtle aſcribeth a full perſwaſion and aſſurance unto our hope, as well as unto our faith, Hebr. 6. 11. neither doth hope make

A a man aſhamed by diſappointing him of the thing hoped for, Rom. 5. 5. Secondly, it muſt be againſt hope, that is, againſt all human hope, reaſon, ſenſe, and whatſoever may be grounded upon theſe. Thus Abraham beleeved againſt hope, Rom. 4. 18. Thirdly, it muſt be a patient waiting on Chriſt: Rom. 8. 15. If wee hope for that wee ſee not, we doe with patience abide for it: for otherwiſe the thing hoped for deferred, maketh our waiting painefull and tedious. Fourthly, it muſt be grounded upon the word and promiſes of life, Pſalm. 130. 5. My ſoule hath waited, and I have truſted in his word: Heb. 6. 18. the ground and anchor of our hope is made not onely the promiſe, but the oath of God who cannot lie, although he ſhould not ſweare, that wee might hold faſt the hope that is ſet before us.

B

The ſecond point is, the thing for which we muſt wait, which is not for gold, ſilver, honours, pleaſures, but onely for the mercy of God in Chriſt unto life eternall: by which we muſt not underſtand the beginnings of mercy, for theſe wee already here enjoy, and having the preſent hold thereof need not hope for the ſame, but for the full meaſure and accompliſhment of Gods mercies hereafter to bee enjoyed The like manner of ſpeech hath Paul, Rom. 8. 22. We wait for our Adoption and Redemption, not that we are already adopted and redeemed: but that it is not as yet fully finiſhed and accompliſhed in us, as hereafter it ſhall be.

C

The third point is, the fruit and profit of this waiting; and that is life eternall, and therefore is added, unto life eternall, giving us to underſtand, that our waiting ſhall bring us unto, and ſet us in the poſſeſſion of this life. So as the deſcription ſtandeth in ſetting downe two effects of hope, deſcribed firſt, that it cauſeth to wait on Chriſt for mercy: ſecondly, that it doth not faile nor make a man aſhamed, for he waiteth unto eternall life, and in this expectation is put in poſſeſſion of the ſame. From the former effect, we learne firſt to put a difference betweene hope and confidence: firſt, by hope wee wait on Chriſt, but by confidence wee reſt upon him, and quiet our hearts in him: Secondly, hope is of things to come, and confidence of things preſent, at leaſt made preſent by faith. Matth. 9. 2. Have confidence, and thy ſinnes are forgiven thee: Whence wee may diſcerne an errour in Popiſh religion. They teach with us that a man is to have confidence in Chriſt, but they include it under hope, and will not permit that it ſhould be referred to faith, becauſe then they ſhould be drawne to grant a ſpeciall faith. But that is erroneous, ſeeing confidence is not of things to come as hope is, but of things preſent: and therefore although confidence goeth with hope, yet it is no branch of it, but proceedeth from faith. Secondly, ſeeing this waiting is a certaine expectation of Chriſt, hence I gather that there is a ſpeciall faith; for if there be a ſpeciall hope, there muſt needs be a ſpeciall faith to ground this speciall hope upon: for wee can never certainly wait for that, whereof wee are uncertaine whether it belong unto us or no: he that hath received the earnest, may certainly wait for the whole summe; but it is faith which receiveth the earnest of the spirit, from whence our hope is raised. Heb. 11. 1. Now faith is the ground of things hoped for: for which cause it is that hope also hath his full assurance ascribed unto it as well as faith: And hence we may further take knowledge of another of their errors, whereas they teach that hope indeed is joyned with a certainty, but they distinguish of certainty, which is (they say) either of the will or understanding; hope they grant hath the certainty of will, but not of judgement and understāding: but this is false, seeing the Apostle Heb. 12. commandeth to rejoyce in hope: which no man can doe, unlesse the judgement bee certaine and setled; he that is not certaine of mercy, can never hope certainly for mercy. Thirdly, wee learne hence to wait by our hope in Christ for life everlasting even to the death, that must be the white which must ever bee in our eye, at which wee must continually direct our aime. Wee have many examples of holy men who have gone before us in this duty; Iacob when hee was making his will, inserteth and as it were interlaceth this speech: O Lord, I have waited for thy salvation, Genes. 49. 18. Moses had his eye ever upon the recompence of reward, Hebr. 11. 26. Iob will trust in the Lord, yea, although hee should kill him, Job 13. 15. David was much and often in this expectation of the Lords mercy, Psal. 40. 1. In waiting I have waited on the Lord, that is, I have instantly waited: and mine eyes have failed me whilest I have waited for my God. Psalm. 63. 3. and Psal. 16. 9. My flesh shall rest in hope; his hope was that his flesh should rise againe unto life everlasting. Object. But how can wee nourish this hope (will some man say) seeing we are so tossed and perplexed with so many miseries and grievances in this life? Answ. Paul meeteth with this objection, Rom. 1. 3. We rejoyce in tribulation. Quest. How can wee doe so? Answ. When wee subject our selves unto God in afflictions, hee sheddeth abroad his love in our hearts, and this breedeth patience, which bringeth forth experience, and experience hope, which maketh not ashamed; being the helmet of salvation, and our anchor which staieth our ship in the troublesome sea of this life. Fourthly, if we must by our hope wait on Christ; then in all our requests and petitions unto God we must abide the Lords leisure, not limiting, him or prescribing the time unto him of hearing; for herein our hope must exercise it selfe.

We must wait for mercy, and not for justice, as the Papists teach by their doctrine of merits.

Further, from the object of this waiting, which is the mercy of God, wee may learne divers points: first, that there is no such merit of worke as the Papists dreame of, for then might wee wait for justice, and of due lay claime to life eternall. But here wee have another lesson read us, namely, that the Saints of God justified, sanctified, and so continuing, (for to such Iude wrote, as verse 1.) must wait for the mercie of God unto life eternall. Yea, let a man keep all Gods Commandements, hee shall merit nothing, hee doth but his duty. In the second Commandement the Lord saith, he shewes mercy on thousands: but who are they? even to them that love me and keepe my Commandements. If Adam had stood in innocencie, hee could not have merited any better estate than he was in; how much lesse can we since the fall? nay, Christ as he was man alone, could not merit, nor did not, but in regard of personall union. But the Papist wil here say, that life eternal is promised upon condition, and if we can keepe the Commandements wee may merit. I answer, if wee keepe the condition of our selves, we may merit indeed; but this is impossible, for even our keeping of the condition were of mercie; and mercie and merit will never meet and stand together. Secondly, if we wait for mercie in Christ, then we must altogether despaire in regard of our selves for ever attaining life everlasting, for hope sendeth a man out of himselfe, and causeth him wholly to relie himselfe upon Christ. Thirdly, if we must wait for the accomplishment of mercy, which tendeth to life everlasting, then much more must wee in our dangers or troubles wait for Gods mercie in our deliverance. If we must wait for the greater, wee may for the lesse, Hab. 2. 3. At last the vision shall speake, and not lie; though it tarrie, wait. And Isai. 28. 16. He that beleeveth, maketh not haste. This meeteth with mans corruption, who in present trouble will have present helpe, or else he will fetch it from hell it selfe, from Satan and Sorcerers: but such never learned to wait on Gods mercie for salvation: for then could they wait his leisure in lesser matters, for health and ease, and with more comfort make farre lesse haste.

Wicked men in present troubles must have present helpe, though from Satan himselfe.

Secondly, from the second effect or fruit of hope, namely, that it deceiveth not, nor disappointeth him that hopeth; note, first a difference betweene humane or carnall, and religious or Christian hope. The former often deceiveth men, at least when death commeth all such hopes perish: but the second never deceiveth a man in time of need, no not in death it selfe. Secondly, hence a man may and must beleeve his owne perseverance in grace; for where this hope is, such a man cannot fall wholly from Christ, for then his hope should disappoint him: neither from his owne salvation, because this hope layes hold on the mercy of God unto eternall life: and herein can never frustrate his expectation, or make him ashamed. Thirdly, if our hope bring us to the fulnesse of happinesse and to the accomplishment of mercy hereafter, then it bringeth us to the beginnings of this happinesse even in this life; for the beginning of life eternal is in this life, and standeth in the conversion of sinners unto God, and in amendment of of life: and whoſoever hath true hope, hee is therby ſtirred up unto daily repentance and reformation of life: 1 John 3.3. He that hath this hope, purgeth himſelfe, even as hee is pure. Now there is none of us but wee ſay we hope for life eternall, and looke to be ſaved by the mercy of God in Chriſt: it ſtandeth us then in hand to try the truth of this hope within our ſelves, and manifeſt the truth of it unto others, and both theſe by this note, namely, that wee finde it to purge our hearts and lives, and that it conforme us unto Chriſt: for if wee hope to bee like him after this life, wee muſt labour to reſemble him even in this life, by being in ſome meaſure pure, holy, innocent, meeke, loving, &c. even as hee was: for otherwiſe if our lives bee not in ſome reformation of our ſelves, and conformitie to our head ſutable to the profeſſion of our hope, it is but pretence of hope, and will make men in the end aſhamed.

V. 22 And have compaſſion of ſome, in putting difference:

23 And others ſave with feare, pulling them out of the fire, and hate even that garment which is ſpotted by the fleſh.

Theſe words containe the two laſt rules tending to the preſervation of the faith, both of them teaching how wee may and are to recover, and reſtore thoſe who are fallen or declining from faith or good conſcience. For the better underſtanding whereof, conſider in the words two things: firſt, the way to begin this recovery, which is in the end of ver. 22. By putting difference. Secondly, the manner how they are to bee recovered; expreſſed in both the rules: The former concerneth Chriſtian meekneſſe, Have compaſſion on ſome:] the latter concerneth Chriſtian ſeverity; and other ſave with feare.] Concerning the former: the way of this recovery is to put a difference.] that is, by Chriſtian wiſdome to diſtinguiſh betweene offenders. For our direction wherein, we muſt know that men erre and offend two wayes: firſt, in opinion and judgement: ſecondly, in practice and life. Againe, thoſe that erre in opinion are alſo diverſly to bee diſtinguiſhed, according to the diverſity of their errours: for ſome erre in the foundation of religion, and matters of greateſt importance, as the Papiſts at this day, when they teach invocation of Saints, juſtification by workes, a reall ſacrifice for the quicke and dead in the Supper, with other falſe doctrines raſing the foundatiō: others may hold the foundation, but erre in ſmaller points of leſſer importance. As for example, the Anabaptiſts holding that warre is not to bee made, nor oathes to bee taken, erre groſſely: but yet herein (though in other points they doe) they raſe not the foundation. Theſe ought wiſely to bee diſtinguiſhed, for he that erres in the foundation, everturneth his faith and religion: but hee that holdeth the foundation, and erreth in ſmaller points, doth not. 1 Corinth. 3.12. If any man build on the fouudation hay or ſtubble, his workes ſhall burne, but himſelfe may be ſafe. One thing it is to beat downe a wall, to pull downe a window, yea, ſome one ſide of a houſe; and another to plucke up the foundation, for this deſtroyeth all: which difference if it had beene made and minded, many which have ſeparated themſelves from the Church of England, had ſtill remained members of it. Secondly, of thoſe that erre in opinion, ſome erre of ignorance and blinde zeale, ſeeing no other truth than that they hold; as the Jewes did, Rom. 10.2. who had the zeale of God, but not according to knowledge: others erre of malice, who know they are deceived, and yet perſiſt obſtinately in their error and falſe opinion, leſt they ſhould loſe their credit, as Heretikes. Now betweene theſe alſo a difference is to be put: Tit. 3.10. An heretike after once or twice admonition reject; for ſuch a one is condemned of his owne ſelfe. But if the error be of ignorance, Paul ſpeaketh: If any bee otherwiſe minded, the Lord will reveale it, Philip. 3.15. But here wee muſt alwayes remember, that ſeeing wee can hardly diſcerne the ground of mens errours whether they proceed of ignorance or malice, wee are ever to condemne their errour, but have reſpect to their perſons, and not paſſe ſentence raſhly againſt them. For the error of the ubiquitie of Chriſts body hath beene held and maintained by many both godly and learned Proteſtants; their errour we are alwayes able to condemne, but we may not condemne their perſons, no not although they have defended it of malice, or out of the pride of their hearts, ſeeing the Lord might give them repentance before or at their death. Thirdly, againe thoſe that doe erre of ignorance muſt be diſtinguiſhed: for ſome of them are miſled of ſimple ignorance, as thoſe who have no meanes, or very ſmall meanes to come to knowledge: others erre of affected ignorance, which is when men are willingly ignorant, having meanes of knowledge, but refuſe the ſame. As above forty years agoe the people of this land erred of ſimple ignorance, becauſe they had not the meanes (which yet did not excuſe them) but now their ignorance is wilfull, and affected, neglecting at leaſt, if not fearefully deſpiſing ſo great ſalvation; and therefore as the ſinne of the land is greater, ſo the more fearefull is the judgement like to bee, if it bee not ſeaſonably prevented by repētance. Fourthly, there is alſo wiſe difference to bee put betweene the authors of ſects and hereſies, and thoſe who are by them ſeduced. The Sect-maſters and leaders are to be uſed with more ſeveritie rity, and sinne more grievously: Rom. 16. 17. Observe them which cause divisions among you: as in a wisely ordered Common-wealth, the heads of conspiracies and authors of treasons are most aimed at.

All errors are not of the ſame ſize.

Popiſh doctrine departeth from the foundation.

The ignorance of this land more fearefull than it was forty yeares agoe.

Secondly, errors in practice or action, is any actuall sinne, or offence in word or deed; and men that offend in these are not all to bee ranged in one ranke, but to be distinguished. For of these, first, some sinne of ignorance, not knowing what they doe; as Paul persecuted the Church of God ignorantly, and through a blind zeale. Now ignorance is twofold: first, generall ignorance, when the thing is utterly unknowne; secondly, speciall, when the equity of a particular fact, or some speciall action is unknowne; as oppression and usury in generall are knowne to be evill, but many particular actions under this kind are unknowne to many so to be; and sometime these two ignorances are joyned both together, according unto which we may put difference betweene the faults and offences of men. Secondly, some sinne of infirmity, who know what they doe, but yet are overcarried by sudden and violent passions of anger, feare, sorrow, or such like unto evill. Thus Peter denyed his Master upon sudden feare of danger. Thirdly, some sinne of malice, being carried unto evill by the malice of their owne will, not of ignorance, or passion as the former: of this the Apostle speaketh, Heb. 10. 26. If wee sinne willingly after wee have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sinnes. Now of this malice of the will, there be two degrees: first particular, when a man wittingly and willingly sinneth against some particular Commandement; as Act. 7. 51. the Jewes were stiffe-necked, and alwayes resisted the holy Ghost; that is, the ministery of the Prophets in some things, not in all. Secondly, generall malice, when a man is carried wittingly and willingly to oppugne all the law of God, yea, Christ himselfe, true religion, and salvation by Christ, and so reverseth all the Commandements. This is the sinne against the holy Ghost, and of this degree the Apostle saith, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sinne: this being an universall and generall Apostasie. Now offenders according to these differences must bee distinguished.

Further, of those that actually offend, some sinne secretly, when it is knowne but to some one onely; and privately, when it is knowne but to some few, and the scandall is the smaller. Some sinne publikely, when the sinne is notorious and the offence given great. If the offence be secret, the Apostle ruleth the case, saying; that love covereth a multitude of such sinnes. For the second, if the offence be private, then must thou admonish the party betweene thee and him: if he heare thee, thou hast saved and won him: if not, but he persist in offending, tell the Church. But he that offendeth publikely, must bee publikely reproved, that others may feare,

A 1 Tim. 5. 20. By these differences observed, a notable way is made for the recovery of those that are sliding or fallen from the faith, in matter either of doctrine, or practice.

Hence wee learne first, that it is our duty to observe one another in our speeches and actions; or else we can never put any difference in them, the ende of which observing must bee (not as the manner of many is, to imitate others in their evills, or traduce or floute men) but that of the Apostle, Hebr. 10. 24. Let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and good workes. Secondly, for the making of this difference betweene offenders, wee ought to have in us a Christian wisdome, wherby we may discerne aright of persons and things, and not to
B judge of all alike. Our head Christ was a notable president unto us herein: for though many professed him, and beleeved in him, yet would he not commit himselfe unto them, because hee knew what was in man, Joh. 2. 24. Love indeed must hope all things, beleeve all things, suffer all things, 1 Cor. 8. 7. but yet this Christian love must be ordered by Christian wisdome.

Christian love must goe hand in hand with Christian wisdome.

The second point concerneth the manner of restoring offenders, standing in two rules: first, of compassion: secondly, of severity. In the former consider two things: first, on whom compassion is to bee shewed: the Apostle saith, on some, that is, on those that erre of ignorance, or infirmitie: on those also who are carried away with the violence of some sudden passion, if they repent, yea or give any hope of amendment: all
C such must be restored with the spirit of meekenesse, Gal. 6. 1. Secondly, the manner of shewing the compassion, which is not by winking at, or soothing men in their sinnes, but by admonitions, and exhortations seasoned with compassion: Matth. 18. 15. If thy brother trespasse against thee, goe and tell him his fault betweene thee and him: if hee heare thee not, take yet with thee one or two. This is the meanes first to convince the offenders, and then to bring them to repentance with all mercy and meekenesse, and confirme them therin. Thus God himselfe dealt with Adam, first convinced him, and then in much mercy made that gracious promise, that the seed of the woman should bruise the Serpents head. Thus Christ looked on Peter,
D and mercifully restored him. Thus Paul restored the Galathians, being fallen from the faith, by mercifull admonitions.

Object. But if we admonish men before witnesse, according to the rule of Christ, wee may draw our selves into danger, for they may take such admonitions for slanders, and use them as witnesses thereof against us.

Answ. If therefore the fault bee secret, wee must onely admonish our brother alone; and if that will not serve to reclaime him, leave him to God to turne him: and if it be private, that is, known to some few, it is Christian wisdom to admonish him before some two of those that can testifie of this sinne, that so the partie admonished monished may be convinced, and the admonisher cleared from all shew and appearance of slander.

Vse 1. By this rule is condemned the rigour and austerity of many in too severe censuring offenders and offences. This was a fault and blemish in the ancient Church; which sometime for no faults would injoyne penance, as if a man had married the second time; yea, for small and light offences were wont to enjoyne a penance for two, five, yea, and sometime of ten yeares. This is the sinne also of those that are departed from our Church, condemning us (for some wants) utterly as no Church, nor people of God, refusing to heare the Word of God, to pray, and to joine in other religious duties with us. It is also the sinne of many of the Lutherans, who because we dissent from them in some opinions, condemne us and our Churches to hell; and speake and write that wee are limbs of the devil. Which were too great severity, if we held not the truth against them in the things wherein we differ.

Vse 2. Wee ought on the contrary to put on the bowels of compassion towards offenders, if there be any hope of amendment; following herein the footsteps of Christ himselfe, who was very tender over Jerusalem, so as hee wept over it. Moses when the Israelites had sinned in making them their golden Calfe, hee mourned for them, fasted fortie dayes and fortie nights for them, and would not depart from God till hee was intreated of him in their behalfe. Men cannot but be compassionate towards sicke, and dangerously diseased, or wounded bodies; but a rare thing it is to be so tender over the sicke soules of our brethren. But blessed is he that judgeth wisely of the poore. whether afflicted in body or minde.

The second rule of restoring offenders, concerneth Christian severitie: and it is the last of the five, laid downe in the verse 23. In it the Apostle layeth downe three things: first, the rule it selfe, To save with feare. Secondly, the reason of the rule, or manner of it; pulling them out of the fire. Thirdly, a caveat for the better observing it: And hate even the garment spotted by the flesh. In the rule it selfe consider two things; first, who are to be saved by feare? namely, those who otherwise are incurable, which is manifest in the opposition of those words with the former; some are to bee cured with mercy and compassion, as those which sinne of ignorance and infirmity: but those who are hardly curable must be terrified, affrighted, and so saved by terrour and feare. Secondly, what this feare is? namely, not a bodily feare, as neither the meanes causing it are: but a spirituall feare, and that of everlasting destruction. The means of feare are either civill or spirituall. The former is the power and authoritie of the Magistrate, who carrieth not the sword in vaine against offenders; but that those that doe evill might feare, Rom. 13.4. but neither is this feare, nor the meanes of it meant. The second meanes are spirituall, directly respecting the soule, not the body; and they are reduced to three kinds or heads: first, admonition, with denunciation of Gods judgements against the party not repenting. Secondly, suspension, whereby offenders are debarred from the Lords Table. Thirdly, excommunication, whereby men are delivered up to Satan, and cast out of the societie of Gods people. Of these three this last is here most properly meant. Ob. But some will say, Excommunication is of no force, it is lightly regarded, and therefore can be no great meanes of feare to offenders. Answ. This censure used according to the word of God, cannot but be full of horrour, and terrour, and the most forcible (as the last) meanes of this feare. Matth. 18.17. If hee heare not the Church, let him bee to thee as an Heathen. What will move a man if this will not, that the whole Church should account of him as a Pagan or Heathen? The incestuous person, 1 Corin. 5. 5. thus censured, is given up to Satan, and delivered into the devils power: than which what can be more fearefull? Both these places, the enemies of this censure seeke to elude, that they might make it lesse forcible: for that in Matth. 18. they interpret of seeking civill remedy, against civill harme or wrong, as though the sense were thus; If thy brother injury thee, admonish him first privately; and if he refuse to heare thee, bring him before the Magistrate; thou maiest goe to law with him, and use him as a Heathen man, in calling him before the heathen magistrate. But this exposition cannot stand; for to shew that it is no direction of the manner to revenge civill wrongs, but appertaineth unto the conscience, it is added even in the very next words, verse 18. Whatsoever they bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever they loose in earth, shal be loosed in heaven. For the other place, 1 Corin. 5. they expound it of an extraordinary punishment, which might be executed in those dayes by Satan upon the bodies of such offenders; Deliver him to Satan: that is, say they, that he may torment his body. But this cannot be a bare bodily punishment, but an excluding of the sinner from the communion and fellowship of the Church, and must bee done in the face of the Church, by the consent of the whole Church: which appeares to be so ver. 2. and 4. Againe, if it had beene meant of some such extraordinary punishment, Paul by his Apostolical rod could have done that alone, and needed not have troubled the whole Church with it.

The second point is the reason of this rule, taken from the danger of the delay of it; Pulling them out of the fire. They are in perill of present danger, they must therfore presently be saved; even as things that are in the fire must be presently pulled out violently, or else they are presently consumed; so must these offenders be presently preserved and pulled out of the fire of hell. Out of these two former points, wee learne learne divers instructions.

First, that their censure of excommunication is an ordinance of God, and no invention of man: for even in this verse we may observe, first, that obstinate offenders are to be saved by terrible meanes; some must bee saved by feare. Secondly, violent and sudden meanes must bee used; they must be as it were snatched out of the fire. Thirdly, they must be separated from in regard of society, in the next words; all which three things cannot agree to any thing but onely to excommunication.

The censure of excommunication not to be inflicted but in most desperate cases.

Secondly, note the end of excommunication, which is to plucke men out of the fire of hell with violence; and therefore this desperate remedy is onely to bee used in desperate cases, when there is no other way to save the soule, and not for trifles. The Surgion cutteth not off armes and legges, untill the life be disparaged; neither the Physitian prescribeth ranke poyson but in most desperate diseases. Againe, if this be the end of it, then it respecteth the spirituall estate of men, and not the temporall; the soule properly, and not the body. Wickedly then doth the Pope (for the upholding of his estate) excommunicate Kings and Princes, to depose them from their Crownes, and deprive them of their scepters, and by it free their subjects from their allegeance: this is no end of this censure warranted in the word. And thirdly, if there be such a necessary end and use of it, it were to bee wished that in this end it were more used against open and notorious sinners, whom the Word cannot prevaile with to their salvation; seeing many goe on every where obstinately in their sinnes without amendment, to the great scandall of others.

Thirdly, hence wee learne, that many be so wedded and addicted to their wicked wayes, that although they be in the mouth of hell, yet they feare nothing; neither God nor devill: nor care neither for heaven or hell; else what need were there of such a censure as this is? Ahab was so addicted to Naboths vineyard, that he was sicke for it: Besides, hee sold himselfe to worke wickednesse. Manasses sold himselfe to Satan, nothing could returne him but fetters and captivity. Fruitfull of such hath beene, and is our barren age.

Fourthly, when gentle meanes will not serve to reclaime men, it is the will of God that terrible meanes should be used, if by any meanes they may bee pulled out of the fire: and thus the Lord used to deale with his owne people of the Jewes, proceeding with them according to that order in Rom. 2. 4. first, by patience, by long suffering, calling them to repentance: but when they hardened their heart against these meanes, then hee hoarded and treasured up wrath for them against the day of wrath. The same hath been his dealing with us in this land: for this forty yeares and more, he hath hedged us in with peace and prosperity, together with the liberties of his glorious Gospel, still expecting our further fruitfulnesse, answerable to such meanes; but wee become still more barren, and lesse fruitfull; hee hath often taken in hand his pruning knife, and lopped us by famine, pestilence, and other his judgements, and yet behold wee abound with bitter fruits of blasphemies, injustice, prophanenesse, contempt of the Gospell, which was more embraced and esteemed of twenty yeares agoe, than now it is in these dayes, which make no end of declining: that surely wee cannot now but expect that the Lord should open upon us the treasures of his wrath, and store-houses of judgements, unlesse wee use meanes to prevent them, and that in due time. Some will aske, what be they? Ans. Remember 2. rules, first the counsell of Amos, chap. 5. 12. Prepare to meet thy God O Israel. Meanes in this land are prepared to meet our enemies, and it is well done, but wee must first prepare to meet our God by unfained repentance, and forsaking of sinne; for that is it which maketh the breaches of our land, and strengtheneth our enemies against us. Secondly, the practice of Iehosaphat, 2 Chro. 20. 12. We know not what to doe, but our eyes are towards thee, O Lord. Depend upon him alone, and nothing besides him; make him thy hiding place in life and death, shroud thy selfe under the wings of his protection, and thou shalt bee safe under his feathers.

Against the Irish Rebels.

Now followeth the third point in this last rule, that is, the caveat tending to the observing of it, in these words; And hate even the garment spotted with the flesh: that is, keepe no company, have no fellowship or society with them: which precept is propounded in a dark comparison or similitude, taken from the ceremoniall pollutions of the Law: that looke as men were then made uncleane, not onely by conversing with persons legally uncleane; but also by touching (though it was unawares) their houses, vessels, and garments, as appeareth, Levit. 15. 4. and Numb. 9. and therefore did not onely avoyd such persons, but hated even their garments: so must we under grace deale with obstinate offenders, avoyd their persons, sinnes, yea, and societies, as occasions thereof. First, then in the former part of the comparison two questions may be demanded. The former is this:

Why should any mans flesh be uncleane, or his garments spotted, and se detestable and to be hated, seeing they are the good creatures of God? Ans. There be three kindes of uncleanenesse: 1. Naturall. 2. Morall. 3. Ceremoniall. Natural uncleanesse is, whereby the creature becometh by his corrupted nature uncleane for mans use: I say by corrupted nature, because this uncleannes cannot rise from created nature, but from mans sinne and Gods curse; as the Serpents are now to mans use uncleane, that is, noysome, and full of hurt and poyson. Morall is, when any creature is used against Gods Law and Commandement, separating it from the use of man: as to marry within any of the degrees degrees prohibited, Lev. 19. commeth within this uncleanneſſe. Thus a man borne of uncleane ſeed is uncleane, Job 14. Ceremoniall is when the creature being cleane in it owne nature, yet in ſome other reſpects by vertue of Gods prohibition, becommeth uncleane. Thus were certaine beaſts, and fowles, and dead bodies uncleane, not in their nature, but in ſome reſpects, which eſpecially were three: firſt, in regard of touching: ſecondly, of taſting: thirdly, of ſacrificing: in which reſpects they might not be uſed. Now the creature might be hated, not in regard of it ſelfe, or as it is the good creature of God, but as farre as this ceremoniall uncleanneſſe was faſtned unto it, being prohibited in this or other reſpects by God.

2. Queſt. But why ſhould any man hate the fleſh, or garmẽts of another, ſeeing this ceremoniall uncleanneſſe was no ſin; yea, to burie the dead corps was a dutie to be performed neceſſarie: & ſo neceſſary was it to touch them: & for garments they were naturall, and no more ſin to touch them than to eat or drinke? Anſ. Although legall defilement was not alwaies a ſin, yet it was alwaies an evill, and prefigured the defilement of men by originall ſinne: and beſides, upon Gods prohibition was to be hated. Secondly, although the defilement it ſelfe was no ſinne: yet hee that wittingly without cauſe did touch or meddle with the thing defiled, did ſinne, becauſe God commanded the contrarie.

Secondly, out of the ſecond part of the ſimilitude, in that we are to hate the company of obſtinate offenders, it may be demanded whether we may keepe any company, or have any fellowſhip with an obſtinate ſinner? Anſ. The familiar companie with ſuch is forbidden, but all companie is not abſolutely forbidden: for in two caſes it is lawfull to accompanie with ſuch a one, firſt, to doe him good with conference, inſtruction, or admonition; an heretike muſt be once or twice admoniſhed, and if he be not then reclaimed, he muſt be avoided, Titus 3. 10. Secondly, when a man is bound to ſuch an one by the bond of civill ſocietie: as for example, if a man were by the Church excommunicated, yet a wife muſt performe the dutie of a wife; the childe of a childe; the ſervant of a ſervant: for theſe divine ordinances aboliſh not, but eſtabliſh civill ſocieties. Then I ſay familiar companie muſt be denied to ſuch obſtinate ſinners, but not all companie; as when by the ſame we can either reclaim them, or elſe to performe ſome civill dutie towards them.

Ceremoniall uncleanneſſe figured with ſpirituall filthineſſe.

Vſe. Firſt wee ſee here what was the end of ceremoniall uncleanneſſe; and that was to repreſent that ſpirituall uncleanneſſe in the whole man, by originall and actuall ſinne in thought, word, & deed. Zac 13. 1. In that day ſhall there be a fountaine opened to the houſe of David, & to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, for ſin and for uncleanneſſe: whereby is ſignified ſuch an uncleanneſſe, whereby not only our ſelves are defiled wholly, but whatſoever we touch & meddle withall, which is infected by reaſon of that dwelling ſin in us, even as it was which in the law was touched by a polluted and uncleane perſon. This conſideration ſhould cauſe us to looke into the filthineſſe of our hearts; which if we could, or did ſee, as it is both in it ſelfe, and in the vile fruits which without intermiſſion it ſendeth out, it would make us humble our ſelves, and never be at reſt untill this fountaine of the bloud of Chriſt were ſet open unto us, and we even plunged into it, and ſo cleanſed from this uncleanneſſe; whereof the uncleanneſſe of the fleſh was but a figure and ſhadow.

2 Vſe. Wee learne how to underſtand the Commandements of the Morall law, namely, not onely according to the letter, and bare words in which they are propounded, which mention the maine ſinnes onely againſt God and man; but by a Synecdoche in the mentioned ſinnes, all of that kind, as all occaſions, alſo motives and inducements thereunto, as here the Apoſtle wiſheth the Saints to hate the fleſh, yea the garments ſpotted; ſo we are to hate the ſin it ſelfe, yea, and all the kinds, and all the occaſions of the ſame.

3. Vſe. Hence we have a direct way wherein all beleevers are to walke: firſt, wee muſt hate the company and ſociety of manifeſt and obſtinate ſinners, who will not bee reclaimed. Secondly, all their ſinnes, not communicating with any man in his ſinne, we muſt have no fellowſhip (as with the workers, ſo) with the unfruitfull workes of darkneſſe. Thirdly, all occaſions and inducements unto theſe ſinnes. Fourthly, all apparances of wickednes, 1 Theſ. 5. 22. that is, which men in common judgement account evill; and all this muſt proceed from a good ground, even from a good heart hating ſinne perfectly, that is, all ſin, as David Pſal. 139. I hate them with a perfect hatred: and not as ſome, who can hate ſome ſin, but cleave to ſome other; as many can hate pride, but love covetouſneſſe, or ſome other darling ſinne: but we muſt attaine to the hatred of all, before we can come to the practice of this precept; beſides, that all ſinnes are hatefull, even in themſelves. A needfull duty, to be heedfully regarded in theſe dayes, wherein are ſo few haters of the fleſh, and ſo many haters of thoſe that hate it: ſo many that are ſo farre from hating the appearances of evill, that many ſinnes themſelves are ſwallowed up, and made no bones of; horrible blaſphemies muſt now credit mens ſpeeches: the breach and violating of the Sabbath in iourneying, is as good a ſervice of God on horſebacke as need bee, or as hee requireth: raylings, alſo fightings, and ſuch workes of the fleſh, are notes of valour and ſpirit: and ſo in other. Thus men who profeſſe religion in word, denie it in deed; ſeeing true religion ſtandeth not onely in the hatred of the ſins themſelves, but even of all occaſions and appearances of them: becauſe God hath commanded them to be hated.

4. Vſe.

4. Vse. As the Jewes (being not to come neere the houses nor touch the uncleane) if they did touch any such thing, they were uncleane and polluted: and for that cause must wash their bodies, and change their garments, yea, if they did but suspect that they had defiled themselves, they were presently to be purified; so we being defiled with any knowne sinnes, or suspecting any unknowne: our next course must bee to the bloud of Christ the Laver of the Church, suing unto God by prayer that our sins may be therewith washed away; we must put off our garments, that is, the old man with his lusts, and put on the wedding garment, that is, Christ Jesus with his righteousnesse, daily proceeding in the duties of sanctification; for hee that hath washed himselfe, had need still have his feet washed, that is, daily renew his repentance, and bring daily fruits worthy amendment of life.

v. 24 Now unto him that is able to keepe you that you fall not, and to present you faultlesse before the presence of his glory with joy. 25. That is to God onely wise, our Saviour, be glory, and majesty, and dominion, and power, both now and for ever. Amen.

In these words are contained the third part of the Epistle, namely, the conclusion of it, and it is nothing else but a lauding and praising of God: wherein three things are to be noted: first, the person praised, which is Christ the second person in the Trinity, the Sonne of the eternall Father: this appeareth by two reasons in the words: first, because he is here described to be a Judge that doth present all men before himselfe, which is proper to the Sonne of God. Secondly, because he is called our Saviour, which is the title of Christ, according to the name Jesus. And yet here must bee noted that in this praising of the Sonne, the Father and the holy Ghost are not excluded: for as the nature of the three persons is all one, so is their worship all one also. The second point be the reasons or inducements moving us to praise Christ, which be three. The first drawne from his power: To him which is able, &c. The second from his wisdome: To God onely wise. The third from the worke of our redemption and salvation: Our Saviour. The third point is the praise it selfe, in these words: Be glory, and majesty, and dominion, and power, both now and for ever. Amen. Of these points in order. And first of the person to whom this praise is given.

First, note how the Apostle concludeth his Epistle with the praise of Christ as a Judge, as also the Saviour of mankind; in whose example we are taught with willing mindes to spend our dayes in the honour of Christ; for that which the Saints doe in heaven, that must wee doe while we live upon earth; for so we pray in the Lords prayer: but they in heaven doe continually cast downe their Crownes at the feet of the Lambe, Revel. 5. 11. as worthy to receive all honour, and glory, and praise, and power; we must therefore bee ready unto this duty. Againe hee hath subjected himselfe to exceeding dishonour and abasement, yea, to the death, and that of the crosse: and all that we might first honour him, and then bee honoured by him: how therefore ought we in way of thankfulnesse for the great worke of our redemption, glorifie him, and advance his honour? But instead hereof many even of those that professe Christ dishonour him, using him as a packhorse to lay upon him all their sinnes, and so lade him with their sins past, and crucifie him again with daily new sins, and yet they looke hee should be their Saviour to bring them to honour and immortall glory.

The inducements follow. The first of which is taken from the power of Christ, unto him who is able, &c. That we may know the force of this reason, we wil first consider what this power of Christ is. The power of Cstrist is twofold: first, absolute: secondly, actuall. By absolute I understand that power of his, whereby hee is able to doe even that which he will ever doe: of which Iohn Baptist speaketh: God is able even of stones to raise up seed to Abraham. By this power God could have made many thousand worlds, wheras he made but one; and by the same Christ could have commanded a legion of Angels to have delivered him from the hands of the Jews, but would not. This absolute power goeth beyond his actual power or wil, yet is not greater than his will: for as what God doth, that hee willeth: so what he can doe, he can also wil; but this power is not here meant. The second, namely, the actuall power of Christ is, whereby hee doth and affecteth whatsoever he willeth, and it is of two sorts: first, his generall power which tendeth on his providence, wherby he ordereth all things both in heaven and earth: Psal. 115. 3. Our God is in heaven and doth whatsoever hee will. Secondly, a more speciall power which accompanieth his grace, and alwayes goeth with it: of which Paul speaketh, Ephes. 1. 19. That we may know what is the exceeding greatnesse of his power towards us that beleeve, according to the working of his mighty power. Of this power working life and grace to them which beleeve, Iude here speaketh. Concerning which observe three conclusions.

The power of Christ is either absolute or actuall.

First, that this power is given to Christ in time, Matth. 28. All power is given to me in heaven and in earth. Act. 2. 36. Hee is of God made Lord and Christ, importing that this power is given him to bee a Lord. Indeed the Sonne of God as God, is of equal power with the Father and and that from all eternity: in which regard no power can be given him: but if we reſpect his office of mediation, to the performance of which he muſt lay aſide his power, and become as a ſervant ſubjecting himſelfe to the death; thus this power may be ſaid to be given him againe, namely, when by his riſing from the dead and aſcending into heaven, he was mightily declared to be the Sonne of God: ſo that in Pſal. 2. Thou art my Sonne, this day have I begotten thee, is in Acts 13. applied to the reſurrection of Chriſt: as if hee had ſaid, This day have I made manifeſt by thy powerfull reſurrection that thou art my ſonne, and that I have begotten thee before all worlds.

The ſecond concluſion is, that this power is manifeſted in Chriſt the head eſpecially: namely, when it cauſed him ſo victoriouſly to overcome death in ſuffering it; to riſe from the grave, aſcend from heaven, and ſit at the right hand of God his Father. Paul prayeth that the Epheſians might know the greatneſſe of this power, which raiſed Chriſt from the dead, and ſet him at Gods right hand in heavenly places, Epheſ. 1. 20.

The third concluſion: That this power conveieth it ſelfe from Chriſt the head to all his members, Epheſ. 3. 20. To him that is able to doe abundantly above all that we aske or thinke, according to the power that worketh in us. Col. 1. 29. I alſo labour and ſtrive according to his working, which worketh in me mightily. Now being conveyed unto the members of Chriſt, it is not idle in them, or unprofitable, but worketh proportionably in them all, as it did in Chriſt himſelfe: for as it cauſed Chriſt to die for our ſinnes, ſo it maketh us to die to our owne ſinnes; as this power made him to live againe to his father, ſo it maketh us his members to live unto God; that as he by vertue hereof roſe againe, ſo it cauſeth us to riſe to a new life in this life, and to our eternall life in the life to come.

Further, this power is commended here by foure effects: firſt, it is able to keepe them that they fall not, namely, into manifeſt ſinnes joyned with obſtinacy: for of ſuch ſinnes and ſinners he had ſpoken in the former words; and cannot be meant of every kinde of fall, ſeeing the children of God fall daily, but of ſuch as David prayed againſt, Pſal. 19. laſt; Keepe thy ſervant from preſumptuous ſinnes, let them not reigne over me. The ſecond effect is, to preſent you faultleſſe, that is, firſt, to juſtifie beleevers: ſecondly, to ſanctifie them here in part while they live, and in death to finiſh and perfect that inchoate ſanctification. The third effect, in the day of judgement to preſent them before the preſence of his glory. The fourth effect, with joy, that is, to poſſeſſe them with joy everlaſtings.

Vſe 1. In that Chriſt is able to keepe them that beleeve, we may note that this his power doth order the wils of beleevers both in and after their converſion. In their converſion it frameth and turneth their wils, Joh. 6. No man commeth to the Sonne, except the Father draw him, that is, except he incline, and turne mans will unto his owne, and make it of an unwilling will a willing will. Againe, after converſion it is not an idle power in them: 1 Joh. 3. 9. He that is borne of God ſinneth not, that is, addicteth not himſelfe nor ſetteth himſelfe to the practice of ſinne, and the reaſon is given, becauſe the ſeed of God remaineth in him, which is all one with this power, which is able, and accordingly keepeth him. Whereby that Popiſh error is detected, namely, that in the converſion of a ſinner it is in mans power and will, either to receive or reſiſt the grace of God: and that mans will can either apply it ſelfe to grace offered of it will, or elſe refuſe it: but if this were true, the power of God ſhould not order mans will, but mans will ſhould order Gods grace, yea, and overcome this omnipotent power of God. Againe, this overthroweth the diſtinction of grace into ſufficient and effectuall: for ſufficient grace is effectuall, ſeeing that this power of Chriſt waiteth upon it to make it effectuall.

Gods power ſhall not order mans will, if the diſordered doctrine of Popery may obtaine.

Secondly, hence we ſee that this power of Chriſt in his members, is a continued power, never wholly interrupted, for it keepeth them in this life that they fall not into preſumptuous ſinnes. Secondly, it juſtifieth them and ſanctifieth them imperfectly in life, and perfectly in death. Thirdly, after death it preſenteth them unto their glory. Fourthly, after the laſt judgement, it poſſeſſeth them with unſpeakable joy. Thus the righteous man by vertue of this power, becomes like a tree whoſe leafe never faileth nor fadeth, Pſal. 1. 3. And hence is it that hope is ſaid to be a ſure anchor, Heb. 6. verſ. 19. for this property hath it, not from it ſelfe (as alſo love and faith in themſelves are changeable, and nothing indeed is in it ſelfe unchangeable but God) but the power of Chriſt is it that maketh it an anchor ſure and ſtedfaſt. By which conſideration, thoſe two uncomfortable errors are confuted: firſt, that the childe of God being regenerate may fall maliciouſly, and even wholly away. Secondly, that he may fall finally: ſeeing God putteth his hand under, and this power of Chriſt is able to keepe them that they fall not (though fearefully they may) yet neither wholly nor finally.

Thirdly, we muſt labour to have experience of this power of Chriſt in our ſelves, working in our hearts the death of our ſinnes, and quickning them againe unto the life of grace and of God: for this power of Chriſt conſiſteth not in any fancie, but in an effectuall feeling, in the heart of every true beleever. Paul prayed that the Epheſians might feele in themſelves this proportionall power to Chriſt his power in his death and reſurrection, Eph. 1. 19. himſelfe counted all things dung in compariſon of the knowledge of this power, Phi. 3. 10. and that he might have experience hereof, hee will rejoyce in his owne weakneſſe, 2 Cor. 12. 9. And what will this power be profitable unto us (be it never ſo powerfull in it ſelfe) unleſſe we finde our ſelves thus ſtrengthned in grace and godlineſſe by it?

Fourthly, wee may not content our ſelves with a forme and ſhew of godlineſſe, but ſtrive to attaine the power of it; or elſe let us never profeſſe Chriſt, and pleaſe our ſelves onely in ſuch a profeſſion: for whoſoever is truly Chriſts, in him this power worketh mightily in ſubduing ſinne, in ſtriving againſt temptations, in ſtirring up zeale of Gods glory, and in a word in making men fruitfull and abundant in all well doing: yea, it can no more hide it ſelfe where it is, than can the Sunne at noone day, but it will cauſe men to ſhine as lights in the middeſt of a froward generation: which fruits and effects, if a man cannot finde in himſelfe, let him ſuſpect himſelfe that hee is not as yet knit unto Chriſt, for then he would be by vertue of this power in ſome proportion conformable unto him.

Fifthly, this doctrine miniſtreth a ſtay and prop to our faith and hope, ſeeing that Chriſt hath ſuch a working power as this is, whereby he is able to make good, and accompliſh whatſoever he hath promiſed concerning our ſalvation: thus he ſtrengthned his Diſciples, Joh. 17. But be of good comfort, I have overcome the world: and thus Abraham beleeved above hope becauſe hee knew that God was able to performe what hee had promiſed, Rom. 4. 21. teaching all the ſonnes of faithfull Abraham upon what prop they are to leane, and ſtay up themſelves while the promiſes are delayed. Here the Papiſt teacheth that in regard of God indeed and his promiſe, wee may beleeve our owne ſalvation: but in reſpect of our ſelves, and in regard of our owne indiſpoſition we muſt ſtill doubt, and it is preſumption (ſaith he) to beleeve it. Anſ. But this is falſe, for we muſt not doubt in regard of our owne indiſpoſition, but muſt certainly by faith lay hold on our owne ſalvation, ſeeing that Chriſt by his power correcteth, yea, and aboliſheth in his members this indiſpoſition, fitting them (notwithſtanding it) and keeping them unto life eternall.

Sixthly and laſtly, we muſt ſtrive to become like unto Chriſt, ſeeing the ſame power that was in him is conveyed and derived from him into every one of his members, that as he lived in obedience unto his Father, both doing and ſuffering whatſoever his Father enjoyned and willed; even ſo ought we: looke what was his diſpoſition and converſation whileſt he converſed here upon earth, ſo ought wee to bee diſpoſed and converſe, reſembling him in meeknelſe, humility, patience, love towards Father, and brethren, yea, and towards our enemies: and as hee was minded, the ſame minde ought alſo to be in us, Phil. 2. 6. So much for the firſt reaſon moving us to the praiſe of Chriſt, drawn from his power.

A The ſecond motive is in the verſ. 25. To God onely wiſe, drawne from his wiſdome; wherein three things are to bee obſerved: firſt, that Chriſt is God: ſecondly, that he is wiſe: thirdly, that he is only wiſe. For the firſt, this is a notable teſtimony, and to be obſerved againſt the Arrians and Atheiſts, to confirme the Divinity of Chriſt, who like dogs moſt blaſphemouſly with blacke mouthes barke againſt their Creator, affirming him to be one of the great ſeducers of the world: againſt whom (that we may be the better armed) I will firſt propound one or two evident reaſons, and then anſwer their allegations. The firſt argument: Conſider that whoſoever have taken upon themſelves to bee called Gods; the juſt judgement and vengeance of B God hath befallen them, and they have beene deſtroyed by the hand of God. Adam and Eve becauſe they would have beene but like God, or as Gods, were grievouſly puniſhed in themſelves and all their poſterity. Herod becauſe hee was contented that the people ſhould call him God, the hand of God was inſtantly upon him, and the Angell of God ſmote him, and he was eaten up of lice. But Chriſt profeſſed himſelfe to bee God, yea, and diſputed, Joh. 7. againſt the Phariſies that hee was the Sonne of God, and yet no harme befell him: nay, he proved manifeſtly by his doctrine, and miracles, by his death and glorious reſurrection, that hee ſpoke true when hee ſaid hee was God and the Sonne of God.

C The ſecond reaſon: Chriſt wrought miracles, which could not be done either by naturall or Satanicall power; as to raiſe the dead, to make them which were borne blind to ſee; & theſe by a divine & omnipotent power, not as an inſtrument, but as an author of them; and therefore hee was true God. Now if they alleage here, that wee have no proofe hereof, but out of the new Teſtament, which they reject as they doe the other Scriptures: I anſwer, that many of the ſame things in effect are extant alſo even in Heathen writers themſelves. Object. But they alleage againſt the Divinity of Chriſt, that Chriſt is inferiour unto God: Joh. 14. 18. The Father is greater than I: 1 Cor. 11. 3. God is the head of Chriſt, as the man is the wo-
D mans head: and chapter 15. 28. The Sonne ſhall be ſubject unto him that ſubdued all things under him. But as none is above God, ſo God is inferiour to none, and therefore Chriſt is not God. Anſ. The two former places muſt be underſtood of Chriſt as he is man and Mediatour: which hindereth not but that as he is God he is equall to the Father. The third place 1 Cor. 15. 28. muſt bee thus underſtood: that the Sonne is made eternally ſubject unto the Father, not as he is God, but in regard of his humanity. Secondly, of his myſticall body; that is, the Church: ſo as this ſubjection and inferiority of Chriſt, is nothing elſe but a manifeſtation of the difference of Chriſt as he is Man and as he is God, & of the inferiority of his manhood to the

God-

Godhead: which shall bee especially revealed at the day of judgement. The second objection: Acts the 20. 35. It is a more blessed thing to give, than to receive: but Christ receiveth wisdome, life, yea, and his substance from his father, and so the Father is more blessed than he. Ans. That place speaketh of such a receiving, as presupposeth want, which is more miserable than to be able to give, which argueth plenty and abundance: but Christ receiveth not thus his substance, wisdome, and life, for he never wanted them: when he received them he had them; and having them he received them, and both had and received them before all worlds, and so that allegation is to no purpose. The third objection: Christ is a Mediatour and prayeth unto God, and so he is not God, for nothing prayeth to it selfe. Ans. Christ is directly a Mediatour to the Father the first person in Trinity: now because the persons have all one nature and will, therefore he is also Mediatour even to himselfe as the second person, as also to the holy Ghost. Let us be still armed against these wicked hel-hounds, and detest their Satanicall delusions and such damnable doctrines, derogatory to the honour of the Sonne of God.

The second point in this second reason is, that Christ is wise. This wisdome of Christ is a property common to him with the Father and holy Ghost, whereby he perfectly knoweth all things as they are. Concerning which, remember these eight things: first, that this wisdome of Christ is of it selfe, and hath the beginning from it selfe, and not from any other: for though hee receiveth it from the Father, yet it is all one with the Fathers, and therefore it is not begotten nor proceedeth from any, but is the fountaine of all wisdome in the creatures, men or Angels. Secondly, wee by our wisdome conceive things by formes and apparances presented to our minds; but Christ he knoweth all things by the things themselves, and not by any representations thereof; he needeth no helpe from the thing it selfe to conceive of it as we doe. Thirdly, we know and conceive of things by sense and discourse, but Christ doth this by one simple act of understanding. Fourthly, this wisdome of God is all one with God himselfe, for his wisdome is his substance. In men and Angels it is not so, but a quality distinct from their substances. Fifthly, this wisdome is infinite, for hereby God knoweth both himselfe and all other things past, present, or to come; things good and bad; things that are, and things which are not; yea, the very motions and thoughts of the heart. Sixthly, this is alwaies a certaine and infallible knowledge; never conjecturall as ours is. Seventhly, it is most perfect, both because it doth not onely know some things, but there is nothing which it knoweth not; as also because nothing can bee added unto it, nor detracted from it, in all which it differeth from ours. Eighthly, it is a distinct wisdome, seeing God knoweth not in grosse and confusedly all things; but distinguisheth every particular thing and action, even as they are; he knoweth every haire of our heads, and the places thereof, every lighting of a sparrow upon the ground. The consideration of which points sheweth the admirable greatnesse of this wisdome of Christ.

The third point is, that hee is onely wise. Where is not excluded the wisdome of the Father and holy Ghost, but all the wisdome of all creatures, as Joh. 17. This is life eternall to know thee the onely God; where the Sonne and holy Ghost may not be excluded. Ob. But some will say, the creatures have wisdome, and so the Sonne is not onely wise. Ans. The wisdome of the creatures is but a created wisdome; God is onely wise by a wisdome uncreated, theirs is but an image and shadow of this. Yea, compared thereunto it is no wisdome at all, so as still God may be said to be onely wise.

Vse 1. Seeing Christ is affirmed to bee God, note that his death although it was but momentanie and short in time, yet it was of endlesse merit. Quest. But how can this be that a short death of so few houres should countervaile the eternall torment due to sinne? Answ. The person that died being God, the dignity of the person countervaileth the eternitie of the punishment; so as the Sonne of God suffering, although it was not for halfe a day, it was as much as if all men had died for ever; so infinite and endlesse it was (though not in time) yet in merit and efficacie.

Vse 2. Seeing Christ hath such an absolute wisdome distinctly knowing all things, we are taught to feare and tremble before him, doing all things as in his presence; he beholdeth us with all our actions, there is not a word in our tongue but he knoweth it wholly, yea, he understandeth our thoughts, and that a farre off. See Psal. 139. 2, 3.

Vse 3. Such as are in distresse, resting themselves upon Gods mercie in Christ, may herein stay and uphold themselves with this comfort, that Christ is God and able to releeve them, yea he is the onely wise God, and therfore he knoweth all their miseries distinctly, he knoweth how farre forth it is good for them to suffer, how to turne their suffering to the best unto them, as also the best and fittest time when to deliver them seasonably out of their trouble: and therefore patiently commit thy selfe into his hand, and rely thy selfe upon him as on a mercifull redeemer.

Vse 4. If Christ be only wise, then must we take counsell of him, and learne wisdome of him: Learne of me. If it be asked, how shall we learne of him, seeing he is in Heaven? I answer, he hath left his word with us in the Scriptures, there we may learne his wisdome, there wee may have his directions. If it be asked what is the summe of that counsell there contained? I answer, it standeth in the hearing and doing of his Commandements, to which three things are required:

Our wisdome must be fetched from Christ who is onely wise.

quired: first, to beleeve on him and depend upon him alone for salvation. Secondly, to turne unfainedly with all our hearts unto him. Thirdly, to obey him in our lives and conversations. This is the right wisdome: for the teaching of which, Wisdome her selfe uttereth her voyce, and calleth to the children of men, Prov. 8. 4.

The third reason is taken from the worke of our redemption, in the words Our Saviour. The which reason that wee may rightly understand, foure points are to be propounded: First, what kinde of Saviour Christ is? Answ. Hee must bee conceived, first a perfect Saviour, saving perfectly all that are saved. Heb. 7. 25. He is able to save perfectly all that come unto him; yea, he perfectly saveth by himselfe (and not by any other creature) whosoever attaine to salvation, for this also is required unto his perfection: Rom. 3. 25. Whom God hath set out to bee a reconciliation through faith in his blood. Heb. 1. 3. By himselfe hee hath purged our sinnes. Where note an error in the Church of Rome; which teacheth that Christ did by his death merit, that we might by our owne works merit salvation: but this is false, Christ saveth not man by man, or by any creature, but by himselfe; yea, he should not so be a Saviour, but an instrument, by whom wee must save our selves. Secondly, hence we learne to acknowledge him an alone Saviour, without any fellow, partner, or deputy: Acts 2. There is noother name under heaven given to save us, but the name of Christ; and if he have any partner, he is but halfe a Saviour. Hence wee see that the Roman Religion, although in word it honour Christ, yet in deed it denieth him, in joyning to Christs all-sufficient satisfaction, others satisfactions: and so likewise they joyne to his sacrifice upon the Crosse, their sacrifices in their Masse; to his meritorious intercession, the intercession of the Virgin Mary and other Saints, and that not by way of request, but of the merit of their intercession. Thus they set up many Saviours in stead of this our perfect and alone Saviour.

Popish doctrine admitteth not that Christ should be a Saviour, but an instrument whereby wee must save our selves.

The second point is, from what danger doth he save us? Ans. Salvation ever implieth endlesse destruction, which is the thing from which hee doth save us. In which endlesse perdition note first the foundation of it, that is our sinnes; noted in the exposition of his name, Mat. 1. Hee shall save his people from their sinnes. Secondly, the degrees, which are three: first, in this life a subjection to all kinds of miseries inward and outward; in soule, body, goods, name, in our selves and others. Secondly, in the end of this life, death, being in it selfe a curse, and an entrance into hell. Thirdly, after the first, the second death, which is everlasting destruction in hell fire for ever. Now Christ is a Saviour to save and free us both from this foundation, our sins themselves; as also from the degrees, from the bondage to Satan by sinne: secondly, from the first death so farre forth as it is a curse; thirdly, from the second death and everlasting destruction.

The third point is: How doth Christ save men? Ans. According to that order which God hath set downe in the covenant: not of workes but of grace: wherein God promiseth to give Christ with all his merits and graces to every beleever. Now according to the tenour of this covenant, first, Christ with his merits is given unto the beleever, hee againe is given unto Christ: by vertue of which donation a man may say Christ is mine, his benefits are mine also, as truly and as surely as my land is mine owne. Hereupon to make this mutuall donation effectuall, followeth a second thing, which is the union of us with him by the bond of the spirit, and this is a mysticall but a true union, whereby he that is given unto Christ is made one with him. After this commeth a third thing, which is a communication of Christ himselfe and all his benefits unto beleevers. This is done two waies: first, by way of imputation, which is an accounting and accepting of his obedience and sufferings as ours, for the discharge of our sinnes and acquiting us from them. Secondly, by a kinde of propagation, whereby grace is derived from his grace, and infused into those that are set into him: For as many candles receive light from one great Torch or light, and as many streames flow from one fountaine or head-spring, and as from one root proceed many branches; even so all his members drinke of his fountaines, are enriched by his treasures of wisdome and knowledge: yea indeed and live by no other life, than that which by his spirit he inspireth into the faces of their soules: and hereby he sheweth himselfe to be a root, even that root of Iesse, and that second Adam conveying unto all his branches righteousnesse and life, as the first Adam (being a root also) derived corruption from himselfe to all his posterity springing and arising from him; so is that place 1 Cor. 1. 30. to be understood, He is made of God to us wisdome, righteousnesse, sanctification and redemption; because he is the root and fountaine of all these graces unto us, of whose fulnesse we receive them.

The fourth point is: Of whom is Christ a Saviour? Ans. Our Saviour, that is, a Saviour of the Catholike Church: Ephes. 5. 23. The Saviour of his body: that is, his Church. More plainly the persons that are to be saved by him, are such as truly beleeve in him, and testifie their faith by their conversion unto God, and forsaking their sinnes. For the evidence whereof consider two things:

First, that it is most necessary, that the person that is to be saved should be thus qualified, if he be of yeares (for with infants it is otherwise) for marke the order prescribed to be observed in the Word and Sacraments, in which God requireth in the first place repentance and faith, and then afterwards maketh promise of salvation by Christ, Luk. 24. 47. That repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes ſhould be preached in his name. Repentance for ſinne muſt goe before remiſſion of ſinne: Act. 2. 38. Repent and be baptized, there is the firſt: for remiſſion of ſinnes, there is the ſecond. This is the rather to bee obſerved, becauſe many goe prepoſterouſly to worke, beginning there where God endeth: comforting themſelves in their Saviour, and in the promiſes of life by his meanes, but let goe faith and repentance, at leaſt deferre them. This is the cauſe of much wickedneſſe, and a falſe comfort, not fetched from that order which is appointed by God.

Repentance for ſin muſt goe before remiſſion of ſinne.

True grace though never ſo weake is accepted.

Secondly, thoſe who bring the beginnings of faith and repentance (if ſo be the beginning be true) conſtant and ſtill increaſing, to theſe Chriſt becommeth a Saviour: Matth. 9. Chriſt came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance: that is, thoſe who acknowledge themſelves to be ſinners, confeſſing and forſaking their ſinnes, and not ſuch as preſume of their owne righteouſneſſe: Mat. 25. I am ſent to the loſt ſheepe of the houſe of Iſrael. even thoſe who in their owne judgement are loſt, who are in the mouth of the lyon, and in all mans judgement loſt. Iſa. 45. 1. The well of water of life is promiſed to all thoſe that thirſt: that is, ſuch as want water, and long after the welſprings of it, and wiſh after nothing ſo much: Iſa. 42. 3. A bruiſed reed he will not breake, the ſmoking flax he will not quench; even ſmall beginnings of grace, be they never ſo weake or feeble, ſo they be true, he deſpiſeth not. Thus are the perſons to bee qualified unto whom Chriſt will become a Saviour. Now becauſe all men are not thus diſpoſed, it followeth that redemption, and the worke of ſalvation is not univerſall.

Vſe. Firſt, the multitude of our people are juſtly blamed as enemies of Chriſt: for if they be asked how they looke to be ſaved; they anſwer, by their good ſerving of God, and their juſt and honeſt dealing among men. Now this their ſerving of God, is but to repeat over the ten Commandements, the Creed, and the Lords Prayer: and their good dealing is but to deceive no man, or not to offer them open injurie, and here they ſtay themſelves; not all this while ever looking after Chriſt, as men not ſtanding in need of him, or of his righteouſneſſe, but ſet up themſelves for their owne Saviours, and know not any other way to life than their owne, which carrieth them from Chriſt. Secondly, we are taught to conceive of Chriſt as of our Saviour; which we ſhall doe, if we be touched with the ſenſe of our ſinne, and danger by it, and with the need we have of his moſt precious bloud, which will cauſe us to prize it above the moſt precious things, which the world can containe. When our hearts are thus affected, then we conceive of him as we ought. Thirdly, we muſt carry our ſelves as perſons ſaved already by Chriſt; for he is a Saviour unto us even in this life, and our ſalvation is begunne and is in part here. This wee doe when wee joyne with

A the profeſſion of faith, a true converſion unto God. Reaſons hereof: Firſt, becauſe regeneration although it be no cauſe, yet it is a part of our ſalvation: for by it a man is freed from the corruption of his ſinne in part, which whoſoever looketh for remiſſion of ſinnes, muſt attaine unto. Secondly, whomſoever Chriſt ſaveth from hell, he firſt ſaveth them from their ſinnes: he redeemeth men not only from deſerved condemnation, but alſo their vaine converſation. If then thou wouldeſt know whether Chriſt hath ſaved thee from hell or no; looke into thy ſelfe, and try whether his death hath wrought the death of ſinne in thee or no: for if thou art not turned from ſinne, thou art not ſaved from hell. Thirdly, to whomſoever Chriſt is a Saviour by merit, to him he is a Saviour by efficacie alſo, B for he is a Saviour both theſe waies: by the former he procureth pardon of ſinne; by the latter hee turneth the heart of the ſinner from ſinne unto God: this if it be wanting, there can be no true aſſurance of the other. Laſtly, the ſalvation of a ſinner ſtandeth not in the fruition of riches, honours, wealth, or deliverance from the miſeries of this life, but properly in righteouſneſſe, and life eternall, the recompence of the ſame: which fruit whoſoever would reape, he muſt ſow the ſeeds thereof in righteouſneſſe, and ceaſe from henceforth to bee the ſervant of ſinne.

He that is not by Chriſts death turned from ſinne, is not by it ſaved from hell.

The third generall point in this concluſion is, the praiſe of Chriſt it ſelfe, in the laſt verſe: C Be glory, and majeſty, and dominion, and power, both now and for ever. Amen. Which words containe the forme of the praiſe of God and Chriſt; where foure things are to be conſidered: Firſt, what be the things that are here aſcribed to Chriſt? and they be foure; firſt, Glorie: by which we are to underſtand an infinite and incomprehenſible excellencie, whereby Chriſt excelleth all things that ever were, are, or ever ſhall be. Now as there bee in God two things diſtinct: firſt, eſſence, which is the God-head it ſelfe ſimply conſidered. Secondly, perſon, as Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt: ſo accordingly the glory of God is twofold: firſt, the glory of eſſence: ſecondly, the glory of perſon. The glory of eſſence is the Godhead it ſelfe, or God D himſelfe, who is glory it ſelfe, or the excellencie of the divine attributes is the glory of God: Rom. 1. 19. That which may be knowne of God is his wiſdome, glory, power, juſtice, and mercie. And verſ. 23. They turned the glory of the incorruptible God, &c. Whatſoever therefore that may be knowne of God, is a part of his glory: Exod. 33. 19. Moſes deſireth the Lord that hee would let him ſee his glory; the Lord anſwered him, Thou canſt not ſee my face and live. Where to ſee the face of God and his glory is all one, and ſo of all divine attributes.

The glory of the perſons is diſtinct from the other, as the perſons themſelves are by their perſonall proprieties, as the Fathers glorie is to beget the Sonne, the Sonnes glorie is to bee begotten of the Father, the holy Ghost is to proceed from them both. Thus Heb. 1. 3. Christ is called the brightnesse of the glory, and the ingraven forme of his Fathers person. Joh. 1. 14. Wee saw the glory thereof as the glory of the only begotten Sonne of the Father. Both these are here to be understood; both which are incomprehensible, and therfore our care must be to walke by faith, whereby wee may attaine unto it, rather than more curiously to seeke to comprehend the knowledge of it.

The second thing attributed to Christ is Majesty. Whereby we are to understand that highnesse and greatnesse of God and Christ, whereby he is in himselfe, in his workes, and every way wonderfull, Luk. 6. 43. When Christ had wrought a famous miracle of casting out a Devill, it is said they were amazed at the mighty power of God.

The third thing is dominion; which word properly signifieth power and authority, and by consequent dominion, as the second word translated power signifieth properly dominion; but it commeth all to one. By dominion is meant an absolute power and soveraignty in governing and commanding all creatures.

The fourth thing is power; which signifieth that absolute might of God, whereby he doth whatsoever he will. Here by the way we must observe that of these foure, Glory is the chiefest, the other three are but as parts of his glory, and added to make a description of his glory. For the glory of God is herein manifest, in that he is full of Majesty, dominion, and power.

The second thing to bee observed is, that these foure are given to Christ alone; for the word onely must be referred to the whole sentence, the Father and holy Ghost not being excluded thereby, but all false and Idoll-gods.

The third thing is the time of prayse: Now and for ever: for there is no time wherein it is not to be expressed.

The fourth thing is the Affection, which is ever to be used in the praysing of Christ in the word Amen, that is, verely, or so be it: signifying that the affection of the hart must ever be joyned with this religious action of the praise of God.

Vse. First, we learne hence, that wee are bound to give prayse and glory to God and Christ: Psal. 65. 1. O God praise waiteth for thee in Sion, it is one of his rights, properly due unto him. 1 Cor. 5. Whether we eat or drinke, or whatsoever we doe, it must all be done to his glorie. Secondly, looke what is Gods principall end in all his actions, that ought to bee ours in our actions. But his principall end of all his actions is his owne glory: Prov. 16. 4. The Lord made all things for himselfe, that is, for his glories sake; which end we also must aime at in all our actions. Thirdly, the end of all Gods blessings is to move us to set out the vertues of God, 1 Pet. 2. 9. which is then done of us, when with our mouth wee confesse, and in our lives we expresse his mercy, wisdome, power, and such other his properties. Fourthly, that we may not thinke that this is an arbitrary dutie left to our owne liberty, or put in our owne power whether we will performe it or not; we must know that it sitteth neere, or ought to sit neere us, and is a case of necessity to preferre the glory of God before our lives, yea, before the salvation of our soules. In the Lords Prayer we are taught first to pray for the glory of God, simply without any respect to our selves, and afterwards come to the petitions concerning our selves and others. Ob. But here it will be said, God is the fulnesse and perfection of all glory, how can we then adde any glory unto him? Ans. The glory of God is taken two waies: first, for that infinite glory which is in himselfe, or rather which is himselfe, to the perfection of which nothing can be added, neither can any thing be detracted from it, to make it lesse perfect. Secondly, for that glory of his which is in, and from us, the which is nothing else but the acknowledging, confessing, and praising of this his glorie, in which sense we may be said to give him glory, or not to give it. Object. But it may be alleaged, that God being the perfection of glorie in himselfe, he needeth not glorie or praise from us; and therefore the duty is not so absolute necessarie. Ans. Our praise of God is not needfull in regard of God: Psal. 16. 2. O Lord my goodnesse extendeth not unto thee, but it is needfull in regard of our selves being creatures, and in this respect bound to honour and glorifie our Creator. Secondly, because (although it is not his happinesse) yet it is our chiefe good and happinesse to praise him. Thus are wee to take knowledge of our maine duty, and on the contrary of our maine sinne, who herein have so often failed, dishonouring the Lord by our wicked thoughts, speeches, and actions, and that continually, and so have robbed him of his glory, for whose glory alone we were created.

Vse 2. In this forme of praise, observe the foundation of all divine and religious worship, all which may bee referred unto foure heads: First, adoration: the ground whereof is Gods Majesty and glory: for it followeth well, if God be full of Majesty and glory, then wee must adore him, wee must submit our selves before him, wee must subject our consciences to his lawes, wee must beleeve all his promises, and tremble at all his threatnings. Secondly, faith: the ground of which is Gods dominion and power; for if he be the soveraigne Lord of life and death, if he have such absolute power to save and destroy, then must wee place all our faith in him for our salvation. Thirdly, prayer: and fourthly thanksgiving, both which have their grounds and foundation in his power, dominion, and glory; so in the Lords Prayer after the petitions, is added as the ground of prayer the reason of all the requests, for thine is kingdome, power, and glory.

Vſe 3. Hence wee muſt learne to adore and reverence the judgements and workes of God, howſoever they ſeeme unto us, and may bee harſh in our ſhallow reaſon; for he is glory it ſelfe, Majeſty it ſelfe, power it ſelfe, and hee worketh that for his owne glory which wee cannot comprehend. If God therefore love Iacob, and hate Eſau, for nothing ſeene in themſelves, but becauſe he will ſo doe; which might ſeeme to the eye of fleſh a thing unjuſt and partiall, let us ſtop our mouthes at this moſt righteous judgement of God; for he is all power and dominion, having ſoveraignty and abſolute Lordſhip over all his creatures, to make ſome veſſels of honour, and ſome of diſhonour; ſome of mercy, and ſome of wrath, all men being as the clay in the hand of the Potter: and therefore the Apoſtle, Rom. 9. ſo ſoone as hee had propounded this famous and memoriall example, to ſhut the mouthes of men which otherwiſe would have been opened againſt this juſt and incomprehenſible proceeding of God, he brought them preſently to the conſideration of the power and ſoveraignty of God, verſ. 17, 19. Wee our ſelves thinke it no injuſtice to kill the creatures, becauſe GOD hath given us a Lordſhip and dominion over them; and ſhall we deny it to be juſt in God to deſtroy likewiſe his creature, over which he hath infinitely more ſoveraignty, than man hath over them?

Vſe 4. We are to bee afraid to ſinne againſt God; we muſt reſigne our will unto his, whatſoever it is, and ſimply ſubject our ſelves vnto the obedience of the ſame, fearing in the leaſt thing to offend him; and all this becauſe of his Majeſty, Power, and Dominion over us: for this is the living, holy, and acceptable ſacrifice which he requireth of us, Rom. 1.12. even our reaſonable ſerving of him.

Further, whereas all theſe are to be given to God alone, note firſt, that the wicked Aſtrologer with his Art is here condemned, ſeeing all A glory is properly belonging unto God: but the Aſtrologer arrogateth to himſelfe that part of Gods glory which conſiſteth in the foreknowledge of things to come, in that by erecting a figure and the aſpect of the Starres, he takes upon him to foretell things meerely caſuall and contingent, as of life and death, woe or wealth, peace or warre, wherein hee entreth upon Gods poſſeſſions, Iſay 41.23. Beſides that, the Starres neither by creation, nor by any ordinance of God, can be any meanes to foretell things to come. Secondly, deteſtable is the Romiſh doctrine, which giveth the glory and power of God to Saints, as of hearing the prayers of all men in all places, and knowing the hearts. Secondly, it giveth to the Pope power to make B Lawes to binde the conſcience. Thirdly it aſcribeth to the Pope and his ſhavelings, power to forgive ſins properly; all which be incommunicable properties of the God-head.

Now for the time for ever.] Learne that it is the duty of every childe of God to dedicate himſelfe unto the praiſe of God, and that continually, Pſal. 119. 117. For this ſhall bee the eternall calling and condition of thoſe who ſhall poſſeſſe the Kingdome of glory, and it muſt be begunne even in this life.

Laſtly, from the affection in the word Amen.] Note that whatſoever we are to performe in the ſervice of God, it muſt be not of faſhion; but with the earneſt affections of our hearts: Pſ. 103. 1. My ſoule praiſe the Lord, and all that is within me praiſe his holy name. It is ſaid of Ioſias that he turned to God with all his ſoule, & all his heart, according to all the Law of Moſes; ſo we C in like manner in our converſion to God, in our prayers, praiſe, or whatſoever holy worſhip and ſervice we tender unto him, muſt beware leſt in drawing neere him with our lips, we with-draw our hearts from him: which we ſhall the better performe, if wee carry in minde his owne commandement, My ſonne, Give me thy heart.

THE PVBLISHERS POST-SCRIPT.

MAny excellent points might I, as gemmes and pearles in this Commentarie, commend unto thy Christian consideration (Christian Reader:) but that one shall suffice to give notice of, and direct thee unto, as worthiest of my penning and thy perusing; which, as it is most joyned with the scope of this whole Epistle; so most seasonably is it fitted to our present condition, and most diligently traversed by this our Author, namely, that The seducers of the last age, especially here aimed at by the spirit of God, deniers of the maine grounds of Religion, in doctrine and practice, are the Papists and the present Romish Church. The necessary consequent whereof is directly proved, namely, That wee may never joyne with them in their religion, but for ever contend against them for the faith once given to the Saints: which we can never doe, if we avoid not their doctrines, as the rocks on which we shall necessarily suffer shipwrack, or death it selfe, unto which they cannot but carry the professors. The antecedent or former part seemeth (by the way) to bee a direct and naturall answer unto a popish Pamphlet, already by three learned men sufficiently confuted; wherein H. T. by twelve triviall Articles (in comparison) goeth about the bush to prove, that Protestants have neither faith nor piety, religion nor good life. To whom our Author in the exposition of the third verse rejoyndeth, and (doubling the number of those articles with advantage) in the same order proveth the Romish faith to be adversarie in six and twenty severall, solid, and maine grounds unto Christian faith and practice. I will no longer stand on this part than I have shewed who these Papists be, meant by the Author from whom wee must depart; and that for this end, that the sequell of our separation from them may be acknowledged most just and necessary. By such a Papist wee understand not every one who in some things may be popishly affected, for true faith may stand with some errors, and in the end of that faith be the salvation of mens soules: so be the partie aberring bee framed to these two rules: First, hee must of necessity hold the foundation, namely, that in Jesus Christ alone, and in no other name, either Angell or man, himselfe or others, salvation is to be sought for. If a man upon this foundation build some wood, hay, stubble, or chaffe, though these shal be burned, yet himselfe shall be saved, notwithstanding as it were through fire. Secondly, those errors must not be joyned with either a willing or wilfull ignorance, for such errors are desperate and bring swift damnation. And thus where God reveales no more but naked Christ, and where there is a subjection of the heart to the word, causing it to depend on the Ministerie for further and more full instruction, the acknowledgement of every divine truth is not of such absolute necessitie to salvation, but that true faith may stand with some (even Popish) errors. The Ruler is said to beleeve (and that was by a justifying faith, when as yet he was only overcome by the Majestie of Christ; appearing in the miracle of raising his sonne, to assent unto and acknowledge the maine truth that Christ was the Messiah: but so, as himselfe and his household depended on his mouth for further instruction, and became his Disciples. Yea, even the Disciples themselves were long after their calling and conversion very ignorant in no small points of Christianitie. Philip, of the first person in Trinitie: Lord shew us the Father. Others of them conceived of Christ as a worldly King: whence two of them desire to sit the one at his right hand, and the other at his left, when he came to his kingdome. Others of them (even after his resurrection) harping on the same string, and hearkening after temporalities, expect it. Others aske him when he would restore it to Israel. Peter himselfe held not as hee ought the doctrine of the passion, seeing he dissuaded Christ from it. Wherein marvellous ignorance descrieth it selfe in them being true beleevers: but so much the more tolerable, in that first Christ revealed no more unto them, either not opening the things, or their understandings to apprehend them, till afterwards that hee sent the spirit of truth. And secondly, this ignorance (the mother of their errors) was accompanied with a desire of knowledge: for they were ever questioning with him, desiring him to open unto them his parables, and resolve their doubts, instantly listening unto the gracious words of his mouth, and in a word were blessed even in hungring and thirsting after righteousnesse. The persons then here aimed at, are absolute and perfect Papists, against whom alone this grave Author dealeth in all such places of this or other his works, wherein wherein hee may ſeeme ſevere againſt them: as himſelfe here and there thorow his writings hath deſcribed them, to bee ſuch as acknowledge the Pope their head: hold and maintaine the doctrines and devices of the Councell of Trent, and therein are become overturners and raſers of the foundation of Chriſtian Religion; members of Babylon, Idolaters, not onely outwardly towards Saints and Images; but inwardly ſacrificing to their owne nets: theſe zealous Papiſts, eſpecially the Teachers among them, are the deceivers ſo lively deſcribed thorowout the Epiſtle.

The ſecond point is our conſequent duty, ſtanding in our ſtanding out with theſe adverſaries of Gods grace and Goſpell: never offring to communicate with them in their cup of fornications; nor once bethinke us of leaguing ſuch abhorring natures as are light and darkneſſe; and truth (which is of an unſtained nature) with moſt foule and deformed falſhood. For we cannot drinke of the cup of the Lord and of Devils. Which point let me with good leave a little further declare: not that I love to kindle or keepe in any coales of contention, (the Lord put farre from mee ſuch unpleaſant thoughts) but calmely to ſhew the overſight of ſlivers mediatours, attempting to reconcile ours with the preſent Religion of the Romiſh Synagogue: eſteeming it to be too much peremptorineſſe ſo far as we doe to depart from them: yea, cenſuring it, either as wilfulneſſe on the one hand, or ſcrupuloſitie on the other, to be ſo oppoſite unto them as we are: reputing it a matter of no difficulty to frame both ſides to a meane, either ſide (as they ſay) yeelding a little: nay, it is buzzed out into the eares, by the tongues of common men, that there is no ſuch diſcrepance and difference betweene us in matters of moment as is made; but that the ſubſtance of both our Religions is not farre from the ſame: ſo as many are in a mammering whether way may be better: whereunto (after the Hebrew ὑστερωσις, imitated alſo by the Greeks and Latines, that I may begin with the laſt for the helping of memory) firſt we may bewaile, in beholding in what a fearefull (if not deſperate) degree of declining many are already come: that after ſo many years profeſſion of the truth, powerfully both publiſhed and protected, they ſhould not only admit a dangerous deliberation; but even call the very maine grounds thereof into queſtion: whereas if it be in a motion to Idolatry, they ought inſtantly to ſay with Sidrach, We are not carefull what to anſwer in this matter. But this judgement of God is juſt upon them, that whereas they never received the truth in love of it, they ſhould loſe of their ground, and be left unto further deluſion. Good cauſe have we all to lament the remembrance of our ruine, through this Satanicall ſtratagem: If the woman will needs bee ſo unwiſe as (not needing) to enter parley with Satan, whom ſhe ought to have reſiſted: and that in matter of ſuch moment, as wherein Gods truth, his glory, and her owne glorious eſtate muſt be queſtionable: moſt juſtly muſt ſhe be left of God, ſnared by Satan, foyled through her owne follie, throwne from her eſtate, (though of innocency) and diſpoſſeſſed (not alone wee all know) even of Paradiſe it ſelfe. Beſides, how farre ſhort come theſe men in zeale to the truth, not onely of our adverſaries the Papiſts themſelves, among whom no doubts or queſtions in their grounds and principles are tolerable; but even of the Jew, who will admit of no diſpute againſt his Religion; yea, of the barbarous Turke himſelfe, who inflicteth death on whomſoever they convince to have called a word of their Alcaron into queſtion.

Secondly, concerning thoſe who cannot diſcerne ſuch eſſentiall differences betweene our Religions, both of us (as they ſay) profeſſing ſalvation by the ſame Chriſt; and all the articles of the ſame faith; I wiſh them no worſe than that their eyes were cleared with the eye-ſalve, that they might ſee, that he that ſeeth not ſuch a Papiſt as is mentioned to profeſſe a falſe Chriſt, and a falſe faith, ſeeth in Religion ſcarſe any thing at all: neither doubt I but (to whom malice, or ignorant ſuperſtition ſhutteth not their eyes) to ſhew plainly in few words, that whatſoever in words they confeſſe with us, yet in doctrine and deed they altogether reverſe it, and diſſent from us, in caſes wherein we may never conſent unto them. And firſt, ſeemeth it a ſmall matter of difference, that in generall they charge our whole doctrine of noveltie, whence ordinarily they tearme the teachers thereof Novators? and in ſpeciall, firſt, that our doctrine of juſtification by faith alone (for this ſtriketh at the head, and unbowelleth all their ſhifting devices) is but a new device of ours? as appeareth in their Champions challenge. But confounded herein was he, his cauſe and abetters: our learned men at the conference with him in the Tower not onely mightily by the Scriptures convincing; but out of Greek and Latine fathers alſo, who lived above a thouſand yeares agoe, oppreſſing him with thoſe very formall words, that faith only juſtifieth; ſo driving him to ridiculous ſhifts, and newly coined diſtinctions (ſo neere the Mint was he) before unheard of: even as in this controverſie being much ſtraitned, they were forced to caſt about for that as falſe as new diſtinction of juſtification into the firſt and ſecond, never heard of for the ſpace of a thouſand and five hundred yeares after Chriſt.

2 Let me adjoyne hereunto the challenge of our Englands Jewell, who undertooke and performed the proofe, that in ſeven and twenty points (none of them trifles) the Papiſts are different, not onely from ours, but from the doctrine of the Primitive Church: and that never one of thoſe their new devices was once heard of, or received in the Church of God, for the ſpace of ſix hundred yeares after Chriſt. If then

then they challenge our doctrine of Noveltie: and we have proved (they not improving) that theirs is of no ancient, and not neere Apostolicall authority: I hope this cannot seeme a circumstance betweene us; for there can bee but one truth, and that is most ancient.

Antiquissimum verissimum, adulterinum quod posterius.

3 Againe, can it seeme so small a moat in the eye of any man of sight, that the sacrilegious Synod of Trent teacheth, (cursing the contrary minded) that on their Romish Altars sacrifices propitiatory are daily, properly, and truly offered for the sinnes of the quicke and the dead? seeing that this doctrine utterly derogateth from, yea, and abrogateth that most perfect and onely once for all offered, whereby their sinnes are expiated that shall see the Lord in the holy of holies.

4 Further, let any indifferent and single eye behold, and consider whether those be but trifling differences which our reverend Reignolds hath worthily disputed, both against Bellarmine in his bookes intituled, The Idolatry of the Roman Church: as also against Hart, both in the two principall questions concerning Peters and the Popes supremacy: (by which their doctrine they would make Kings and Princes but vassals and feodataries unto the Pope; to whom they ascribe absolute power to excommunicate Kings; to discharge their subjects from their obedience and allegeance: to dispense with their oathes of loyalty and faithfull subjection; and dispose of their Crownes at his pleasure: which no good subject (much lesse Christian) can say is a triviall point, or a little to bee yeelded unto) as also in these six conclusions annexed, wherein he hath substantially and learnedly determined, that the faith professed by the present Church of Rome is not the Catholike faith. That their Church is so far from being the Catholike Church, that it is no sound member of the Catholike Church; and consequently, that the reformed Churches of great Britaine, France, Germany, &c. have lawfully, that is, by warrant of Gods Word severed themselves therefrom.

5 Neither may we yeeld that to bee a circumstantiall question discussed betweene our learned Whittaker and Stapleton concerning the Authority of the holy Scriptures, which they so farre debase and subordinate to their Church: seeing through that great booke of his (never like to be answered by them) he gravely proved, that the foundation of Papisticall faith is laid upon man, and not upon God; and so it is an humane faith, and not divine; unto which their whole service is sutable, according to Durandus his description in his Rationale. And lastly, none but inconsiderate men would averre either that the most learned Protestants of Europe have spent their strength, and beaten their braines onely for the beating of the aire in matters immateriall: or that those who have as yet uncontrollably published, that the Popish teachers have reversed the whole Decalogue, with

1 Booke, 2 chap. pag. 51.

A the most of the Articles of the Creed, and Petitions of the Lords Prayer, have differed and squared in points not essentiall: or that so many zealous Martyrs, many of them of very profound knowledge, should give their lives and most innocent bloud, for matters of shadow (as is pretended) rather than of substance: for thus to impeach the labours of the former, or the sufferings of the latter, would scarce beseeme any but either a Papist, or some speciall favourite of theirs.

Thirdly, to such as are of minde that a harmlesse mediation may be made; me thinkes it no other but the feeding of a fancy: besides that, it is not harder to make them preserve, and yet neither without prejudice. In which point, as I would not seeme too rigorous or austere, well B knowing how sweet is the name, and yet more pleasant is peace it selfe; so would I chuse an honourable warre, before a dishonourable peace; a free and just dissention, before a base and slavish agreement, such as theirs would be: For Nahash the Ammonite will make no concord with Iabesh Gilead, unlesse every man suffer his right eye to be pulled out, that so hee may bring some shame upon Israel. And first it seemeth to me a matter harder to be brought about than I out of my shallow reach can expect ever to see effected: both in regard of our selves, as also of them: for if the truth be with us (as wee are bound to confesse, both in respect of it selfe, and the [a] Law whereby it is established) [b] then our turnings backe must not reprove us, but C having found the old way, wee are to walke in it, (without turning aside) that we may in it finde rest for our soules. The Lords counsell to his Prophet must be our direction in this case: Son of man, goe not thou to them, but let them come to thee: for to lose our hold of the truth, much lesse to leese any part of it, as in exchange with falshood, were not only a wrongfull betraying of it selfe, but a wilfull wronging of our selves and posterities; whom Gods blessings for the present have made able to hold it entire, not only without danger, but with incouragement, power, and protection. But more hopelesse or impossible rather in respect of them shall our meeting in the mid-way seeme to be, to whom-soever with judgement shall perpend these foure D subsequent considerations.

First, that their faith being not [c] Apostolicall, their Religion a [d] false Religion, their Church a [e] false Church, and their worship a false worship: it will prove not a matter of repairing (as requiring lesse cost and labour) but of founding their faith, before they can be raised unto us: which how hard it is for them to be brought unto, who are so setled in their lees and dregs for so many hundred yeares, they cannot be ignorant, who know how difficult it is for a Blackmoore to change his skinne, or a Leopard his spots: for so hard is it for those who are accustomed to evill, to be drawne to good.

Secondly, that so long as the Pope holdeth his his head-ship over the Church, with that erronious position, that he cannot erre; (which he is likely to lay downe with his Crowne and Crosier, (for sooner to part with them were a foule error) if by much sweat some indifferent parley were compassed (himselfe still remaining both party and judge, as hee was in the Councell of Trent) improbable, yea, impossible it were that any conclusions could on their part be passed, (if on any at all propounded) which any way might bee derogatory to his usurped power and pretended supremacie.

Thirdly, their cautelous circumspection, lest by any meanes the knowledge of our doctrine might perhaps be scattered among them, argueth an utter aversation in them for ever acknowledging it, which appeareth in sundry their practices: 1. In that they binde the consciences of all Catholikes, to a perpetuall separation from all Ecclesiasticall assemblies in religious publike duties, which is the ground of all Recusancy; to which purpose they teach it to bee a sinne to heare our Sermons, for that were a [f] participation with blasphemies: and for prayer with us so strait laced are they, as they may not say Amen in publike or private, (suppose at their tables) if any Protestant bee present. 2. In that they censure most severely all their subjects that travell or trafficke into Protestant countries, blasting them with excommunication. 3. In that they have erected in their Cities an Inquisition to examine upon oath any forreiner or stranger, whereby they ransacke not onely all his carriages, but even his conscience also, lest hee should bring any opinion within him, or instrument without him, that standeth not with their minds and liking: wherein not onely some little escape, but even suspition it selfe proveth often capitall. 4. In their wariness, lest any of our bookes, especially of our translations of the Bible should bee had, or read among them: whence it is that no bookes, which passe not the Inquisition, may be sold in Italy: to which purpose also studiously they teach it to bee a sinne against the first Commandement to read any of their prohibited bookes, of which they have a large Index very common, and consequently being such a mortall sinne, it must necessarily bee confessed at time of shrift: yea, as men every way foreseeing what way our doctrines may bee induced among them, to shut up surely every cranny and entrance, they scarsly suffer to see, or be seene in the light their owne greatest Writers; such as Bellarmine, Gregory de Valencia, &c. that our positions, allegations and answers (though answered by themselves) in those books may not be made known; lest perhaps it should befall others of them as it did Pighius, who reading over Calvins Institutions, with purpose of refuting it, was (ere hee was aware) wonne to the defence of the doctrine of justification by free imputation according to the Apostle. So as Spaine maketh not a more diligent annuall search that the Jewes among them have no armes in their houses, than both Spaine and Italy vigilantly secure themselves in this behalfe: and no marvell if our bookes bee so avoided, seeing that they inhibit men from the reading of the Scriptures themselves, lest they should become Heretikes: condemning it, and [g] bringing men in danger of their lives for reading them as for an hereticall practice. In a word, at this day such a night doe these Owles delight to live in, that among themselves even their Regulars (much lesse their Laicks) may not without licence from the Pope or their Prelates reade the Bible, no not in the Catholike translation.

Fourthly, consider their irreconciliable hatred against ours, far above all other (although most hereticall and damnable) religions, for why else can they content themselves, with so studious prevention of the Protestants profession only; whereas both Jewes and Grecians, even in Rome it selfe the Popes See, are suffered with their Ceremonies, Synagogues, Services, yea, and Circumcision it selfe administred to the dead as well as to the living? which lowdly proclaimeth, that farre they are from judging, and deeming so indifferently of our differences, as some among our selves seeme to doe; and that they would sooner be wonne to the Jewes or Turkes in profession, than the Protestants: which [h] one of them saith is in nothing better than that of the Alcaron; and in many things farre worse and more detestable. And good reason (mee thinkes) they have of suffering among them the fore-named Sects and Heretikes, as from whom together with the Heathen, the whole bodie of Popery is peece-meale patched together, and yet the name of a Protestant bee as much detested of them, as Jewes names were of the heathen Kings. For which cause Daniel and his fellowes must have all their names changed before they may bee brought into the presence of Nebuchadnezzar; whence their ordinary practice proceedeth, that in their writings, their bitternesse and disdaine suffer them not to name, but in most reproachfull tearmes, the first reformers and restorers of our Religion: calling them usually Calvinists, Puritans, Innovators, and Heretikes: neither doth this inbred malice of Papists against our Religion stay it selfe here, but hath broken out into most barbarous butcheries, and most cruell bloud-sheddings, which yet they could never account sufficiently savage: not of their owne subjects onely, and within their owne Territories; but within other dominions: not of private onely, but of publike persons: not of meane, but of most noble, yea, Royall descent: and not of persons only, but of Cities, States, Kingdomes, and Countries. But where should I beginne, or if I should, where should I make an end of instancing their most matchlesse, matchleſſe and endleſſe tyranny? (ever a note of falſe Religion, and inſeparable to the Romiſh) whoſe curſed rage (like that of Simeon and Levi) Gen. 34.39. and 47.7. even fierce and cruell, cauſing them to ſtinke among the inhabitants of the earth, hath made the ſtreets of infinite Cities (which either their force, or fraud and falſe arts could caſt open) to run with the bloud of Proteſtants, as did once Ieruſalem with the bloud of the Saints which Manaſſeh ſhed like water. What ſhall I need to ſpeake of that notorious bloudy inquiſition in Spaine and Italy the chiefe ſeats of it? what of the many miſerable maſſacres, Caniball-like conſpiracies, and tragicall murthers in France and the low countries? In our owne country, who but ſtrangers at home are ignorant what fierceneſſe, feares, and fires, were raiſed to conſume the innocent bodies of the Saints living and dead: in ſuch ſort as every corner of the Land ſeemed as hot as Nebuchadnezzars furnace, even ſeven times hotter than it uſed to be: wherein were to bee caſt whoſoever would not fall downe and worſhip the Image which the Romiſh Nebuchadnezzar had erected? Neither yet were thoſe fires thought furious enough for ſuch: as might have appeared, if the Lord had not taken the rod out of thoſe wicked hands in that ſeaſon when he did: and ſince that time, what a number of deviliſh plots and conſpiracies were attempted againſt the noble perſon of her late Majeſtie of bleſſed memory, by Arden, Somervile, Babington, Parry, Lopez, Squire, and others? and thoſe ſtratagems not performed by perſons exorbitant, but with the privity of the Pope, and Principalls of their Religion, backing the ſame not only with their [i] doctrin, to which it is moſt ſutable (as appeareth by ſundry their ſeditious poſitions; lately collected by Maſter Morton) but with pardons, promiſes, paies to particular [k] perſons, and commandements generally to all ſubjects whoſoever, as appeareth by the Popes Bull againſt her late Majeſtie: Volumus & jubemus ut adverſus Elizabetham &c. ſubditi arma capeſſant. And yet (as though all were well) they can cover all the ill hearing of ſuch traiterous practices, under the name of Catholike pretences: for the furthering of which intentions, what may not, and muſt not be attempted? Now to theſe purpoſes maintaine they innumerable Catholike intelligencers and inſtruments (I meane their Prieſts and Ieſuits) ſent out by them, not only as eyes to ſearch out the ſecrets of ſtates and countries, and watch their beſt advantages: but as hands (full of bloud) to execute whatſoever miſchiefe upon any of the Lords anointed ones, not onely oppoſing themſelves to the Papall power; but which is more, if they be but ſuſpected not ſo firme to the Pope as they wiſh; or (which is moſt of all to be marked) though they be their owne dead ſure; yet if they ſhew not themſelves as readie to execute the Popes bloudy deſignes, as hee to command: which was the caſe of the late King of France, ſlaine treacherouſly for no other cauſe by a Iacobin. What argument then can be brought to petſwade us of their ever according with us in whole or part in our Religion? of which they deeme no other, than as of a peccant humour neceſſarily to bee purged out everie few yeares, either by murther, if it prevaile in the head: or by maſſacre, if in the body of any countrie; and rather than it ſhould not, they will not ſticke with Blaſius at the commandement of their great Gracchus, to ſet on fire or to blow up even the Capitoll it ſelfe: although nature and Gentiliſme condemne ſuch graceleſſe devotedneſſe. The late moſt diabolicall and furious attempt againſt his Majeſty and the whole State that ever was invented; (the like whereof both in the contriving, and whole carriage could never bee ſhewed, no I thinke if there were Annals and Chronicles kept in hell it ſelfe) cryeth out againſt them long ere this time in all the corners of Chriſtendome. God Almightie ſtill deliver his Highneſſe and Royall race from them: and by his Majeſties meanes, us and our land from them. For how much better had it beene, that his Majeſty had beene moved to have baniſhed theſe vipers out of his Realmes, than thoſe who profeſſe the ſame Lord Jeſus, and labour (though with acknowledgement of too much weakneſſe and wants) to bee found faithfull before the Lord and their Soveraigne? But not to depart from our purpoſe: Theſe bee the waies wherein the Popiſh Balaamites would meet us, and with us, if the Lord ſhould not meet with them, comming againſt them in every corner. While then they walke in theſe waies of Cain, what booteth it us to ſpeake of a peace with them? for while we ſpeake of peace, they are bent to warre.

But be it ſome peaceable conſent and agreement were on their part promiſed; yet that one conſideration of the treachery in compacts, would keepe any judicious man from ſetling his conceit and affection upon any ingenious concluſions with them: which treachery is not onely practiſed by the perſons of faithleſſe Papiſts; but is preſcribed as a maine precept of that moſt infidell doctrine of theirs: nay, which even Infidels themſelves would bluſh at in this behalfe: for doth not their doctrine make it lawful for them to uſe any Equivocations or Reſervations (as they tearme them) with their adverſaries, almoſt upon any advantage? yea, and that (leſt they ſhould not come to the height of impiety) in giving anſwer not only on their words, but upon oath before the lawful Magiſtrate, though not their lives, but their leaſt liberties only be touched? Which doctrine till it be reverſed, how dare wee take their words or any aſſumpſit from them in any thing wherein wee would not be over-reached? But ſuppoſe againe ſuch peaceable concluſions were not promiſed only, but purchaſed; what yet were we wee better than before? what bils or bonds would or could they lay in sure enough for our security, so long as their doctrine standeth in force published in word and writing, that fides hæreticis non est servanda, and that Leagues with them are more honourable in breaking than in making? how long can wee conceive, would the continuance of our peace last longer, than by it they could with advantage undermine us?

But because I must shut up many matters in few words, let us see the prejudice which would ensue upon such pretended mediation, in matter of Religion: and first, seeing they are a seed of the wicked, corrupt children, having forsaken the Lord, in whom from the sole of the foot, to the crowne of the head, there is nothing but wounds, and swellings, and sores full of corruption: and seeing themselves are become open Idolaters, their Cities cages of Idolatry, their services all Idolatrous, having thus forsaken the covenant of their youth; seeing filthinesse appeareth on their skirts; and finally seeing by seeking their justification by the workes of the law, they are abolished from Christ, and fallen from grace: (the which particulars have beene clearely proved by many our unanswered and unanswerable bookes) to communicate with them by accepting; yea, not abstaining from the least appearance of any of these evils; were no other but to expose and lay our selves open and naked to all manner of danger, of infection of our soules, defection from our God, and in the end of destruction both of body and soule. It was a dangerous disease which Israel brought out of Ægypt, having through their long continuance there by reason of those marishes, and the River Nilus, (to which Lucretius in a distich appropriateth this disease) contracted the same upon them: for the proving, and purging whereof, the Lord instituted so many ceremonies and separations: but farre more fearefull was that inward leprosie, even that abominable Idolatry which they brought forth with them, and which cost them so deare both in the wildernesse, and in the land of Canaan; yea, so habituall and inbred was the infection, that although the Lord used most wise preventions every way; yet presently upon their delivery out of the sea, will it burst forth, and become in the end their utter overthrow. It cannot bee but the strangers which come with Israel out of Ægypt, being accustomed to the Ægyptian fashion and diet, will still be harping on their cucumbers, leekes, onyons, and garlicke: and draw the Israelites to the same lustings, though with the loathing of Manna it selfe; but such an exceeding plague shall proceed from the Lord, that in perpetuall memory thereof, the place shall bee called the graves of lusting: and if the daughters of Moab may have free accesse to Israel in Sittim, Israel will easily bee joyned to Baal Peor, till the wrath of the Lord be kindled, and there fall in one day, three and twenty thousand. The certaine perill and inevitable danger whereof, the Lord well perceiving, did not onely charge his people to have nothing to doe at all with the Heathen, lest by any meanes they should be snared: but also that they should be so opposite unto them, that they should in all appearances and circumstances (and yet none will say the Lord herein was too severe and strait) bee unlike unto them both in Religious and Civill exercises: for if they looke towards the East in their Temples in the honor of the Sunne, his people shall in his Sanctuary and Temple contratily looke to the West: and in the West shall the Sanctum Sanctorum bee set. If they offer sacrifices unto Oxen, Sheepe, Doves, Goats, &c. as unto Gods: the Lord in detestation hereof, will have his people to consume and burne these creatures before him in sacrifice: and hence was it that every shepherd was an abomination to the Ægyptians; with whom they might not eat nor converse, because they did kill, eat and sacrifice those beasts, whom the other worshipped as Gods. If they use to eat almost none but Swines flesh, and yet neither that, before they have sacrificed of the kinde to the Moone, or Bacchus: the Lord especially prohibiteth this meat of all other to his people, they shall not meddle with it, it shall bee an abomination unto them. If their Priests [a] make their pates bald, shave the locks off their beards, and make cuttings in their flesh, as Baals Priests did: the Priests of the Sonnes of Aaron may not doe so. If they make glorious Altars, and plant Groves about them; the Israelites may not doe so, (especially in the wildernesse) but either Altars of earth, which presently upon the removall might be demolished and cast downe, lest the remaines should bee abused to superstition: or if of stones, they must be rough and rude, unhewen and unpolished; lest any beauty of them should solicite their preservation: as for groves, see Deut. 16. 21. If they shall in way of superstition, or worship, reserve any portion of their sacrifices: the Lord rather than hee will have any portion of the Paschall Lambe preserved till the morrow, will have it burnt with fire: neither shall Moses bodie be knowne where it is buried, lest they should make an Idoll of it. Nay, which is more, and as worthy the noting, wee may observe how the Lord, even in civill things, draggeth his people from their society and fellowship: for first, Israel is charged, that they should goe no more backe to Ægypt that way; so as the danger was (if any) by their neighbours, whose Countries were adjacent unto them: the which the Lord useth all meanes to prevent: both in that hee willeth his people to nourish a perpetuall enmity with the Moabite, and Ammonite, the peace and prosperity of whom they may never seek all their dayes: as also to debarre them from pressing into his people, he chargeth that neither of them ever enter into the congregation of the Lord, to the tenth generation: intending hereby that they should not rise to preferment, authority or Magistracie among them. And as for the other strangers, though Israel seemed in private respects to be, if not somewhat obliged and indebted to divers of them, yet as it were bound to peace, and to hold their hands from open hostility; yet might they not be admitted into the congregation of God, unto the third generation. Besides this, foreseeing that the next and most direct way, whereby the heathen might league and linck in themselves with his people, might be by marriages and contracts: the Lord is very studious that all such meanes be cut off; and therefore would have the distinctions of Tribes observed; with strait prohibition, that no Jew (except the Levite) should marry out of his own Tribe, much lesse without his owne people: whereof although I acknowledge other more maine causes (as the distinction of the Tribe of the Messiah from the rest: the cleare acknowledgement of his race: the execution of the Lords whole regiment Ecclesiasticall and Civil in that policy, fitted according to that distinction to their severall offices, and possessions) yet I thinke this is one included reason not to bee neglected, especially seeing they had strait charge against it. Againe, in case a servant Jew would marry a stranger into his Masters house, he was not at his departure to carry his wife and children, for they were to be his Masters: but if hee would abide still with her, hee was then shamefully to come before the Magistrate, and for ever renounce his liberty, untill the Jubily released him: by which strait lawes the Lord would restraine even slaves and servants (who for the most part are neglected) from matching themselves with strangers. Such another law to this purpose is recorded, Deut. 21. 10. that if an Israelite in warre, should see a beautifull woman taken captive, whom he did affect for his wife, it was ordered by God, that first all meanes should be used for the alienating of his affection, as that he must have her home a moneth before, and not marry upon any sudden motion. Secondly, shee must shave her head, to make her as ill favoured in his eyes as might be. Thirdly, she must nourish her nailes, to make her yet more sordid. Fourthly, shee must put off the garment wherein shee was taken, and put on base and neglected garments fit for a pensive captive. Fifthly, shee must bewaile her father and mother a whole moneth, to shew how hardly, and sorrowfully shee was brought from her fathers house, into the power of strangers; and then if by all these meanes the man could not bee drawne from her love, it was permitted to him to marry her for his wife: which law teacheth us see how hardly the Lord endureth, and is drawne to admit the least liberty in this behalfe. How many civill things might I instance in, wherein the Lord straitned his people, that they might bee utterly unlike the Gentiles in habit, manner of living, behaviour, and other like circumstances, otherwise in themselves very indifferent? which I had here inserted, but that I must consider that I write an addition, not a booke; an admonition, and not an exposition; and if yet these ordinances of God himselfe, seeme in some mens opinions too strait, and not to bee imitated of us in regard of the Papists, towards whom wee are not to bee so severe, as so farre to sever our selves; that is but the seeking of a knot in a rush, and to be acute in distinguishing, where God hath not distinguished; and in effect to affirme, either that the Idolatry of the Romish Church is not so vile and grosse, as is that of other Idolaters: or else (seeing our people converse with them more than any Idolaters) that to communicate with their Idolatrie, is nothing so dangerous now, as it was for Gods people to participate with the Idolatry of the heathen against Gods expresse commandement. But if with any such, the testimony of man, bee greater than the testimony of God, (as it is commonly, with the Popish minded, who flie from the Scriptures unto men, because their doctrine is from below) let them looke unto those most ancient Councels, which were the purer, for six hundred yeares after Christ; and they shall finde that the Church would have her children diametrally opposed even on lawfull things, to the Jewes, and heathen of whom they were in danger to be corrupted. Those were more famous, of Nice, [y] which decreed that the feast of Easter should not be kept of Christians, at that time, and in that manner that the Jewes did: that in nothing they might agree with them. That also of Bracea [z] decreed, that Christians should not decke their houses with bay-leaves and greene boughes, (than which what can bee more indifferent?) neither rest the same day from their callings wherein they did: nor keepe the first day of every moneth as they did: It would bee too tedious, and argue forgetfulnesse of my selfe, and no remembrance of my reader, to recite the testimonies of other Councels, Fathers, and our owne principall Writers in this behalfe: which otherwise easily had I beene carried unto by the tenacity and stiffenesse of many in this argument. But to end: as our Saviour willed his hearers, Beware of the leaven of the Pharisies; so let every man beware of the leaven of the Papists: for what is Popish doctrine else, but a Pharisaicall leaven, alwayes to bee purged out of Churches, and States; as the Jewes upon some occasions were to purge all leaven out of their houses. Let no man say it is but a little, and such a difference which may bee tolerated: for even the Pharisies doctrine was much of it more true, than this Pharisaicall doctrine of theirs; yet was their leaven hid in it, (as in

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE, SIR EDWARD CORE Knight, Lord chiefe Iuſtice of his Majeſties Court of Common-Pleas; Grace and Peace.

RIght Honourable: The Word of God that onely Oracle of truth, hath pointed out the Enemy of mankinde, by his proper Characters, in ſundry places. Our Saviour tearmes him, the [a] Prince of this world; and a [b] murtherer from the beginning. Peter compares him to [c] a roring Lion, that rangeth abroad in the earth, ſeeking whom he may devoure. His attempts in regard of their qualitie, are called [d] πάνυργα, ſubtill and deepe devices; yea, [e] μεθοδεῖαι, plots exquiſitely contrived, and orderly framed, as it were in Method. The meaning of the holy Ghoſt in theſe and ſuch like attributes, is, to expreſſe that meaſure of policy and power which Satan hath reſerved unto himſelfe even in the ſtate of his Apoſtaſie, improved by long experience, and inſtantly practiſed upon the ſonnes of men, that he might ſet up in the world a ſpirituall regiment of ſinne, as a meane to encounter the Kingdome of grace, and if it were poſſible, to bring the ſame to ruine. To forbeare inſtances of open force made againſt God and his Church by other courſes, for the compaſſing of his deſires; how skilfully he workes his owne advantage, by ſecret oppoſition, in the exerciſe of that curſed Art, which is the ſubject of the preſent Diſcourſe, is a point not unworthy your honourable conſideration.

The Power of this Prince of darkneſſe, being above the might of all ſenſible Creatures, and every way ſeconded by the greatneſſe of his knowledge and experience, manifeſteth it ſelfe herein, for the moſt part, by workes of wonder, tranſcendent in regard of ordinary capacitie, and diverſly diſpenſed by his choſen inſtruments of both ſexes, ſometime in matter of Divination, ſometime by Inchantment, ſometime by rare ſleights and deluſions; otherwhiles by hurting, by curing, by raiſing of Tempeſts, by ſpeedy conueyance and tranſportation from place to place, &c. and all to purchaſe unto himſelfe admiration, feare, and faith of the credulous world, which is uſually carried away with affectation and applauſe of ſigues and wonders. His Policie appeareth in a wiſe and exquiſite manner of framing and conceiving both his practices and grounds; the one to procure credit and entertainment, the other that he may not faile of his purpoſe, but proceed upon certainties.

Touching the manner of his practice. He ſtands reſolved, that the world hath taken notice of him to be [f] a liar, and the father thereof; and therefore if he ſhould offer to ſpeake in his owne language, or informe an Art by rules of his owne deviſing; hee might haply incurre ſuſpicion of falſhood. Hereupon hee compoſeth his courſes μιμητικῶς, by way of counterfait and imitation, not of the actions and dealings of men, but of the order of Gods owne proceeding with his Church; holding it a ſure principle in policie, That actions will be much more effectuall, when they be framed unto the the beſt Preſidents, than when they are ſuted to the direction of meaner examples. To this purpoſe, as God hath made a Covenant with his Church, binding himſelfe by promiſe to be their God, and requiring of them the condition of faith and obedience; ſo doth Satan indent with his ſubjects by mutuall confederacy, either ſolemnly or ſecretly; whereby they binde themſelves on the one part to obſerve his rules, and he on the other to accompliſh their deſires. Againe, God gives his Word, the Interpreter of his will and his Sacraments, the ſeales of his promiſes, to which being rightly adminiſtred and received, he hath tied his owne preſence, and the worke of his grace in them that beleeve. Anſwerably to this the Devill gives a word of direction to his Inſtruments, and addeth unto it, Charmes, Figures, Characters, and other outward Ceremonies, at the uſe whereof he hath bound himſelfe to bee preſent, and to manifeſt his power in effecting the thing deſired. Furthermore, God hath revealed his will to the Patriarchs, Prophets, and Apoſtles, by familiar [a] conference, by [b] dreames, by [c] inſpiration, by [d] Trances: In the ſame manner, Satan hath his Divinors, and Soothſayers, his Pithoniſſes, his Caſſandares, his Sibylles, to whom he maketh knowne things to come, by familiar preſence, by dreames, &c. To conclude, God had in the Old Teſtament his Temple at Ieruſalem, yea, his [e] Oracle, from whence he ſpake, and gave the anſwer unto Moſes: So of ancient times, the Devill erected his temple at * Dodona, and Delphos, whence he gave his anſwers, for the ſatisfaction of the ſuperſtitious Heathen. Yea, and at this day, as the Miniſters of God doe give reſolution to the conſcience, in matters doubtfull and difficult, ſo the miniſters of Satan, under the name of Wiſe-men, and Wiſe-women, are at hand by his appointment, to reſolve, direct, and helpe ignorant and unſetled perſons, in caſes of diſtraction, loſſe, or other outward calamities.

Now the Grounds whereupon hee buildeth his proceedings for certainty, are cunningly gathered from the diſpoſition of mans heart, by naturall corruption, and that in three ſpeciall inſtances: Firſt, he knowes that Man naturally out of the light of grace, hath but [f] a meere ſoule, indued onely with ſome generall and confuſed notions; and as for matters of deeper apprehenſion touching God and heavenly things, there is a vaile of ignorance and blindneſſe drawne over the eyes of his minde. Whereupon, though he be apt to know and worſhip a God, and learne his will, yet for want of information by the Word, he is prone to erre in the practice of his notion. Here Satan applies himſelfe to mans meaſure, and at his owne will, drawes the minde into error by his deluſions and impoſtures. This made the [g] Samaritans in the Old Teſtament, and the ſuperſtitous [h] Athenians in the New, to worſhip an unknowne god, that is, the [i] Devill. Hence it was that the greateſt Clerks of Greece, [k] Thales, Plato, and the reſt, for want of a better light, ſought unto the Wizzards of Ægypt, whom they called Prophets, men inſtructed by Satan in the grounds of Divination. And of this ſort were Iannes and Iambres, mentioned in the [l] Scriptures. Hence it was alſo that the ancient Heathen, having [m] no law and teſtimony from God, inquiring at Sooth-ſayers and murmuring Inchanters; others betooke themſelves, in matters of doubt and difficultie, to the old Oracles of [n] Iupiter Ammon in Libya, of [o] Iupiter Dodonæus at Dodona in Epirus; of [p] Apollo at Delphos, of [q] Iupiter Trophonius in Bœotia, and the reſt; where the Devill gave the anſwer, ſometimes one way, and ſometimes another. Secondly, Satan by obſervation perceiveth that man upon a * weake and ignorant minde, is prone ſuperſtitiouſly to dote upon the creatures, attributing ſome divine operation or vertue to them, without any ground of Gods Word, or common underſtanding; and conſequently diſpoſed to worſhip God in ſome worke of man, or to joyne to the ſame worſhip the inventions of man, which he hath not commanded. Vpon which ground he made the Heathen to dote upon their Wiſemen, to regard [h] Soothſayers, and them that wrought with ſpirits; The Chaldean [i] Philoſophers renowned for their ſuperſtitions and Magicall courſes, to make the Heavens, fatalium Legum Tabulam, aſcribing that to the vertue of the Stars, which was knowne and done by Satanicall operation; The Magicians of Perſia, to admit of corruptions in their ancient good learning, and to give themſelves, upon the reading of the fabulous writings of the Chaldean Sorcerers, to the ſtudy of unlawful Arts

Arts invented by himselfe, both before and after the times of Daniel the Prophet. Lastly, the ancient Romans upon a superstitious dotage, never to undertake any businesse of weight, nisi auspicato, unlesse they had luckie consent and warrant from the Colleges of their Augurors erected by Romulus. Thirdly, there is a naturall distemper in the minde of man, shewing it selfe in these particulars; That hee cannot indure to stand in feare of imminent danger; That hee swels in an high conceit of his owne deserts, especially when hee is in lower estate than he would bee; That he will not beare a wrong done without revenge; That he rests not satisfied with the measure of knowledge received, but affecteth the searching of things secret and not revealed. When the minde is possessed with these troubled passions, with care to helpe it selfe, then comes the Devill, and ministreth occasion to use unlawfull meanes in the generall, and forceth the minde by continuall suggestion, to determine it selfe in particular upon his owne crafts. It was the case of [k] Saul, and of [l] Nebuchadnetzar. It caused many of the Heathen Philosophers, to goe from Athens to Memphis, from Grecia to Syria, from men on earth to wicked spirits in hell, to get more illumination at the hands of the Prince of darknesse. It moved sundry male-contented [a] Priests of Rome, to aspire unto the chaire of Supremacy, by Diabolicall assistance; yea, [b] to exercise Magicall Arts when they were Popes; and thereby to manifest indeed, that they were not the true Successors of Simon Peter, but heires of the vertues of Simon that Magus, who bewitched the people of Samaria, and professed to doe that by the great power of God, which he wrought by the aid and assistance of the Devill.

If any doe thinke it strange, that Satan should in this sort oppose himselfe to the Kingdome of God, and maintaine his owne principalitie, by such ungodly arts and exercises; They must know, that this and all other evills come to passe even by the will of God, who hath justly permitted the same; To punish the wicked for their horrible sinnes, as Saul for his wickednesse; To avenge himselfe upon Man for his ingratitude; who having the truth revealed unto him, will not beleeve or obey it; To waken and rouze up the godly, who are sleeping in any great sinnes or infirmities: Lastly, to try and prove his people, whether they will cleave to him and his Word, or seeke unto Satan and wicked spirits.

Now from the consideration of the premisses, wee conclude it a necessarie thing for the Church and people of God, to bee acquainted with the dealing of Satan in this kinde, that knowing his subtill devices, they may learne to avoid them. For which purpose this Treatise was first framed, and now exhibited to your Lordship. The just commendation whereof, above others formerly divulged touching this Argument, appeareth herein, that it serveth to the full opening and declaration of Satans method in the ground and practices of Witchcraft. Wherein among many other remarkable points, it may please you to take speciall notice of these particulars. I. That they doe grosly erre, who either in expresse termes deny that there bee Witches, or in effect, and by consequent, avouching that there is no league betweene them and the Devill, or affirming they can doe no such miraculous workes as are ascribed to them. The former issueth plainly out of the body of the Discourse. And for the latter, That there is a Covenant betweene them, either explicite in manner and forme, or implicite by degrees of superstitious proceeding in the use of meanes insufficient in themselves, is plainly taught and confirmed in the same. That Witches may and doe worke wonders, is evidently proved: howbeit not by an omnipotent power, (as the * gainsayer hath unlearnedly and improperly termed it) but by the assistance of Satan their prince, who is a powerfull spirit, but yet a creature as well as they. And the wonders wrought by them, are not properly and simply miracles, but workes of wonder, because they exceed the ordinary power and capacity of men, especially such as are ignorant of Satans habilitie, and the hidden causes in nature, whereby things are brought to passe. II. That the Witch truly convicted, is to be punished with death, the highest degree of punishment; and that by the Law of Moses, the equitie whereof is perpetuall. Yea, even the better Witch of the two in common reputation, because both are equally enemies to God and true Religion: and it is well knowne by true experience, that all professed Sorcerers are guilty of many most monstrous impieties. III. That the miracles of the Popiſh Church at this day, are indeed either no miracles, or falſe and deceitfull workes. Touching corporall preſence in the Sacrament, which they affirme to be by miracle: If it were true, then miracles were not yet ceaſed, but ſhould ſtill be as ordinary in the Church, as are the Sacraments. A point not onely confuted in the latter part of this Treatiſe, but alſo by the teſtimony of purer Antiquity. Auguſtine ſaith, That miracles were once neceſſary to make the world beleeve the Goſpell: but hee that now ſeekes a ſigne that he may beleeve, is a wonder, yea, a monſter in nature. Chryſoſtome concludeth upon the ſame grounds, that there is now in the Church no neceſſity of working miracles; and calls him a falſe prophet, that now takes in hand to worke them. Againe, if there be a miracle in the Sacrament, is it contrary to the nature of all thoſe that were wrought, either by Moſes and the Prophets, or by Chriſt and his Apoſtles. For they were apparant to the eye, but this is inſenſible: and therefore neither of force to move admiration, nor to convince the minde of man, and make him to beleeve: As for thoſe which are pretended to be wrought by Saints in that Church; if wee make recourſe to the Primitive times, wherein God gave the gift to breed faith in the Gentiles; wee ſhall finde that the power of producing ſuch works, was never actually inherent in the Apoſtles, but diſpenſed by them in the name of Chriſt. Neither was it in their liberty to worke miracles when they would, but when it pleaſed God, upon ſpeciall cauſe to call them thereunto. And if neither the power nor the will was in them, much leſſe is it likely to be found in any of the Saints. And for their Relikes, of what name ſoever, ſo greatly magnified and reſorted unto; we deny there is any ſuch vertue in them. For they may not be thought to be more effectuall than the hem of Chriſts garment, from which the power of healing the woman did not proceed, but from himſelfe: Or than the Napkin of Paul, which did not cure the ſicke, but the power of God onely, diſpenſed by the hands of Paul. Miracles therefore, avouched by them, to be wrought at the Tombs and Statues of Saints, and by their relikes and monuments, are but meere Satanicall wonders, ſerving to maintaine Idolatry and ſuperſtition: and are in truth no better than the wonders of the Donatiſts in S. Auguſtines time, Aut figmenta mendacium hominum, aut portenta fallacium ſpirituum. IV. That the light of the Goſpell purely preached, is a ſoveraigne meane to diſcover and confound the power and policy of Satan in Witchcraft and Sorcery. The Word of God preached, is the weapon of the Chriſtians warfare, and is mighty through God to caſt downe ſtrong holds. At the diſpenſation of it by the Diſciples of Chriſt, Satan fell from Heaven as lightning. After the aſcenſion of Chriſt into Heaven, in the times of *Claudius Ceſar, the Devill ſtirred up ſundry perſons, who in regard of the admirable works which they did, by the helpe of Magick and Sorcery, were accounted as gods, and their Statues erected and worſhipped with great reverence. Amongſt the reſt one Simon, called by a kinde of eminency, Magus, practiſing his trade with ſucceſſe, to the admiration of the multitude, was holden to be the great power of God. Whoſe dealing was firſt diſcovered by the light of the Word, ſhining in the Miniſtery of the Apoſtles, and himſelfe convicted with ſuch evidence of truth, to be an Inſtrument of Satan, that he was forced at length to flie out of Samaria into the Weſterne parts, as Euſebius recordeth in his Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtorie. By this, Chriſt the true Angell of the Covenant, locked and bound up Satan for a thouſand yeares after his Aſcenſion, that he might not be ſo generally powerfull in ſeducing the Gentiles, as he had beene before his incarnation. But toward the expiration of thoſe yeares, when corruption began to creepe into the Papacy; when the Biſhops affected that Sea, and aſpiried unto it by Diabolicall Arts: when the Canons, Decrees, Sentences, Synodals, Decretals, Clementines, Extravagants, with other Lawes and Conſtitutions, prevailed above the Scriptures; then began Satan againe to erect his kingdome, and theſe workes of iniquity to be ſet abroach.

A DISCOVRSE OF WITCHCRAFT.

EXOD. 22. 18.

Thou shalt not suffer a Witch to live.

THis Text containeth one of the Judiciall Lawes of Moses touching the punishment of Witchcraft: which argument I have chosen to intreat of for these causes:

First, because Witchcraft is a rife and common sinne in these our dayes, and very many are intangled with it, being either practitioners thereof in their owne persons, or at least, yeelding to seeke for helpe and counsell of such as practise it.

Againe, there be sundry men who receive it for a truth, that Witchcraft is nothing else but a meere illusion, and Witches nothing but persons deluded by the Devill: and this opinion takes place not onely with the ignorant, but is holden and maintained by such as are learned, who doe avouch it by word and writing, that there be no Witches, but as I said before.

Upon these and such like considerations, I have bin moved to undertake the Interpretation of this Judiciall Law, as a sufficient ground of the doctrine which shall be delivered. In handling wherof, two things are distinctly to be considered: The first, what is a Witch: The second, what is her due and deserved punishment. And both these being opened and handled, the whole meaning of the Law will the better appeare.

For the first: To give the true description of a Witch, is a matter of great difficulty, because there bee many differences and diversities of opinions touching this point; and therefore that we may properly, and truly define a Witch, we must first pause a while in opening the nature of Witchcraft, so farre forth as it is delivered in the bookes of the Old and New Testament, and may be gathered out of the true experience of learned and godly men.

Touching Witchcraft therefore I will consider three points:

I. What Witchcraft is.

II. What is the ground of the whole practice thereof.

III. How many kinds and differences there be of it.

CHAP. I.

Of the Nature of Witchcraft.

TO begin with the first: According to the true meaning of all the places of holy Scripture which treat of this point, it may be thus described:

Witchcraft is a wicked Art, serving for the working of wonders by the assistance of the devill, so far forth as God shall in justice permit.

Sect. I.

I say it is an Art, because it is commonly so called and esteemed amongst men, and there is reason why it should be thus tearmed. For as in all good and lawfull Arts, the whole practise thereof is performed by certaine rules and precepts, and without them nothing can bee done: so Witchcraft hath certaine superstitious grounds and principles whereupon it standeth, and by which alone the feats and practices thereof are commonly performed.

If it be demanded what these rules bee, and whence they had their beginning, considering that every Art hath reference to some author, by whom it was originally taught and delivered? I answer, that they were devised first by Satan, and by him revealed to wicked and ungodly persons of ancient times, as occasion served: who receiving them from him, became afterward, in the just judgement of God, his instruments to report and convey them to others from hand to hand.

For manifestation whereof, it is to be considered, that God is not onely in generall a Soveraigne Lord and King over all his creatures, whether in Heaven or Earth, none excepted, no not the devils themselves: but that hee exerciseth also a speciall Kingdome, partly of grace in the Church militant upon earth, and partly of glory over the Saints and Angels, members of the Church triumphant in Heaven. Now in like manner the Devill hath a Kingdome called in Scripture the kingdome of darknes, whereof himselfe is the head and governour, for which cause he is tearmed [a] the prince of darknesse, [b] the God of this world, ruling and effectually working in the hearts of the children of disobedience.

[a] Eph. 6. 12.
[b] 2 Cor. 4. 4.

Againe, as God hath enacted Lawes, whereby his Kingdome is governed, so hath the Devill his ordinances, whereby he keepeth his subjects in awe and obedience, which generally and for substance are nothing else but transgressions of the very Law of God. And amongst them all, the precepts of Witchcraft are the very chiefe and most notorious. For by them especially hee holds up his kingdome, and therefore more esteemeth the obedience of them, than of other. Neither doth he deliver them indifferently to every man, but to his owne subjects, the wicked; and not to them all, but to some speciall and tried ones, whom hee most betrusteth with his secrets, as being the fittest to serve his turne, both in respect of their willingnesse to learne and practise, as also for their ability to become instruments of the mischiefe which hee intendeth to others.

If it bee hereasked, whence the Devill did fetch and conceive his rules? I answer, out of the corruption and depravation of that great measure of knowledge he once had of God, and of all the duties of his service. For that being quite depraved by his fall, hee turnes the same to the inventing and devising of what hee is possibly able against God and his honour. Hereupon, well perceiving that God hath expressly commanded to renounce and abhorre all practices of Witchcraft, he hath set abroach this art in the world, as a maine pillar of his Kingdome, which notwithstanding is flatly and directly opposed to one of the maine principall Lawes of the Kingdome of God, touching the service of himselfe in spirit and truth.

Againe, the reason why hee conveyes these ungodly principles and practices from man to man is, because hee findes in experience, that things are far more welcome and agreeable to the common nature of mankinde, which are taught by men like unto themselves, than if the devill should personally deliver the same, to each man in speciall. Hereupon, hee takes the course at first to instruct some few onely, who being taught by him, are apt to convey that which they know to others. And hence in probabilitie this devillish trade had his first originall and continuance.

Ioh. 4. 24.

Sect. II.

In the second place, I call it a wicked art, to distinguish it from all good and lawfull arts, taught in schooles of learning, which as they are warrantable by the Word of God, so are they no lesse profitable and necessarie in the Church. Againe, to shew the nature and qualitie of it, that it is a most ungracious and wicked art, as appeareth by the Scriptures. For when Saul had broken the expresse commandement of God, in sparing Agag, and the best things; Samuel tells him, that rebellion and disobedience is as the sinne of Witchcraft, that is, a most horrible and grievous crime, like unto that wicked, capitall, and mother sin, 1 Sam. 15. 23.

Sect. III.

Thirdly, I adde, tending to the working or producing of wonders, wherein is noted the proper end of this art, whereby I put a further difference betweene it, and others that are godly and lawfull.

Now if question bee moved, why man should desire by Witchcraft to work wonders? I answer, the true and proper cause is this: The first temptation, whereby the Devill prevailed against our first parents, had inclosed within it many sinnes: for the eating of the forbidden fruit, was no small or single offence, but as some have taught, contained in it the breach of every Commandement of the Morall Law. Amongst the rest, Satan laboured to bring them to the sinne of discontentment, whereby they sought to become as gods, that is, better than God had made them, not resting content with the condition of men. This sinne was then learned, and could never since bee forgotten, but continually is derived from them to all their posteritie, and now is become so common a corruption in the whole nature of flesh and bloud, that there is scarce a man to bee found who is not originally tainted therewith as hee is a man.

This corruption shewes it selfe principally in two things, both which are the maine causes of the practices of Witchcraft.

First, in mans outward estate: for hee being naturally possessed with a love of himselfe, and an high conceit of his owne deserving, when he lives in base and low estate, whether in regard of poverty, or want of honour and reputation, which hee thinkes by right is due unto him: he then growes to some measure of griefe and sorrow within himselfe. Hereupon hee is moved to yeeld himselfe to the Devill, to bee his vassall and scholler in this wicked art, supposing that by the working of some wonders, he may be able in time to releeve his poverty, and to purchase to himselfe credit and countenance amongst men.

It were easie to shew the truth of this, by examples of some persons, who by these meanes have risen from nothing, to great places and preferments preferments in the world. In stead of all, it appeareth in certaine Popes of Rome, as Sylvester the second, Benedict the eighth, Alexander the sixth, Iohn the twenty and the twenty one, &c. who for the attaining of the Popedome (as Histories record) gave themselves to the Devill in the practice of witchcraft, that by the working of wonders, they might rise from one step of honour to another, untill they had seated themselves in the chaire of the Papacy. So great was their desire of eminency in the Church, that it caused them to dislike meaner conditions of life, and never to cease aspiring, though they incurred thereby the hazard of good conscience, and the losse of their soules.

Platina de vit. Pont. in vita Silv. 2. Ideus in Act. Rom. Pont. lib 5. & lib. 6.

The second degree of discontentment, is in the minde and inward man; and that is curiositie, when a man resteth not satisfied with the measure of inward gifts received, as of knowledge, wit, understanding, memorie, and such like, but aspires to search out such things as God would have kept secret: and hence hee is moved to attempt the cursed art of Magicke and Witchcraft, as a way to get further knowledge in matters secret and not revealed, that by working of wonders, hee may purchase fame in the world, and consequently reape more benefit by such unlawfull courses, than in likelihood he could have done by ordinary and lawfull meanes.

Aug. confess. lib. 10. cap. 35.

Sect. IV.

Fourthly, it is affirmed in the description, that Witchcraft is practised by the assistance of the Devill, yet the more fully to distinguish it from all good, lawfull, and commendable arts. For in them experience teacheth, that the Arts-master is able by himselfe to practise his art, and to doe things belonging thereunto, without the helpe of another. But in this it is otherwise; for here the worke is done by the helpe of another; namely, the Devill, who is confederate with the Witch. The power of effecting such strange workes, is not in the art, neither doth it flow from the skill of the Sorcerer, man or woman, but is derived wholly from Satan, and is brought into execution by vertue of mutuall confederacy, betweene him and the Magician.

Now that this part of the description may be more clearely manifested, wee are to proceed to a further point, to shew what kinde of wonders they be which are ordinarily wrought by the ministery and power of the devill.

§ 1. Wonders therefore be of two sorts; either true and plaine, or lying and deceitfull.

A true wonder is a rare worke, done by the power of God simply, either above, or against the power of nature, and it is properly called a miracle. The Scripture is plentifull in examples of this kinde. Of this sort was the dividing of the red Sea, and making it dry land by a mightie East wind, that the children of Israel might passe thorow it, Exod. 14. 21. For though the East wind be naturally of great force to move the waters, and to dry the earth; yet to part the sea asunder, and to make the waters to stand as walls on each side, and the bottome of the sea as a pavement, this is a worke simply above the naturall power of any wind, and therefore is a miracle. Againe, such were the wonders done by Moses & Aaron before Pharaoh in Ægypt, one whereof, in stead of many, was the turning of Aarons rod into a serpent, a worke truly miraculous. For it is above the power of naturall generation, that the substance of one creature should be really turned into the substance of another, as the substance of a rod into the substance of a serpent. Of the like kinde were the standing of the Sunne in the Firmament without moving in his course for a whole day, Josh. 10. 13. the going backe of the Sunne in the firmament ten degrees, 2 Kings 20. 11. the preservation of the three men, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego in the midst of the hot fiery fornace, Dan. 3. 25. and of Daniel in the Lions den, Dan. 6. 22. the feeding of five thousand men, beside women and children, with five loaves and two fishes, Matth. 14. 20, 21. the curing of the eyes of the blinde man with spittle and clay tempered together, John 9. 6, 7, &c.

Now the effecting of a miracle in this kinde, is a worke proper to God onely; and no creature, man, or Angell, can doe any thing either above or contrary to nature, but hee alone which is the Creator. For as God in the beginning made all things of nothing, so he hath reserved to himselfe, as a peculiar worke of his almightie power, to change or abolish the substance, property, motion, and use of any creature. The reason is, because he is the author and creator of nature, and therefore at his pleasure, is perfectly able to command, restraine, enlarge, or extend the power and strength thereof, without the helpe or assistance of the creature.

Againe, the working of a miracle is a kinde of creation, for therein a thing is made to bee which was not before. And this must needs bee proper to God alone, by whose power things that are, were once produced out of things that did not apeare. The conclusion therefore must needs be this, which David confesseth in the Psalme: God onely doth wondrous things, Psal. 136. 4. that is, works simply wonderfull.

But it is alleaged to the contrary, that the Prophets in the old Testament, and the Apostles in the new, did worke miracles. I answer, they did so; but how? not by their owne power, but by the power of God, being onely his instruments, whom he used for some speciall purpose in those workes; and such as did not themselves cause the miracle, but God in and by them. The same doth Peter and Iohn acknowledge, when they had restored the lame man to the perfect use of his limbs, that by their power and godlinesse, they had not made the man to goe, Act. 3. 12.

Againe, it is objected, that our Saviour Chriſt in his manhood wrought many miracles, as thoſe before mentioned, and many more. Anſ. Chriſt as he was man did ſomething in the working of miracles, but not all. For in every miraculous worke there be two things; the worke it ſelfe, and the acting or diſpenſing of the worke: the worke it ſelfe being by nature and ſubſtance miraculous, conſidering it was above or againſt the order of naturall cauſes, did not proceed from Chriſt as man, but from him as God; but the diſpenſation of the ſame, in this or that viſible manner, to the view of men, was done and performed by his manhood. For example; The raiſing up of Lazarus out of the grave, having beene dead foure daies, was a miracle; to the effecting whereof, both the God-head and manhood of Chriſt concurred, by their ſeveral and diſtinct actions. The manhood only uttered the voice, and bade Lazarus come forth, but it was the God-head of Chriſt that fetched his ſoule from Heaven, and put it againe into his body, yea, which gave life and power to Lazarus, to heare the voice uttered, to riſe and come forth, Joh. 11. 43. In like manner, when he gave ſight to the blinde, Mat. 20. 34. he touched their eyes with the hands of his manhood, but the power of opening them, and making them to ſee, came from his God-head, whereby he was able to doe all things. And in all other miraculous workes which he did, the miracle was alwaies wrought by his divine power onely, the outward actions and circumſtances that accompanied the ſame, proceeded from him as he was man.

Now, if Chriſt as he is man, cannot worke a true miracle, then no meere creature can doe it, no not the Angels themſelves, and conſequenly not Satan, it being a meere ſupernaturall worke, performed onely by the omnipotent power of God.

§ 2 The ſecond ſort of wonders, are lying and deceitfull, which alſo are extraordinary workes in regard of man, becauſe they proceed not from the uſuall and ordinary courſe of nature: and yet they be no miracles, becauſe they are done by the vertue of nature, and not above or againſt nature ſimply, but above and againſt the ordinary courſe thereof: and theſe are properly ſuch wonders as are done by Satan and his inſtruments: examples whereof we ſhall ſee afterwards.

If any man in reaſon thinke it not likely that a creature ſhould be able to worke extraordinarily by naturall meanes; he muſt remember that though God hath reſerved to himſelfe alone the power of aboliſhing and changing nature, the order whereof hee ſet and eſtabliſhed in the creation, yet the alteration of the ordinarie courſe of nature, hee hath put in the power of his ſtrongeſt creatures, Angels and Devils. That the Angels have received this power, and doe execute the ſame upon his command or permiſſion, it is manifeſt by Scripture, and the proofe of it is not ſo neceſſary in this place. But that Satan is able to doe extraordinary workes by the helpe of nature (which is the queſtion in hand) it ſhall appeare, if wee conſider in him theſe things.

First, the Devill is by nature a ſpirit, and therefore of great underſtanding, knowledge, and capacity in all naturall things, of what ſort, quality, and condition ſoever, whether they be cauſes or effects, whether of a ſimple or mixt nature. By reaſon whereof hee can ſearch more deeply and narrowly into the grounds of things, than all creatures that are cloathed with fleſh and bloud.

Secondly, he is an ancient ſpirit, whoſe skill hath beene confirmed by experience of the courſe of nature, for the ſpace almoſt of ſix thouſand yeares. Hence hee hath attained to the knowldege of many ſecrets, and by long obſervation of the effects, is able to diſcerne and judge of hidden cauſes in nature, which man in likelihood cannot come unto by ordinary meanes, for want of that opportunitie both of underſtanding and experience. Hereupon it is, that whereas in nature there be ſome properties, cauſes, and effects, which man never imagined to be; others, that men did once know, but are now forgot; ſome, which men knew not, but might know; and thouſands which can hardly, or not at all be knowne: all theſe are moſt familiar unto him, becauſe in themſelves they bee no wonders, but only myſteries and ſecrets, the vertue and effect whereof he hath ſometime obſerved ſince his creation.

Thirdly, he is a ſpirit of wonderfull power and might, able to ſhake the earth, and to confound the creatures inferiour unto him in nature and condition, if he were not reſtrained by the omnipotent power of God. And this power, as it was great by his creation, ſo it is not impayred by his fall, but rather increaſed and made more forcible by his irreconciliable malice hee beareth to mankind, ſpecially the ſeed of the woman.

Fourthly, there is in the devill an admirable quickneſſe and agility, proceeding from his ſpirituall nature, whereby he can very ſpeedily and in a ſhort ſpace of time, conveigh himſelfe and other creatures into places far diſtant one from another. By theſe foure helpes, Satan is enabled to doe ſtrange works. Strange I ſay to man, whoſe knowledge ſince the fall is mingled with much ignorance, even in naturall things; whoſe experience is of ſhort continuance, and much hindred by forgetfulneſſe; whoſe agility by reaſon of his groſſe nature is nothing, if he had not the helpe of other creatures; whoſe power is but weakneſſe and infirmity in compariſon of Satans.

Yet if there be any further doubt, how Satan can by theſe helps worke wonders, we may be reſolved of the truth thereof by conſidering three other things: First, that by reaſon of his great knowledge and skill in nature, he is able to apply creature to creature, and the causes efficient to the matter, and thereby bring things to passe, that are in common conceit impossible.

to

Secondly, he hath power to move them, not only according to the ordinary course, but with much more speed and celerity.

Thirdly, as he can apply and move, so by his spirituall nature he is able, if God permit, to convey himselfe into the substance of the creature, without any penetration of dimensions, and being in the creature, although it be never so solid, he can worke therein, not onely according to the principles of the nature thereof, but as farre as the strength and ability of those principles will possibly reach and extend themselves. Thus it appeareth, that the devil can in generall worke wonders.

§ 3. Now more particularly, the Devils wonders are of two sorts: Illusions, or reall actions.

An illusion is a worke of Satan, whereby he deludeth or deceiveth man. And it is twofold, either of the outward senses, or of the minde. An illusion of the outward senses, is a worke of the devill, whereby he makes a man to thinke that he heareth, seeth, feeleth or toucheth such things as indeed hee doth not. This the devill can easily doe divers wayes, even by the strength of nature. For example, by corrupting the instruments of sense, as the humor of the eye, &c. or by altering and changing the ayre, which is the meanes whereby we see, and such like.

Aug. de civ. Dei. l. 18. c. 18.

Experience teacheth us, that the devill is a skilfull practitioner in this kinde, though the meanes whereby he worketh such feats, be unknowne unto us. In this manner Paul affirmeth that the Galatians were deluded, when he saith, O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you? Gal. 3. 1. Where he useth a word * borrowed from the practice of Witches and sorcerers, who use to cast a mist (as it were) before the eyes, to dazle them, and make things to appeare unto them, which indeed they doe not see; and the ground of Pauls comparison, is that which he takes for a granted truth, that there be such delusions, whereby mens senses are and may be corrupted by satanicall operation.

Thus againe the devill by the Witch of Endor, deceived Saul in the appearance of Samuel, 1 Sam. 28. making him beleeve that it had beene Samuel indeed, whereas it was but a meere counterfeit of him, as shall appeare hereafter. Againe, the devill knowing the constitutions of men and the particular diseases whereunto they are inclined, takes the vantage of some, and secondeth the nature of the disease by the concurrence of his owne delusion, thereby corrupting the imagination, and working in the minde a strong perswasion, that they are become, that which in truth they are not. This is apparant in that disease which is termed Lycanthropia, where some having their brains possessed & distempered with melancholy, have verily thought themselves to be wolves, and so have behaved themselves. And the histories of men in former ages, have recorded strange testimonies of some that have been thus turned into wolves, lyons, dogs, birds, and other creatures, which could not be really in substance, but onely in appearance, and phantasie corrupted, and so these records are true. For God in his just judgement may suffer some men so to bee bewitched by the devill, that to their conceit they may seeme to be like these bruit beasts, though indeed they remaine true men still. For it is a worke surmounting the devils power, to change the substance of any one creature, into the substance of another. By this kind of delusion the Church of Rome, in the times of blindnesse and ignorance, hath taken great advantage, and much encreased her riches and honour. For there be three points of the religion of that Church, to wit, Purgatory, Invocation of Saints, and honouring of Reliques, whereby she hath notably inriched her selfe, all which had their first foundation from these, and such like Satanicall impostures. For the onely way whereby they have brought the common sort to yeeld unto them, both for beleefe and practice, hath beene by deluding their outward senses with false apparitions of ghosts and soules of men, walking and ranging abroad after their departure, and such like; whereby simple persons, ignorant of their fetches and delusions, have beene much affrighted, and caused through extremity of feare and dread, to purchase their owne peace and security, by many and great expenses. And indeed these were the strongest arguments that ever they had, and which most prevailed with the common people, as is manifest in stories of all nations and ages, where such deceits have taken place, though oftentimes by the just judgement of God, they were taken in their craft, & their feats revealed.

The second kinde of illusion, is of the mind, whereby the devill deceives the minde, and makes a man thinke that of himselfe which is not true. Thus experience teacheth, that he hath deluded men both in former and latter times, who have avouched and professed themselves to be Kings, or the sonnes of Kings. Yea, some have holden themselves to be Christ, some to be Elias, some to be Iohn the Baptist, and some extraordinary Prophets. And the like conceits have entred into the minds of sundry Witches, by the suggestion and perswasion of the devill. To whom, when they have wholly resigned their soules and bodies, they have beene moved to beleeve things impossible touching themselves, as that they have indeed beene changed into other creatures, as cats, birds, mice, &c. The inquisitions of Spaine and other countries, wherein these and such like things are recorded touching Witches really metamorphosed into such creatures, cannot be true; considering that it is not in the power of the devill, thus to change substances into other substances. And those conversions recorded by them, were onely Satans illusions, wherewith the minds of Witches were possessed, and nothing else; which though they were extraordinary, (as the rest of this kind are) yet they went not beyond the power of nature.

The second sort of the devils wonders, are reall workes, that is, such as are indeed that which they seeme and appeare to be. These, howsoever to men that know not the natures of things, nor the secret and hidden causes thereof, they may seeme very strange and admirable, yet they are no true miracles, because they are not above and beyond the power of nature.

If it be here alleaged, that the devils workes are not reall and true actions, because the holy Ghost calleth them Lying wonders, 2 Thess. 2, 9. I answer, that they are called Lying wonders, not in respect of the workes themselves, for they were wonders truly done and effected; but in regard of the devils end and purpose in working them, which is to lie unto men, and by them to deceive. The truth of which point will appeare in the view of some particular examples.

Iob 1, 16. First, wee reade in the history of Iob, that Satan brought downe fire from heaven, which burnt up Iobs sheepe and servants; and caused a mighty wind to blow downe the house upon his children, as they were feasting, to destroy them. Againe, hee smote the body of Iob with botches and byles. All these were true and reall workes, very strange and admirable, and yet no miracles, because they exceeded not the compasse of nature. For first, when hee cast downe the fire from heaven, he did not create the fire of nothing, for that is a worke proper to God alone, but applied creature to creature, and thereof produced such a matter as was fit to make fire of. If it be demanded, how he is able to doe this? wee must remember, that his knowledge in naturall causes is great, and therefore hee was not ignorant of the materiall cause of fire, which being thorowly knowne and found out, Satan brought fire unto it, and so putting fire to the matter of fire, hee brought it downe by his power and agility from heaven, upon the cattell and servants of Iob. Againe, the wind which blew downe the house, where his sonnes and daughters were eating and drinking, was not created by the devill, but hee knowing well the matter whereof winds are generated naturally, added matter to matter, and thence came the wind; whereunto hee joynes himselfe, being a spirit of a swift and speedy nature, and so makes it for his owne purpose, the more violent and forcible. Thirdly, hee smote Iobs body with sore byles, from the crowne of his head to the sole of his foot. Now this may seeme strange that hee should have such power over mans body, as to cause such diseases to breed in it. Therefore wee are further to understand, that his knowledge extendeth it selfe to the whole frame and disposition of mans body, whereby it comes to passe, that the causes of all diseases are well knowne unto him, and hee is not ignorant how the humors in the body may bee putrified, and what corrupt humors will breed such and such diseases, and by what means the ayre it selfe may be infected: hereupon preparing his matter, and applying cause to cause, he practised upon the body of Iob, and filled him with grievous sores.

Another example of Satans reall workes is this. By reason of his great power and skill, he is able to appeare in the forme and shape of a man, and resemble any person or creature, and that not by deluding the senses, but by assuming to himselfe a true body. His power is not so large, as to create a bodie, or bring againe a soule into a body, yet by his dexterity and skill in naturall causes hee can worke wonderfully. For hee is able, having gathered together fit matter, to joyne member to member, and to make a true body, either after the likenesse of man, or some other creature; and having so done, to enter into it, to move and stirre it up and downe, and therein visibly and sensibly to appeare unto man; which though it be a strange work, and besides the ordinary course of nature, yet it is not simply above the power thereof.

For a third instance. The devill is able to utter a voice in plaine words and speech, answerable to mans understanding in any language. Not that hee can take unto himselfe, being a spirit, an immediate power to speake or frame a voyce of nothing without meanes, but knowing the naturall and proper causes and meanes by which men doe speake, by them hee frames in himselfe the voyce of a man, and plainly utters the same in a knowne language. In this manner he abused the tongue and mouth of the serpent, when in plaine words he tempted Eve to eat the forbidden fruit. Now it is to be remembred here, that when the devill speakes in a creature, it must be such a creature, as hath the instruments of speech, or such whereby speech may be framed and uttered, not otherwise: for it was never heard that he spake in a stocke or a stone, or any created entity, that had not the meanes and power of uttering a voyce, at least in some sort; it being a worke peculiar to the Creator, to give power of utterance where it is not by creation. Againe, when he frameth a voyce in a creature, he doth it not by giving an immediate power to speake, for that he cannot doe, and the creature abused by him, remaineth in that regard, as it was before. But it being naturally fitted and disposed to utter a voice, though not perfectly to speak as a man, he furthereth and helpeth nature in it, and addeth to the facultie thereof a present use of words, by ordering and ruling the instruments to his intended purposes. And to conclude this point, looke what strange workes and wonders may be truly effected by the power of nature, (though they be not ordinarily brought to passe in the course of nature) those the devill can doe, and so farre forth as the power of nature will permit, he is able to work true wonders, though for a false and evill end.

Here a question is moved by some, whether the devill can change one creature into another, as a man or a woman into a beast? for some, notwithstanding the doctrine already taught, are of opinion, that hee can turne the bodies of Witches into other creatures, as hares, cats, and such like. Answ. The transmutation of the substance of one creature into another, as of a man into a beast of what kind soever, is a worke simply above the power of nature, and therefore cannot be done by the devill, or any creature. For it is the proper worke of God alone, as I have said, to create, to change, or abolish nature.

It is objected, that such changes have beene made. For Lots wife was turned into a pillar of salt, Gen. 19. 26. Answ. It is true, but that was done by the mighty power of God, neither can it be proved that any creature, Angell, or other was ever able to doe the like.

But it is further said, that King Nebuchadnezzar was turned into a beast, and did eat grasse with the beasts of the field, Dan. 4. 3[illegible] Answ. There is no such matter: his substance was not changed, so as his body became the body of a beast indeed, but his conditions onely were altered by the judgement of God upon his mind, whereby he was so farre forth bereaved of humane sense and understanding. Againe, for his behaviour and kinde of life, he became altogether brutish for the time, and excepting onely his outward forme and shape, no part of humanity could appeare in him: but that he retained his humane body still, it is evident by his owne words, vers. 34. when he saith, And mine understanding was restored to me: which argueth plainly, that the hand of God was upon him in some kinde of madnesse and furie, and therefore that there was not a change of his body and substance, but a strange and fearefull alteration in his minde and outward behaviour. And though such a transmutation should be granted, yet it makes nothing for the purpose, considering it was the worke of God onely, and not of the devill. And thus we see what kinde of wonders the Devill can bring to passe. The meditation of which point may teach us two things:

First, that the working of wonders is not a thing that will commend man unto God, for the devill himselfe, a wicked spirit, can worke them: and many shall alleage this in the day of judgement, that they have by the name of God cast out devils, and done many great workes, to whom notwithstanding the Lord will say, I never knew you; depart from me ye workers of iniquity, Matth. 7. 22, 23. It behoveth us rather to get unto our selves the precious gifts of faith, repentance, and the feare of God, yea, to goe before others in a godly life and upright conversation, than to excell in effecting of strange workes. When the seventy Disciples came to our Saviour Christ with joy, and told him, that even the devils were subdued unto them through his name, Luk. 10. 17. he counsels them, not to rejoyce in this, that wicked spirits were subdued unto them, but rather, because their names were written in heaven, vers. 20.

Indeed to be able to worke a wonder, is an excellent gift of God, and may minister matter of rejoycing, when it proceedeth from God: but seeing the devill received this power by the gift of creation, our speciall joy must not bee therein, but rather in this, that we are the adopted sonnes of God, in which privilege the devill hath no part with us. And therefore the Apostle, 1 Cor. 13. making a comparison of the gifts of the Spirit, as of speaking divers tongues, of prophesying, and working miracles, with love: in the end, wisheth men to labour for the best gifts, which are faith, hope, and love, because by these wee are made partakers of Christ, on whom we ought to set our hearts, and in whom wee are commanded alwayes to rejoyce, Phil. 4. 4.

Secondly, we learne from hence, not to beleeve or receive a doctrine now or at any time, because it is confirmed by wonders. For the devill himselfe is able to confirme his errours and Idolatrous services by strange and extraordinary signes, by which usually he labours to avouch and verifie the grossest points of falshood in matter of religion. On the contrary, we must not reject or contemne a doctrine, because it is not thus confirmed. This was a maine fault in the Jewes, who would not receive the Word preached by Christ, unlesse hee shewed them a signe from heaven. Indeed in the primitive Church it pleased God to confirme that doctrine which the Apostles taught, by great signes and miracles, but now that gift is ceased, and the Church hath no warrant to expect any further evidence of the religion it professeth and enjoyeth by arguments of that kind; yea rather it hath cause to suspect a doctrine taught for the wonders sake, whereby men labor to avouch it.

Sect. V.

The last clause in the description, is this: so farre forth as God in justice suffereth: which I adde, for two causes: First, to shew that God, for just causes, permitteth the Arts of Magicke and Witchcraft, and the practices thereof. Now this he doth in his providence, either for the triall of his children, or for the punishment of the wicked. Augustide Trin. l. 3. c. 7.

First therefore God permits these wicked arts in the Church, to prove whether his children will stedfastly beleeve in him, and seek unto his word, or cleave unto the devill, by seeking to his wicked instruments. This Moses plainly forwarned the Church of God, in his time. Deu. 13. v. 1. If there arise among you a Prophet, or a dreamer of dreames, and give thee a signe or wonder; v. 2. and the signe and wonder which he hath told thee, come to passe: saying, Let us goe after other gods, which thou hast not known, and serve them; v. 3. thou shalt not hearken to the words of that Prophet, &c.

Againe,

Against, God suffereth them for the punishment of unbeleevers and wicked men: for oftentimes God punisheth one sinne by another, as the antecedent sinnes by the consequent. This Paul plainly sheweth (speaking of the dayes of Antichrist) that because men receyved not the love of the truth, therefore God would send upon them strong illusions, that they should beleeve lies. And we may resolve our selves, that for this very cause, God suffereth the practices of Witchcraft, to be so rife in these our dayes, to punish the ingratitude of men, who have the truth revealed unto them, and yet will not beleeve and obey the same, but tread it under their feet, that all they might be condemned which beleeved not the truth, but tooke pleasure in unrighteousnesse.

2 Thess. 2. 10, 11.

Vers. 12.

Secondly, this last clause is added, to shew that in the practices of sorcery and Witchcraft, the Devill can doe so much onely as God permits him, and no more. Doubtlesse, his malice reacheth further, and consequently his will and desire; but God hath restrained his power, in the execution of his malicious purposes, whereupon he cannot goe a whit further, than God gives him leave and liberty to goe. The Magicians of Ægypt did some wonders, in shew like unto the miracles wrought by Moses and Aaron, and that for a time, by changing a rod into a serpent, and water into bloud, and by bringing frogs through the sleight and power of the Devill; but when it pleased God to determine their practices, and give them no further liberty, they could not doe that, which in likelihood was the meanest of all the rest, the turning of the dust of the land into lice; and themselves gave the true reason thereof, saying, That this was the finger of God, Exod. 8. 19. When the devill went out and became a false spirit in the mouth of all Ahabs prophets, to intice him to goe to fall at Ramoth Gilead, he went not of his owne will, but by the authority of God, who commanded him to goe to intice Ahab, and suffered him to prevaile, 1 King. 22. 22. and the act was not the act of Satan, but of God, whose instrument hee was; and therefore the holy Ghost said by Micaiah, The Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy Prophets, and the Lord hath appointed evill against thee, v. 23. Hence also it was, that the devils, being cast out of the man that had an uncleane spirit, asked leave of Christ to enter into the heard of swine, and could not enter in till hee had permitted them, Mark. 5. 12, 13. And we reade oftentimes in the Gospell, that our Saviour cast out many devils by his word onely, thereby shewing that he was absolute Lord over them, and that without his permission, they could doe nothing.

Exod. 7. & 8.

And thus much touching the generall nature of this Art.

CHAP. III.

The Ground of Witchcraft, and of all the practices thereof.

B

THe Ground of all the practices of Witchcraft, is a league or covenant made betweene the Witch and the Devill: wherein they doe mutually binde themselves, each to other. If any shall thinke it strange, that man or woman should enter league with Satan, their utter enemy; they are to know it for a most evident and certaine truth, that may not be called into question. And yet to cleare the judgement of any one in this point, I will set downe some reasons in way of proofe.

C

First, the holy Scripture doth intimate so much unto us in the 58. Psal. v. 5. where, howsoever the common translation runneth in other termes, yet the words are properly to be read thus: which heareth not the voice of the mutterer joyning societies cunningly. And in them the Psalmist layeth downe two points: First, the effect or worke of a charme, muttered by the Inchanter; namely, that it is able to stay the Adder from stinging those which shall lay hold on him or touch him. Secondly, the maine foundation of the charme; societies or confederacies cunningly made, not betweene man and man, but (as the words import) betweene the Inchanter and the Devill. The like we reade, Deut. 18. 11. where the Lord chargeth his people when they came into the land of Canaan, that amongst other abominations of the Heathen, they should beware lest any were found amongst them that joyned society, that is, entred into league and compact with wicked spirits.

D

A second reason may be this: it is the practice of the Devill to offer to make a bargaine and covenant with man. Thus he dealt with our Saviour Christ in the third temptation wherewith he assaulted him, promising to give unto him all the Kingdomes of the earth, and the glory of them, (which he shewed him in a vision) if Christ for his part would fall downe and worship him. The offer was passed on the behalfe of Satan, and now to make a perfect compact betweene them, there was nothing wanting but the free consent of our Saviour unto the condition propounded. Whereby it is manifest, that the Devill makes many covenants in the world, because he findeth men and women in the most places, fitted for his turne in this kinde, who will not let to worship him for a farre lesse matter than a Kingdome. And it is not to be doubted, that thousands in the world, had they beene offered so faire as Christ was, would have been as willing to have yeelded upon such conditions, as the devill to have offered.

Matth. 4. 9.

Thirdly, the common confession of all Witches and Sorcerers, both before and since the com-comming of Christ, doth yet more fully confirme the same. For they have confessed with one consent, that the very ground-worke of all their practices in this wicked art, is their league with the devill. And hence it appeareth, how and whereupon it is, that Sorcerers and Witches can bring to passe strange things by the helpe of Satan, which other men ordinarily cannot doe; namely, because they have entred a league with him, whereby he hath bound himselfe to them, for the effecting of rare and extraordinary workes, which others, not joyned with him in the like confederacie, are not able either by his helpe, or any power or policy of their owne to bring to passe. Hereupon it was, that the Witch of Endor shewed unto Saul the appearance of Samuel, which neither Saul himselfe, nor any in all his Court could doe. There was no great vertue in the matter or frame of her words, for she was ignorant and had no learning. By power she could not effect it, being a weake woman; neither was it like that shee had more cunning and policy than any of the learned Jewes in those times had for such purposes. The maine reason was, her league made with Satan, by vertue whereof she commanded him to appeare in the likenesse of Samuel, which neither Saul, nor any of his company could doe, by vertue of such covenant, which they had not made.

The end why the Devill seeketh to make a league with men, may be this; It is a point of his policy, not to be ready at every mans command to doe for him what hee would, except he be sure of his reward; and no other meanes will serve his turne for taking assurance hereof, but this covenant. And why so? that hereby he may testifie both his hatred of God, and his malice against man. For since the time that he was cast down from heaven, he hath hated God and his kingdome, and greatly maligned the happy estate of man, especially since the covenant of grace made with our first parent in Paradise. For he thought to have brought upon them by their fall, eternall and finall confusion, but perceiving the contrary by vertue of the covenant of grace, then manifested, and seeing man by it to be in a better and surer estate than before, he much more maligned his estate, and beares the ranker hatred unto God for that his mercy bestowed upon him.

Now that hee might shew forth this hatred and malice, he takes upon him to imitate God, and to counterfeit his dealings with his Church. As God therefore hath made a covenant with his people, so Satan joynes in league with the world, labouring to binde some men unto him, that so, if it were possible, he might draw them from the covenant of God, and disgrace the same. Againe, as God hath Word and Sacraments, the seales of his covenant unto beleevers; so the devill hath his words and certaine outward signes to ratifie the same to his instruments, as namely, his figures, characters, gestures, and other Satanicall ceremonies, for the confirmation of the truth of his league unto them. Yea further, as God in his covenant, requires faith of us to the beleeving of his promises: so the devill in his compact, requires faith of his vassals, to put their affiance in him, and rely on him for the doing of whatsoever he bindes himselfe to doe. Lastly, as God heares them that call upon him according to his will: so is Satan readie at hand upon the premisses, endevouring to the utmost of his power, (when God permits him) to bring to passe whatsoever he hath promised. And so much of the league in generall.

More particularly, the league betweene the Devill and a Witch, is twofold: either expressed and open, or secret and close.

The expresse and manifest compact is so termed, because it is made by solemne words on both parties. And it is not so expressely set downe in Scriptures, as in the writings of learned men, which have recorded the confessions of Witches, and they expresse it in this manner. First, the Witch for his part, as a slave of the devill, bindes himselfe unto him by solemne vow and promise to renounce the true God, his holy word, the covenant he made in Baptisme, and his redemption by Christ; and withall to beleeve in the Devill, to expect and receiue aid and helpe from him, and at the end of his life, to give him either body or soule, or both: and for the ratifying hereof, he gives to the devill for the present, either his owne hand writing, or some part of his bloud, as a pledge and earnest penny to bind the bargaine. The devill on the other side, for his part promiseth to bee ready at his vassals command, to appeare at any time in the likenesse of any creature, to consult with him, to aid and helpe him in any thing he shall take in hand, for the procuring of pleasures, honour, wealth or preferment, to goe for him, to carry him whether hee will; in a word, to doe for him, whatsoever hee shall command. Many sufficient testimonies might bee alleaged for the proofe hereof, but it is so manifest in daily experience, that it cannot well be called into question.

But yet if it seeme strange unto any, that there should be such persons in the world, that make such fearefull covenants with the devill, let them consider but this one thing, and it will put them out of doubt.

The nature of man is exceeding impatient in crosses, and outward afflictions are so tedious unto mortall mindes, and presse them with such a measure of griefe, that some could be contented with all their hearts to be out of the world, if thereby they might be released of such extremity, and hereupon they care not what meanes they use, what conditions they undertake to ease and helpe themselves. The devill finding men in these perplexities, is readie to take his advantage, and therefore perceiving them now fitted for his purpose to worke upon; he insinuates and offers himselfe to procure them ease and deliverance, if they will uſe ſuch meanes, as he ſhall preſcribe for that purpoſe: and to a naturall man there is no greater meane than this to make him joyne ſociety with the devill. Hee therefore without any further doubting or deliberation, condeſcends to Satan, ſo as he may be eaſed and releeved in theſe miſeries.

Againe, we are to conſider, that in theſe caſes the devill getteth the greater hold of man, and moves him to yeeld unto his ſuggeſtions the rather, becauſe that which he promiſeth to doe for him is preſent and at his command, and therefore certaine; whereas the thing to be performed on the behalfe of the party himſelfe, as the giving of body and ſoule, &c. is to come ſundry yeares after, and therefore in regard of the particular time, uncertaine. Now the naturall man not regarding his future and finall eſtate, preferres the preſent commodity before the loſſe and puniſhment that is to come a farre off, and thereby is perſwaded to yeeld himſelfe unto Satan. And by theſe and ſuch like antecedents are many brought to make open league with the devill.

The ſecret and cloſe league betweene the Witch and Satan is that, wherein they mutually give conſent each to other, but yet without a worne covenant conceived in expreſſe words and conference. Of this there bee two degrees: Firſt, when a man uſeth ſuperſtitious formes of prayer, wherein hee expreſſely requireth the helpe of the devill, without any mention of ſolemne words or covenant going before. That this is a kind of compact it is plaine, becauſe herein there is a mutuall under-hand conſent betweene the party and the devill, though it be not manifeſt. For when a man is content to uſe ſuperſtitious formes of invocation, for helpe in time of need; by the very uſing of them, his heart conſenteth to Satan, and he would gladly have the thing effected. When therfore the devil hath notice of them, and endevoureth to effect the thing prayed for, therein alſo he gives conſent; ſo as though there be no expreſſe words of compact outwardly framed on both parts, yet the concurrence of a mutuall conſent for the bringing to paſſe of the ſame things, makes the covenant authenticall. For according to the received rules of equity and reaſon, mutuall conſent of party with party, is ſufficient to make a bargaine, though there be no ſolemne courſe or forme of words to manifeſt the ſame to others.

The ſecond degree is, when a man uſeth ſuperſtitious meanes to bring any thing to paſſe, which in his owne knowledge, have no ſuch vertue in themſelves to effect it, without the eſpeciall operation of the devill.

Superſtitious meanes I call all thoſe, which neither by order of creation, nor by the ſpeciall appointment and bleſſing of God ſince, have any vertue in them, to bring to paſſe that thing for which they are uſed. For example; A charme conſiſting of ſet words and ſyllables, both rude, barbarous, and unknowne, uſed for the curing A of ſome diſeaſe or paine, is a ſuperſtitious meanes; becauſe it hath no vertue in it ſelfe to cure, either by the gift of God in the creation, or by any ſpeciall appointment afterward in his word or otherwiſe. And therefore when this meane is uſed by man, which he knoweth hath no ſuch vertue in it, for the effecting of that worke for which it was uſed, there is a ſecret league made with the devill.

Yet here I adde this clauſe, in his owne knowledge, to put a difference betweene men, which uſe ſuperſtitious meanes to bring ſome things to paſſe: for ſome there bee which when they uſe them, know they be meerely ſuperſtitious, yea, weake and impotent, having no vertue in themſelves for the purpoſe whereto they are B uſed; as the repeating of certaine formes of words; the uſing of ſignes, characters, and figures, which in effect are meere charmes, no whit effectuall in themſelves, but ſo farre forth as they ſerve for watchwords unto Satan, without whoſe aid nothing is done by them. A plaine argument that the uſer hereof hath in his heart ſecretly indented with Satan, for the accompliſhment of his intended workes. A ſecond ſort there is, which uſeth them for ſome ſpeciall end, being perſwaded that there is vertue in the meanes themſelves to bring the thing to paſſe, and yet not knowing that either they be ſuperſtitious, or have their efficacy by the power and worke of the devill. Such perſons have made as yet no league with Satan, but they are C in the high way thereunto. And this courſe is a fit preparation to cauſe them to joyne with him in covenant. I ſhew it by an example. A man is fallen into ſome extremity, and findes himſelfe bewitched; his paine is great, and hee deſires with all his heart to be cured and delivered: Hereupon he ſendeth for the ſuſpected Witch; being come, hee offers to ſcratch him or her, thinking by this meanes to bee cured of the Witchcraft. His reaſon is no other, than a ſtrong perſwaſion, that there is ſimply vertue in his ſcratching to cure him, and diſcover the Witch, not once ſuſpecting that the helpe commeth by the power of the Devill, but from the action it ſelfe. This doing, he may bee healed: but the truth is, hee ſinneth and breakes D Gods commandement. For the uſing of theſe meanes is plaine Witchcraft, as afterward we ſhall ſee. And yet for all this, the party cannot be ſaid in preſent to have made a league with Satan, becauſe he thought, that though he yeelded to the uſe of ſuperſtitious meanes for his curing, yet there had bin in the ſaid meanes a vertue of healing, without any helpe or worke of the devill.

CHAP. III.

Of the kinds of Witchcraft, and firſt of Divination.

Witchcraft is of two ſorts; Divining or Working. For the whole nature of this art, conſiſteth either either in matter of divination and conjecture, or in matter of practice. And in both these it is to be remembred, that nothing can be effected, unlesse the partie have made a league with the Devill, expresse or secret, or at the least, a preparation thereunto, by a false and erroneous opinion of the meanes.

Sect. 1.

Divination is a part of Witchcraft, whereby men reveale strange things, either past, present, or to come, by the assistance of the devill.

If it be here demanded, how the devill being a creature, should be able to manifest and bring to light things past, or to foretell things to come: I answer, first generally, that Satan in this particular worke, transformes himselfe into an Angel of light, and takes upon him the exercise of these things in an ambitious (though false) imitation of divine revelations and predictions, made and used by God in the times of the Prophets and Apostles. And this he doth (as much as in him lieth) to obscure the glory of God, and to make himselfe great in the opinion of ignorant and unbeleeving persons. Againe, though Satan be but a creature, yet there be sundry wayes whereby he is able to divine.

First, by the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, wherein are set downe sundry prophesies concerning things to come. In the Old Testament are recorded many prophesies concerning the state of Gods Church, from the first age of the world, till the comming of Christ. In the new Testament likewise are recorded others, touching the selfe same thing, from the comming of Christ in the latter dayes, to the end of the world. Now the Devill being acquainted with the Historie of the Bible, and having attained unto a greater light of knowledge in the prophesies therein contained, than any man hath; by stealing divinations out of them, he is able to tell of many strange things, that may in time fall out in the world, and answerably may shew them ere they come to passe.

For example; Alexander the great before he made warre with Darius King of Persia, consulted with the Oracle, that is, with the devill, touching the event and issue of his enterprise. The Oracle answered him thus; Alexander shall be a Conquerour; upon the prediction of the Oracle, Alexander wages warre with Darius, and invades Asia, and having conquered him, translated the Empire from Persia to Greece, according as the Oracle had said. Now if question be made, how the devill knew the event of this warre, and consequently made it knowne to Alexander? The answer is, by the helpe of a prophesie in the old Testament; for this thing was particularly set downe before hand by the Prophet Daniel, Daniel 11.3. where he saith; That a mightie King shall stand up, and shall rule with great dominion, and doe according to his pleasure, and this was Alexander the Great. Satan therefore knowing the secret meaning of Plutarch. in vita Alexand.

Chap. 8. potius.

A the Angels words unto Daniel, framed out of them a true and direct answer, whereas he was not able of himselfe to define certainly of the event of things to come in particular.

The second meanes, whereby the Devill is furnished for his purpose, is his owne exquisite knowledge of all naturall things; as of the influences of the starres, the constitutions of men, and other creatures, the kindes, vertues, and operations of plants, roots, herbs, stones, &c. which knowledge of his, goeth many degrees beyond the skill of all men, yea, even of those that are most excellent in this kinde, as Philosophers, and Physicians. No marvell therefore, though out of his experience in these and such like, he is able aforehand to give a likely ghesse B at the issues and events of things, which are to him so manifestly apparent in their causes.

A third helpe and furtherance in this point, is his presence in the most places: for some devills are present at all assemblies and meetings, and thereby are acquainted with the consultations and conferences both of Princes and people; whereby knowing the drift and purpose of mens mindes, when the same is manifested in their speeches and deliberations, they are the fitter to foretell many things, which men ordinarily cannot doe. And hence it is apparant, how Witches may know what is done in other Countries, and whether one Nation intends warre against another, namely, by Satans suggestion, who was present at the consultation, and so knew it, and C revealed it unto them. But how then comes it to passe, that the consultations and actions of Gods Church and children, are not disclosed to their enemies? even by the unspeakeable mercy and goodnesse of God, who though for speciall causes sometimes, he suffers Satan by this meanes to bring things to light, yet he hath restrained this his libertie, and subjected it unto his owne will, so as he keeps him out of such meetings, or compells him to conceale; whereas otherwise his malice is so great, that not a word could be spoken, but it should be carried abroad to the hurt and disturbance both of Churches and Common-wealths.

The fourth way is by putting into mens mindes wicked purposes and counsels; for after D the league once made he laboureth with them by suggestions, and where God gives him leave, he never ceases perswading, till he hath brought his enterprise to passe. Having therefore first brought into the minde of man, a resolution to doe some evill, he goes and reveales it to the Witch, and by force of perswasion upon the partie tempted, he frames the action intended to the time fore-told, and so finally deludes the Witch his owne instrument, fore-telling nothing, but what himselfe hath compassed and set about.

The fifth helpe is the agilitie of Satans nature whereby he is able speedily to convey himselfe from place to place, yea, to passe through the whole world in a short time. For God hath made him by nature a Spirit, who by the gift of his creation, hath attained the benefit of swiftnesse, not onely in dispatching his affaires, but also in the carriage of his person with great expedition for the present accomplishment of his owne desires.

Lastly, God doth often use Satan as his instrument, for the effecting of his intended workes, and the executing of his judgements upon men; and in these cases manifesteth unto him, the place where, the time when, and the manner how such a thing should be done. Now all such things as God will have effected by the Devill, he may fore-tell before they come to passe, because he knowes them before hand by revelation and assignement from God. Thus by the Witch of Endor he fore-told to Saul the time of his death and of his sonnes, and the ruine of his kingdome, saying, To morrow shalt thou and thy sonnes be with me, and the Lord shall give the host of Israel into the hands of the Philistims: which particular event, and circumstances appertaining, he did truly define; not of himselfe, but because God had drawne away his good spirit from Saul, and had delivered him to be guided by the devill, whom he also appointed as a meanes, and used as an instrument to worke his overthrow. The Scripture indeed maketh not particular mention of the time of Sauls death, it onely recordeth the manner thereof, and that which followed upon his death, the translating of the Kingdome to his neighbour David after him; and yet because God used Satan as an instrument to bring this to passe, hereupon he was able to foretell the particular time, when the will of God should be wrought upon him. And these be the ordinarie meanes and helps whereby the devill may know and declare strange things, whether past, present, or to come.

Neither may this seeme strange, that Satan by such meanes should attaine unto such knowledge, for even men by their owne observations may give probable conjectures of the state and condition of sundry things to come. Thus we reade, that some by observation have found out probably, and fore-told the periods of families and kingdomes. For example, that the time and continuance of Kingdomes is ordinarily determined at 500. yeares, or not much above; and that great families have not gone beyond the sixth and seventh generation. And as for speciall and private things, the world so runnes (as it were) in a circle, that if a man should but ordinarily observe the course of things, either in the weather, or in the bodies of men, or otherwise, he might easily foretell before hand what would come after. And by these and such like instances of experiences, men have ghessed at the alterations and changes of estates and things in particular. Now if men which be but of short continuance, and of a shallow reach in comparison, not able to doe such things, how much more easily may the devill, having so great a measure of knowledge and experience, and being of so long continuance, having also marked the course of all estates, be able to fore-tell many things which are to come to passe? specially considering what the wise man hath set downe to this purpose, that that which hath beene, shall be; and that which hath beene done, shall be done; and there is no new thing under the Sunne, Eccles. 1.9.

If it be here alleaged, that divination is a prerogative of God himselfe, and a part of his glory incommunicable to any creature, Isay 41.23. I answer; Things to come must be considered two wayes; either in themselues, or in their causes and signes, which either goe with them, or before them. To fore-tell things to come, as they are in themselves, without respect unto their signes or causes, is a propertie belonging to God onely; and the Devill doth it not by any direct and immediate knowledge of things simply considered in themselves, but onely as they are present in their signes or causes. Againe, God fore-telleth things to come certainly, without the helpe of any creature, or other meanes out of himselfe; but the predictions of Satan are onely probable and conjecturall; and when he foretelleth any thing certainly, it is by some revelation from God, as the death of Saul; or by the Scripture, as Alexanders victory; or by some speciall charge committed unto him, for the execution of Gods will upon some particular places or persons, as before hath beene shewed.

Thus much for the causes of divination. Now follow the parts and branches thereof. Divination is of two sorts; either in and by meanes, or without meanes. Divination by meanes, is likewise of two sorts: either by such as are the true creatures of God; or those which are meerely counterfeit and forged.

Sect. II.

Divination by the true creatures of God, is distinguished according to the number of the creatures, into five distinct kinds, whereof foure are mentioned in the Scriptures.

§ 1. The first, is by the flying and noise of birds. Sorcerers among the Heathen, used to observe fowles in their flight: For example; whether they did flie on the right hand, or on the left; above them, or below by them; whether crosse and overthwart, or directly against them. In like manner they observed the noise and sound of the fowle. And both these wayes, sometimes by the noise, and sometimes by the flight, they divined of things to come, both publike and private, of good and bad successe in mans affaires; of the state of kingdoms, townes, families, and particular persons. Now this kinde of divination is condemned by Moses, Deut. 18. 10. Let none be found among you that is a --- diviner of divinations: that is, (as some interpret it) a marker of the flying of fowles: or a charmer, or a consulter with spirits, or a Sooth-sayer; that is, such a one as by observing the flying and noise Verse 11.

of fowles, takes upon him to fore-tell good or bad successe.

§ 2. The second kinde of creatures used for divination, are the intralls of beasts, of which mention is made, Ezekiel 21.21. where Nabuchadnezzar being to make warre both with the Jewes and the Ammonites, and doubting in the way which enterprise to undertake first, hee offers a sacrifice to the Idole-gods, and opening the bellie of the sacrifice, lookes upon the liver, and by the signes therein found, hee judgeth what should be the issue of the warre. Which thing Nabuchadnezzar did according to the usuall practice of the Heathen, who when they were to make warre, or to attempt any businesse of importance, were wont to offer sacrifice to their gods, and to prie into the intralls of the beast sacrificed: for example, the heart, stomake, splene, kidneies, but specially the liver: and by certaine signes appearing in those parts, the Devill was wont to reveale unto them, what should be the successe of their affaires they had in hand. It were easie to exemplifie both these sorts of Divination by sundrie particulars out of Heathen writers, but seeing the Scripture hath manifested that there are such, and experience shewes the same, I will forbeare that labour, and proceed.

But here it is demanded, why both these kindes of Divination should be condemned in Scripture, considering they had great applause among the Heathen? I answer, because the flying of birds, and the disposition of the inward parts of creatures, are no true signes either of good or bad successe. For that which is a true signe of a future event, must have the vertue and power whereby it signifieth, from God himselfe, either by creation in the beginning, or by his speciall ordinance and appointment afterward. Now it cannot be shewed, that God in the creation infused any such vertue into the natures and motions of these creatures, whereby they might signifie such things; neither is there any apparent testimonie in the whole Booke of the Scriptures, whereby it may be proved, that since the creation, they were appointed by God, to serve such uses and ends. And therefore howsoever they were esteemed of the Heathen, yet the word of God hath justly censured them, as no true and proper causes of Divination, sanctified by God, but meerely diabolicall.

It is alleaged, that Ioseph divined by his cup, as may appeare both by his Stewards speech, as also by his owne, Genesis 44.5. and 15. and yet that cup received no power from God, either the one way or the other, to be a cause or meane of Divination.

The answer anciently and commonly made is this, that Iosephs Steward spake not as the thing was indeed, but as the common received opinion was among the Ægyptians, who esteemed Ioseph to be a man of great skill and wisdome, able by sundrie meanes to divine and prophesie. To this I adde a second answer, that the Steward spake not as he thought, but his purpose was in those words, to conceale the knowledge of Ioseph his master from his brethren, that thereby they might not discerne who he was, but take him to bee an Ægyptian. Thirdly, the words may not unfitly admit this interpretation, as if the Steward had said, Know ye not that this cup which I finde in the Sackes mouth of your youngest Brother, is that whereby my master will easily prove what manner of men you are? this answer is also ancient, and may well be received.

It is further objected, that our Saviour Christ by his speech unto the Pharisees seemeth to approve of divining by creatures, as by winds, and by clouds; When you see a cloud (saith he) rising out of the West, straightway you say, a showre commeth, and so it is: and when you see the South wind blow, ye say, that it will be hot, and it commeth to passe, Luke 12.54,55.

Answ. There be some kindes of predictions that are and may be lawfully used, because they are naturall, of which sort are those that are made by Physicians, Mariners, and husbandmen, touching the particular alterations and dispositions of the weather; and these being agreeable to that order which God hath set in nature from the beginning; by them a man may probably gather the state of the weather, whether it will be faire or foule; and of these naturall signes our Saviour Christ speaketh, not of diabolicall, which have no warrant, either from the common course of nature created, or by any speciall appointment from God. So that whatsoever can be said in their defence, this yet remaineth certaine, that the flying and noise of birds, and the state of the intralls of beasts, are no true signes ordained by God, but invented by the Devill and his instruments, and therefore all divination by them is justly condemned, as wicked and devillish.

Whence it appeareth, what judgement may be given of those common signes of Divination, which are observed in the world, specially of the more ignorant sort. For example: A man findes a peece of iron, he presently conceiveth a prediction of some good lucke unto himselfe that day. If he light on a peece of silver, then he stands contrarily affected, imagining some evill will befall him. Againe, when a man is taking his journey, if a hare crosse him in the way, all is not well, his journey shall not be prosperous, it presageth some mischiefe towards him. Let his eares tingle or burne, hee is perswaded hee hath enemies abroad, and that some man either then doth, or presently will speake ill of him. If the salt fall towards a man at the Table, it portendeth (in common conceit) some ill newes. When a Raven stands upon some high place, looke what way he turnes himselfe and cryes, thence, as some thinke, shall shortly come a dead corps; albeit this sometime may bee true by reason of the sharpe sense of smelling in the Raven. These & sundry other of the like sort, are meerely superstitious. For the truth is, they have no vertue in themselves to foreshew any thing that is to come, either in nature, or by Gods ordinance. Therefore whatsoever divination is made by them, must needs be fetched from Satanicall illusion. And though we cannot say they be sooth-sayings, or tearme the users and favourers of them Sooth-sayers, yet we may safely referre them to this kinde of divining, being such as no Christian may warrantably use, though some of them be not so grosse and palpable, as those that are condemned in the Scriptures.

§ 3. The third kinde of creatures used to divine by, are the starres. Divination by starres, is commonly called Iudiciall Astrologie; of which we may reade, Deut. 18.10,11. where the holy Ghost doth of purpose reckon up all those kinds of devillish arts, whereby men have dealings and societie with Satan, either in divining or practising: among which, this is the second.

* Mcgnoun

The word there used * may carry a double sense. For it signifieth either him that observeth times, under which acception Astrologie is comprehended, or him that observeth the clouds. And howsoever the best learned Interpreters doe dissent about the notation of it, yet all agree in this, that this profession of divining by the starres is there condemned: and that it is to be numbred among the rest expressed in the prohibition, may further appeare by other places of Scripture, as in Isay 47.13,14. where the Lord threatneth the same judgements against diviners by the starres, that he doth against Sooth-sayers and Magicians: Againe, in Daniel 2.2. Inchanters, Astrologians, and Sorcerers are joyned together, as being all sent for about the same businesse, viz. to expound the Kings dreame. Now if the Lord himselfe have allotted the same punishment to the Astrologer, which he hath to the Sooth-sayer and Magician, and account them all one; it is manifest, that divining by the starres, ought to be held as a superstitious kinde of divination.

Here, if it be thought strange, that predictions by so excellent creatures as the starres be, should carrie both the name and nature of diabolicall practices, which can be done by none but such as are in league with Satan:

I answer, The reasons hereof are these:

First, it must be considered, that the drift and scope of this Art, is to fore-tell the particular events of things contingent, as the alteration of the states of Kingdomes, the deaths of Princes, good or bad successe of mens particular affaires, from the houre of their birth, to the day of their death. And from this all men may judge, what the art it selfe is. For the fore-telling of things to come, which in their owne nature are contingent, and in regard of us casuall (I say not in regard of God, to whom all things are certainly knowne) is a propertie peculiar to God alone, and not within the power of any creature, man, or Angel. A point that is plainly taught by

A the Prophet Esay, from the fourth Chapter of his prophecie, to the 48. The scope whereof is to prove, that it is a prerogative appropriated to the Deitie, and not communicable to the creature, to fore-shew the event of things to come, which in our understanding and reach, may either be, or not be; and which when they are, may be thus or otherwayes. It remaines therefore, that divinations of this kinde, taking from God his right, and robbing him of his honour, are justly censured of impietie, and are in themselves wicked and abominable.

It is alleaged, that starres in the heavens, are the causes of many things happening in the world, and therefore to practise by them in this manner, deserveth no such imputation.

B Answ. It cannot be denied that they are causes of some things; but I demand, what causes? not particular of particular events; but generall and common, that worke alike upon all things: and no man can divine of a particular event, by a generall cause, unlesse he also know the particular causes subordinate to the generall, and the particular dispositions and operations of them. For example, let twentie or thirtie egges of sundry kindes of birds be taken, and set under one and the same Henne to be hatched; it is not possible for any man, onely upon the bare consideration of the heat of the Henne, which is the generall cause of hatching the egges, to set downe certainly what kinde of C bird each egge will bring forth, unlesse he know what the egges were particularly. For a generall and common cause, doth not immediately produce a particular effect, but onely moveth and helpeth the particular, immediate, and subordinate causes. Therefore the heat of the Henne doth not make one egge to send forth a Henne-chicken, another egge a Ducke, a third a Swan, &c. but onely helpeth it forward by sitting and crouching upon them. In like manner the starres are generall causes of naturall things, as the heat of the Henne is of the hatching of the egges, and by them no man can rightly define of particular events, and therefore Divination by the starres, whereby are foretold particular contingent events, in kingdomes, families, or particular persons, is but a forged skill, that hath no ground D in nature from the vertue of the starres, for any such purpose.

A second reason may be this; all the rules and precepts of Astrologie, set downe by the most learned among the Chaldeans, Egyptians, and other Astrologers, are nothing else but meere dotages and fictions of the braine of man: for the rules and conclusions of all good and lawfull arts, have their ground in experience, and are framed by observation, whereupon they are called Axiomes, or positions of Art, so generally and undoubtedly true, that they cannot deceive: But these rules are of a contrarie nature, having no foundation in experience at all; for if they had, this must needs follow, that the position of the heavens, and the course of all the starres, must needs continue one and the same; for the principles of art ought to be immutable: but neither the position of the heavens, nor the course of all the starres, is alway one and the same. Againe, he that would make sound rules of art by observation, must know the particular estate of all things he observeth: But no man knoweth the particular estate of all the starres, and consequently none can gather sound rules of art by them. Thirdly, no man knoweth or seeth all the starres, and though they might be all discerned, yet the particular vertues of those which are seene, cannot be knowne, because their influences in the aire, and upon the earth, are confused: and therefore by observation of them, no rules can be made, whereby to judge of particular events to come that be contingent.

But experience teacheth (may some say) that if a man addicted to this course shall practise the rules of Astrologie, it will fall out that the most things he foretelleth shall be true, and come to passe accordingly: which being verified in experience, it should seeme, that these principles are not uncertaine: for how is it possible that upon false grounds, should proceed true predictions? To this objection, learned Divines have framed answer thus: That in this there is a secret Magicke at the least, if not an open league with Satan. For looke what is wanting to the effect of the starres, the devill maketh supply of it by his owne knowledge in things that are to come to passe. And this is the judgement of them that have knowne this art, which was also received for true in the dayes of the Apostles.

The third reason; The man that repaireth to the Astrologian upon the particular case for his helpe and counsell, must beleeve that he can and will doe for him; otherwise if he come doubting of his ability, or in way of tempting him, he cannot helpe him. Now in common understanding, if the diviner bring the thing to passe, there must needs be more than Art. For he that is a master of a lawfull art, can worke by his rules, whether a man beleeve that he can or no; yea, though all the men in the World should doubt, his rules would be effectuall. The art therefore it selfe is the old superstitious art of the Chaldeans, which they being Idolaters, first fetched from the devill, and his Oracles: yea, the practice thereof is nothing but superstitious sorcerie, and the undertakers no better than Sorcerers. If any man doubt hereof, their writings are sufficient testimonies, and they themselves avouch it. For it is a rule and maxime among them in all kinde of sorcerie, that the learner must come credulous, and not doubting, or to tempt; otherwise no answer can be given.

But notwithstanding all these reasons alleged for the proofe of this point, sundry things are opposed to the contrary.

For first, it is said that the Sunne, Moone, and starres were created for signes, Genesis 1.14. and therefore that it is lawfull to divine by them, seeing that in so doing, we doe but use them to the end for which God made them.

Ans. The reason is of no force. The starres indeed by this ordinance doe serve for signes, but of what? not of all things, but (as the text plainely sheweth) of dayes, weekes, moneths, and yeares; yea, of the seasons of the yeare, as of Spring, Summer, Autumne, and Winter; yea further, of the alterations of the weather in generall: but all this maketh nothing to ratifie Divination of particular events in things contingent, which are to fall out in the state of kingdomes, families, and persons: for they are not causes, but signes, and that of some generall things onely, not of particular.

Againe, it is said, that Moses and Daniel, two famous Prophets, are commended for their skill in this art: for of Moses it is said, Acts 7.22. that he was learned in all the wisdome of the Egyptians: and Daniel in all the wisdome of the Chaldeans, Daniel 1.17.20. and we know that the Egyptians and Chaldeans were the masters of divination, and eminent above all others in matters of Astrologie.

Ans. It cannot be proved out of those places, that Moses or Daniel were trained up in this art: and though it should be granted they were, yet it followes not, that they were practicers of it, at least continually. For albeit, being children and of tender yeares in the Courts of Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar, they had beene trained up by their governours in this knowledge, it may not thence be concluded, that they finally submitted themselves to the practice thereof; considering that a man may learne that when he is young, which afterward upon better judgement and consideration, hee may utterly disclaime. And so we are to thinke of them, that after God had called them, they did for ever lay aside all such wicked and devillish practices, forbidden by God, and yet in use among the Egyptians and Chaldeans.

Thirdly, it is objected; the starres are admirable creatures of God, and the causes of many strange effects in the aire, in the waters, and upon the earth also, in the bodies of men and beasts: it may seeme therefore not unlawfull to divine by them.

Answ. We grant that the Starres, and especially the Sunne and Moone, have great vertue and force upon the creatures that are below; partly by their light, and partly by their heat; but hence it will not follow, that they are, or may be lawfully used for divination: for whereas it hath beene shewed, that the grounds of all good arts are gathered by observation and experience, it is not possible for any man, truly, and certainly to observe all particular events brought forth by the starres, whereupon hee might ground his rules. And for proofe hereof; Suppose there were a heape of all kinds of herbs growing upon the earth gathered together, which should be all strained into one vessell, and the liquor brought to the most skilfull

Physitian that is, or ever was; can we thinke him able by tasting or smelling thereof, to distinguish the vertues of the herbs, and to say which is which? To doe this when all are severed each from other, is a hard matter, yet possible, considering they have their severall natures and operations; but in this confused mixture to discerne the severalls, is a thing passing the skill of man.

The like may be said of the particular vertue of everie starre; for they all have their operation in the bodies of men, and other creatures; but their vertues being all mixed together in the subject whereon they worke, can no more be knowne distinctly, than the vertues of a masse of herbs of infinite sorts beaten together. For this is an undoubted truth in nature: that the vertues of Celestiall bodies in their operations, are mingled with the qualities of the elements in the inferiour bodies, and the vertues of them all doe so concurre, that neither the heat or light of the starres, nor the vertue of the elements, can be severed one from another. And therefore though there be notable vertue in the starres, yet in regard of the mixture thereof in their operation, no man is able to say by observation, that this is the vertue of this starre, and this of that. The seven planets being more notable, than the other lights of the heaven, specially the Sunne and Moone, have their operations and effects plainly and perfectly knowne; as for the other, there was never any man that could either feele their heat, or certainly determine of any thing by them.

There being then some starres, whose vertues are unknowne, how can their operations and effects be discerned in particular? Therefore no rules can be made by observation of the vertues of the starres in their operations, whereupon we may foretell particular events of things contingent, either concerning mens persons, families, or kingdomes.

A fourth reason. All starres have their worke in the qualities of heat, light, cold, moisture, and drinesse: as for the secret influences which men dreame of, comming from them besides the said qualities, they are but forged fancies. The Scripture never mentioneth any such, neither can it be proved that the Sunne hath any efficacie upon inferiour bodies, but by light and heat, which because they are mixt with other qualities, they affoord no matter of prediction touching particular events. For what though the celestiall bodies doe cause in the terrestriall, heat and cold, drought and moisture? Doth it therefore follow, that these effects doe declare before hand the constitution of mans bodie? the disposition of mens mindes? the affections of mens hearts? or finally, what successe they shall have in their affaires, touching wealth, honour, and religion? Hence I conclude, that divining by them in this sort, is meere superstition, and a kinde of Sorcerie: for which cause in Scripture Astrologians are A justly numbred among Sorcerers.

Now that which hath beene said touching this point, may serve for speciall use.

And first, it gives a caveat to all Students, that they have care to spend their time and wits better, than in the studie of judiciall Astrologie; and rather imploy themselves in the searching out of such things, as may most serve for the glory of God, and the good of his Church. It is the subtiltie of Satan to draw men into such meditations, and to make this studie so pleasant, that it can hardly be left, when it is once begun: but let them take heed betime. For assuredly these vaine and superstitious practices, are not the builders and furtherers, but the hinderers and destroyers of religion, and the B feare of God.

Againe, this must admonish them which suffer any losses, not to seeke for helpe or remedie at the hands of Astrologers, commonly called Figure-casters: for their directions in the recoverie of things lost or stollen, commeth not by the helpe of any lawfull art, but from the worke of the devill, revealing the same unto them. And better it were to lose a thing finally, and by faith to expect till God make supply another way, than in this manner to recover it againe: yea, the curse of God hangeth over the head of him, that to helpe himselfe useth diabolicall meanes. For put the case a thing lost of great value, be againe restored by the helpe of Satan; yet God in his justice, for the use of these unlawfull meanes, may take from the consulter twise as much; or at the least his grace, and so give him up to a reprobate sense, to beleeve the devill to his utter perdition. C

Thirdly, it serveth to admonish us of some other vanities that accompany Astrologie; especially of two.

The first, is the observation of the signe in mans bodie wherein not onely the ignorant sort, but men of knowledge doe farre over-shoot themselves, superstitiously holding, that the signe is specially to be marked. An opinion in it selfe fantasticall and vaine, not grounded in nature, but borrowed from Astrologie. For the Astrologians for better expressing and establishing thereof, have devised new spheres in the heavens, more than indeed there be, to wit, the ninth and D the tenth; and in the tenth, commonly called the first moveable, have placed an imaginarie sphere, which they tearme the Zodiacke, and in the Zodiacke twelve signes, Aries, Taurus, Gemini, and the rest, which they imagine to have power over the twelve parts of mans bodie; as Aries, the head and face, Taurus necke and throat, &c. But these are onely twelve imaginarie signes: for in the heavens there is no such matter as a Ramme, a Bull, &c. And how can it stand with reason, that in a firmament feigned by Poets and Philosophers, a forged signe, which indeed is nothing, should have any power or operation in the bodies of men? Primum mobile.

Againe,

Againe, the very order of the government of these signes in mans bodie, is fond and without shew of reason. For according to this platforme, when the Moone commeth into the first signe, Aries, she ruleth in the head; and when she commeth into the second signe, Taurus, in the necke; and so descends downe from part to part, in some part ruling two, in some three dayes, &c. Where observe, that the Moone is made then to rule in the cold and moist parts, when she is in hot and drie signes: when as in reason, a more consonant order were this; that when the Moone were in hot and drie signes, as Aries, Leo, and Sagittarius, she should rule in hot and drie parts of the bodie; and when she is in cold and moist signes, she should rule in the cold and moist parts of the bodie; and so still governe those parts, which in temperature come neerest to the nature of the signes wherein the Moone is.

Besides this, some learned Physitians have upon experience confessed, that the observation of the signe, is nothing materiall, and that there is no danger in it, for gelding of cattell, or letting of blood. Indeed it prevailes oftentimes by an old conceit and strong imagination, of some unlettered persons, who thinke it to be of force and efficacie for restoring and curing; and yet the vanitie of this conceit, appeares in the common practice of men, who commonly upon S. Stevens day use to let blood, be the signe where it will; though it be in the place where the veine is opened. But the truth is, the signe in it owne nature, is neither way availeable, being but a fancie, grounded upon supposed premisses, and therefore ought to be rejected, as a meere vanitie.

The second thing belonging to Astrologie, which ought to be eschewed, is the choice and observation of dayes. Curious diviners doe set apart certaine dayes, whereof some are (as they say) luckie, some unluckie. And these they appoint to be observed for the beginning of ordinarie workes and businesses; as to take a journey; to beginne to lay the foundation of a building, to plant a garden, to weane a childe, to put on new apparell, to flit into a new house, to traffick into other Countries, to goe about a suit to a Prince, or some great man, to hunt and use exercises, to pare the nailes, to cut the haire, in a word to attempt any thing in purpose or action, which is not done everie day. The effect and force of these dayes, is not grounded either in art or in nature, but onely in superstitious conceit and diabolicall confidence, upon a wicked custome, borrowed from the practice of Diviners; and the danger of such confident conceits is this; that the devill by them takes the vantage of fantasticall persons, and brings them further into league and acquaintance with himselfe, unlesse they leave them. And all such persons as make difference of dayes for this or that purpose, are in expresse words plainly condemned, Deut. 18.10,11.

§ 4. The fourth kinde of Divination by true meanes, is the prediction of things to come by dreames.

In the old Testament we reade that Sorcerers and false Prophets used to foretell strange events, by revelations which they had in their dreames. Such Diviners were among the Jewes; and for that cause the people of God were expressely forbidden to hearken unto dreamers of dreames, Deut. 13.3. And the Lord himselfe by the Prophet Ieremie, taxeth the false Prophets, who broached false doctrine in his name by this devillish meanes, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed, Jerem. 23.25.

Yet here it is to be remembred, that foretelling of future things by dreames, is not simply to be condemned, but onely in part. For of dreames there be three sorts, Divine, Naturall, and Diabolicall. Divine, are those which come from God. Naturall, which proceed from a mans owne nature, and arise from the qualitie and constitution of the bodie. Diabolicall, which are caused by the suggestion of the devill.

B

Touching Divine dreames: that there are, or at least have beene such, it is evident. For these be the words of God, Numb. 12.6. If there be a Prophet of the Lord among you, I will be knowne unto him by a vision, and will speake unto him by a dreame. And Iob saith, that God speaketh in dreames and visions of the night, when sleepe falleth upon men, and they sleepe upon their beds, Job 33.15. Now these divine dreames were caused in men, either immediately by God himselfe, as the former places shew; or by meanes of some good Angell. In this latter kinde was Ioseph often admonished in dreames what to doe, by the ministerie of an Angel; as Matth. 1.20. and Chap. 2.13,19. and divining by such dreames, is not condemned: for by them the most worthie Prophets of God have revealed Gods will in many things to his Church. Thus Ioseph by dreame had notice given him of his owne advancement, Genesis 37. 7,9. and by Pharaohs dreames which were sent from God, hee also foretold the state of the Kingdome of Ægypt, touching provision for seven yeares dearth, Genesis 41.25. By the same meanes the Prophet Daniel prophesied of the flourishing and fading of the chiefe Monarchies

of the World, from his time to the comming of Christ, Daniel 9. &c. These therefore being one of the extraordinarie meanes, whereby God hath manifested his will unto man in times past, more or lesse: divination by them is not to be censured as unlawfull, but rather to be honoured and esteemed, as the ordinance of God.

For the second sort which be Naturall, arising either from the thoughts of the minde, or the affections of the heart, or the constitution of the bodie: as they are ordinary in all men, in some more, in some lesse: so they vary according to the diversitie of mens thoughts, affections, and constitutions: and by them a man may probably conjecture of sundry things concerning the state and disposition, partly of his bodie, and partly of his minde.

As first he may ghesse in likelihood, what is his constitution, as the learned in all ages do constantly avouch. For when his minde in dreaming runnes upon warres, and contentions, fire, and such like, it argueth his complexion is cholerike. When he dreames of waters and inundations, it betokeneth abundance of phlegme. When his phantasie conceiveth heavie and dolefull things, full of griefe, feare, and horror, it bewrayeth a melancholike constitution. When his dreames be joyfull and pleasant, as of mirth, pastimes, and delightfull newes, his complexion is judged to be sanguine.

Againe, by naturall dreames a man may ghesse at the corruption of his owne heart: and know to what sinnes hee is most naturally inclined. For looke what men doe ordinarily in the day time conceive and imagine in their corrupt hearts, of the same, for the most part, they doe corruptly dreame in the night. And this is the rather to be observed, because though the wicked man shut his eyes, and stop his eares, and harden his heart, and will not take notice of his enormities by the light of the Law; yet even by his owne dreames in the night, his wickednesse shall be in part discovered, and his conscience thereby convinced, and he himselfe left in the end inexcusable before God. Now albeit a man may probably conjecture of the premisses by naturall dreames; yet no divination of things to come, whether publike or private, good or bad, can be made by them either concerning persons, families, or Kingdomes. Therefore the common observations of dreames in the world, whereby men imagine things that are to come to passe, and accordingly foretell them by those meanes, are vaine and superstitious, and justly so condemned in the places before named, Deut. 13. Jerem. 23.

Concerning the third kinde of dreames, which are caused by the Devill; It hath beene granted in all ages for a truth, that Satan can frame dreames in the braine of man, and by them reveale his divinations. And it is plainly manifested by the continuall observation of the Gentiles before the comming of Christ. For when Oracles, (that is, answers from the Devill) were in force, men that used to consult with them, and desired to bee resolved in matters of doubt, were to lay them downe and sleepe besides the Altar of Apollo, where they had offered their gift, and sleeping they received in a dreame the answer for which they came; and this dreame was framed in the braine of him that slept, by the Devill, and in it the answer was delivered by him speaking at or in the Oracle. So likewise in the Primitive Church, since the comming of Christ, though Oracles then ceased, which were the greatest and strongest delusions that ever Satan had; yet he hath by dreames and visions wrought in A the heads of many men most strange and curious conceits for the raising up of heresies, to the great disturbance of the peace of the Church. For we reade in Ecclesiasticall stories, that the Maniches had their damnable opinions first inspired into them, and then confirmed by dreames. And in this age the first authors of the sect of the Anabaptists, had their curious conceits of revelation, partly in dreames, partly in visions. Likewise the Familie of Love have their revelations in dreames. For he that desires to become one of that sect, must ascend thereunto by degrees before he can come to perfection to bee an elder illuminate or a man deified; to which estate when he is once come, he hath for his confirmation strong illusions, both waking and sleeping in visions and dreames. Histories of latter times, and wofull experience sheweth this to be true, the Devill prevailing so strongly, that many have fallen away by this meanes, being corrupted by a doctrine meerely carnall, howsoever maintained with great pretense of holinesse. Againe, as the good Angels may cause divine dreames from God, and therein reveale unto men his will and pleasure concerning things to come; so no doubt the evill spirits may cause in men diabolicall dreames, and therein reveale unto them many strange things; which they by meanes unknowne to men, may foresee and know. By all which it is evident, that there are and may be as well diabolicall dreames as divine dreames.

C The conclusion then is this: That as divining by the second sort is superstitious, having no ground from Gods Word; so fore-telling by this third sort is flat Witchcraft, directly condemned in the places afore-named, where men are forbidden to prophesie by them, or to regard them.

Yet forasmuch as dreames bee of sundrie kindes, as hath beene said, it shall not be amisse to set downe some notes of difference betweene them, whereby they may be knowne and distinguished each from other. Which point indeed hath long agone beene handled in the Primitive Church, but hardly determined. For the learned of that age have avouched it a very hard matter, considering that the Devill in these, as well as D in other things, can transforme himselfe into an Angel of light. But howsoever the case be hard, and the Devill politicke, yet by light of direction from the Word of God, there may some true differences bee set downe betweene them; as namely these:

First of all; divine dreames have alwayes had their preeminence above others, that generally they have concerned the weightiest matters in the World; as the comming and exhibiting of the Messias, the changes and alterations of Kingdomes, the revealing of Antichrist, and the state of the Church of God. And this may plainly appeare by those which Ioseph expounded unto Pharaoh, and Daniel unto the Kings of Babel and Persia. But in the other sort it is otherwise. For if there be any thing represented more than ordinary in those that be naturall, it proceedeth meerely from fancy and imagination. And as for diabolicall they are not of so weightie matters, nor so hard to fore-tell. For though the Devill have great power and skill, yet it is above his reach to determine of such things as these are, or to fore-tell them without helpe from God.

Secondly, divine dreames be alwayes either plaine and manifest, or if they be obscure, yet they have a most evident interpretation annexed unto them. Of the plainer sort, were the dreames of Ioseph the husband of Marie, Matth. 1. Of the other sort were Pharaohs very darke and hidden, but God raised up Ioseph to give them an easie interpretation upon the instant, Gene. 41. Nebuchadnetsars dreames were full of obscuritie, and many matters were contained in them, so as his spirit was troubled, and hee forgat them; but God stirred up Daniel and revealed to him the secret, so as he remembred it to the King, and declared the true meaning thereof, Daniel 2. 1. 28. 36. Lastly, Daniels dreames of the foure beasts, &c. were of like difficultie, but the Angel Gabriel was presently sent to make him understand them, Daniel 8. 16. Now those that are caused by the Devill, as they be obscure and intricate, so the interpretation of them is ambiguous and uncertaine, because he himselfe cannot infallibly determine how things shall come to passe, and thereupon is constrained to give doubtfull answers by dreames. And such were not onely the ancient Oracles among the heathen, where he gave the resolution, but the moderne Prophecies given by him to some of his instruments in the latter time.

Thirdly, the dreame that comes from God, is alwayes agreeable to his revealed will, and representeth nothing contrary to the same, in whole or in part: whereas those that proceed from nature, doe savour of nature, and be agreeable to mans corruption, which is repugnant unto Gods will. And those that are suggested by Satan, are of the same nature; the generall scope whereof is to crosse the will of God, and to withdraw the heart from obedience thereunto.

Fourthly, divine dreames aime at this end, to further religion and pietie, and to maintaine true doctrine: but the Devill, an enemie to God, worketh in his dreames the subversion of true religion, and the worship of God, that in the roome thereof he may set up Idolatrie and superstition. For so much we learne, Deut. 13. where the false Prophet brings his dreame, and utters it, yea, and confirmeth it by a wonder; but marke his end: It was to draw men to Apostasie; Let us (saith he) goe after other Gods, which thou hast not knowne, and let us serve them, verse 2. Answerable to which, was the practice of the false Prophets afterwards, who caused the people to erre by their lies and flatteries, Jerem. 23. 32.

To conclude this point, it must be here remembred, that howsoever there are and have beene distinct sorts of dreames, yet those which are from God, were onely in ordinary use in the old Testament, and in the Church of the New are ceased, and take not place ordinarily. Whereas therefore men in their sleepes have dreames, they must take them commonly to be naturall, and withall know that they may be diabolicall, or mixt partly of the one kinde, and partly of the other. And howsoever there may be some use of the naturall, as hath beene said, yet commonly they are not to be regarded. And for the other which are from Satan, or mixt, they are not to be received, beleeved, or made meanes whereby to fore-tell things to come, least by this use of them, we grow into familiaritie with the Devill, and before God be guiltie of the sinne of Witchcraft.

§ 5. The fifth and last kinde of divination by true meanes, is by Lots, when men take upon them to search out fortune (as they use to speake) that is, good or bad successe in any businesse, by casting of Lots, whether it be by casting a Die, or opening of a Booke, or any such casuall meanes. I mention this the rather, because among the ignorant and superstitious sort, such practices are common and in great account: the Lot is an ordinance of God, appointed for speciall ends and purposes, but when it is thus applied, it ceaseth to be lawfull, because it is abused to other ends than God by his word and ordinance hath allowed.

That we may the better know the abuse of a Lot in this kinde, we must remember there be three sorts of Lots; the Civill, the Sporting, and the Divining Lot.

The civill use of Lots, is when they be used for the ending of controversies; the dividing of lands and heritages: the disposition of offices amongst many that are equally fit, the trying of the right in doubtfull things, or lastly, the discovery of a malefactor hid amongst many suspected. By this use of the Lot was Saul chosen to bee King over Israel, 1 Samuel 10. 21. the skape-goat separated from that which was to be sacrificed, Leviticus 16. 8. the land of Canaan divided among the children of Israel, Josuah 14. 2. &c. the trespasse of Achan found out, Josuah 7. 15. and Matthias chosen to be one of the twelve, Acts 1. 26. and of this Lot Salomon saith, Proverbs 18. 18. The Lot causeth contentions to cease, and maketh partitions among the mightie. Hereupon the civill use of Lots hath his warrant in Gods Word, so it be lawfully used in case of necessitie, with invocation of the name of God, and with expectation of the event from God, by whose hand and immediate providence it is disposed. For the Lot (saith Salomon) is cast into the lap, but the whole disposition thereof is from the Lord, Prov. 16. 33.

The Sporting Lot is that which is commonly used for some vaine and unnecessarie end; as to ſet up bancke-rupts, or ſuch like. This hath no warrant in the Word of God whereupon men ſhould uſe it, and therefore is no better than an abuſe of Gods ordinance, to ſpeake no more of it.

Now the divining Lot performed by the opening of a booke, or the caſting of a Die, or ſuch like, thereby to declare good or bad ſucceſſe, cannot be done without confederacie with Satan either explicite, or implicite. For the plaine caſt of a Die, or the opening of a Booke without beleeving, can doe nothing for the diſcovering of future contingents. And what is there in the nature of theſe actions to produce ſuch effects? or where, or when did God give this vertue to them certainly to determine of things hidden from man, and knowne onely to himſelfe? Divination therefore by them is to be holden as a practice, not onely ſavouring of ſuperſtition, but proceeding from the Art of Witchcraft and Sorceric.

And thus much of Divination by meanes of the creatures; and the ſeverall kindes thereof.

Sect. III.

The ſecond kinde of Divination, is by counterfeit and forged meanes, which are none of the creatures of God: whereof one kinde onely is mentioned in Scripture, viz. when Satan is conſulted with in the ſhape of a dead man. This is commonly called Necromancie, or the blacke Art, becauſe the Devill being ſought unto by Witches, appeares unto them in the likeneſſe of a dead body. And it is expreſſely forbidden, Deut.18.11. yea, condemned by the Prophet, Eſay 8.19,20. who ſaith in plaine tearmes, that Gods people ought not to goe from the living to the dead, but to the Law and to the teſtimonie. A memorable example hereof is recorded in 1.Samuel 28. the obſervation whereof will diſcover unto us the chiefe points of Necromancie. There Saul about to encounter the Philiſtims, being forſaken of God, who refuſed to anſwer him, either by dreames, or by Urim, or by the Prophets, inquired for one that had a familiar ſpirit: and hearing of the Pythoneſſe at Endor, went unto her by night, and cauſed her to raiſe up Samuel, to tell him the iſſue of the warre. Now the Witch at his requeſt raiſed up the Devill, with whom ſhe was confederate, in Samuels likeneſſe; who gave him anſwer, concerning his owne overthrow, and the death of his ſonnes. Which example declareth plainly, that there is a kinde of divination, whereby Witches and Sorcerers reveale ſtrange things, by meanes of the Devill appearing unto them in the ſhapes or ſhadowes of the dead.

Touching the truth of this example, two Queſtions may be moved.

The firſt is, whether that which appeared was true Samuel or not? Some ſay it was Samuel indeed: others (who hold that there are no Witches) denie that it was either Samuel, or the devill; and affirme it to be ſome other counterfeit comming in Samuels attire to deceive Saul: both which opinions are falſe, and here to be confuted.

And firſt, that their opinion which ſay that true Samuel appeared unto Saul, is a flat untruth, I prove by theſe reaſons.

I. Before this time, God had withdrawne his Spirit from Saul, as himſelfe confeſſeth, and denied to anſwer him any more by ordinarie meanes, in ſuch ſort as before he had done. Hereupon I gather, that it was not probable, that God would now vouchſafe him the favour to ſuffer Samuel to come unto him extraordinarily, and tell him what ſhould be the end of his warre with the Philiſtims: and to this purpoſe it is affirmed twiſe in that Chapter, that God had taken his good Spirit from Saul.

II. The ſoules of the faithfull departed, are in the hands of God, and doe reſt in glory with himſelfe, and their bodies are in the earth, and there reſt in peace. So ſaith the voyce from heaven, Revel.14.13. Bleſſed are the dead that die in the Lord: for they reſt from their labours, and their workes, that is, the reward of their workes, follow them immediately, or at the heeles, as the word ſignifieth. Now ſuppoſe the Devill had power over Samuels body, yet to make true Samuel, he muſt have his ſoule alſo. But it is not in the power of the Devill, to bring againe the ſoules that are in heaven unto their bodies, and ſo to cauſe them to appeare unto men upon earth, and to ſpeake unto them. The Devills kingdome is in hell, and in the hearts of wicked men on earth; yea, whiles the children of God are in this World, he uſurpeth ſome authoritie over them, by meanes of their owne corruption: But heaven is the kingdome of God and his Saints, where Satan hath nothing to doe, conſidering that there is no fleſh or corruption, to make him entrance or yeeld him entertainment. Neither can it be proved by Scripture, that the Devill can diſturbe either the bodies or ſoules of them that die in the Lord: and therefore the Witch with all her power and skill, could not bring Samuels rotten body (for ſo no doubt it was now) and ſoule together.

III. This ſhape which appeared, ſuffered Saul to adore and worſhip it, whereas the true Samuel would never have received adoration from Saul the King, though it had beene in civill manner onely. Whom then did Saul adore? Anſ. The Devill himſelfe, who being an enemie to the glory of God, was content to take to himſelfe that honour, which a king in dutie is to performe to God himſelfe.

IV. If it had beene true Samuel, he would certainly have reproved Saul for ſeeking helpe at Witches, contrary to Gods Commandement, and that doctrine which hee had taught him from God in his life time. But this counterfeit reproved him not, and therefore it is not like to be the true Prophet of God, but Satan himſelfe, selfe, framing by his art and skill the person and shape of Samuel.

But it is alleaged to the contrarie, that Samuel after his sleepe, propheſied of the death of Saul, Eccleſiaſticus 46. verſ. 20. After his ſleepe alſo he told of the Kings death, &c. Anſ. That booke penned by Ieſus the ſonne of Sirach is a very worthie deſcription of Chriſtian Ethicks, containing more excellent precepts for manners, than all the writings of Heathen Philoſophers or other men. But yet it is not Scripture, neither did the Church ever hold and receive it as Canonicall; yea, the author himſelfe inſinuateth ſo much in the beginning thereof, for in the preface hee diſableth himſelfe to interpret hard things, and after a ſort craves pardon for his weakneſſe, which is not the manner of the men of God, that were penmen of Scripture. For they were ſo guided by Gods Spirit in their proceedings, that nothing could be hard unto them. This privilege no ordinary man hath aſſurance of: and therefore this author writing upon his owne private motion, was ſubject to error, and no doubt this ſpeech of his, being contrary to that which is recorded in the Canonicall Scriptures, is a flat untruth.

Secondly, it is objected, that the Scripture calleth him Samuel, that appeared unto Saul. Anſ. The Scripture doth often ſpeake of things, not as they are in themſelves, but as they ſeeme to us. So it is affirmed, Geneſis 1.16. that God made two great lights, the Sunne & the Moone; whereas the Moone is leſſer than many Starres, yet becauſe in regard of her neareneſſe to the earth, ſhe ſeemeth to us greater than the reſt, therefore ſhee is called a great light. In like manner Idols in the Scripture are called Gods, not that they are ſo indeed, (for an Idol is nothing, 1 Cor. 8.4.) but becauſe ſome men doe ſo conceive of them in their mindes. In a word; the Scripture oftentimes doth abaſe it ſelfe to our conceit, ſpeaking of things not according as they are, but after the manner of men; and ſo in this place calleth counterfeit Samuel, by the name of the true Samuel, becauſe it ſeemed ſo unto Saul.

The third objection; That body which appeared, propheſied of things that came to paſſe the day after, as the death of Saul, and of his ſonnes; which indeed ſo fell out, and at the ſame time, therefore was like to bee Samuel. Anſw. There is nothing there ſaid or done, which the Devill might not doe. For when the Lord uſeth the devill as his inſtrument to bring ſome things to paſſe, he doth before hand reveale the ſame unto him: and looke what particulars the Devill learneth from God, thoſe he can fore-tell. Now the truth is, Satan was appointed by God to worke Sauls overthrow, and it was made knowne unto him when the thing ſhould bee done; by which meanes, and by none other, the Devill was enabled to fore-tell the death of Saul. Where (by the way) obſerve, that in this caſe the Devill can reveale things to

A come certainly, to wit, if he be appointed Gods immediat inſtrument for the execution of them, or knowes them by light of former prophecies in Scripture.

Fourthly, dead men doe often appeare and walke after they are buried. Anſ. It is indeed the opinion of the Church of Rome, and of many ignorant perſons among us: but the truth is otherwiſe. Dead men doe neither walke nor appeare in body or ſoule after death: for all that die, are either righteous or wicked: The ſoules of the righteous goe ſtraight to Heaven, and the ſoules of the wicked to Hell, and there remaine till the laſt judgement: and therefore of the juſt it is ſaid, that they are bleſſed when they die, becauſe they reſt from their labours,
B Apoc. 14.13. But how doe they reſt, if after they bee dead they wander up and downe in the earth?

If it be ſaid, that Moſes and Elias appeared when Chriſt was transfigured in the Mount; and that Lazarus roſe againe, and at Chriſts reſurrection many dead bodies roſe againe and appeared;

I anſwer; there were two times when God ſuffered the dead to be raiſed up againe; either at the planting of his Church, or at the reſtoring and eſtabliſhing of it, when it was raſed to the foundation. Thus at the reſtoring of religion in Elias and Eliſhas times, the ſonne of the Shunamitiſh woman, 2 Kings 4.34. and the widowes ſonne at Sarephta, 1 Kings 17.21. were raiſed.
C Againe, when God would reſtore his Church, which was fallen to Idolatrie about the death of Eliſha, hee cauſed the like miracle to bee wrought in the reviving of a dead man by the touching of Eliſhas dead carcaſe in the grave, thereby to aſſure the people of their deliverance, and to cauſe them to embrace the doctrine of the Prophet after his death, which in his life they had contemned. In like manner at the eſtabliſhing of the Goſpel in the new Teſtament, it pleaſed Chriſt to raiſe up Moſes and Elias, and to make them knowne to his Diſciples by extraordinary revelation, that they might beleeve that the doctrine which he preached was not new, but the ſame in ſubſtance with that which was recorded in the Law and the Prophets, both D which were repreſented by Moſes and Elias. So alſo he wrought the miracle upon Lazarus, the widowes ſonne, and Iairus daughter, thereby to ſhew the power of his Godhead, the truth of his calling, the teſtimonie of his doctrine: Laſtly, to make knowne the power of his reſurrection, he cauſed ſome to riſe and appeare to others, when he himſelfe roſe againe. But out of theſe two times wee have neither warrant nor example, that God ſuffered the dead to be raiſed up. Wherefore thoſe inſtances will not any way confirme Samuels appearing, which indeed was not true, but counterfeit and forged by the Devill himſelfe.

Now for the ſecond opinion, of thoſe which denie that there be any Witches, and thereupon hold hold that this was a meere cosenage of the Witch, suborning some man or woman to counterfeit the forme, attire, and voyce of Samuel, thereby to delude Saul, that also is untrue. For he that spake fore-told the ruine of Saul, of his sonnes, and of his army, yea the time also wherein this was to come to passe: whereas in likelihood no man or woman in all Israel, could have fore-told such things before hand of themselves. It was not then any cosenage, as is affirmed, but a thing effected by the devill, framing to himselfe a body in the likenesse of Samuel, wherein he spake.

If therefore it be manifest, that by counterfeit apparitions of the dead, Witches and Sorcerers can fore-tell things to come: hence sundrie points of Witchcraft may be observed.

First, that there is a league betweene the Witch and the Devill. For this was the cause which moved Saul to seeke to Witches, because neither hee himselfe, nor any of his servants could raise up Satan in Samuels likenesse, as the Witch of Endor did. But Saul being a King, might have commanded helpe from all the wise and learned men in Israel, for the effecting of such a matter: why then would he rather seeke to a silly woman, than to them? The reason was, because she had made a compact with the devill, for the using of his helpe at her demand, by vertue whereof he was as ready to answer, as she to call him; whereas Saul and the learned Jewes, having made no such league, neither he by his power, nor they by their skill, could have performed such a worke.

Secondly, the devill will be readie at the call and command of Witches and Sorcerers, when they are intending any mischiefe. For here the Witch of Endor no sooner spake, but he appeared, and therefore the Text gives her a name that signifieth one having rule and command over Pytho, that is, the familiar spirit: yet when he is commanded, he yeelds not upon constraint, but voluntarily, because hee builds upon his owne greater advantage, the gaining of the soule of the Witch. Where by the way, let it be observed, what a pretious thing the soule of man is; the purchasing whereof, can make the proud spirit of Satan so farre to abase it selfe, as to be at the command of a silly woman. Againe, what an inveterate malice Satan beareth to man, which for the gaining of a soule, will doe that which is so contrary to his nature. It may teach man what to esteeme of his soule, and not to sell it for so base a price.

Thirdly, by this, the great power of the Devill in the behalfe of the Sorcerer, is made manifest. For hee was presently at hand to counterfeit Samuel, and did it so lively and cunningly, as well in forme of bodie, as in attire and voyce, that Saul thought verily it was the Prophet: which may be a caveat unto us, not easily to give credit to any such apparitions. For though they seeme never so true and evident, yet such is the power and skill of the devill, that he can quite deceive us, as he did Saul in this place.

Sect. IV.

Hitherto I have shewed the first kinde of divination by meanes, both true and forged. Now followeth the second; practised without meanes.

Divination without meanes, is the foretelling and revealing of things to come, by the alone and immediat assistance of a familiar spirit. This kinde is mentioned and expressely forbidden, Levit. 19.31. Ye shall not regard them that worke with spirits. Againe, Levit. 20.6. If any turne after such as worke with spirits, to goe a whoring after them, I will set my face against that person, and will cut him off from among his people. So Deut. 18.11. Let none be found among you, that consulteth with spirits. In which places the holy Ghost useth the word Ob, which more properly signifieth a spirit, or devill, in which sense it is taken in Leviticus 20.27. and in 1 Sam. 28.8. And by reason of the league which is betweene the Witch and the devill, the same is also given to the Witch, that worketh by the devill: and therefore the Pythonesse at Endor, is both called Ob, 1 Sam. 28.9. and she that ruleth Ob. vers. 7.8.

Now this kinde of divination is practised two wayes: either inwardly, when the spirit is within the Witch: or outwardly, when being forth of the Witch, hee doth onely inspire him or her.

An example of the former way, the Scripture affoordeth, Act. 16.16. of a woman at Philippi, that had a spirit of Pytho; which gat her master much vantage with divining. And this spirit whereby she divined was within her. For Paul being molested, said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ, that thou come out of her, and he came out of her the same hower. vers. 18. And because the devill is not wont in this kinde to speake out of the throat and brest, or bellie of the Witch possessed, hereupon learned men have thought that this name (Ob) is given to the devill, because he speaketh out of the Witch as out of a bottle or hollow vessell; for so the word Ob, properly signifieth.

Secondly, this may be practised when the devill is forth of the Witch, and then he either inspireth her, or else casteth her into a trance, and therein revealeth unto her such things as shee would know.

Of this kinde, though we have no example in Scripture, yet the Histories of the Heathen doe affoord unto us many instances of experience therein. One of the principall is the Historie of the ten Sibylles of Greece, who were most famous Witches, and did prophesie of many things to come, whereof some were true concerning Christ and his kingdome, which the devill stole out of the Bible, and some other were false: and all of them they received by revelation from the devill in trances.

But

But it will be said, if the devill reveileth unto his instruments strange things in trances, then how shall a man discerne betweene diabolicall Revelations, and the true gift of Prophecie; which God in trances reveileth unto his Prophets.

Ans. In this point Satan is (as it were) Gods ape: for as hee in old time raised up holy Prophets to speak unto the fathers, for the building up of his Church: so hath Satan inspired his ministers, and furnished his instruments with prophetical inspirations from time to time, for the building up of his owne Kingdome: and hereupon hee hath notably counterfeited the true gift of prophecie received first from GOD himselfe. And yet, though in many things they be like, there is great difference betweene them.

First, divine traunces may come upon Gods children, either when the soule remaineth united with the bodie, or else when it is severed for a time. So much Paul insinuateth, when he saith of himselfe, 2 Corinth. 12. 2. that hee was rapt up (as it were in a heavenly trance) into the third heaven, but whether in the body, or out of the body, hee knew not. But in all diabolicall extasies, though the body and senses of the Witch bee (as it were) bound or benummed for the time; yet their soules still remaine united to their bodies, and not severed from them. For though the devill by Gods permission may kill the body, and so take the soule out of it for ever; yet to take it from the bodie for a time, and to reunite them againe, is miraculous, and therefore beyond the compasse of his power.

Secondly, in divine traunces the servants of God have all their senses, yea, and all the powers of soule and body remaining sound and perfect, onely for a time the actions and operations are suspended and cease to doe their duty: but in extasies that bee from Satan, his instruments are cast into frenzies and madnesse: so as reason in them is darkened, understanding obscured, memory weakened, the braine distempered; yea, all the faculties are so blemished, that many of them never recover their former estate againe, and they that scape best, doe carry their blemishes, as the Devils skars, even to their grave. So kinde is Satan to his friends, that hee will leave his tokens behind him where ever he comes in this sort. The Servants of God receive no such blemish, but rather a further good, and a greater measure of illumination of all the powers of the soule.

Thirdly, divine extasies tend alway to the confirming of the truth of the Gospell, and the furtherance of true religion and piety. Such was Peters, Act. 10. 11. which served to assure him of his calling to preach the Gospell to the Gentiles, and to informe his judgement in this truth, that there was no exception of persons with God, and that to them of the new Testament, all things were cleane, and nothing polluted. But the scope of them that are from Satan, is principally the suppressing and hinderance of religion, the drawing of the weake into errors, the ratifying and confirming of them that are fallen thereinto, and the generall upholding of the practices of ungodlinesse. And by these and such like particular differences, hath God pulled off the devils vizar, and made him better knowne and discerned of true Christians. And thus much concerning Divination, the first part of Witch-craft.

CHAP. IV.

Of operative or working Witch-craft.

THe second part is that which consisteth in Operation, and is therefore called Operative or working Witch-craft.

Witch-craft in Operation, is that which is employed in the practice and reall working of strange things or wonders, and it hath two parts, Inchantment, and Jugling.

Sect. 1.

Inchantment is the working of wonders by a Charme. This the Lord expressely forbiddeth, Deuter. 18. 11. Let none bee found among you, that is a Charmer. In this description, two points are to be considered: 1. What things may be done by inchantment, namely, wonders, for I say it is the practice of wonders: 2. by what meanes these wonders are wrought, that is, by a Charme. Inchantment.

For the first: The wonders done by Inchanters are, 1. The raising of stormes and tempests; windes and weather, by sea and by land: 2. The poysoning of the ayre: 3. Blasting of corne: 4. Kliling of cattell, and annoying of men, women and children: 5. The procuring of strange passions and torments in mens bodies and other creatures, with the curing of the same: 6. Casting out of devils. These and such like things Inchanters can doe by their Charmes. And for proofe hereof, we have the uniforme consent of all ages, with the records of Witches confessions to manifest the same; besides the testimony of experience in this age: so as the man that cals it into question, may as well doubt of the Sunne shining at noone day.

Yet for the further declaration thereof we wil alleage what the Scripture saith in this point. Salomon saith, If the Serpent bite when hee is not charmed, no better is a babler, Eccles. 10. 11. thus the words are in our English translation: but they may better be thus read according to the originall: If the Serpent bite before he be charmed, what profit hath the master of the tongue thereby, that is, the Charmer. And so they beare this sense. If the inchanter bee bitten, before the serpent bee charmed, then hee hath no benefit by his charme. For Salomon in that place giveth us to understand, what power inchanters have, and what they may doe by their charmes, if they come in time, namely, stay the poison of the serpent, so as he cannot hurt, either by biting or stinging. When Balac intended evil against Israel, he hired Balaam to curse them, Num. 22. 6. Now this Balaam was an inchanting Witch; for though he be called a Prophet, yet this was onely in the reputation of the world; for his practice was to inchãt by charms of words; and to that purpose hee was hired to curse Gods people, that is, to bring mischiefe upon them by charming; which thing when he had often and many wayes assayed to doe, and could no way prevaile, but that it pleased God contrary to his endevours, to blesse Israel, then hee breakes out into these words: There is no Sorcery against Iacob, nor sooth-saying against Israel, Numb. 23. 23. As if he should have said, I know well that sorcery is powerfull in many things, and of force to bring much mischiefe upon men, yet it can take no place against the people of God, because he hath blessed them; and whom hee blesseth, them no man can hurt by cursing. Inchanters therefore may upon Gods permission worke strange things, as appeares by these places, to name no more.

The second point to bee observed, is the meanes whereby these wonders are practised; these are counterfeit and supposed meanes, not ordained and sanctified by God, which are commonly called Charmes.

A Charme is a Spell or verse, consisting of strange words, used as a signe or watchword to the devill, to cause him to worke wonders.

First, I say it is a Spell consisting of strange words, because in these inchantments, certaine words or verses are secretly uttered; which in regard of the common formes of words are strange, and wherein there is thought to bee a miraculous efficacy to bring some extraordinary and unexpected thing to passe. A point of it selfe evident and needing no further proofe, considering it is not unknowne to the more ignorant sort, who are better acquainted with these, than with the word of God. And these words are not all of one and the same kind; but some are rude and barbarous, neither knowne nor conceived or understood; of which the ancienter sort of Charmes were wont to be made especially, and some later. Some againe are plaine and knowne tearmes, which may be understood; as the names of the Trinity, some words and sentences of Scripture, as in principio erat verbum, &c. Againe, charmes that consist of words, are not all of one sort, but some be imprecations, wishing some evill: others in shew have the forme of praises and blessings, whereby the Witch either flatteringly commendeth, or favourably wisheth some good: others againe are made in forme of prayer A and petition: and they all are sometimes plainly conceived, sometimes in ruder and more unknowne words; as those well know, who haue heard them, or read them where they are to be found.

Secondly, I adde, that the charme is used for a signe and watch-word to the Devill, to cause him to worke wonders, wherein standeth the nature and proper end of a charme. The nature, in that it is a diabolicall signe; the end, to cause the Devill to worke a wonder: whereby it is distinguished from all other speeches of men. For all they commonly carry the nature of the thing, whereof and whereabout they be made; but the Charme doth not alwayes follow the nature of the words, but hath another B nature in regard of the immediate relation it hath to the devill, to whom it is a signe. Againe, the Charme pronounced doth not the wonder, but the devil admonished by it as by the watch-word to doe the feat.

Now because some are of opinion, in regard of the ordinarie production of strange effects by these meanes, that the Spell hath in it selfe some vertue and power to such and such purposes whereunto it is used; I will stand a little in the proofe of the contrary. That a Charme is onely a Diabolicall watch-word, and hath in it selfe no such effectuall power or possibilitie to worke a wonder. My reasons are these.

First, this must be taken for a maine ground; C That as there is nothing in the world, that hath being but from God; so nothing hath in it any efficacie, but by his ordinance. Now whatsoever efficacy is in any creature from God, it received the same into it selfe, either by creation, or since the creation by some new and speciall institution, appointment, and gift of God. For example. The bread in the Sacrament, by a naturall power given unto it in the creation, serveth to nourish the body, and the same bread, by Gods speciall appointment in his Word, feeds the soule, in that by his ordinance it is made to us a signe and seale of the body of Christ broken for us: And so it is in every creature; if the effect bee ordinary and naturall, it hath it by creation: if extraordinary and supernaturall, it hath that by divine ordination: So D that whatsoever comes to passe by any other meanes, is by Satanicall operation. Now Charmes and Spels, standing of set words and fillables, have no power in them to work wonders, either by the gift of nature in the creation, or by Gods appointment since the creation: and therefore they have in them no power at all for any such purpose. This latter part of the reason, being the assumption or application of the ground to the present instance, consisteth of two parts, which I will prove in order. First, then I affirme, That by the gift of Nature, no words of Charmes have power in them to worke wonders; and I prove it in this manner.

In

I. All words made and uttered by men, are in their owne nature but ſounds framed by the tongue, of the breath that commeth from the lungs. And that which is onely a bare ſound, in all reaſon can have no vertue in it to cauſe a reall worke, much leſſe to produce a wonder. The ſounds of bells and of many muſicall inſtruments, and the voices of many bruit creatures, are farre more ſtrong and powerfull than the voice of a man: yet who knoweth not, that none of all theſe is availeable to ſuch purpoſes. Indeed they have power to affect the minde, by their ſweetneſſe or otherwiſe, but they are not able to bring to paſſe a reall worke, either by the inflicting of hurts and harmes, or by the procuring of good. I conclude therefore, that the voyce of man by nature hath no power to worke any wonders.

II. Againe, every thing which hurteth or affecteth another, muſt neceſſarily touch the thing which it hurteth or affecteth. For it is a granted rule in nature, that every agent worketh upon the patient by touching: but words uttered in Charmes are commonly made of things abſent, and therefore though it ſhould be granted, that they had the power of touching a ſubſtance (which they cannot have) yet of themſelves they are not availeable to bring upon things abſent either good or evill.

Omne agens, agit per contactum.

III. Moreover, if words conceived in Charmes and Spels have any ſuch power as is pretended, why ſhould not every word that any man ſpeaketh have the ſame power, inaſmuch as all words are of the ſame nature, being only ſounds framed in the breaſt, and uttered of the tongue in letters and ſyllables? But experience teacheth, that the ſame word ſpoken by another, hath not the ſame vertue; For the Charme uttered by the Charmer himſelfe, will take effect, but being ſpoken in the ſame manner by another man, that is no Inchanter, maketh to no purpoſe, for nothing is effected by it.

IV. That which is in nature nothing but a bare ſignification, cannot ſerve to worke a wonder, and this is the nature of all words; for as they be framed of mans breath, they are naturall, but yet in regard of forme and articulation they are artificiall and ſignificant, and the uſe of them in every language is, to ſignifie that which the author thereof intended; for the firſt ſignifications of words, depended upon the will and pleaſure of man that framed and invented them. Being therefore invented onely to ſhew or ſignifie ſome thing, it remaines that neither in nature nor proper uſe, they can be applyed to the producing of wonderfull and ſtrange effects. Thus the former part of the aſſumption is cleared.

In the ſecond place I affirme, that the words of Charmers have not this power in them, By any ſpeciall gift, bleſſing, or appointment of God, ſince the creation, which is the other part of the aſſumption. And I ſhew it thus: whatſoever

A is powerfull and effectuall to any end or purpoſe, by Gods gift, bleſſing, or appointment, the ſame is commanded in his Word to be uſed, and hath alſo a promiſe of bleſſing annexed to the right uſe thereof. To uſe the inſtance before made for explanation ſake. The bread in the Lords ſupper, hath this power and property given it by Chriſt, to ſeale and ſignifie unto every beleeving receiver the body of Chriſt; and by this property given it, it is availeable to this purpoſe; though it bee a thing above the common and naturall uſe of bread; and thereupon we have warrant from Chriſts owne commandement, ordinance, and example, ſo to uſe it. But in the whole body of the Scripture, there B is not the like commandement to uſe the words of Charmes for the effecting of wonders, much leſſe the like promiſe of bleſſing upon the ſame ſo uſed: therefore the concluſion is, that God hath given no ſuch power unto them in ſpeciall.

If it be asked then, what they are, and whereto they ſerve? I anſwer, they are no better than the devils ſacraments and watchwords, to cauſe him to doe ſome ſtrange worke. For the inchanter hath relation in his minde to the Devill, whoſe help he hath at hand by covenant either open or ſecret; or at leaſt ſome ſuperſtitious opinion of the force of the words, which is a preparation to a covenant.

The truth of this doctrine, howſoever it bee thus made manifeſt, yet it findes not generall entertainment at all mens hands. For there are C and have beene ſome learned men, in all ages, who maintained the contrary, both by word and writing; and namely, that there is great vertue and power in words pronounced in time and place, to effect ſtrange things. For proofe whereof they alleage theſe reaſons:

Firſt, that the bare conceit and imagination of man is of great force to doe ſtrange things: and therefore words expreſſed much more. An: The ground of the reaſon is naught. Imagination is nothing elſe but a ſtrong conceit of the minde touching any thing, whatſoever it bee, and by reaſon of the Communion that is betweene the body and ſoule being together, it is of great force to worke within the man that imagineth diverſly, and to cauſe alteration in D himſelfe, which may tend either to the hurt or to the good of his owne body: but yet imagination hath no force out of a man to affect or hurt another. A man (conceiving deſperately of his owne eſtate) by the ſtrength of imagination may kill himſelfe; but the ſame conceit, be it never ſo ſtrong, cannot hurt his neighbour. For it is no more than Caſars image upon his coyne, which ſerveth onely to repreſent Caſar: ſo imaginatiõ is nothing but the repreſentation of ſome thing in the minde by conceit, and therefore as the perſon of Caſar is nothing hurt, though his image be defaced, ſo when we conceive of men in our mindes, though never ſo badly & maliciouſly, yet all is of no force to hurt or annoy them, either in perſon or ſtate.

Secondly, they alleage that Witches by malicious and wry lookes, in anger and diſpleaſure, may and doe hurt thoſe upon whom they looke, whether they be men or other creatures. And it is an old received opinion, that in malicious and ill diſpoſed perſons, there proceed out of the eye with the beames, noyſome and malignant ſpirits, which infect the aire, and doe poiſon or kill, not onely them with whom they are daily converſant, but others alſo whoſe company they frequent, of what age, ſtrength, and complexion ſoever they be. Anſw. But the opinion is as fond, as it is old: for it is as much againſt nature that ſuch vertue ſhould proceed out of the eye, or ſuch ſpirits breake out of the nerves to the partie hated, as it is for the blood of the bodie, of it ſelfe, to guſh out of the veines.

Yet for the ratifying of this opinion, they alleage that which is writtē in Gen. 30. 37. where Iacob laid ſpeckled roddes before the ſheepe in their watery troughes, and that by Gods appointment, for this end, that they might bring forth partie-coloured lambs. I anſwer, that was not a worke of ſight, but a ſpeciall and extraordinary worke of Gods providence upon Iacob in his neceſſitie, as wee may plainly ſee in the Chapter next following, verſe 9. and 11. yea, it was taught Iacob by God himſelfe; and if it had beene an ordinary worke, doubtleſſe the gaines thereof being ſo good, Iacob would have done it againe afterward; but wee never reade that he did it againe. And be it granted it were a naturall worke, yet it cannot prove witching by ſight, becauſe the ſheepe received into their eyes the ſpecies and reſemblance of the rods, which is according to nature; whereas in faſcination or bewitching by ſight, malignant ſpirits ſhould not bee received in, but ſent forth of the eye, which is againſt nature.

Yea, but the Baſiliske or Cockatrice doth kill man and beaſt with his breath and ſight, yea, the wolfe takes away the voyce of ſuch as hee ſuddenly meets withall and beholds, and why may not wicked men or women doe the like? Anſw. Indeed it is a thing received by common errour, and held of ſome for a truth; but no experience of any man hath yet beene brought for the proofe thereof, and therefore it is to bee reputed as fabulous. Thus much in probability may bee thought (if the allegation ſhould be true) that the Baſiliske being poſſeſſed of a thicke poiſon, may by his breath ſend forth ſome groſſe venomous vapours, and thereby infect the ayre, and poiſon the thing that is neere unto him. Againe, that the ſuddaine and unexpected beholding of the venomous Cockatrice, or the ravenous wolfe, (being creatures in their kinde fearefull, eſpecially to thoſe that are not acquainted with thē) may cauſe preſent aſtoniſhment, & conſequently perill of death. But that this ſhould be done by the eyes of theſe creatures only, in manner aforeſaid, it is not credible; and therefore authors have upon good ground denied it, as being confirmed neither by reaſon, nor experience.

Thirdly, they reaſon thus; Inchanters by whiſpering of words in Charmes can ſtay the ſtinging and poiſoning of ſerpents; for ſo David in effect ſpeaketh; that the voice of the Charmer charmeth the ſerpent, Pſalm. 58. 5. It may ſeeme therefore that there is no ſmall force in words for the effecting of ſtrange workes. Anſ. It muſt be granted that the Charmer may inchant the ſerpent; but how? Not by vertue of the words in the Charme, but by power of the Devill, who then is ſtirred up, when the charme is repeated, to doe the thing intended. The truth of this anſwer appeares by the words of the text, as they are read in the originall, that the Inchanter joyneth ſocieties very cunningly, namely, with the devill. Now theſe ſocieties betweene Satan and the Charmer, are the very ground of the worke upon the ſerpent: which worke, upon confederacy formerly made, is done by the Devill, and the words of the Charme are no more but the Inchanters Item or watchword, to occaſion him thereunto. And let any other man repeat the ſame words a thouſand times, that either is not thus confederate with Satan, or hath not a ſuperſtitious opinion of charmes, and all his labour will be in vaine.

Fourthly, the word of God is of great force in the hearts of men to convert and change them, as it is uttered by the mouth of mortall man; and this force is not in the man by whom it is ſpoken; where then ſhould it be, but in the words? And then if in the words, why may not other words bee of like efficacy, being uttered by man? Anſw. 1. The power of Gods Word commeth not from this, that it is a word, and barely uttered out of the mouth of a man; for ſo it is a dead letter: but it proceedeth from the powerfull operation of the ſpirit annexed by Gods promiſe thereunto, when it is uttered, read, and conceived; which operation if it were taken away, the Word might be preached a thouſand yeares together, without any fruit or effect, either to ſalvation or condemnation.

2. The word of God is powerfull by the concurrence of the worke of the ſpirit, not in all things; as for example, in raiſing windes and tempeſts, in infecting the ayre, in killing and annoying men or other creatures, but in the converſion of ſinners, in gathering the elect, and in confirming thoſe that be called; and this power it hath alſo by his ſpeciall bleſſing and appointment.

3. Furthermore, the ſame word is not of power, when it is barely read, heard, or ſpoken, unleſſe it be alſo conceived in the underſtanding, received with reverence, treaſured up in the memorie, and mingled with faith in the heart: whereas the bare reading and muttering over the words of a charme by an Inchanter, though in in an unknowne tongue, in rude and barbarous words, is sufficient to procure the working of wonders.

Now though the word of God bee in it selfe pure, and serve to excellent purpose, as hath beene said, yet by the way we may remember; That as it is with all things that are most precious, nothing is so excellent in it kinde which may not bee abused; so it is with this heavenly word: for it is and may be made a Charme two wayes. First, when some part of it is indeed used for a charme. Thus many Texts of Scripture both in Latine and other languages, have beene abused by Inchanters, as might easily be shewed. Secondly, when it is heard, read, recited, or made a matter of prayer without understanding. And thus the ignorant man, as much as in him lieth, makes it a Charme. For in his ordinarie use thereof, he neither conceiveth nor taketh care to understand it, as lamentable experience teacheth. Yet in neither of these is the very bare repeating of the Word effectuall. For as when a man heares or reades it, unlesse the Spirit of God inlighteneth his heart, it is to no purpose; so when it is made the matter of a spel, nothing will bee effected, unlesse the devill either by confederacy, or superstitious conceit be drawne to conferre his helpe in the point, for his owne advantage.

Howbeit, of all inchantments these are the most dishonourable to God, most acceptable to Satan, and most hurtfull to the Charmer, which are made of the Scriptures. For beside the sinne of Witch-craft in the Charming, this inconvenience insueth, that Satan procureth more credit to one of these, than to twentie other, because the words are Scripture; hereby cloking his mischievous practices under the colour of holinesse, and so confirming the truth of that which the holy Ghost saith, that when hee worketh most deceitfully, hee transformes himselfe into an Angel of light, 2 Cor. 11. 14. He knoweth well, that ordinary words seeme nothing to some men, therefore hee teacheth and suggesteth phrases and sentences out of the Word, for such ungodly ends, that even the grace of them fetched from the Scriptures, may make them seeme powerfull. Wherefore let every one that is indued with grace and knowledge, duely consider this with himselfe. Cannot Gods word be effectuall, when it is used to edification, unlesse the worke of his owne spirit accompany the same? then surely it is impossible, that the same which is holy, being used to an evill end, should bee powerfull, except the Devill affordeth his helpe for the effecting thereof. To conclude therefore, let men say what they will, the truth is this, that words of inchantment, bee they never so holy or prophane, either by way of cursing or blessing, have no power of themselves to the producing of strange workes; but are (as hath beene said) onely diabolicall signes, admonishing the devill of some wickednesse intended and desired, A which hee through his power must cause to be done.

And thus much of inchantment standing upon the practice of wonders by a Charme.

To this head of Inchantment, sundry other practices of Witches are to bee referred, the chiefe whereof are these.

First, the using and making of Characters, Images, or Figures, specially the framing of Circles, for this end to work wonders by them. As to draw the picture of a childe, or man, or other creature in clay or wax, and to bury the same in the ground, or to hide it in some secret place, or to burne it in the fire, thereby intending to hurt or kill the party resembled. Againe, to make an impression into the said picture, by B pricking or gashing the heart or any other place with intent to procure dangerous or deadly paines to the same parts. This is a meere practice of Inchantment, and the making of the image, and using of it to this end, is in vertue a charme, though no words bee used. For the bare picture hath no more power of it selfe to hurt the bodie represented, than bare words. All that is done commeth by the worke of the Devill, who alone by the using of the picture in that sort is occasioned so or so, to worke the parties destruction.

Secondly, hither we may referre the using of Amulets, that is, remedies and preservatives against inchantments, sorceries, and bewitchings, made of herbes or some such things, and hanged about the necke for that end.

C Thirdly, the using of Exorcismes, that is, certaine set formes of words used in way of adjuration for some extraordinary end. A practice usuall in the Church of Rome, whereby the Priest conjures the salt, holy-water, creame, spittle, oyle, palmes, &c. all which are in truth meere inchantments. For howsoever the Councell of Trent hath ratified them by their decrees, and so commended them to generall use within the compasse of the Popish Church; yet they have in them no power or ability of blessing or cursing, either by nature or Gods appointment. Concil. trid sess. 23. cap. 2.

Fourthly, In this number wee reckon the using of the name Iesus, to drive away the devil or to prevent Witch-craft; a common practice D among the ignorant. Wherein the wonderfull malice of Satan bewraies it selfe, in making the ignorant people think that Christ is a conjurer, and that there is vertue in the naming of his name, to doe some strange thing. Whereas the truth is, he careth neither for that name nor for all the names of God, if a man goes no further than the bare repeating of them; but rather delighteth to see them so abused and disgraced.

And hereupon it is, that in all conjurations, when he is raised by the Sorcerer, he is willing to bee adjured by all the holy names of God that are in the Scripture, to the end that hee may the more deeply seduce his owne instruments, and make them to thinke that these holy names will bind him, and force him to yeeld unto their desires in the particular, when indeed there is no such matter. Which point throughly considered, may admonish us to take speciall heed of these cunning glosses and devilish insinuations, whereby he intendeth to delude us; alway remembring, that the Apostles themselves, to whom the power of working miracles was given, did never acknowledge the worke to be done by the name of Iesus, but as S. Peter affirmeth, through faith in his name, Act. 3. 6. 16.

Fiftly, the crossing of the bodie, to this end, that we may be blessed from the devil. A thing usuall even of latter times, specially in Poperie; wherein the crosse carrieth the very nature of a Charme, and the use of it in this manner, a practice of Inchantment. For God hath given no such vertue to a crosse, either by creation, or speciall privilege and appointment.

Sixthly, the scratching of a Witch to discover the Witch. For it is a meanes which hath no warrant or power thereunto, either by the word of God, or from nature, but onely from the devill; who if hee yeeldeth either at crossing, or scratching, he doth it willingly, and not by compulsion, that hee may feed his instrument with a false faith, and a superstitious conceit, to the dishonour of God, and their owne overthrow. In a word, looke whatsoever actions, gestures, signes, rites, and ceremonies are used by men or women to worke wonders, having no power to effect the same, either by creation and nature, or by speciall appointment from God, they must all bee referred to this head, and reckoned for Charmes.

The Use. Now considering that all kinds of Charmes are the Devills watchwords to cause him to worke the wonder, and have no vertue in them, be the words wherein they are conceived never so good: hereby wee must be admonished, to take heed of the use of them, and all other unlawfull ceremonies, both in respect of their formes, be they praises or prayers, or imprecations; as also in regard of their ends, bee they never so good in outward appearance. But alas! the more lamentable is the case, Charming is in as great request as Physicke, and Charmers more sought unto, than Physicians in time of need. There be Charmes for all conditions and ages of men, for divers kindes of creatures, yea, for every disease; as for head-ach, tooth-ach, flitches, and such like. Nevertheless, howsoever some have subjected themselves to such base and ungodly meanes, yet the use hereof by the mercy of God, hath not beene universall. And those that have sought for helpe, are to be advised in the feare of God, to repent of this their sinne, and to take a better course. Let them rightly consider, that they have hitherto depended upon Satan for helpe, and consequently have dishonoured GOD, and renounced lawfull meanes sanctified by him; which should not have beene done in

A case of the greatest worldly gaine. For no man may doe evill, that good may come of it.

But they that use the helpe of Charmers, and consult with Wise-men, are wont to alleage something in defence or excuse of their practice.

First, that they for their part, meane no hurt, they know no evill by the man whom they seeke to, they onely send to him, and hee does them good, how and in what manner they regard not. Answ. 1. Indeed many be ignorant of the Inchanters courses. But in cases of losse and hinderance, men ought not onely to inquire the meanes, but to weigh and consider the warrantableneese thereof, otherwise they doe not that they doe of faith, and so are guilty of sinne before God, Rom. 15. last ver. 2. Put the case they themselves meane no hurt, yet in this action they doe hurt to themselves, by reposing trust in things, which upon better consideration they shall finde to bee dishonourable, and therefore hatefull to God.

Secondly, they alleage; we goe to the Physitian for counsell, we take his Recipe. but wee know not what it meaneth; yet wee use it, and finde benefit by it; if this bee lawfull, why may wee not as well take benefit by the Wise-man, whose courses we be ignorant of? Answ. 1. Physicke used in time and place, is a worthie ordinance of God, and therefore being rightly used, God gives his blessing to it. But for inchantment it was never sanctified by God, and therefore cannot be used in any assurance of his blessing. 2. The Physitians receit being a composition and mixture of naturall things, though a man knowes it not, yet he takes it into his stomach, or applies it to his body, and sensibly perceives the vertue and efficacie thereof in the working; whereas the Charmers course consisteth of words, which neither are knowne in themselves, nor are manifest in their use to sense or understanding. And hereby it is plaine, there is not the same reason of Physicke and Charmes the one having a sensible operation by vertue given is of God; the other insensible, and wrought above ordinary meanes by the worke of Satan.

Thirdly, they alleage, God is mercifull, and hee hath provided a salve for every sore, they have used other meanes, but they have not succeeded, and what should they doe more, may they not in extremity repaire to the Inchanter, and see what he can doe for them, rather than their goods and cattell should be lost and spoiled? Answ. It were better for you to bide by the losse, yea, to live and die in any sicknesse, than to tempt God by seeking helpe at Charmers hands: for their helpe is dangerous and commeth from the Devill, whereupon if yee rest your selves, yee joyne league with him, and so hazzard eternally the safety both of bodies and soules. 2. Vse good meanes allowed of GOD, and when they have beene used often without successe, proceed not to other courses, but but referre your selves to God, and say with Iob: The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord, Iob. 1. 21. And thus much of inchanting, the first part of Operative Witch-craft.

Sect. II.

Iugling. The second part is Jugling. Jugling, is the deluding of the eye with some strange sleight done above the ordinary course of nature. In this description there are two points necessarily requited in the point of Jugling, delusion of the eye, and extraordinary sleight.

Delusion is then performed, when a man is made to thinke hee sees that which indeed hee sees not. And this is done by operation of the devill diversly, but especially three wayes. First by corrupting the humour of the eye, which is the next instrument of sight. Secondly, by altering the ayre, which is the meane by which the object or species is carried to the eye. Thirdly, by altering and changing the object, that is, the thing seene, or whereon a man looketh.

This deluding of the sense is noted by Paul, Gal. 3. 1. O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, where the spirit of God useth a* word borrowed from this kind of sorcerers, which in full meaning signifieth thus much: who hath deluded your eyes, and caused you to thinke you see that which you see not. As if he should have said, Looke as the Jugler by his devillish art, deludeth the outward eye, and maketh men thinke they see that, which indeed they doe not: Even so the false Apostles, by their erroneous doctrine, have deluded the eyes of your mindes, and have caused you Galatians to judge that to bee the Word of God, which is not, and that to bee truth, which is errour and falshood. Paul gives us to understand by the very phrase used, that there is such a kinde of Jugling, as is able to deceive the eye. For otherwise his comparison would not hold.

*Βασκαίνω

The second thing required in Jugling, is a sleight done above the order and course of nature. This is the point which maketh these conveiances to bee Witch-craft. For if they were within the compasse of nature, they could not be rightly tearmed and reputed Sorceries: considering that divers men by reason of the agilitie of their bodies, and sleight of their hands, are able to worke divers feats, which seeme strange to the beholders, and yet not meddle with Witchcraft. Againe, some by the lawfull art of Opticks, may shew strange and admirable things, by meanes of light and darknesse, and yet may be free from imputation of Magicall workes; because they keepe themselves wholly within the power & practice of nature. But sleights done in Jugling ouer and above delusion, must passe the ordinary bounds and precincts of nature, and so are made points of Witchcraft. One memorable example, for the clearer manifestation of this point, wee have in the Scripture, by name in the 7. 8. and 9. Chapters of Exodus, where Moses and Aaron, wrought wonders before Pharaoh, turning the rod into a serpent, and water into bloud, with many other such like. Now Iannes and Iambres (for so Paul calleth them, 2 Tim. 3. 8.) the Magicians of Ægypt, did worke the same miracles which Moses and Aaron had done; But here was the difference; Moses made true creatures, and wrought true miracles, whereas they did all in appearance and outward shew. For theirs were not true reall actions, but onely Magicall illusions, wrought by the sleight and subtiltie of the Devill, in the practice of Jugling.

And because some thinke, that the Serpents and frogges caused by the Magicians, were true creatures, and all their other workes as really and truly done as those which Moses and Aaron did, I will here stand a little to shew and prove the contrary, that they were onely in shew and appearance, and not in deed and truth.

First then, if the frogs and Serpents caused by Iannes and Iambres were true creatures indeed, and their other sleights true and reall workes; then they were made and caused either by the devill, or by God himselfe; (for no man of himselfe can make a rodde to become a true serpent.) But this was done neither by the devill nor by God, as shall appeare in the sequele.

They there not done by the Devill; because the devill cannot make a true creature, either serpent or frog.

How doth that appeare? Ans. To make a true creature of any sort, by producing the same out of the causes, is a worke serving to continue the creation, and is indeed a kinde of creation. Now the Devill as hee cannot create a thing at the first, so hee is not able to continue the same by a new creation; that being a property belonging to God onely. For better conceiving hereof, wee must know, that God createth two wayes; either primarily in the beginning, when hee made all things of nothing Gen. 1. 1. or secondarily, in the government of the world, when hee produceth a true creature in a true miracle; yet not making it of nothing (as hee did in the beginning) but producing it by ministring and informing the matter immediately by himselfe, without the aid of ordinary meanes and instruments appointed after the creation. The former is creation properly called, the latter a continuance thereof. Both these God hath reserved to himselfe, as incommunicable to any creature. As for the succession and propagation of creatures in their kindes, as of men, beasts, birds, fishes, &c. it is onely a continuation of the creatures in their kindes, and is wrought by ordinary meanes of generation: but is no continuance of the worke of the creation. And the Devill by his power may make counterfeits of the true creatures of God, but neither by creating them, nor by continuing their creation; these two being workes peculiar liar and proper to the Deity alone.

Againe, if the devill could turne a rodde into a true serpent, and water into bloud indeed, then his power should bee equall to the power of the Sonne of God himselfe. For the first miracle that hee wrought, was the turning of water into Wine, John 2. And that was no greater a worke, than the turning of water into bloud, or a rodde into a Serpent. But this were most horrible blasphemie, to match the Devill with the Sonne of God, and his finite power with the power of the God-head, by which miracles are wrought. And the truth is, Satan can worke no true miracles; neither doth the text import, that the Magicians did that which they did by miracle, but by inchantment and Sorcery, Exod. 7. 11. 22. and 8. 7.

In the second place, I affirme that God did not create these creatures, or cause the workes of the Magicians to bee effected. And this is proved by the words of Paul, 2 Tim. 3. 8. who saith that Iannes and Iambres (which did these workes) with-stood Moses and Aaron, whom God had sent, and by whom he wrought. If then God had wrought with the Magicians also, he should have beene against himselfe, yea, he should have wrought both wayes, for himselfe, and against himselfe, and consequently should have impeached his owne glory, for the manifestation whereof hee wrought miracles by Moses and Aaron; which we may not once thinke of God. Seeing therefore that these Serpents, if they were true creatures, were not created either by Satan, because hee could not, or by God himselfe, because hee would not; it must needs remaine, that they, and all other the Magicians works, were meere illusions, and not otherwise.

Yet for the further clearing of the matter in hand: the text it selfe yeeldeth sundry reasons, to prove that these acts of the sorcerers were but appearances, and not things really produced.

First, they that cannot doe a lesser thing, cannot possibly doe a greater. Now Moses sheweth that the Ægyptian Inchanters could not doe a lesser thing, than the turning of rods into true serpents, or waters into bloud. For they could not by all their power and skill, preserve themselves from the plagues of Ægypt, as the botch, and other judgements, Exod. 9. 11. which was a more easie thing, than to make or change a creature. Nay, they were not able to bring forth lice by their Inchantment, which seemeth to bee the least miracle, but acknowledged that to bee the finger of God, Exod. 8. 18, 19.

Secondly, the text saith, that Aarons serpent devoured their serpents, Exod. 7. 12. hence it followes, that theirs could not be true creatures: For in all likelihood they were all of the same kind, and of like quantity, at least in shew. And it was never seene, that one creature should receive into it selfe another creature of equall bigneſse, with preservation of it selfe. Neither hath it been observed ordinarily, that one creature should devoure another of the same kinde. It was therefore a worke of Gods secret power in the true serpent, wherby he would shew that the other were not true and reall, but formall and imaginary.

Thirdly, if the Magicians had beene able to have made true frogges and serpents, then by the same power they might have removed those which Moses brought; for the like ability is required in both: yet this they could not doe, but were faine to intreat Moses, to pray for their removall. So saith the text, Then Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron, and said, Pray, &c. Exod. 8. 8.

Lastly, the frogs which Moses caused when they were removed, being gathered on heapes, caused great corruption, and the whole land stanke of them, Exod. 8. 14. Againe, the water turned into bloud, made the fish in the river to die, and the water to stink, so that the Ægyptians could not drinke of the water of the river, Exod. 7. 21. But we read of no such effect of the frogges and waters of the Inchanters, which doubtlesse would have followed as well as the other, if both had been true and reall creatures. It remaines therefore that these were but meere appearances and juglingtricks, and the sorcerers themselves Juglers, yea, all their workes but sleights, caused by the power and subtilty of Satan, and no true workes, as hath beene said. Thus I have declared the whole nature, grounds and kindes of this damnable art.

Chap. V.

What Witches be, and of how many sorts.

HAving in the former part of this Treatise opened the nature of Witch-craft, and therby made way for the better understanding of this Judiciall law of Moses, I come now to shew who is the practicer hereof, whom the Text principally aimeth at, namely, the Witch, whether man or woman.

A Witch is a Magician, who either by open or secret league, wittingly and willingly, consenteth to use the aid and assistance of the Devill, in the working of wonders.

First, I call the Witch [a Magician] to shew what kind of person this is; to wit, such a one as doth professe and practise Witch-craft. For a Magician is a professor and a practicer of this art, as may appeare, Acts 8. 9. where Simon a Witch of Samaria is called Magus, or Simon the Magician.

Againe, in this generall tearme, I comprehend both sexes or kindes of persons, men and women, excluding neither from being Witches. A point the rather to be remembred, because cause Moses in this place setting downe a Iudiciall Law against Witches, useth a word of the feminine gender [mecashepha] which in English properly signifieth a woman-Witch: whereupon some might gather, that women onely were Witches. Howbeit Moses in this word exempteth not the Male, but onely useth a notion referring to the Female, for good causes; principally for these two.

First, to give us to understand, that the woman being the weaker sex, is sooner intangled by the Devils illusions with this damnable art, than the man. And in all ages it is found true by experience, that the Devill hath more easily and oftner prevailed with women, than with men. Hence it was, that the Hebrewes of ancient times used it for a proverb, The more women, the more Witches. His first temptation in the beginning, was with Eve a woman, and since hee pursueth his practice accordingly, as making most for his advantage. For where hee findeth easiest entrance, and best entertainment, thither will he oftnest resort.

Secondly, to take away all exception of punishment from any party that shall practise this trade, and to shew that weakenesse cannot exempt the Witch from death. For in all reason, if any might alleage infirmitie, and plead for favour, it were the woman, who is weaker than the man. But the Lord saith, if any person of either sex among his people, be found to have entred covenant with Satan, and become a practicer of Sorcery, though it bee a woman and the weaker vessell, she shall not escape, she shall not be suffered to live, she must die the death. And though weakenesse in other cases may lessen both the crime and the punishment, yet in this it shall take no place.

The second point in the description is consenting to use the helpe of the devill, either by open or secret league, wittingly and willingly: wherein standeth the very thing, that maketh a Witch to be a Witch: The yeelding of consent upon covenant. By which clause, two sorts of people are expressly excluded from being Witches. First, such as be tainted with phrenzy or madnesse, or are through weakenesse of the braine deluded by the devill. For these, though they may bee said after a sort to have societie with Satan, or rather hee with them, yet they cannot give their consent to use his aid truly, but onely in imagination: with the true Witch it is farre otherwise. Secondly, all such superstitious persons, men or women, as use Charmes and Inchantment for the effecting of any thing upon a superstitious and erroneous perswasion, that the Charmes have vertue in them to doe such things, not knowing that it is the action of the devill by those meanes; but thinking that God hath put vertue into them, as he hath done into herbes for Physicke. Of such persons wee have (no doubt) abundance in this our Land, who though they deale wickedly and sin grievously in using Charmes, yet because they intend not to joyne league with the devill, either secretly, or formally, they are not to bee counted Witches. Nevertheless, they are to bee advertised in the meane time, that their estate is fearefull. For their present ungodly practices have prepared them already to this cursed trade, and may bring them in time to bee the rankest Witches that can be. Wherefore I advise all ignorant persons, that know not God nor the Scriptures, to take heed and beware of this dangerous evill, the use of Charmes. For if they bee once convinced in their consciences, and know that God hath given no power to such meanes, and yet shall use them, assuredly they doe in effect consent to the devill to bee helped by him, and thereupon are joined in confederacie with him in the confidence of their owne hearts, and so are become Witches.

The third and last thing in the description, is the end of Witchcraft; The working of wonders. Wonders are wrought three wayes (as hath beene shewed,) either by Divination, or by Inchantment, or by Jugling: and toone of these three heads, all feats and practices of Witchcraft are to be referred.

Now if any man doubt, whether there bee such Witches indeed as have beene described, let him remember, that besides experience in all ages and countries, wee have also sundry examples of them even in the Scriptures.

In the old Testament wee reade of Balaam, Num. 23. who though he be called a Prophet, because hee was so reputed of men, yet indeed hee was a notorious Witch, both by profession and practice, and would have showed his cunning in that kinde upon the Israelites, if God had not hindred him against his will. Of the same kind were the inchanters of Ægypt, Exod. 7. the Witches of Persia, Dan. 2. and the Pythonisse of Endor, knowne for a renowmed Sorcerer over all Israel, and therefore Sauls servants being asked, could presently tell of her, as we reade, 1 Sam. 28.

In the new Testament, mention is made of Simon, whose name declared his profession; his name was Magus; and the text saith, that hee used Witch-craft, and bewitched the people of Samaria, calling himselfe a great man, Acts 8. 9. Whence it was, that after his death there was a statue set up in Rome in honour of him in the daies of Claudius Cæsar, with this inscription; Simoni Deo sancto. And it is not unlike, but Bar-iesus the false Prophet at Paphus, was a man addicted to the practices of Witch-craft, and for that cause was called by a kind of excellency, Elymas the * Magician, Act. 13. 6. 8. that is, the great or famous Sorcerer. Lastly, the Pythonisse at Philippi, That gat her master much advantage by diviming, Act. 16. 16. And all these used the helpe of the devill, for the working of wonders.

Iust. Mart. Apolog. ad Anton. Pium.

Of Witches there bee two sorts: The bad Witch, and the good Witch: for so they are commonly called.

The

The bad Witch is he or ſhe that hath conſented in league with the devil to uſe his helpe, for the doing of hurt only, as to ſtrike & annoy the bodies of men, women, children, and cattell, with diſeaſes, and with death it ſelfe: ſo likewiſe to raiſe tempeſts, by ſea, and by land, &c. This is commonly called the binding Witch.

The good Witch is hee or ſhee that by conſent in a league with the devil, doth uſe his help for the doing of good onely. This cannot hurt, torment, curſe, or kill, but onely heale and cure the hurts inflicted upon men or cattell, by bad Witches. For as they can doe no good, but only hurt: ſo this can doe no hurt, but good only. And this is that order which the devill hath ſet in his kingdome, appointing to ſeverall perſons their ſeverall offices and charges. And the good Witch is commonly tearmed the unbinding Witch.

Now howſoever both theſe bee evill, yet of the two, the more horrible and deteſtable Monſter is the good Witch: for looke in what place ſoever there bee bad Witches that hurt onely, there alſo the devill hath his good ones, who are better knowne than the bad, being commonly called Wiſemen or Wiſewomen. This wil appeare by experience in moſt places in this countrie. For let a mans childe, friend, or cattell bee taken with ſome ſore ſickneſſe, or ſtrangely tormented with ſome rare and unknowne diſeaſe, the firſt thing hee doth, is to bethinke himſelfe and inquire after ſome Wiſe-man or Wiſewoman, and thither he ſends and goes for helpe. When hee comes, hee firſt tels him the ſtate of the ſicke man: the Witch then being certified of the diſeaſe, preſcribeth either Charmes of words to bee uſed over him, or other ſuch counterfeit meanes, wherein there is no vertue; being nothing elſe but the Devils Sacraments, to cauſe him to doe the cure, if it come by Witch-craft. Well, the meanes are received, applyed, and uſed, the ſicke partie accordingly recovereth, and the concluſion of all is, the uſuall acclamation; Oh, happie is the day that ever I met with ſuch a man or woman to helpe me!

Here obſerve, that both have a ſtroke in this action: the bad Witch hurt him, the good healed him; but the truth is, the latter hath done him a thouſand times more harme than the former. For the one did onely hurt the bodie, but the devill by meanes of the other, though hee have left the body in good plight, yet hee hath laid faſt hold on the ſoule, and by curing the body, hath killed that. And the partie thus cured, cannot ſay with David; The Lord is my helper; but the devill is my helper; for by him he is cured. Of both theſe kindes of Witches the preſent law of Moſes muſt be underſtood.

This point well conſidered, yeeldeth matter both of inſtruction and practice.

Of inſtruction, in that it ſhewes the cunning and crafty dealing of Satan, who afflicteth and tormenteth the body for the gaine of the ſoule. A And for that purpoſe hath ſo ordered his inſtruments, that the bad Witch gives the occaſion, by annoying the body or goods; and the good immediately accompliſheth his deſire, by intangling the ſoule in the bands of errour, ignorance, and falſe faith. Againe, this ſheweth the blindneſſe of naturall corruption, ſpecially in ignorant and ſuperſtitious people. It is their nature to abhorre hurtfull perſons, ſuch as bad Witches be, and to count them execrable; but thoſe that doe them good, they honour and reverence as wiſe men and women, yea ſeeke and ſue unto them in times of extremitie, though of all perſons in the world they be moſt odious: and Satan in them ſeemes the greateſt friend, when hee is moſt like himſelfe, and intendeth greateſt miſchiefe. Let all ignorant perſons bee adviſed hereof in time, to take heed B to themſelves, and learne to know God and his Word, that by light from thence they may better diſcerne of the ſubtile practices of Satan and his inſtruments.

For matter of practice; Hence we learne our dutie, to abhorre the Wizzard, as the moſt pernicious enemie of our ſalvation, the moſt effectuall inſtrument of deſtroying our ſoules, and of building up the devils kingdome; yea, as the greateſt enemy to Gods name, worſhip, and glory, that is in the world, next to Satan himſelfe. Of this ſort was Simon Magus, who by doing ſtrange cures and workes, made the people of Samaria to take him for ſome great man, who wrought by the mighty power of C God, whereas he did all by the devill. He therefore being a good Witch, did more hurt in ſeducing the people of God, than Balaam a bad one could with all his curſes. And wee muſt remember that the Lord hath ſet a Law upon the Witches head, he muſt not live, and if death be due to any, then a thouſand deaths of right belong to the good Witch.

But the patrons of Witches endevour to delude the true interpretation of that Law. For by a Witch (ſay they) we muſt underſtand a poiſoner, and they alleage for that purpoſe the 70. Interpreters, who tranſlate the originall word [Mecaſhepha] by φαρμακὸς, which ſignifieth a poiſoner.

I anſwer: Firſt, the word uſed by the 70. Interpreters ſignifieth indeed ſo much, yet not D that onely, but alſo a Witch in generall, as may appeare in ſundry places of Scripture. The Apoſtle, reckoning up Witch-craft among the workes of the fleſh, uſeth the Greeke word φαρμακεια, not for poiſoning, but for all Magicall arts, as Hierome teſtifieth upon the place. And that it muſt neceſſarily bee ſo tranſlated, it is evident, becauſe in the next verſe murther is termed another work of the fleſh, under which, poiſoning and all other kinds of killing are comprehended. And the ſame word is uſed in the like ſenſe, Rev. 21.8. and 22.15. Gal. 5. 20.

Againe, the word [Mecaſhepha] which Moſes uſeth, is aſcribed to the Inchanters of Ægypt, gypt in the 7. 8. and 9. chapters of Exodus: and to the wisemen of Babel, Dan. 2. who are also called φαρμακεῖς in the translation of the Seventy: and both sorts of them were Witches and Sorcerers. The kings of Egypt and Babylon used these [Mecasshephim] for sundry purposes, and made them of their counsell; and if they had bin according to this allegation, poisoners, it is not like they would have so fitted the humours of those two Princes, Pharaoh, and Nebuchadnetsar, much lesse that they would have so ordinarily required their presence and assistance, in the businesse there mentioned.

Thirdly, there is a peremptory Law against the wilfull murtherer, Numb. 35. 31. that hee should be put to death, and that no recompence should be taken for his life. In which place all poisoners are condemned, because they are wilfull murtherers. Now if here in Exodus, by [Mecasshepha] wee should understand a poisoner, then there should be one and the same law twice propounded for the same thing, which is not like: and therefore the word used by Moses in this text, signifieth not a poisoner properly, but a Witch.

Chap. VI.

Of the punishment of witches.

HItherto I have treated of the nature of Witchcraft, both in generall, and particular, and have also shewed what Witches are, both good and bad. And now I proceed to the second point considered in this text, the punishment of a Witch, and that is Death.

In the Judiciall lawes of Moses (whereof this is one) the Lord appointed sundrie penalties, which in qualitie and degree differed one from another, so as according to the nature of the offence, was the proportion and measure of the punishment ordained. And of all sinnes, as those were the most heinous in account, which tended directly to the dishonour of God, so to them was assigned death, the greatest and highest degree of punishment. He that despised the Law of Moses, died without mercy under two or three witnesses, Hebr. 10. 28. the punishment of the theefe, was restitution fourefold, Exod. 22. 1. but the murtherer must bee put to death, Numb. 35. 31. the Idolater and Seducer were commanded to bee slaine, Exod. 22. 20. Deut. 13. 5. the Blasphemer must bee stoned, Levit. 29. 19. And the Witch is numbred amongst these grievous offenders; therefore his punishment is as great as any other. For the text saith, hee might not be suffered to live, Exod. 22. 18.

But why should the Witch bee so sharply censured? And what should move the Lord to allot so high a degree of punishment to that

A sort of offenders? Answ. The cause was not the hurt, which they brought upon men in body, goods, or outward estate. For there be sundry that never did harme, but good only. We reade not of any great hurt that was done by the Inchanters of Ægypt, or by the Pythonisse of Endor, or by Simon Magus in Samaria. And those divining Witches, which have taken upon them to foretell things to come, hurt not any, but themselves, yet they must die the death. This therefore is not the cause. But what if these doe hurt, or kill, must they not then die? yes verily, but by another Law, the law of murther, and not by the law of Witch-craft: For in this case, he dieth as a murtherer, and not as a Witch, and so he should die, though he were no Witch.

B The cause then of this sharpe punishment is the very making of a league with the Devill, either secret, or open, whereby they covenant to use his helpe for the working of wonders. For by vertue of this alone it commeth to passe, that Witches can doe strange things, in Divining, Inchanting, and Jugling. Now let it bee observed, of what horriole impiety they stand guilty before God, who joyne in confederacy with Satan. Hereby they renounce the Lord that made them, they make no more account of his favour and protection, they doe quite cut themselves off from the covenant made with him in Baptisme, from the Communion of the Saints, from the true worship and service of God. And on the contrary they give themselves unto Satan, as their God, whom

C they continually feare and serve. Thus are they become the most detestable enemies to God, and his people, that can bee. For this cause Samuel told Saul, that rebellion was as the sin of Witchcraft; that is, a most heinous and detestable sinne in the sight of God. The traitour, that doth no hurt to his neighbour, but is willing and ready to doe him the best services that can bee desired, is notwithstanding by the Law of Nations, no better than a dead man, because hee betraies his Soveraigne, and consequently can not bee a friend unto the Common-wealth. In like manner, though the Witch were in many respects profitable, and did no hurt, but procured much good; yet because he hath renounced

D God his King and governour, and hath bound himselfe by other lawes to the service of the enemy of God, and his Church, death is his portion justly assigned him by God; hee may not live.

Chap. VII.

The application of the doctrine of Witchcraft to our times.

THus having delivered the true sense and interpretation of this Judiciall Law, both concerning the sinne of Witch-craft, and the persons, by whom this sinne is practised; it remaineth maineth now that I ſhould make ſome uſe thereof, by way of application to the Witches of our times.

In doing whereof, foure particular Queſtions of moment, are to be handled.

I. Whether the Witches of our times, be the ſame with thoſe, that are here condemned by the law of Moſes: for ſome there bee, and thoſe men of learning, and members of Gods Church, that hold they are not.

II. If they bee the ſame (as it ſhall appeare they are) then how we may in theſe daies be able to diſcerne, and diſcover a Witch.

III. What remedy may bee uſed againſt the hurt of Witch-craft.

IV. Whether our Witches are to bee puniſhed with death, and that by vertue of this law of Moſes.

Sect. I.

I. Queſtion. Whether the Witches of our times, bee the ſame with thoſe that are here condemned by Moſes law.

Anſw. If we doe well conſider the qualitie, and condition of the Witches of our dayes, we ſhall eaſily ſee, that they be the ſame. For experience ſheweth, that whether they bee men or women, but eſpecially aged women, they bee ſuch perſons, as doe renounce God, and their Baptiſme, and make a league with the Devill, either ſecretly or openly; in which the Devill bindeth himſelfe to teach them certaine rites and ceremonies, whereby they may be able to worke wonders, as to ſtirre up tempeſts, to reveale ſecrets, to kill or hurt men, and cattell, or to cure and doe good, according to the tenour of their covenant.

The * confeſſions of Witches recorded in the Chronicles of Countreies through all Europe, doe with common conſent declare and manifeſt this point. So that howſoever our Witches may differ in ſome circumſtances from thoſe in the time of Moſes, as either in the inſtruments and means uſed, or in the manner and forme, or in ſome particular ends of their practices; yet in the ſubſtance and foundation of Witchcraft, they agree with them. For both of them have made a covenant with the devil one way or other, and by vertue thereof have wrought wonders above the order of nature. Agreeing therefore in the very foundation, and forme of Witchcraft, which is the league, and in the proper end, the working of wonders: they muſt needs bee in ſubſtance and effect the ſame with the Witches mentioned by Moſes. And yet this point is denied by ſome, and the Witches of theſe dayes have their patrons, who uſe reaſons to prove that now wee have none ſuch as we ſpeak of. Their reaſons are ſpecially three.

Firſt, they labour to take away the forme of Witch-craft, affirming that there can be no confederacy made betweene the Witch and the Devill, and that for foure cauſes.

* Ioan. Fr: Pic. Mirand. de prænot. l. 2, c. 8. Nicol. Remigius, Daemonolatr. l. 1. c. 5.

A I. In every league and contract the parties muſt bee mutually bound each to other: now betweene man or woman and the Devill, there can be no bond made, and though there could, yet man is bound in conſcience to God, to renounce the bond of obedience to Satan, and to breake the covenant. Anſw. There bee two ſorts of leagues; lawfull, and unlawfull: in all lawfull leagues it is true, that there muſt bee a mutuall bond of both parties each to other, which may not bee diſſolved; but in unlawfull compacts it is otherwiſe. And no man can ſay, that this league betweene a Witch and the Devill is lawfull, but wicked and damnable, yet being once made, howſoever unlawfully; it is a league and compact. This therefore proveth

B not, that there can bee no covenant at all, but that there can be no lawfull covenant betwixt them, which no man will deny.

II. Satan and the witch are of divers natures: he is ſpirituall, they are corporall ſubſtances: therefore there can be no league made betweene them. Anſw. The reaſon is not good. For even God himſelfe, who is of nature moſt ſimple and ſpirituall, made a covenant with Adam, renued the ſame unto Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob: and continued it with his Church on earth, from age to age. Hence it appeareth, that diverſitie of nature in the parties, cannot hinder the making of a covenant. And therefore if man may make covenant with God himſelfe, who is moſt ſpirituall; then may hee likewiſe

C come in league with the Devill, whoſe ſubſtance is not ſo pure and ſpirituall. Againe, wee muſt remember, that in making of a covenant it is ſufficient that the parties conſent and agree in will and underſtanding, though other circumſtances and rites, which are but ſignes of confirmation, be wanting. Be it then that Satan hath not a bodily ſubſtance, as man hath, yet conſidering that man is indued with underſtanding, to conceive of things, as the devill doth, and hath alſo will to yeeld conſent, and approbation thereunto, though in a corrupt and wicked manner, there may paſſe a confederacy, and a covenant may be made, and ſtand in force betweene them.

D III. Whatſoever the Devill doth in his compact, he doth it in fraud and deceit, never meaning in his promiſes, as man doth, & when both parties meane not one and the ſame thing, how can they grow to agreement in any kinde? Anſ. Suppoſe this be true, yet it onely proveth, that the covenant made betweene them, was deceitfull, and unlawfull. But what of that? ſtill it remaineth a bargain howſoever: for it faileth only in the circumſtance, the ſubſtance, which is the conſent of the parties, was not wanting.

IV. Witches of our times (ſay they) are aged perſons, of weake braines, and troubled with abundance of melancholy, and the devill taketh advantage of the humour, and ſo deludes them, perſwading that they have made a league with him, when they have not, & conſequently moving them to imagine that they doe, and may doe strange things, which indeed are done by himselfe, and not by them.

Ans. This reason is a meere melancholike conceit, without ground. And the contrary is a manifest truth, that they are not so, as is affirmed, parties deceived by reaso of their humors: For first, our Witches are as wise and politike, yea, as crafty and cunning in all other matters, as other men bee; whereas brainsicke persons troubled with melancholy, if their understanding be distempered in one action, it will bee faultie likewise in others more or lesse. Againe, our Witches know that they sinne in the practices of Witchcraft, and therefore they use subtile meanes to cover them, and hee that would convict them, must have great dexterity to goe beyond them. Now if they were persons deluded, through corruption of any humours; looke what humor caused them to doe a thing, the same would urge them to disclose it. Thirdly, they are also of the same stamp, they take the same courses in all their practices; their consent in word and action is universall. Men of learning have observed, that all Witches thorow Europe, are of like carriage and behaviour in their examinations and convictions: they use the same answers, refuges, defences, protestations. In a word, looke what be the practices and courses of the Witches in England, in any of these particulars, the same be the practices of the Witches in Spaine, France, Italy, Germany, &c. Wherefore the case is cleare, they are not deluded by Sathan, through the force of humour, as is avouched; for such persons, according as they are divetsly taken, would shew themselves diversly affected, and varie in their speeches, actions, and conceits, both publike and private. Fourthly, our Witches are wont to communicate their skill to others by tradition, to teach and instruct their children and posteritie, and to initiate them in the grounds and practices of their owne trade, while they live, as may appeare by the confessions, recorded in the Courts of all countries. But if they were persons troubled with melancholie, their conceits would die with them. For conceits, and imaginarie fancies, which rise of any humour, cannot be conveied from partie to partie, no more than the humour it selfe. Lastly, if this sleight might serve to defend Witches under pretence of delusion through corrupted humours, then here were a cover for all manner of sinnes. For example: a felon is apprehended for robberie or murther, and is brought before the Judge: Upon examination hee confesseth the fact; being convicted, the law proceeds to condemnation. The same mans friends come in and alleage before the Judge in this manner; This man hath a crazie braine, and is troubled with melancholy, and though he hath confessed the fact, yet the truth is, it was not he, but the Devill who himselfe committed the murther, and made him thinke hee did it, when he did it not, and hereupon he hath confessed. Would any man thinke, that this were a reasonable allegation, and a sufficient meane to move the Judge to acquit him? Assuredly if it were, upon the same ground might any sinne be laid upon the Devils backe, and all good lawes and judiciall proceedings be made void.

Therefore howsoever the patrons of Witches be learned men, yet they are greatly deceived in fathering the practices of Sorcerie upon a melancholike humour.

But for the further ratifying of their assertion, they proceed, and use this argument: They which confesse of themselves things false and impossible, must needs be parties deluded: but our Witches doe this, when they be examined or consulted with, as that they can raise tempests, that they are carried thorow the aire in a moment, from place to place, that they passe thorow key-holes, and clifts of doores, that they be sometimes turned into cats, hares, and other creatures; lastly, that they are brought into farre countries, to meet with Herodias, Diana, and the Devill, and such like; all which are meere fables, and things impossible.

Ans. We must make a difference of Witches in regard of time. There is a time, when they first begin to make a league with Satan, and a time also after the league is made and confirmed.

When they first beginne to grow in confederacie with the devill, they are sober, and their understanding sound, they make their match waking, and as they thinke wisely enough, knowing both what they promise the Devill, and upon what conditions, and therefore all this while it is no delusion. But after they bee once in the league, and have beene intangled in compact with the Devill (consideratelyas they thinke, for their owne good and advantage) the case may be otherwise. For then reason and understanding may be depraved, memorie weakned, and all the powers of their soule blemished. Thus becomming his vassals, they are deluded, and so intoxicated by him, that they will run into thousands of fantasticall imaginations, holding themselves to be transformed into the shapes of other creatures, to be transported in the ayre into other countries, yea, to doe many strange things, which in truth they doe not.

I come now to their second reason. The Witches of our age (say they) were not knowne in the dayes of Moses, nor of Christ, therefore that law concerneth them not.

To this I answer two wayes:

First, that their argument is naught: For by the same reason the Papists might avouch the lawfulnesse of the images of Saints, as of Peter, Paul, and others, yea, of Christ himselfe, because they were not known in the daies of Moses, and therefore could not bee condemned in the second Commandement. Whereas contrarily, the Spirit of God hath so framed and penned the lawes Morall, and Judiciall, which concerne man, as that they fetch within their compaſſe all ſinnes of all ages, and condemne them. And therefore whatſoever is againſt the Law of God written by Moſes, though it were not known, nor heard of, either when the Law was made, or afterward, is yet condemned by the ſame Law.

Againe, I anſwer, that our Witches are the ſame that were in Moſes time: and therefore by their owne reaſon muſt needs bee condemned by this Judiciall law. For by the records of ancient writers it is proved, that about 1200. yeares before Chriſts birth, ſhortly after the Trojan warre, which was 100. yeare and upward before the building of the Temple by Salomon, there were the ſame Witches that are now, as the Circes and Syrenes, and ſuch like, mentioned in the * narration of that warre, as is manifeſt to them that know the ſtorie.

* Homer. Odyſſ. lib. 10. & 12.

Againe, 500. yeares before Chriſt, when the Romans made their * twelve Tables, which compriſed all the lawes whereby that famous Commonwealth was governed, they made one expreſly againſt Witches, even the ſame with theſe of our time, for practiſing the ſame things, as blaſting of corne, hurting of cattell, men, women and children, &c. And for the time of Chriſt, though therebe no particular mention made of any ſuch Witches: yet thence it followeth not, that there were none: for all things that then happened, were not recorded: and I would fain know of the chiefe patrons of them, whether thoſe parties poſſeſſed with the Devil and troubled with ſtrange diſeaſes, whom Chriſt healed, and out of whom he caſt Devils, were not bewitched with ſome ſuch people, as our Witches are? if they ſay no, let them if they can prove the contrarie.

* Sub tit. de injur. aliiſq; delict. c 9. Senec. lib. Nat. Queſt. 4. Qui fruges excantaſſit, &c.

The third and laſt reaſon is this: Chriſt at his comming aboliſhed all ſinne, and therefore miracles and Witchcraft then ceaſed alſo. The Apoſtle ſaith, that hee ſpoiled principalities and powers, and triumphed over them upon the croſſe, Coloſ. 2. 15.

Anſ. This argument is frivolous, ſerving as well to juſtifie the traytor, the theefe, and the murtherer, as the Witch. For whereas it is alleaged, that Chriſt aboliſhed all ſinne; we muſt underſtand how: not ſimply, ſo as ſin ſhould be no more, but onely in part, in this life, reſerving the finall deſtruction thereof to the laſt judgement. Againe, ſinne is not aboliſhed, no not in part unto all, but only to the members of Chriſt. Whereupon the Apoſtle ſaith, There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt, Rom. 8. 1. becauſe no ſinne is imputed unto them. But unto Witches, and all the enemies of Chriſt, ſinne is imputed, and not aboliſhed.

To conclude, howſoever much is ſaid in their defence, yet the firſt part is cleare affirmatively, that the Witches of our time are the ſame with the witches that were in Moſes time, in truth & ſubſtance. And ſo much for the firſt Queſtion.

Sect. II.

II. Queſt. How we may be able in theſe our dates to diſcerne, and diſcover a Witch.

Anſw. The diſcoverie of a Witch is a matter Judiciall, as is alſo the diſcovery of a theefe and a murtherer, and belongeth not to every man, but is to be done Judicially by the Magiſtrate, according to the forme and order of Law: who therefore is ſet apart for ſuch ends, and hath authoritie both to diſcover and puniſh the enemies of God and his Church. Now for the Magiſtrates direction in this buſineſſe, we are to know, that in the diſcovery of a Witch, two things are required, Examination, and Conviction.

§ 1. Examination is an action of the Magiſtrate, making ſpeciall enquirie of the crime of Witchcraft. This action muſt have the beginning from occaſions, and preſumptions. For the Magiſtrate though he be a publike perſon, and ſtand in the roome of God, for the execution of juſtice, yet he may not take upon him to examine whom and how himſelfe willeth, of any crime; neither ought he to proceed upon ſleight cauſes, as to ſhew his authoritie over others, or upon ſiniſter reſpects, as to revenge his malice, or to bring parties into danger or ſuſpition; but he muſt proceed upon ſpecial preſumptions.

Thoſe I call preſumptions, which doe at leaſt probably, and conjecturally note one to be a

Witch; and theſe are certaine ſignes, whereby the party may be diſcovered: I will touch ſome few of them.

The firſt in order is this: If any perſon, man, or woman, be notoriouſly defamed for ſuch a partie. Notorious defamation, is a common report of the greater ſort of people, with whom the partie ſuſpected dwelleth, that he or ſhe is a Witch. This yeeldeth a ſtrong ſuſpition. Yet the Magiſtrate muſt be warie in receiving ſuch a report. For it fals out oftentimes, that the innocent may be ſuſpected, and ſome of the better ſort notoriouſly defamed. Therefore the wiſe and prudent Judge ought carefully to looke, that the report be made by men of honeſtie and credit: which if it be, he may then proceed to make further inquirie of the fact.

The ſecond is, if a fellow-witch or Magician give teſtimonie of any perſon to be a Witch, either voluntarily, or at his or her examination, or at his or her death. This is not ſufficient for conviction, or condemnation, but onely a fit preſumption to cauſe ſtrait examination of the partie to be made.

Thirdly, if after curſing there followeth death, or at leaſt ſome miſchiefe. For Witches are wont to practiſe their miſchievous facts by curſing and banning. This alſo is a ſufficient matter of Examination, not of Conviction.

Fourthly, if after enmitie, quarrelling, or threatning, a preſent miſchiefe doth follow. For parties deviliſhly diſpoſed, after curſings do uſe threatnings; and that also is a great presumption.

Fifthly, if the partie suspected be the sonne or daughter, the man-servant, or maidservant, the familiar friend, neere neighbour, or old companion of a knowne and convicted Witch. This may be likewise a presumption. For Witchcraft is an art that may bee learned, and conveyed from man to man, and often it falleth out, that a Witch dying leaveth some of the forenamed, heires of her Witchcraft.

Sixthly, some do adde this for a presumption; If the partie suspected be found to have the devils marke: for it is commonly thought, when the Devill maketh his covenant with them, he alwaies leaveth his marke behind him, whereby hee knowes them for his owne. Now if by some casuall meanes, such a marke be descried on the bodie of the partie suspected, whereof no evident reason in nature can be given, the Magistrate in this case may cause such to be examined, or take the matter into his owne hand, that the truth may appeare.

Lastly, if the partie examined be unconstant, or contrarie to himselfe in his deliberate answers, it argueth a guiltie minde and conscience which stoppeth the freedome of speech and utterance, and may give just occasion to the Magistrate to make further enquirie. I say not if he or she be timorous and fearefull: for a good man may be fearefull in a good cause, sometimes by nature, sometimes in regard of the presence of the Judge, and the greatnesse of the audience. Againe, some may be suddenly taken, and others naturally want the liberty of speech, which other men have. And these are the causes of feare and astonishment, which may befall the good, as well as the bad.

Touching the manner of Examination, there be two kinds of proceeding; either by a single Question, or by some Torture. A single question is, when the Magistrate himselfe only maketh enquirie, what was done, or not done, by bare and naked interrogation. A torture is, when besides the enquirie in words, he useth also the racke, or some other violent meanes to urge confession. This course hath been taken in some countries, and may no doubt lawfully and with good conscience be used, howbeit not in every case, but onely upon strong and great presumptions going before, and when the parties obstinate. And thus much for Examination: now followeth Conviction.

¶ 2. Conviction, is an action of the Magistrate, after just examination, discovering the Witch. This action must proceed from just and sufficient proofes, and not from bare presumptions. For though presumptions give occasion to examine, yet they are no sufficient causes of conviction. Now in generall the proofes used for conviction are of two sorts, some be lesse sufficient, some be more sufficient.

The lesse sufficient proofes are these. First, in former ages, the partie suspected of Witchcraft, was brought before the Magistrate, who caused red hot iron and scalding water to bee brought, and commanded the partie to put his hand in the one, or to take up the other, or both; and if he took up the iron in his bare hand without burning, or endured the water without scalding, hereby hee was cleered, and judged free: but if he did burne or scald, hee was then convicted, and condemned for a Witch. But this manner of conviction, hath long agone beene condemned for wicked and diabolicall, as in truth it is, considering that thereby many times, an innocent man may bee condemned, and a rancke Witch scape unpunished.

Againe, our owne times have afforded instances of such weake and insufficient proofes. As first, Scratching of the suspected partie, and present recoverie thereupon. Secondly, burning of the thing bewitched, if it be not a man, as a hogge, or oxe, or such like creature, is imagined to be a forcible meanes to cause the Witch to discover her selfe. Thirdly, the burning of the thatch of the suspected parties house, which is thought to bee able to cure the partie bewitched, and to make the Witch to bewray her selfe.

Besides these, in other countries they have a further proofe justified by some that be learned. The partie is taken, and bound hand and foot, and cast crosse waies into the water: if she sinke, shee is counted innocent, and escapeth; if shee fleet on the water, and sinke not, shee is taken for a Witch, convicted, and accordingly punished.

All these proofes are so farre from being sufficient, that some of them, if not all, are after a sort practices of Witchcraft, having in them no power or vertue to detect a Sorcerer, either by Gods ordinance in the creation, or by any speciall appointment since. For what vertue can the Scratching of a Witch have to cure a hurt? where doe we finde it in any part of the word of God, that scratching should be used for what promise of recoverie upon the use thereof?

But how then comes it to passe, that helpe is often procured by these and such like meanes? Answ. It is the sleight and subtilties of the Devill, upon scratching the Witch to remove such hurts, as himselfe hath inflicted, that thereby he may allure men to the practise of wicked and superstitious meanes. And that I say of scratching, the same may be enlarged to all other proofes of this kinde before named. God hath imprinted no such vertue in their natures to these purposes, or added the same unto them by speciall and extraordinarie alightment. That therefore which is brought to passe by them when they are used, commeth from the Devill.

And yet to justifie the casting of a Witch into the water, it is alleged, that having made a covenant with the Devill, she hath renounced her Baptisme, and thereupon there growes an Antipathie betweene her and water. This allegation serves to no purpose: for all water is not the water of Baptisme, but that onely which is used in the very act of baptisme, and not before nor after. The element out of the use of the Sacrament is no Sacrament, but returnes againe to his common use.

To goe yet further, another sufficient proofe is the testimonie of some wizzard. It hath beene the ordinarie custome of some men, when they have had any thing ill at ease, presently to goe or send to some wise man, or wise woman, by whom they have beene informed, that the thing is bewitched; and to winne credit to their answer, some of them have offered to shew the Witches face in a glasse: whereof the partie having taken notice, returnes home, and detecteth the man or woman of Witchcraft. This I grant may be a good presumption to cause strait examination: but a sufficient proofe of conviction it cannot be. For put the case the grand-Jurie at the Assises, goeth on a partie suspected, and in their consultation the Devill comes in the likenesse of some knowne man, and tels them the person in question is indeed a Witch, and offers withall to confirme the same by oath: should the Inquest receive his oath or accusation to condemne the man? Assuredly no; and yet that is as much as the testimonie of another wizzard, who onely by the Devils helpe revealeth the Witch. If this should be taken for a sufficient proofe, the Devill would not leave one good man alive in the world.

Againe, all other presumptions commonly used, are insufficient, though they may minister occasion of triall: for example; If a man in open court should affirme before the Judge; Such an one fell out with me, and cursed me, giving me threatning words, that I should smart for it, and some mischiefe should light upon my person or goods, ere it were long. Upon these curses and threats presently such and such evils befell me, and I suffered these and these losses. The magistrate thus informed may safely proceed to inquire into the matter, but hee hath not from hence any sure ground of conviction. For it pleaseth God many times to lay his hand upon mens persons and goods without the procurement of Witches. And yet experience shewes, that ignorant people who carrie a rage against them, will make strong proofes of such presumptions, whereupon sometimes Jurors doe give their Verdict against parties innocent.

Lastly, if a man being dangerously sicke, and like to die, upon suspicion will take it on his death, that such an one hath bewitched him, it is an allegation of the same nature, which may move the Judge to examine the partie, but it is of no moment for conviction. The reason is, because it was but the suspicion of one man, and a mans owne word for himselfe, though in time of extremitie, when it is likely hee will speake nothing but the truth, is of no more force than another mans word against him.

And these are the proofes, which men in A place and time have ordinarily used, for the detecting of such ungodly persons: but the best that may be said of them, is that they be all either false or uncertaine signes, or unavaileable for the condemnation of any man whatsoever.

Now follow the true proofes, and sufficient meanes of conviction, all which may be reduced to two heads.

The first, is the free and voluntarie confession of the crime, made by the partie suspected and accused after examination. This hath beene thought generally of all men both Divines and Lawyers a proofe sufficient. For what needs more witnesse or further inquirie, when a man from the touch of his owne conscience acknowledgeth the fault. B

And yet the patrons and advocates of Witches except against it, and object in this manner: that a man or woman may confesse against themselves an untruth, being urged thereto either by feare or threatning, or by a desire upon some griefe to bee out of the world; or at least, being in trouble, and perswaded it is the best course to save their lives, and obtaine libertie, they may upon simplicitie bee induced to confesse that which they never did, even against themselves. Anſ. I say not that a bare confession is sufficient, but a confession after due examination taken upon pregnant presumptions. For if a man examined, without any ground or presumptions, should openly acknowledge the crime, his act may bee justly suspected, as grounded upon by-respects; but when proceeding is made against him at the first, upon good probabilities, and hereupon he be drawne to a free confession, that which hee hath manifested thereby, cannot but be a truth. C Other points of exception urged by them, are of small moment, and may easily be answered out of the grounds before delivered, and therefore I omit them.

Now if the partie held in suspicion, bee examined, and will not confesse, but obstinately persist in deniall, as commonly it falleth out; then there is another course to be taken by a second sufficient meanes of conviction: which is, the testimonie of two witnesses, of good and honest report, avouching before the Magistrate upon their owne knowledge, these two things: Either that the partie accused hath made a league with the devill, or hath done some knowne practices of Witchcraft. And all arguments that doe necessarily prove either of these, being brought by two sufficient witnesses, are of force fully to convince the partie suspected. For example: D

First, if they can prove that the partie suspected hath invocated and called upon the Devill, or desired his helpe. For this is a branch of that worship, which Satan bindeth his instruments to give unto him. And it is a pregnant proofe of a league formerly made betweene the had conference with it, in forme or likeneſſe of a mouſe, cat, or ſome other viſible creature.

Thirdly, if they affirme upon oath, that the ſuſpected perſon hath done any action or work, which neceſſarily inferreth a covenant made; as that hee hath ſhewed the face of a man ſuſpected being abſent, in a glaſſe; or uſed Inchantment, or ſuch like feats. In a word, if they both can avouch upon their owne proper knowledge, that ſuch a man or woman ſuſpected, have put in practice any other actions of Witchcraft, as to have divined of things afore they came to paſſe, and that peremptorily; to have raiſed tempeſts, to have cauſed the form of a dead man to appeare, or the like, ſtanding either in divination or operation, it proveth ſufficiently that he or ſhe is a Witch.

But ſome may ſay, if theſe bee the onely ſtrong proofes for the conviction of a Sorcerer, it will bee then impoſſible to put any one to death, becauſe the league with Satan is cloſely made, and the practices of Sorcerie are alſo verie ſecret, and hardly can a man bee brought which upon his owne knowledge can averre ſuch thing.

I anſwer, howſoever both the ground and practice be ſecret, and to many unknowne, yet there is a way to come to the knowledge thereof. For it is uſuall with Satan to promiſe any thing, till the league be ratified: but when it is once made, and the partie intangled in ſocietie with him, then he endevoureth nothing more, than his or her diſcoverie, and uſeth all meanes poſſible to diſcloſe them. So that what end ſoever the Witch propoundeth to her ſelfe in the league, he intendeth nothing elſe, but her utter confuſion. Therefore in the juſt judgement of God, it often falleth out, that theſe which are true Witches indeed, ſhall either by confeſſion diſcover themſelves, or by true teſtimonie bee convinced. The cauſes which move the Devill not onely to effect, but to haſten this diſcoverie, are two principally.

The firſt is, his malice towards all men, in ſo high a degree, that he cannot indure they ſhould enjoy the world, or the benefits of this life (if it were poſſible) ſo much as one houre. Though therefore by vertue of the precontract, he be cock-ſure of his inſtrument, yet his malice is not herewith ſatisfied, till the partie be brought to light, and condemned to death. Which may be a caveat to all ill diſpoſed perſons, that they beware of yeelding themſelves unto him.

The ſecond, is his unſatiable deſire of the preſent and full poſſeſſion of them, whom hee hath got within the bonds of the covenant. For though he have good hope of them, yet is he not certaine of their continuance. The reaſon is, becauſe ſome united with him in confederacie, have through the great mercie of God, by carefull uſage of holy meanes, and faith in Chriſt, beene reclaimed and delivered out of his bondage, and ſo at length freed from his A covenant, ſo as hee hath eternally loſt them. Hence it is, that hee laboures by might and maine, to keepe them in ignorance, and to prevent the uſage of meanes effectuall to their converſion, by laying a plot for their diſcovery. But how then comes it to paſſe, that all ſuch perſons are not ſpeedily detected, but ſome live long, and others die without any mans privitie? Anſw. The reaſons hereof may bee divers.

First, becauſe ſome one or more of them may belong to Gods election: and therefore albeit for cauſes beſt knowne to himſelfe, hee ſuffer them for a time to be holden in the ſnares of Satan, yet at length in mercie hee reclaimes them, and in the meane time ſuffereth not the B devill to exerciſe the depth of his malice in diſcovering them to their confuſion. Againe, for others, the Lord may in juſtice and anger ſuffer them not to be diſcloſed, that living under the meanes, where they might be reclaimed, and wilfully contemning the ſame; they may live to fill up the meaſure of their iniquities, and thereby be made finally inexcuſable, that they may receive their juſter condemnation.

Secondly, the Devill ſuffereth ſome to live long undiſcloſed, that they may exerciſe the greater meaſure of his malice in the world; ſpecially if they be parties maliciouſly bent to doe hurt to men, and other creatures.

Thirdly, ſome Witches do warily agree with the Devill, for a certaine terme of yeares, C during which time hee bindeth himſelfe not to hurt them, but to be at their command. And Satan is carefull, ſpecially in caſe of his owne advantage, to keepe touch with them, that they may the more ſtrongly cleave unto him on their parts. But if the caſe ſo ſtand, that neither the partie ſuſpected confeſſeth, nor yet ſufficient witneſſes can bee produced, which are able to convict him or her either of theſe two wayes; we have no warrant out of the word either in generall, or in ſpeciall, to put ſuch a one to death. For though preſumption bee never ſo ſtrong, yet they are not proofes ſufficient for conviction, but onely for examination.

I would therefore wiſh and adviſe all Jurors, who give their Verdict upon life and death in D courts of Aſſiſes, to take good heed, that as they be diligent in zeale of Gods glorie, and the good of his Church, in detecting of Witches, by all ſufficient and lawfull means; ſo likewiſe they would be carefull what they doe, and not to condemne any partie ſuſpected, upon bare preſumptions, without ſound and ſufficient proofes, that they be not guiltie through their owne raſhneſſe of ſhedding innocent bloud.

Sect. III.

Queſt. III. Whether a man may prevent the danger of Witchcraft; and if hee may, then what remedies hee may lawfully and effectually uſe againſt it?

To this question wee answer affirmatively, that a man may. And for the manifestation of this point, the Remedies of Witch-craft are to bee considered. In the handling whereof, I will proceed in this order. First, to set downe the true, lawfull, and effectuall Remedies allowed and prescribed in the word. Secondly, the unlawfull and superstitious meanes prescribed and practised in the Romish Church.

Lawfull Remedies of Witchcraft, be of two sorts; Preservative, and Restorative. Preservative are those, which keepe a man from the hurt of Witchcraft. And these be of two sorts; either such as keepe safe the persons of men, or such as preserve the places of mens abode.

For the persons of men, there is one soveraigne preservative; And that is, to be within the covenant of grace, made and confirmed in the Gospel by the bloud of Christ, and that not outwardly in profession onely, as all those be which are within the compasse of the Church, but truly and indeed, as all the Elect are. And a man is then in the covenant, when God of his grace in the use of the meanes, gives him a true knowledge of the nature of it, and of conditions required in the same on both parts: and withall gives him a true and lively faith, to apprehend and applie to himselfe the promise of God in Christ, touching remission of sinnes, and life everlasting: yea, further to shew forth his faith by the fruits of true repentance, and new obedience. When a man in this manner comes to be brought within the covenant, and is in Christ, he then receives assurance of Gods favour, and to him belong the promises depending thereupon, to wit, not onely of the comfortable presence of Gods Spirit, but of the presence and speciall protection of his holy Angels, to pitch their tents about him, to keepe him safe in soule and bodie, from the power and malicious practices of Satan and his members. The ground of this assurance is laid downe in the word, Psal. 92. 10. Hee shall give his Angels charge over thee, &c. And the speech of Balaam confirmeth the same, who when he was hired of Balac to curse Gods people, and had often times assayed to doe it, but could not, at last he breakes out into this confession, There is no Witchcraft against Iacob, nor Sorcerie against Israel: (for so the words are to be read, according to the true meaning and circumstances of the text.) As if he should have said, I was of thy opinion (O Balac) that Israel might be cursed, but after triall made, I found by good experience, that I could doe that people of God no hurt by mine Inchantments.

Howbeit we must here remember, that the promise of protection made unto Gods children is not absolute, but admitteth exception, as all other promises of temporall blessing doe, and that in this manner: Thou shalt be partaker of this or that blessing, and this or that curse shall bee removed, if it be expedient for thee: but if for speciall causes, to trie thy faith, and to exercise thy patience, I make deniall, thou must rest thy selfe contented in my good will and pleasure.

By warrant of this doctrine, a question commonly moved, may be resolved: Whether the servant and childe of God may be bewitched or not?

Out of that which hath beene said, I answer, he may; and that is plaine by the Word. For by Gods permission, the holy bodie of Christ himselfe was by Satan transported from place to place, Matth. 4. Righteous Iob was miserably afflicted in his bodie by the power of the Devill; and his children, who no doubt were Gods servants, and brought up in his feare, as their father was, were slaine by the same power. Yea, Christ himselfe testifieth, Luk. 13. 16. That a daughter of Abraham, that is, of the faith of Abraham, had beene troubled eighteene yeares with a spirit of infirmitie, which the Devill caused by bowing her bodie together, so as shee could not lift her selfe up, v. 11. And therefore whereas some men are of this minde, that their faith is so strong, that all the Witches in the world, and all the Devils in hell cannot hurt them; they are much deceived. This their faith is but a fond presumption, and no true faith. For no man in the earth can absolutely assure himselfe of safetie and protection from the Devill: and if any could, it were the child of God; but Salomon saith, that all outward things may come alike both to the good and to the bad, Eccles. 9. 2.

Howbeit in this case there is great difference betweene the servant of God, and an unrepentant sinner. Though the godly man be not exempted from Witchcraft, yet hee is a thousand fold more free from the power thereof, than other men are. For there is onely one case, and no more, wherin the devill hath any way power to hurt him, and that is, when it pleaseth God by that kind of crosse, to make triall of his faith and patience, and out of this case, he is alwaies free from the annoyance of the vilest Witches in the world.

If then this be the onely soveraigne preservative to keepe a man safe and sure from the power of Witches, and of the Devill, to have part in the covenant of grace, to be made partaker of Christ, by a true faith, testified by dying unto all sinne, and living unto God in newnesse of life: wee must not content our selves with a formall profession, as many in the visible Church doe, which wanting the life of faith, doe not live in Christ; but strive to goe further and to adorne our profession, by framing our lives according to the word, that we may have our portion in this excellent privilege of preservation, from the power and malice of the enemies of God, and all ungodly persons.

Preservatives of the second sort, are such as concerne the places of mens abode. For Satan contenteth not himselfe to have manifested his malice in afflicting mens persons, but hee also inlargeth the same to the molestation of the the places where they dwell, by infecting the ayre, and such like. The onely effectuall means to remedie this evill, is the Sanctification of the places of our habitation. Looke as we are wont to sanctifie our meat and drink, by Gods word, and by prayer, and thereby procure his blessing upon his owne ordinance for our refreshing: so in like manner may wee sanctifie the places of our aboad, and thereby both procure the blessing which we want, and also avoid many curses and dangers, which otherwise would fall upon us.

If any shall thinke the Consecration of houses and places in this sort, to be a meere device of mans braine; let them remember, that in the Old Testament, besides the dedication of the Temple, allowed by all, there was a Law prescribed to the Jews, for the special dedication of every mans house: If any hath built a new house (saith Moses) and hath not dedicate it, let him returne againe, &c. Deut. 20. 5. As who should say, hee hath omitted a necessarie dutie. Now this dedication was nothing else, but the sanctification of them by word and prayer, wherein they made acknowledgment, that they became theirs by the free gift and blessing of God, and further desired a free and lawfull use of the same to his glorie and their mutuall good. A dutie which hath becne performed by the servants of God in ancient times.

The first thing that Abraham did, when he came from Vr of the Chaldeans, to the land of Canaan, which God gave him to possesse, was the building of an Altar for the worship of God, his sacrificing thereon, and calling upon the name of the Lord, Gen. 12. 8. The same did Noah before him at his first comming out of the Arke after the flood, Gen. 8. 20. and Iacob after him in Bethel. And they were all moved hereunto, because they knew their comfortable aboad in those places, came not by their owne endevour, but from the blessing of God. When the good king Hezekiah kept the Passeover in Jerusalem, his principall care was that the Priests and all the people might first be sanctified, and therefore he prayed unto God to be mercifull to them that were not sanctified, 2 Chron. 30. 18. And as he behaved himselfe in his kingdome, so should every master of a familie behave himselfe in his house where hee dwelleth, labouring to sanctifie the same that it may be comfortable to him and his; lest for neglect thereof, he pull upon himselfe and those that belong unto him, the heavie hand of God in plagues and punishments.

The second kind of Remedies are Restorative, which serve to deliver men from Witchcraft, by curing the hurts of Witches in the bodies of men, or other creatures. In the handling whereof, first, we will consider, how whole countries, and then how every private man may be cured and delivered. Whole Countries and Kingdomes are freed and cured specially by one meanes; The publishing and embracing of the Gospell. When our Saviour Christ had sent the seventie Disciples to preach in Jurie, at their returne he gave this testimonie of the effect of their ministerie, That hee saw Satan fall downe from heaven like lightning, Luk. 10. 18. his meaning was this; As lightning is suddenly and violently sent out of the cloud, and (as it were) cast downe to the earth by the cracke of the thunder: even so Satan the Prince of the world, that ruleth in the hearts of the disobedient, was cast downe, and his kingdome ruinated by the power of the Gospell preached. In the times of ignorance the devill triumpheth freely without controulement, but the mist and darknesse of his delusions cannot possibly abide the bright beams of Gods glorious will revealed by preaching. The Lord of ancient times commanded his people not to do according to those nations, among whom they dwelt in Canaan, by practising Witchcraft, or following after Sorcerie, Deut. 18. 9. &c. And that they might be able to obey this commandement, Moses prescribed unto them this Restorative, the reverent and obedient hearing of the Lords Prophets, v. 18. In this our Church if wee would be healed of our wounds, and banish Satan from among us, who greatly annoyeth a great number of our people by his delusions and dammable practices of Sorcerie; the onely way to bring it to passe is the maintaining of a learned Ministerie, the advancing of Prophets, by whose labours the Gospell may flourish. For the faithfull dispensation thereof is the Lords owne armes and scepter, wherby hee beateth downe the kingdome of darknesse, and confoundeth the workes and enterprises of the Devill.

The second sort of Restoratives, serve for the cure of particular persons: for howsoever the gift and power of casting out Devils and curing witchcraft be ordinarily ceased, since the Apostles times, it being a gift peculiar to the Primitive Church, and given to it onely during the infancie of the Gospell; yet there may bee meanes used, and that effectuall, for the easing of any person that is bewitched by Satans instruments. Those therefore that are in these daies tormented in this kinde, must doe three things.

First, they must enter into a serious examination of themselves, and consider the cause for which it pleaseth God to suffer Satan to exercise them with that kind of crosse. And hereupon diligent enquirie, they shall finde that their owne sinnes are the true and proper causes of these evils. When Saul was disobedient to the commandement of God, the Lord sent upon him an evill spirit to vex him, 1. Sam. 15. Hymenem and Alexander for their pestilent errors were both cast out of the Church, and given up also to Satan, that they might learne not to blaspheme, 1 Tim. 1. 20. in the same manner was the incestuous person dealt withall, 1 Cor. 5. 5.

Secondly,

Secondly, after this examination, the same parties must shew forth their faith, whereby they depend on the free favour and mercie of God for their deliverance. How may this bee done? by heartie prayer unto God, joyned with fasting that the same may bee more earnest. In which prayer the maine desire of the heart must be absolutely for the pardon of their sinnes, and their full deliverance from the hurts and tormentes of diabolicall persons: yet not absolutely, as for the other, but with this condition, so farforth as it stands with Gods glorie, and their owne good. For these are the bounds and limits of all temporall good things, of them the Lord makes no absolute promise, but with these conditions and qualifications.

Thirdly, the parties bewitched must patiently beare the present annoyance, comforting themselves with this, that it is the Lords owne hand, by whose speciall providence it comes to passe, and who turneth all things to the good of his chosen. Againe, they are to remember, that he being a most wise God, and loving father in Christ, will not suffer them to be tried above that they bee able to beare, but in his good time will grant a joyfull issue. Now when the bewitched shall thus submit themselves unto God in the crosse, be it that hee (upon some causes) deferre their deliverance, yet they shall not finally be deceived of their hope. For either in this life, at the appointed time, or in the end of this life, by death they shall be eternally delivered, and put in present possession of everlasting ease and happinesse. Thus much of the true remedies against Witchcraft.

In the next place wee are shortly to examine the false and superstitious Remedies, prescribed and used by them of the popish Church.

The most learned Papists of this age doe teach and avouch, that there is in Gods Church an ordinarie gift and power, whereby some men may cast out devils, and helpe annoyances that come by Witches. The Protestant is of a contrarie judgement, and holdeth according to truth, that there is now no such ordinarie gift left to the Church of God, since the dales of the Apostles.

Reasons of this opinion may be these.

First, casting out of Devils, and curing such annoyances, are extraordinarie and miraculous workes. For Christ accounteth handling of serpents without hurt, speaking with new tongues, curing of diseases by imposition of hands, (all which are things of lesse moment) to be miracles, Mark. 16. 18, 19. but all these lesser works, yea, the ordinarie power of working them, is ceased: for it was onely given to the Apostles in the Primitive Church, as a meanes to confirme the doctrine of the Gospell to unbeleevers, that never heard of Christ before. So Paul saith, Strange tongues (that is, the gift of speaking strange languages, without ordinarie teaching) are for a signe, not to them that beleeve, but to them that beleeve not, 1 Cor. 14. 22.

A And for the same end were all extraordinarie gifts then given. Seeing therefore the doctrine of the Gospell hath beene alreadie established, and the truth thereof sufficiently confirmed by miracles in the Primitive Church, the same gift must needs cease unto us. For if it should still continue, it would call into question the effect of the Apostolicall preaching, and implie thus much, that the Gospell was not well established, nor sufficiently confirmed by their extraordinarie Ministerie, and miracles accompanying the same. Againe, if the gift of working miracles should remaine, then the promise of God for his speciall and extraordinary assistance therein, should yet continue: for the gift and promise goe together; so long as the promise is
B in force, so long is the gift also: but the promise made by Christ, In my name shall they cast out Devils, and speake with new tongues, Mark. 16. was in force onely in the persons and Ministerie of the Apostles, and those that had extraordinarie and immediate calling from God, and it ceased when they and their calling ceased. Therefore if Ministers now should lay their hands on the sicke, they should not recover them: if they should annoynt them with Oyle, it should doe them no good, because they have no promise.

Howbeit the Papists stand stiffely in defending the continuance of these gifts.

First, they say, the Church of the New Testament is nothing inferiour to that of the Old.
C The Jewish Church before the comming of Christ, was the Church of the Old Testament, and had the power and gift of casting out Devils. So saith our Saviour himselfe, Matth. 12. 27. If I through Beelzebub cast out Devils, them by whom doe your children cast them out? In which words hee ascribeth this gift unto the Jewes, therefore it should seeme the same remaineth still in the Church.

Ans. That place of Scripture is diversly expounded. Some by children there mentioned, understand the Apostles, who were Jewes borne, and had received from Christ this gift and power to cast out Devils. Which if it be so, it maketh not for them, because they had it extraordinarily. But I rather thinke, that by chil-D dren, are meant the Exorcising Jewes, before Christs time, who did cast out devils among the, pretending an abilitie to doe this worke in the name of God; whereas in truth they were all flat Sorcerers, and did it by vertue of a league & compact made with the Devill. Which practice hath beene of long continuance, and is at this day common and usual among the Popish sort. And that there were such Exorcists among the Jewes, it is evident. For such were those Vagabonds which came to Ephesus, and tooke upon them to cast out devils by the name of Iesus, and Paul, Act. 19. 15. but the man in whom the evill spirit was, (so soone as he had adjured the spirit) ranne upon them, and mightily prevailed against them, v. 16. Now if they had done done this great worke by the power of God (as they pretended) the holy Ghost would not have called them Exorcists and Vagabonds, neither could the evill spirit possibly have overcome them as he did. Againe, in the Histories of the Jewes are recorded many practices of such as exercise this power among them. Raphael the Angell telleth Tobias, that a perfume made of the heart and liver of a fish, will helpe a man vexed with an evill spirit, Tob. 6. 7. which counsell is flat Magick, for there is no such vertue in the liver of a fish. And in other histories we read, that one Eleazar a Jew, by the smell of a certaine root put to the nose of a man possessed with a devill, caused the devill to come out of his nostrils, and forsake him; which thing was done in publike place before Vespasian and others. This also was effected by meere conjuration. For what vertue can there bee in any root or herb in the world, available to command and enforce Satan to depart from a man possessed? And yet such feats were played by sundry Magicians among the Jewes. Wherupon I conclude, that the meaning of our Saviour in the place alleaged, is in effect thus much; If I by the power of Beelzebub, &c. that is, you have among you sundrie Magicians and Exorcists, who pretend and exercise the gift of casting out Devils, and you thinke they doe it by the power of God, why then doe you not carrie the same opinion of me also?

Their second reason is grounded on the promise of Christ, Mark. 16. 17. These tokens shall follow them that believe. In my name they shall cast out Devils, &c. whence they gather, that there shall be alwaies some in the Church, who shall have power to cast forth Devils, if they beleeve.

Ans. That promise was made by Christ unto his Church, to be fulfilled immediately after his ascension. It did not extend to all times, and persons, so long as the world indureth, but onely to the times of the primitive Church, and to such as then lived. For to them only the doctrin of the Gospell was to be confirmed by signes and miracles. And this lasted about 200. yeares next after Christ his ascension. During which time, not onely the Apostles and Ministers, but even private men and souldiers wrought many miracles.

The third reason is taken from experience, which (as they say) in all ages from the Apostles times to this day sheweth, that there have bin alwaies some in the Church, which have had this gift of casting out Devils, and curing the hurts of Witchcraft.

Answ. This gift continued not much above the space of 200. years after Christ. From which time many heresies began to spread themselves; and then shortly after Poperie that mysterie of iniquitie beginning to spring up, and to dilate it selfe in the Churches of Europe, the true gift of working Miracles then ceased, and in stead thereof came in delusions, and lying wonders, by the effectuall working of Satan, as it was foretold by the Apostle, 2 Thess. 2. 9. Of which sort were and are all those miracles of the Romish Church, whereby simple people have beene notoriously deluded. These indeed have there continued from that time to this day. But this gift of the holy Ghost, whereof the Question is made, ceased long before.

To proceed yet further, we are here to consider the particular Remedies, which they of the Popish Church have prescribed against the hurts that have come by Witchcraft. And they are principally five.

I. The name Iesus.
II. The use of the Reliques of Saints.
III. The signe of the Crosse.
IV. Hallowed creatures.
V. Exorcismes.

I. First, for the name Iesus: Thus much we grant, that any Christian may lawfully call upon the name of Iesus in prayer, for the helpe and deliverance of those that are possessed and bewitched, but yet with the caveat and condition before specified, If it be the will of God, and if their recovery may make for his glory, the benefit of the Church, and the good of the parties diseased.

But the Papist by the use of this name, intendeth a further matter, to wit, that the very name uttered in so many letters and syllables, is powerfull to cast out Devils, and to helpe those that are bewitched. For when it is uttered, then (say they) the authoritie of Christ is present, that the worke may be done. A flat untruth, and a practice full of danger. For let this be well considered, whatsoever any man doth in this case, he must doe it by vertue of his calling, and have also his warrant for the doing thereof out of the word; which if hee want, and yet will undertake such a worke, he may justly feare the like event that befell the vagabond Jewes that were Exorcists, Act. 19. 13. Now the Church of Christ hath no warrant in the word, to use this name of Christ for any such purpose; neither hath any ordinary Christian a speciall calling from God so to doe. Therefore he may not doe it.

And whereas they would beare men in hand, that the said name, of all the names of Christ, and above all other things, is of most speciall vertue, though it bee used even by a man that wanteth faith, because the Apostle saith, At the name of Iesus every knee shall bow, both of things in heaven, in earth, and under the earth. Phil. 2. 10. and by things under the earth are meant the Devils: we must know that their allegation is weake, and that they greatly abuse the place. For there the name Iesus, is not onely a title of Christ, but withall signifieth the power, majestie, and authoritie of Christ, sitting at the right hand of the father, to which all creatures in heaven, earth, and hell are made subject: and by that power indeed (if they had it at command) they might be able to cure the hurts of Witchcraft.

II. The

II. The second speciall Remedie is the Use of Saints Reliques, as their books, bones, apparell, staves, or such like, which being but touched of the parties vexed, are excellent meanes to recover them.

Ans. The use of these things, to the purposes aforesaid, is a meere superstitious practice. For first, they have not the true Reliques of the Saints, as would plainly appeare, if a true Inventory were taken of all such as they say are to be found in their Monasteries and Churches. Secondly, though they had them, yet have they no warrant or calling to use them to this end: for in all the Word of God, there is neither commandement to warrant the use, nor promise to assure any man of a blessing upon the use of them. Albeit they would seeme to have some warrant, and therefore they alleage that which is written, 2 King. 13. 21. of a dead man, who being for haste throwne into the sepulchre of Elisha, so soone as he touched the bones of Elisha, revived, and stood upon his feet. To this also they adde the examples of cures done by Peters shadow, Act. 5. 15. and sundrie diseases healed by Pauls handkerchefes, Act. 19. 12.

Ans. These things indeed are true, but they serve nothing to their purpose. For first, the quickning of the dead souldier, came not from any vertue in the corps of Elisha, but it was a miracle, which it pleased God then to worke, by meanes of the corps, that the Jewes at that time might bee confirmed in the truth of that doctrine, which Elisha had taught them from God, and which before his death they had neglected, as I have before shewed. And it was a thing onely then done, and never since. It cannot therefore be a ground for the ordinarie use of Reliques. Againe, touching the other examples: I answer, that both Peter and Paul had the gift of working miracles, and having the gift, they might use such meanes for the present to cure diseases. But the Papists are not able to shew, that God hath given them the like gift, whereby they might be warranted for the use of the like meanes: neither can they assuredly hope for successe, although they should undertake to use them.

III. The third Remedie, is the signe of the Crosse, made upon the bodie of the partie tormented. Behold to what a height of impietie they are growne, ascribing that to the creature, which is proper to the Creator. For the power of working miracles, is proper onely to the Godhead. The Prophets and Apostles in their times did not worke them of themselves, but were onely Gods passive instruments, in this manner: When the Lord intended by them to worke any miracle, they received from him at the same time an extraordinarie and speciall instinct, whereby they were moved to attempt the worke. They therefore yeelded themselves to the present motion of Gods Spirit, to be his instruments onely in the dispensation of the worke: but the sole author and producer of the miracle, was God himselfe. And in this case the very manhood of our Saviour Christ, considered apart from his Godhead, had no power of it selfe, but was onely the instrument of his Godhead, whensoever it pleased him in that kind to manifest the same. Wherefore to ascribe this vertue to the Crosse, being a creature, or the worke of a creature, is to communicate the incommunicable power of the Creator to it, which is plaine blasphemie.

IV. The fourth Remedie, is the using of hallowed things; as hallowed graines, salt, water, bread, images; specially the image of Agnus dei.

Ans. Hallowed creatures are in truth unhallowed superstitions. For every creature is sanctified by the word and prayer, 1 Tim. 4. 4. by the word, when God in his word commands us to use it for some end; and by prayer, when we give him thanks for giving the creature, and withall desire his blessing in the use thereof. Now let any Papist shew me one letter or syllable in all the booke of God, commanding the use of a creature for any such end.

They affirme indeed, that Elisha wrought miracles by hallowed salt, for by it he cured the bitter waters, 2 King. 2. 21. But the Prophet used not hallowed, but common salt, and that not ordinarily, but only then, as a meanes whereby to worke a miracle. It was therefore powerfull in his hands, because for the doing thereof, he had power and warrant from God extraordinarily: and it cannot be so in any other, which have not the same gift.

V. The fifth and last Remedie, is Exorcisme, which is an adjuring and commanding the Devill in the name of God, to depart from the partie possessed, and cease to molest him any more. This meanes was used by our Saviour Christ himselfe, and after him by his Apostles and other holie men in the time of the Primitive Church, when the gift of working miracles was in force: but in these daies (as I said before) that gift is ceased, and also the promise of power annexed to the use of adjuration: and therefore the meanes thereof must needs cease. And for an ordinarie man boldly to undertake the Devill in such sort, is meere presumption, and a practise of heresie.

Sect. IV.

Quest. Whether the Witches of our age are to be punished with death, and that by vertue of this Law of Moses.

I doubt not, but in this last age of the world, among us also, this sinne of Witchcraft ought as sharply to be punished as in the former times: and all Witches being thoroughly convicted by the Magistrate, ought according to the Law of Moses to be put to death. For proofe hereof, consider these reasons.

First, this Law of Moses flatly enjoyneth all men, in all ages, without limitation of circumstances, not to suffer the Witch to live: and hereupon I gather, that it must stand the same, both both now and for ever to the worlds end.

Patrons of Witches except against this, holding that it was a Judiciall Law, which continued but for a time, and concerned onely the Nation of the Jewes, and is now ceased. But I take the contrary to be the truth, and that upon these grounds.

I. Those Judiciall Lawes, whose penaltie is death, because they have in them a perpetuall equitie, and doe serve to maintaine some morall precept, are perpetuall. The Jewes indeed had some Lawes of this kinde, whose punishments were temporall, and they lasted only for a certaine time: but the penaltie of Witchcraft, being Death by Gods appointment, and the inflicting of that punishment, serving to maintaine the equitie of the three first morall precepts of the first Table, which cannot be kept unlesse this Law be put in execution; it must necessarily follow, that it is in that regard morall, and binds us, and shall in like sort binde all men in all ages, as well as the Jewes themselves, to whō it was at that time personally directed.

II. Every Judiciall Law, that hath in it the equitie of the Law of nature, is perpetuall; but this Law of punishing the Witch by death, is such. For it is a principle of the Law of nature, holden for a grounded truth in all countries and kingdomes, among all people in every age, that the traytor who is an enemie to the State, and rebelleth against his lawfull Prince, should be put to death: now the most notorious traytor and rebell that can be, is the Witch. For she renounceth God himselfe, the King of kings, she leaves the societie of his Church and people, she bindeth her selfe in league with the devill: and therefore if any offender among men, ought to suffer death for his fact, much more ought she, and that of due desert.

The second reason for the proofe of the point in hand, is this; According to Moses law, every Idolater was to be stoned to death: Deuter. 17. v. 3, 4, 5. If there bee found any among you, that hath gone and served other gods, as the Sunne, the Moone, or any of the hoast of heaven: if the thing upon enquirie be found to be true and certaine, thou shalt bring them forth unto thy gates, whether it be man or woman, and shalt stone them with stones till they die. Now this is the very case of a Witch, she renounceth the true God, and maketh choice to serve the devill, she is therefore a grosse Idolater, and her punishment must be sutable. It is alleaged by the favourers of the contrary part, that Peter denied Christ, and yet was not put to death: I answer, there is great difference between Peters deniall of Christ, and Witches denying of God. Peters denyall was upon infirmitie and in haste: the Witch denyeth God upon knowledge and deliberation, wittingly and willingly. Againe, Peter did not upon the deniall betake himselfe to the devill, but turned unto Christ againe, which hee testified by his hearty and speedie repentance: but Witches

A deny God, and betake themselves to the Devil, of their owne accord, as is manifest even by their owne confessions at their arraignments.

The third reason. Every seducer in the Church, whose practice was to draw men from the true God to the worship of Idols, though it were a mans owne sonne or daughter, wife or friend, by the peremptorie decree and commandement of God, was at no hand to be spared or pitied, but the hand of the witnesse first, and then the hands of all the people must bee upon him, to kill him, Deut. 13. 6, 9. If this bee so, no Witches convicted ought to escape the sword of the Magistrate: for they are the most notorious seducers of all other. When they bee once intangled in the Devils league, B they labour to inure their dearest friends and posteritie in their cursed and abominable practices; that they may be the more easily drawne into the same confederacie, wherewith they themselves are united to Satan. I might here alleage that they deserve death, because many of them bee murtherers; but I stand not upon that instance, because I hold in the generall that Witches are not to be suffered to live, though they doe no hurt either to man or other creatures, and that by vertue of Moses law, onely for their leagues sake, whereby they become rebels to God, Idolaters and seducers, as how hath beene shewed. Yet notwithstanding all that hath beene said, many things are brought in defence of them, by such as be their friends C and well-willers.

First, it is said, that the hurt that is done, comes not from the Witch, but from the devil: he deserves the blame because it is his worke, and she is not to die for his sinne. Answ. Let it be granted, that the Witch is not the author of the evill that is done, yet she is a confederate and partner with the devill in the fact, and so the law takes hold on her. See it in a familiar comparison. A companie of men conspire together in a robberie, by common consent some stand in open place to espie out the bootie, and to give the watch word, others are set about the passage, privily to rush upon the man, and to spoyle him of his goods. In this case what saith the Law? The parties that gave the watch-D word, though they did nothing to the man, yet being accessories, and abettors to the robberie by consent, they are theeves, and liable to condemnation and execution, as well as the principals. Even so stands the case with the Witch. In the working of wonders, and in all mischievous practices, he or she is partaker with the devill by consent of covenant: the Witch onely useth the watch word, in some charme or otherwise, and doth no more; the devill upon notice given by the Charme, takes his opportunitie, and works the mischiefe. He is the principall agent, but the other yeeldeth helpe, and is rightly liable to punishment. The reason is, because if the Devill were not stirred up, and provoked by the Witch, he would never do so much hurt as he doth. He had never appeared in Samuels likenes, had he not been solicited by the Witch of Endor. He would not have caused counterfeit serpents and frogges to appeare in Ægypt, but for Jannes and Jambres, and other Inchanters. And in this age there would not in likelihood be so much hurt and hinderance procured unto men, and other creatures by his meanes, but for the instigation of ill disposed persons, that have fellowship and societie with him.

Againe, they object, that Witches convicted either repent, or repent not: If they repent, then God pardoneth their sin, and why should not the Magistrate as well save their bodies and let them live, as God doth their soules? If they doe not repent, then it is a dangerous thing for the Magistrate to put them to death: for by this meanes hee kils the bodie and casts the soule to hell.

Answ. All Witches judicially and lawfully convicted, ought to have space of repentance granted unto them, wherein they may bee instructed and exhorted, and then afterward executed. For it is possible for them to be saved by Gods mercie, though they have denied him. Secondly, the Magistrate must execute justice upon malefactors lawfully convicted, whether they repent or not. For God approveth the just execution of judgement upon men, without respect to their repentance: neither must their impenitencie hinder the execution of Justice. When the people of Israel had committed Idolatrie in worshipping the golden calfe, Moses did not expect their repentance, and in the meane while forbeare the punishment, but hee and the Levites presently tooke their swords and slew them, and the Lord approved their course of proceeding, Exod. 32. 28. When Zimri an Israelite had committed fornication with Cozbi a Midianitish woman, Phineas in zeale of Gods glorie executed judgement upon them both, without any respect unto their repentance, Num. 25. 8. and is therefore commended, Psal. 106. 30. Warres are a worthie ordinance of God, and yet no Prince could ever attempt the same lawfully, if every Soldier in the field should stay the killing of his enemie, upon expectation A of his repentance. And whereas they say, that by executing an impenitent Witch, the Magistrate casteth away the soule; we must know, that the end of execution by the Magistrate is not the damnation of the malefactors soule, but that sinne might be punished that others may beware of the like crimes and offences, and that the wicked might be taken away from among Gods people.

But some Witches there be that cannot bee convicted of killing any: what shall become of them? Ans. As the killing Witch must die by another law, though he were no Witch: so the healing and harmelesse Witch must die by this Law, though he kill not, onely for covenant made with Satan. For this must alwaies be remembred as a conclusion, that by Witches we understand not those onely which kill and torment; but all Diviners, Charmers, Juglers, all B Wizzards, commonly called wise men and wise women; yea whosoever doe any thing (knowing what they do) which cannot be effected by nature or art; and in the same number we reckon all good Witches, which doe no hurt but good, which do not spoile and destroy, but save and deliver. All these come under this sentence of Moses, because they denie God and are confederates with Satan. By the lawes of England the theefe is executed for stealing, and wee thinke it just and profitable; but it were a thousand times better for the land, if all C Witches, but specially the blessing Witch might suffer death. For the theefe by his stealing, and the hurtfull Inchanter by charming, bring hindrance and hurt to the bodies & goods of men; but these are the right hand of the devill, by which hee taketh and destroyeth the soules of men. Men doe most commonly hate and spit at the damnifying Sorcerer, as unworthy to live among them: whereas the other is so deare unto them, that they hold themselves and their country blessed that have him among them, they flie unto him in necessity, they depend upon him as their God, and by this meanes, thousands are carried away to their finall confusion. Death therefore is the just and deserved portion of the good Witch.

*Stand now among thine Inchanters, and in the multitude of Sooth-sayers, (with whom thou hast wearied thy selfe from thy youth) if so be thou maist have profit, or if so be thou maist have strength. Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counsels: let now the Astrologers, the Star-gazers, and Prognosticators stand up, and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee. # A RESOLVTION TO THE COVNTREY-MAN, ## proving it unlawfull for him to buy or uſe our yearely PROGNOSTICATIONS.

GOod Reader, I have thought it convenient (for ſome ſpeciall cauſes) in this ſhort Treatiſe, to diſcloſe a part of my minde unto thee, concerning the making of Prognoſtications, and if it might bee, to perſwade thee, not to ſpend thy money in buying any of them. I have long ſtudied this Art, and was never quiet untill I had ſeene all the ſecrets of the ſame: but at the length, it pleaſed God to lay before mee the prophaneneſſe of it, nay, I dare boldly ſay, Idolatrie, although it bee covered with faire and golden ſhewes. Wherefore, that which I will ſpeake with griefe, the ſame I would deſire thee to marke with ſome attention. My reaſon ſhall partly concerne thee, partly the Prognoſticator himſelfe. Firſt on thy behalfe, I reaſon thus:

The firſt reaſon, immoderate care.

1 AS a man doth ſee the bleſſings of God upon him, ſo he muſt alſo labour with a carefull diligence to maintaine the ſtate of this life. But becauſe the affection of man is carried head-long unto a greedy covetouſneſſe: this deſire of over-much carping and caring, muſt bee bridled with two ſtrong bits: Firſt, all our care muſt extend it ſelfe no further than the preſent day: Secondly, in caring we muſt not truſt unto our ſelves, but fix all our confidence in the mercy and providence of God who bleſſeth all, and without whoſe goodneſſe nothing can come to paſſe, doe what we will. As touching the firſt, we have the direction of our Saviour Chriſt: who teacheth us to pray on this wiſe; Give us this day our daily bread; whereby weare given to underſtand, that wee are onely to ſeeke for the preſent time, reſting with this perſwaſion, that hee which hath bleſſed us this day will alſo to morrow, and the next day

Matth.6.11.

A ſhew his like goodneſſe unto us. Againe, in the ſame place, our Saviour Chriſt ſpeaketh on this wiſe, Care not then for the morrow; for the morrow ſhall care for it ſelfe: the day hath enough with his owne griefe. By this we learne, that God will provide for every day all things neceſſary, though we doe not increaſe the preſent griefe, with caring and caſting in our heads how we ſhall live in the time to come. Now tell me what is the cauſe that thou yearely doſt buy a Prognoſtication, and one of thoſe which tell the ſtrangeſt things? Is it becauſe thou haſt a delight to reade the ſtile of Prognoſtications? Or becauſe thou wouldeſt learne to Prognoſticate? Or becauſe the pictures and Characters which they make delight thy minde? it were folly to bee perſwaded of this, ſeeing the very cauſe it ſelfe is manifeſt. Thy whole deſire is to fill thy coffers, and to heape up wealth, thou art afraid leſt thou ſhould become poore, therefore thou greedily buyeſt the Prognoſtications, and continually ſearcheſt all the corners of them, to ſee the ſtate of the yeare to come, even thus in minde reaſoning with thy ſelfe: I can never bee quiet, nor take my ſleepe, untill ſuch time as I have knowne the ſtate of the yeare inſuing, that I may frame my buſineſſe accordingly: This next yeare there wil be much raine, it will rot Corne upon the ground, it will be ſpoiled, I will keepe my Corne untill the next yeare following. I find that Corne will be deere about halfe a yeare hence, I will not ſell my Corne now, but keepe it, that I may have plenty of money for it, and ſufficient beſide to maintaine my houſe: the ſea and land is calme and quiet this yeare, the next yeare many ſhipwracks and troubles in many countries will fall, now I will fraught my ſhips that then I may be quiet. Theſe imaginations are lively arguments of thy diffidence and deſpaire in the goodneſſe and loving kindneſſe of God. If thou feare God, love God, put thy whole truſt in God, thou art content to referre thy whole preſervation unto the hands of God: now theſe proling and raigning conceits of the time to come, argue that either thou never thinkest on God, or at the least perſwadeſt thy ſelfe, that either he will not, or cannot helpe thee. And if thou in thy covetous minde pray unto God, thou canſt not pray according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, without hypocriſie, Give us our daily bread this day. Wherefore ſeeing the having of Prognoſtications commeth of ſo wicked cauſes, as is the greedy deſire of proſperity and wealth, and argueth ſome kinde of diffidence in God: when thou readeſt theſe my words, examine thine owne heart, if thou finde my ſayings true (as certainly thou ſhalt) never hereafter deſire to know the ſtate of the yeare before hand, except it bee for the ſeaſons of the yeare, which I am perſwaded thou maieſt know in ſome part, without any skill, even by thine owne experience.

The ſecond reaſon, neglect of Gods providence.

2 COncerning the contempt of Gods providence, thus much I ſay: The Prognoſticator, if he be asked whether he confeſſe the providence of God, he will with all his heart confeſſe it: but by his deeds hee doth deny it, for all the things whatſoever, which can happen in a whole yeare, hee attributeth them to the Starres, and ſo he publiſheth his Predictions, alwaies mentioning Starres, never, or very ſlenderly, making any ſignification of the power, and juſtice, mercy, and everlaſting wiſdome of God. And ſurely, even for the very paring of thy nailes, for the cutting of thy haire, for the putting on of thy ſhooes, for taking a journie two or three miles from thine houſe, for obtaining at Gods hands thy requeſt, for making thy bargaine with thy neighbour, for all thine actions be they never ſo ſmall, theſe wiſe men (if thou wilt aske their advice) will give thee counſell from the ſtarres. Now when theſe their irreligious predictions ſhall be had in thy boſome, and read of thee daily, thou being a man unlearned and worldly given, never hearing any mention of the ſpeciall providence, and hand of God in every thing, but long diſcourſes of the vertues of Planets and Signes, doeſt never thinke upon the wonderfull and moſt infinite power of God, working after a ſpeciall manner in every matter, but art drawne ſtraight waies into an admiration of the Aſtrologer, and a great feare of the conſtellations of Heaven. An experience of this I found in thee about two yeares agoe. A learned man (yet in this caſe far deceived) wrote an Aſtrologicall diſcourſe of the conjunction betweene Iupiter and Saturne, wherein he ſhewed of great alteration in every thing to fall. At this thou waſt ſore agaſt, thy minde was incumbred with ſettling thy goods to ſet them in order againſt that day: thy ſong for halfe a yeare was nothing elſe, but the conjunction; the day being come, what ſtaring was there and gazing into Heaven, to ſee the meeting of thoſe two Planets. Now all this while where was Gods providence, where was that truſt and rejoycing in him: where was that praiſing of his name for all things whatſoever ſhould come to paſſe, where was that meditation of his infinite, and unſearchable wiſdome: theſe things were never thought nor heard of, yea, by reaſon of thine earthly affections, they tooke no place in thine heart. This thy dealing is like unto the folly of that man, who having a coſtly clocke in his boſome, never extolleth or thinketh on the wit and invention of the clock-maker, but is continually in admiration of the ſpring or watch of the clocke, by whoſe meanes all the wheeles have their ſwifter or ſlower, their backward or forward motions, & by which the whole clocke keepeth his courſe. Wherefore mee thinketh that in a Chriſtian common-wealth, thoſe only books ſhould bee publiſhed for thine uſe, which might beat into thine head, and make thee every houre and moment to thinke on the providence of GOD: which being once ſettled in thy minde, the conſideration of the meanes which God uſeth will follow of it ſelfe. Contrariwiſe, to tell thee the meanes which God doth uſe, to thunder out the aſpects and conſtellations of Starres, and ſeldome to mention his providence, maketh thee to feare, and admire, and love the meanes, quite forgetting the worke of GOD in the meanes. This fault was very rife amongſt the Iſraelites, who came yearely unto Aſtrologers and wiſe men: Wherefore that which is ſpoken by Ieremy unto them, is alſo ſpoken unto thee: Heare ye the word of the Lord, that he ſpeaketh unto you, O houſe of Iſrael. Thus ſaith the Lord, Learne not the way of the heathen, and bee not afraid for the ſignes of Heaven, though the heathen bee afraid of ſuch. In like ſort, God forbiddeth his people of England to give credit, or feare the conſtellations and conjunctions of Starres and Planets, which have no power of themſelves, but are governed by him, and their ſecret motions and influences are not knowne to man, and therefore there can bee no certaine judgement thereof. If thou wilt not heare and follow this which I ſay, ſee what will enſue. Thou ſeeſt that the greateſt matters, which theſe Diviners and Prognoſticators foretell, fall out flat otherwiſe than they ſay, to their perpetuall ſhame. Truly I am perſwaded, that it is the judgement of God upon them (although they cannot ſee it) who maketh them, when they thinke they are moſt wiſe, to bee moſt fooles. For ſo the Lord uſed the wiſe men and Aſtrologers of Chaldea, as he ſpeaketh by his Prophet Eſay; I am the Lord that made all things, that ſtred out the heavens alone, and ſtretch out the earth by my ſelfe; I deſtroy the tokens of ſooth-ſayers, and make them that conjecture fooles, and turne their wiſe men backward, and make their knowledge fooliſhneſſe. Doeſt thou then, then, O careleſſe and miſerable man, thinke to eſcape the ſame, or greater puniſhment being a cauſe of this fault! for if none deſired to know what is to come, none would buſie themſelves in that vanity. Wherefore reade the Word of God in the 18. of Deut. When thou ſhalt come (ſaith the Spirit of God) into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. thou ſhalt not learne to doe after the abominations of theſe Nations. In the words following Moſes numbreth nine abominations:

Deut. 18. 9.

As
1 To make his childe goe thorow the fire.
2 To uſe Witchcraft.
3 To regard times, this is thy fault.
4 To marke the flying of Fowles.
5 To be a Sorcerer.
6 To be a Charmer.
7 To counſell with ſpirits.
8 To be a Sooth-ſayer.
9 To aske counſell at the dead.

All theſe horrible abominations being rehearſed, marke what followeth, For all that doe ſuch things are an abomination unto the Lord, and becauſe of their abominations, the Lord thy God doth caſt them out before thee: now ſeeing moſt of theſe abominations, and eſpecially the third, is uſed of us, why ſhould we not feare the like judgements upon us, unleſſe we will repent, and that with ſpeed?

Deut. 18. 9.

1 The reaſons which concerne the Prognoſticator, and may availe to the perſwading of thee not to buy any more of their unprofitable bookes, are theſe which follow: firſt, their unability in Prognoſticating: ſecondly, their manifeſt untruths: thirdly, their impieties: fourthly, their tricks of deceit. What: can they not foretell that which is to come? can they not make conjectures of that which is like to enſue? No ſurely. And I will uſe arguments to confirme it unto thee.

The firſt reaſon, of the uſe and end of the Heavens.

THe true uſe of the Heavens conſiſteth in many points: Firſt, to declare the glory of God. The Heavens (ſaith David) declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth the worke of his hands. It is an Alphabet written in great letters, in which is deſcribed the majeſtie of God, and that by theſe foure ſpeciall points: Firſt, the majeſtie of the worke it ſelfe: ſecondly, the infinite multitude of Stars: thirdly, by the wonderfull variety of Stars: fourthly, by the greatneſſe of the Stars.

2 Secondly, it maketh ſinners and wicked men inexcuſable before the judgement ſeat of God. For the inviſible things of him (ſaith Paul) that is, his eternall power and God-head, are ſeene by the creation of the world, being conſidered in his workes, to the intent that they ſhould be without excuſe.

3 Thirdly, they ſerve to the appointing of times, as day, night, moneth, yeare, which are

A both meaſured and deſcribed by the courſe of the Sunne, and Moone, and other Starres. And ſo the feaſt of the Iſraelites, and the computation of the yeare in our Church dependeth thereupon, and without them there would bee great confuſion both in the common-wealth and Church.

Fourthly, they ſerve to be ſignes, that is, to foretell things to come. And they are ſignes either of extraordinary things, or things which be ordinary. When they are ſignes of extraordinary things, then there is, and appeareth in them ſome extraordinary worke of God: as appeareth in theſe examples which follow. At the ſuffering of Chriſt, not onely the vaile of the Temple rent, and the dead roſe forth of their graves, but alſo the Sunne was wholly eclipſed, the Moone being in the full. At which light, Dionyſius Areopagita, a good Aſtronomer ſpake theſe words: Either the frame of the world is deſtroyed, or the God of nature ſuffereth. The Prophet Ezechiel being commanded of God to propheſie the deſtruction of Ægypt, he firſt putteth down extraordinary ſignes: And when I will put thee out, I will cover the Heaven, and make the Stars thereof darke: I will cover the Sun with a cloud, and the Moone ſhall not give her light. All the lights of Heaven will I make darke for thee, and bring darkneſſe upon the land (ſaith the Lord.) Before the ſecond comming of our Saviour Chriſt, there ſhall be ſignes in the Sunne and Moone, and in the Stars. Laſtly, the extraordinary going backe of the Sunne ſignified the lengthning of the life of King Hezekias.

Secondly, the Starres are ſignes of generall things which happen ordinarily every yeare in nature among us.

As of

I ſay generall, becauſe the particular eſtate and affaires of men, can in no wiſe be ſore-ſignified by the Stars. I ſay ordinary, becauſe the things which fall out ſeldome, and are beſides the common courſe of nature, as plenty of all things, famine, plague, warre, everſions of Kingdomes, &c. doe not depend upon the Stars. For the confirming of this, I have three reaſons: Firſt, in the firſt of Geneſis, God ſaith, That he made the lights to be ſignes, and yet the lame God in the 47. of Esay saith, He will destroy the signes of them which divine: flatly forbidding us to use Starres, as meanes to judge of any thing to come, saving only of those of which they are expresly made signes of God in the creation: all which are put downe before. Secondly, this is manifest by the order of the creation: the third day God created upon the earth herbs and trees, and the earth brought forth fruits and was fertile: the fourth day God commanded lights to be made in the firmament of Heaven, to separate the day and the night, and to be for signes and for seasons, and daies, and moneths, and then it was so, and then God saw it was good. Out of which I gather, that it cannot bee a signe causing famine, or plenty, and fertilenesse, because fertilitie went before the creation of the host of Heaven. Also of wars and plagues, and the particular estates of men, they can be no signes, because man was not yet created, and yet even then they were signes. Some will say, they were no signes of those matters in the creation, but now they may bee, and are: No, for the workes which God created he now preserveth, neither increasing nor diminishing any thing in them. Philo Iudæus in his booke De opificio mundi, saith, Hee was perswaded that God foreseeing the minds of men, given to search strange matters to come, did in this order create the heavens, to confute and disprove their imaginations. Thirdly, the Heavens and Starres were made for the use of man, and man is their end, so that it is absurd to imagine they have any force in the affaires of man. Now then, Prognosticators if they will foreshew of strange things to come, they must undoe the worke of their Creator, and give unto it new uses, otherwise they shall not bee able to prognosticate as they yearely doe.

Esay 47. 13,14.

The second reason, the providence of God.

THe providence of God, is his decree by which hee appointeth how every thing shall come to passe. The continuall execution of this decree, is ordinarily by meanes, but often without meanes. The meanes which God useth are either generall or speciall. Generall are these by which he governeth all the whole world, and every particular thing which concerneth this life: unto this kinde are referred spirituall creatures, called Angels, by whom the Philosophers say the Heavens are governed, and we see that whole Kingdoms, Provinces, & Cities have beene kept and defended by them, as also consumed and destroyed. Againe, the Starres and heavenly bodies are used of God to governe and order things here below, as it is in the 19. Psalme, Nothing is hid from the heat of the Sunne. And by the Prophet Hosea, the Lord speaketh thus, I will heare the heavens, the heavens shall heare the earth, the earth shall heare the corne, the corne shall heare Israel. But this instrument is onely a generall instrument, and hath his worke in ordinary matters of nature. Besides these meanes, there bee many other by which God ruleth the world. In the beginning he set man over the whole world, that he might have rule over Fishes, Fowles, Beasts, and all things else. He appointed husbands to governe their wives, he set the first-borne before their brethren, as Cain before Abel. Princes and Tyrants over Cities, Kingdomes, Commonwealths, and therefore by reason of their dignitie calleth them gods. There be also governours of families over their families, fathers over their children, masters over their servants. Yet God hath a more neere care in preserving and governing his chosen, as appeareth in the 43. chap. of Esay: Thus saith the Lord God that created thee, O Iacob: and he that formed thee, O Israel: Feare not, for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine: when thou passest thorow the waters, I will bee with thee, and thorow the floods, that they doe not overflow thee. When thou walkest thorow the very fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee, for I am the Lord thy God, the holy one of Israel, thy Saviour. This is also manifest by that Sympathy which is in the Lord, when his children are afflicted, as appeareth by the 11. of Zachary: He which toucheth you, toucheth the apple of mine eye. And in the 9. of the Acts, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou mee? that is, my Elect. Wherfore there be also speciall meanes by which he more carefully governeth the Elect: As bee Angels, whom Paul to the Hebrewes calleth ministring spirits: it is certaine they defend every one of the Elect particularly. Hitherto may be referred the preaching of the Word of God, the ministring of the Sacraments. Besides this, God useth the devils, and wicked men and Tyrants to exercise the faith of his Elect, and to confirme them in patience: whereby they are called the servants of the Lord, axes, hammers, sawes, and swords in the land of God: as Pharaoh, and Nabuchadnezzar, and Senacherib. Moreover, the meanes by which hee worketh upon the wicked are also many:

1 Angels good and evill. Exod. 14.
2 Friends and familiars. Jerem. 13. 14. Amos 7. 1.
3 Wild beasts. Jerem. 8. 17.
4 Heaven above. Deut. 11. 17.
5 Diseases, plague. Exod. 15. 16.
6 Famine. Hos. 9. 3.
7 Fire. Hos. 8. 14.
8 Fury. Hos. 7. 9.
9 Hardnesse of heart. Rom. 1. 28.
10 Captivitie. Jerem. 15. 2.

All these meanes Gods providence useth; first, that he might shew his goodnesse towards us: secondly, that he might be knowne to bee the Lord over all: thirdly, that wee might bee thankfull, because he not onely himselfe governeth us, but also maketh his creatures to serve our

our turnes. Marry this muſt be noted (as I ſaid before) that in all theſe ſecondary cauſes, beſide their naturall worke, which God hath given them, there is alſo the ſpeciall worke of God his ſpeciall hand ſhewed. God worketh not by ſecond cauſes, as Magiſtrates governe their common wealths by their inferiour officers. For they ſo governe by them, that they doe nothing or very little themſelves, and perad venture never know what is done. God governeth not the world ſo, but in every particular worke, he hath his particular ſtroke. That the thunder burneth, moveth, hurteth; it is the generall providence of God: but that it burneth, or hurteth this or that man, on this or that part, in this or that manner, it is the ſpeciall providence of the ſame God. The Lord hath ſhewed his ſpeciall providence in one excellent example. If the hatchet (ſaith God) fall forth of the haud of him which loppeth the tree, and kil a man in the way, I the Lord have killed him. God alſo governeth the world immediatly, and his providence worketh without meanes, and many things he bringeth to paſſe againſt all meanes, which is manifeſt by that of Matthew: Man liveth not by bread onely, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God. For example, without meanes. The Spirit of God did move upon the waters, and cover them in the creation immediately. The firſt garment which was made, was of leather, and God alone without meanes made it. Noah in the Arke was preſerved by God alone an whole yeare, againſt the force of the waters. Without meanes did hee keepe the ſhooes and garments of the Iſraelites whole forty yeares. He alone juſtifieth, ſanctifieth, and converteth a ſinner. Againſt the courſe of nature he made the ſea to divide it ſelfe, the ſunne to goe backward, the fire not to burne the three children, the Lyons not to devoure Daniel. The cauſes of this, are theſe: 1. That we may know when God works by cauſes, he doth it by no neceſſity, but freely. 2. That we might know when God uſeth means, that then he is not idle, but worketh all in all. 3. That if meanes want, nay, if meanes be againſt us, yet we ſhould not deſpaire of Gods providence. Now to come to our Prognoſticators, and Moone-prophets, how ſhall they be able to know what will come to paſſe hereafter? for firſt, the heavens being onely one particular inſtrument of Gods providence, among many, they cannot certainly and truly ſay, this thing or that thing proceedeth from the heavens: Secondly, they cannot determine whether God in extraordinary matters, as Plague, Famine, Barrenneſſe, Diſtempered weather, Earthquakes, Warres, &c. doth worke immediately, or with meanes: If with meanes, they cannot determine, whether the Heavens, or Angels, or men, or any other things be the meanes of his providence. Thirdly, if they were able to know what the Heaven worketh naturally, yet they were never the better: for God beſide the power of the heavens, hath in all things his particular working providence, altering, and framing, and bending as wax his inſtruments to his good will. Truly by this conſideration, a Chriſtian man will be brought to leave off to ſeeke what event the workes of God ſhall have before they come to paſſe. If a man ſhall come into a Joyners ſhop, can hee by knowing the uſe of all his tooles, tell what things he hath made in his ſhop? No. What is the cauſe of that? Hee uſeth not onely his tooles in his worke, but thereunto adjoyneth his owne hand, by which he handleth and turneth the toole to his owne pleaſure, and ſo maketh divers kinde of workes with the ſame inſtruments. The ſame may be ſaid of our Prognoſticators, which I would to God they would ſomewhat conſider.

The third Reaſon, the want of experience.

IF our Prognoſticators have any meanes to foretell things to come, they have thoſe meanes either without experience, or with experience: If they have them without experience, then muſt thou account all which they doe to be fooliſh dreames and deceit; for all kinde of humane learning which is profitable, and hath uſe in the life of man, is taken from often obſervations, and experience. If it be ſaid that they have their directions in Prognoſticating from experience, and that of all times, I will convince them thus. True experience of the cauſes of things, is an often obſerving of the effects of the ſame cauſes, with this ground that they can proceed from no other thing. The Phyſician ſaith Rheubarb doth purge choler. Well: how knoweth he this? he hath often tried this, and that in old men, young men, children: and hath found, that in the bodies of all men, the cauſe of purging this humor, could bee aſcribed to nothing elſe. Wherefore he may peremptorily conclude, Rheubarb purgeth choler. Our Prognoſticators, in the heavens, can have no ſuch experience. For they cannot obſerve often the ſame poſition of ſtarres in the heaven. The order and cauſe of the fixed ſtarres and Planets, which we finde in the heavens this day, the next day will bee changed, and never the like againe. They will ſay indeed although the ſame poſition of the whole heaven never happen, yet the ſame conjunctions of notable ſtarres, the ſame riſings, and ſettings, and the ſame conſtellations of the chiefeſt ſtarres are marked often. I ſay againe, that when theſe Eclipſes and great conjunctions happen, the reſt of the ſtars being otherwiſe affected than they were before, and having new poſitions, may either increaſe and diminiſh their effects, or elſe hinder them, and quite take them away. As we ſee when the Sun caſting his beames into a chamber, the light of candles, and torches, and fires doe make it ſhine dimme, yet theſe being abſent, it will ſhine bright. Againe, they are not able to ſay that con-

constellations, which they have marked, are causes of those effects which follow, as warres, diseases, distempered weather, earthquakes, famine, &c. For in those things which happen together, the one is not the cause of the other. When Nero played upon his harpe, Rome was on fire: yet Neroes playing on the harpe was no cause of the burning of Rome. Also these effects may have other causes in the heaven, than those which they marke, and they may come immediately from God, they may come onely from the will of man. Wherefore seeing that they cannot assure themselves that those eclipses and conjunctions are the works of such effects upon earth, and they cannot have often observations of the course of heaven, their rules of Predictions are feigned and supposed, and not built upon true experience. Let a man which knoweth not one herb, take all kinds of herbs, and put them into a great vessell, yet so, that there be more of some herbs, and lesse of other some: let him beat them all together, and make a compound vertue of all their vertues: Can hee now tell the nature and operation of every particular herb? Can he divide and sever by any helpe the vertue of one herb from another? No indeed. The same thing may be said of the starres of heaven: all their lights, and all their influences (as they terme it,) are in the lower bodies: more plainly, every earthly body hath in it all the secret powers, and working of every particular starre: so that they make (as it were) a compound operation rising of all, or of the most of their vertues joyned together: for the Astrologers hold, that although the light may be hindred by the thicknesse of the body, yet the heavenly influence pierceth thorow all. Therefore they are not able to sever, and learne the nature of these starres, except they can stop the influence of what stars they list, and bring them into what compasse they will. Yet thus much I will grant them, that they may have a little knowledge of the vertue of the Sunne and Moone, and some other starres: as we see those herbs in the former composition, whose vertues be the chiefest, though not fully, yet somewhat doe represent their nature, and shew themselves above the rest. But what is this to the purpose? If I confesse the operations of the Sun and Moone: If I shall grant that Saturne is in nature cold and dry, Iupiter warme and moist, Mars hot and dry, Venus cold and moist, Mercurie in nature mixt, the notable fixed starres in the Zodiacke to be of the nature of Planets, and to have manifest operations, as the rising of the dogge, to make heat and tempestuous seas, the rising of Arcturus, to make raine and showers, Pleiades to be of the nature of Mars and the Moone, &c. what will all this suffice to make a Prognostication? for seeing all starres have their owne powers, and peradventure also the least starres which wee make no account of, have great effects amongst us (as one graine of muske in the Apothecaries shop maketh a greater smel than all other powders be they never so many) nothing will the knowledge of the operation of some starres prevaile, the rest being not knowne and never regarded. They will say they have some experience, but yet unperfect; I have shewed how they have no true experience at all: and their unperfect experience maketh them perfect lyers.

The fourth Reason, the ignorance of causes.

A Man which wil judge rightly of any matter by the causes, must not onely consider the common causes, but he must also with them conferre the particular causes of all things which happen amongst us, so he shall judge aright. In heaven the starres be common causes of all things amongst us, because they shew their vertue on every matter, one way or other. The same things have their peculiar efficients, and matters, and formes, by which, and not by the heavens, they are made that, whatsoever they are. These proper causes because their natures be unknowne unto us, I cannot see how the Prognosticator is able to foretell any thing to come, in good and convenient manner, laying aside all deceiving and forging of untruths. To make this more plaine, I will use this similitude. Suppose an hen to sit upon many egges, some of her owne, some of divers other fowles: she imparteth her heat equally unto them: at the length she hatcheth, and some of her chickens are cockes, some hennes, some crowes, some partriches, some doves, some blacke, some white; some like and live, some die, some are killed of the kite, some are rosted. No man, I thinke, will professe so much skill, as to say that hee by the considering of the henne and her heat, which is a common cause of the chickens, and all that befalleth them, is able to tell, why of this egge came a partrich, of that a crow, why this egge had no chicken, why that had a dead chicken, &c. except hee doe therewithall adjoyne the consideration of the particular effects. The heaven is as it were an hen fostring under her wings all earthly things, imparting his vertue and heat unto all. Can our Prognosticator by the erecting of figures, by considering the disposition of every Planet in their houses, and the significations of every thing, judge, why this man is wealthy, that man a begger: why this noble man dieth this yeare, none the next yeare: why it is naught to travell this way, good to travell that way: why these diseases abound, and not other: why corne shall be deare this quarter, not the next: why this weeke is faire and temperate, that weeke, that moneth unseasonable and tempestuous. Truly it is a thing flat impossible. They must hereunto adjoyne the particular nature of the countrey, the particular causes both in mens mindes and bodies, as, education, place, honestie, birth, bloud, sickenesse, health, strength, weaknesse, meat,

meat, drinke, liberty of minde, learning, &c. and all other speciall circumſtances: which they never doe as we may ſee in their Prognoſtications: and if they would doe it, yet they could not. Wherefore I muſt needs ſay this, that their folly is great in publiſhing their Prognoſtications: and thou alſo greatly to bee blamed which by thy greedy deſire giveſt them great occaſion to be ſo unprofitably occupied.

To ſhew more briefly and plainly of their unability in Prognoſticating, although I grant the ſtarres have great force, yet I ſay they cannot judge of things to come. And there bee ſix impediments:

Noca.

The firſt impediment is imbecillity of wit: for as mans eye from the earth beholding the heavens and the ſtarres, perceiveth them not in their juſt quantity, but as very ſmall lights: for indeed the Sunne is an hundred and threeſcore and ſix times bigger than the earth, Saturne 90. times, Iupiter 95. Mars one and an halfe, the Moone is the 29. part of the earth: the biggeſt fixed ſtarres containe the earth 107. times, the ſtarres of the ſecond magnitude 90. the third 70. times, the fourth magnitude 54. times; the fifth magnitude 35. times; the ſixth magnitude 18. times; So the weakneſſe of mans underſtanding is not able to conceive and learn the things which the heavens doe bring to paſſe on earth.

The ſecond impediment, the infinite number of ſtarres, which no doubt all have great power, although wee doe not finde it. For the Prognoſticator only marketh 1028. ſtarres, and of theſe he taketh onely heed unto a very few. Which is as though a man ſhould judge the power of an army by the power of one or two ſouldiers and Captaines, not by the power of the whole company.

The third impediment, is the infinite varieties of the vertues of ſtarres, and the parts of heaven, which Aſtrologers grant to be: yet they doe not know them. As touching the nature of the fixed ſtarres, they know nothing but by the colour, which is red, leady, white, pale, &c. reſembling ſome planet. And becauſe they know not the vertue of all ſtarres and every part of heaven, they are not able to judge any thing but to their owne ſhame, no more than the Phyſician is able to know the nature of a compound medicine without the knowing of every ſimple.

The fourth impediment, the manifold and daily change of the motions, poſitions, and configurations of the ſtarres: for if a man could tell both the number and nature of ſtarres, yet the variety of poſitions breedeth trouble and hindereth right judgement: becauſe by this meanes the powers of ſtarres are increaſed, diminiſhed, and changed. And theſe rules which ſerved for ancient times to foretell things, will not ſerve us, becauſe all the fixed ſtarres have changed their places, and the reſt are daily changed.

The fifth impediment, the infinite variety of inferiour things, which doe hinder, pervert, change, receive, or not receive the vertue and predictions of ſtarres, as the nature of the ſoile, the diſpoſition naturall of ayre, orders and conſtitutions of the commonwealth, occaſions, education, inſtitution, kindes of meat and drinke, &c.

The ſixth impediment, the will of man, which freely in common matters chuſeth this and refuſeth that. There are many things which are cauſed without any worke of ſtarres, onely by the will of man, and ſtudy, as we may ſee in Socrates, Demoſthenes, and other, &c.

Thus much ſhall ſuffice to ſhew that they cannot Prognoſticate of things enſuing, now follow their manifold untruths, and moſt falſe rules. In diſcloſing them I will keepe the ſame order they uſe in their Almanacks.

In the firſt or ſecond leafe of their bookes thou ſhalt finde a picture of mans bodie with the 12. ſignes round about it, they call it the Anatomie of mans bodie, ſhewing how the 12. ſignes have government of the ſame: for the Moone or any other ſignificator of any thing being in the ſigne, they ſay, that it is dangerous to box, to ſeare that part, or to let bloud in it, which is ſubject to the dominion of that ſigne. All theſe are nothing but vaine Fables, as I will manifeſtly prove.

1. Whereas they call it an Anatomie, me thinketh, it is a butcherly Anatomie: nay, that of the butchers is farre better, for they joyne head and appurtenance together: theſe men being ſparing, give Aries the head, Leo and Cancer the heart and lungs. As for the liver, I know not which ſigne hath it, peradventure in old time men had no livers. At the Anatomie of a carrion, crowes deale friendly, for every one hath ſomewhat: but in the diviſion of mans bodie, ſignes play foule play, for Capricorne hath got nothing but a paire of knees. It is like that the ſignes ſcrambling for their portions Capricorne being ſlow got nothing; hereupon compaſſion being had, there was a gathering made, & Sagittarius gave the lower part of the thigh, Aquarius the higher part of the leg, which both together make the knee. But to deliver thee out of all doubt, mark theſe reaſons which follow: 1. The ſignes cannot have any ſuch dominion over mans body: I make it manifeſt thus. There is no corporall heaven indeed above the firmament, yet becauſe the firmament or eighth Sphere hath many motions, to give reaſons of thoſe motions, the Aſtronomers have feigned two heavens above the firmament, the Chriſtaline heaven, and the firſt moveable or 10. Sphere, which they divide into 12. parts, which parts they cal ſignes. Now I pray you tel me, is it poſſible to conceive that an imagined part of any imagined heaven void of all ſtarres, ſhall either have in it ſelfe, or give unto other Starres power to governe the parts of mans body? More reaſonable was that man, who being asked what was the cauſe of the ſands in Sandwich haven, he he anſwered the building up of Tenterton Steeple. Secondly, the government of the ſignes in the body is not taken from experience in nature, but feigned long agoe by ſome drowſie pate, and now becauſe it hath a cloke of antiquity, it is allowed. More naturall was this kinde of way, that hot ſignes ſhould governe hot parts, cold ſignes cold parts, earthly ſignes earthly parts. So Aries ſhould governe the heart and the vitall bloud, not the head, and the reſt of the ſignes thoſe parts which are of their nature and diſpoſition. Thirdly, great experience of many men daily confuteth this rule. For many learned Phyſicians, and expert Chirurgians have by infinite examples found, that if a man be let bloud in the ſigne, or lanched, or boxed, or ſcared, no harme enſueth, nay, they have given teſtimony that the patients have found even then great comfort. Wherefore let not theſe things trouble thy mind any more, but let them be numbred even amongſt vaine and unprofitable fables.

Here, I pray thee, marke their naughty dealings, how they abuſe thy ignorance, to make themſelves skilfull, and to doe more than they can doe. For if the judgements of the beſt Aſtrologers may be taken, certainly moſt of theſe Elections cannot be preſcribed to thee, unleſſe they know before-hand the figure of thy Nativitie. For all election, which concerne thy perſon, muſt be moderated (to ſpeake as plainly as their toies will ſuffer mee) by the direction of the root of thy Nativity, and by the monethly and diurnall Progreſſions of thy preſent Revolution. If any of theſe pretend ſome evill, the particular Election may be a meanes to increaſe and to bring it to paſſe. For example, ſuppoſe, thou being a man toward marriage, in the Almanacke thou findeſt a good day noted by the Prognoſticator to marry in: thou takeſt thy opportunity: after a while thou art weary of thy life: the firſt day of thy marriage was the laſt day of thy joy. What is the cauſe of this? All the Planets which were ſignifiers of thy marri-

A age in thy nativity, were then evilly affected, and peradventure alſo, when thou waſt firſt borne, they received ſome diſgrace. So then thou mayeſt lay all blame, partly upon thy ſelfe for beleeving, and partly upon the Prognoſticator, who deceived thee. But to come unto particulars, the elections of dayes to purge the body with any kinde of purgation, and to comfort the ſame, are moſt ridiculous. Why doe they not alſo preſcribe houres of eating meat? Why doe they not appoint the kindes of meats and drinks, which we muſt eat and uſe daily? If thou ſee that God doth daily bleſſe the enterpriſes of thoſe Phyſicians, which never regard thoſe elections in miniſtring to their patients: never eſteeme of them, let them goe as lies to
B the Devill from whence they came. Concerning the elections of dayes to ſowe, to ſet, to plant, to lop, they are alſo fooliſh: the generall obſervation of the ſeaſon of the yeare, in which theſe things are to bee done is ſufficient. And S. Auguſtine in his book de civitate Dei, laugheth at the folly of them, which chuſe particular dayes to doe their husbandrie, as though ſome certaine poſitions of ſtarres had ſome ſpeciall influence to the things which are ſowne then. His reaſon is, becauſe many grains of corne being caſt into the ground together, and ripening all at one time: yet ſome of them are blaſted, ſome are eaten of birds, ſome are trodden downe under foot, ſome ſtand and are never touched. The reſt of the elections,
C and eſpecially that of laying foundations is moſt abſurd. They ſay that if an houſe, a city, a towne have his foundation when the ſtarres bee well affected, the inhabitants ſhall have proſperous and quiet living: if when the ſtarres be evill diſpoſed, then trouble and diſquietneſſe. They have no experience of this but that onely which is moſt falſe, for they know not the foundations of cities and towns, neither the poſitions of the ſtarres, when they were built. Let Rome and Venice be examples, becauſe theſe are moſt alleaged of Aſtrologers, the time in which they were built is uncertaine, and the Planets are falſly ſet in the figure of the foundation of Rome, becauſe Mercurie is contrary to the ſunne, a thing flat impoſſible. Againe, the folly of this is
D thus manifeſt, that an houſe, or city, or common-wealth may remaine, the people being gone, as it is in the time of plague, and baniſhment, and conqueſts of princes: And the inhabitants alſo may bee ſafe and remaine, the building quite ranſumed and beaten downe, as wee may ſee in Carthage, the people and common-wealth remained, the City quite defaced. That all elections are unlawful, S. Auſtin writing unto Ianuarius, proveth it forth of the 4. to the Galatians by theſe words: Ye obſerve moneths and times and yeares. Therefore (ſaith he) let us not obſerve dayes, and yeares, and moneths, and times, leſt we heare this of the Apoſtle: I am afraid leſt I have taken labour in vaine with you: for he rebuketh them which ſay, I will not goe,

goe, becauſe the Moone is thus or thus moved, or I will take my journey that I may have good ſucceſſe, becauſe there is ſuch a poſition of ſtars: I will not do my buſineſſe this moneth, becauſe ſuch a ſtarre governeth this moneth: or I will do my buſineſſe this moneth becauſe ſuch a ſtarre ruleth. How then ſhall a man doe, not to breake the word of God? Art thou a man that deſireſt to lead a Chriſtian life? Then take the example of Paul, as a patterne to governe all the actions of thy life: Without ceaſing (ſaith he) I make mention of you in my prayers: beſeeching that by ſome meanes, one time or other I might have proſperous journy by the will of God to come unto you. So thou if thou haſt any buſineſſe in hand, any journey to take, any thing to buy or ſell, or any other matter: never regard the conſtellations of Heaven, commit thy ſelfe to the onely providence of God, in whom thou haſt thy life, and motion, and being, who directeth all thy ſteps: pray unto him privately with thy ſelfe to bleſſe thee and all thy actions, that they may tend to his glory, thy welfare: thou ſhalt find that all thy enterpriſes will have better ſucceſſe, than if the whole hoaſt of heaven, and all the Prognoſticators of England, had promiſed never ſo much proſperity. Now let us ſhew their abſurd folly in prognoſticating of the ſtate of the yeare: of which their predictions are either generall for the whole yeare, or ſpeciall for every day. In their generall predictions are conſidered either the grounds of them, or the matters which they foretel. Their grounds are eſpecially two: 1. The figure of the revolution of the yeare, erected when the ſunne entreth into the firſt minute of Aries. 2. The figure celeſtiall for the time of the eclipſe of the ſunne and moone: for upon theſe twaine, ſay they, dependeth the whole ſtate of the yeare. In their celeſtiall figures they conſider the erecting of them, and the finding of the Lord of the figure. The erecting of the figure, containeth very many abſurdities.

Rom. 1. 10.

1. They follow that way, which Regiomontanus did invent, never as yet proved by any experience, and flatly differing from theſe waies which of ancient Aſtrologers were uſed; and were invented by Gazulus and Campanus. Nay, oftentimes it maketh the Planet or fixed ſtarre to ſignifie a flat contrary thing to that which theſe two other doe.

2. The caſting of the heavens into twelve diſtinct kind of matters is ridiculous, becauſe it being imagined, and void of ſtarres, can have no force. Yet (ſome will ſay) other ſtarres being in thoſe places may have and ſignifie ſuch or ſuch effects. I anſwer, that if ſtarres of divers natures comming to ſuch an houſe alwayes ſignifying ſome one kinde of thing, then the houſe muſt of neceſſity give ſome force unto the Planet: and ſo it ſhall have not only an augmenting, but alſo an effectuall working power, which Aſtrologers deny, and no reaſon can prove.

3. They make the twelfth and eleventh houſes being higher above the horizon than the firſt, to be of leſſe force than it: and the fourth houſe to be of greater power than any above the Horizon not Cardinall: and the end of the ninth, to be more in power than the beginning of the eleventh houſe: all which are againſt reaſon, becauſe a Planet the more perpendicular his beames are, the more is his force. They anſwer, although the force of the light be greater, yet the ſecret influence is leſſe, and the firſt houſe hath more forcible influence than the twelfth or eleventh. If the influence be ſecret, how can they know it? againe, they can by no good experience ſhew that thoſe houſes have more influence than the reſt; this influence maketh againſt them. I ſay they cannot prognoſticate, becauſe they know not one ſtarres vertue. For whereas they ſay, that the ſunne, and moone and planets have moſt force; I anſwer, that it is by reaſon of their light, not their influence, which is ſmall; and there is farre greater in the ſmalleſt fixed ſtarres. So that the fixed ſtarres although they have no light, or very ſmall light perceived, yet they have moſt influence. And ſo theſe men muſt needs dreame becauſe they judge by wrong cauſes. Well, their figure being framed and diſtinguiſhed with faire characters, then goe they on to finde the Lord of the figure, that is, that Planet which hath moſt dignities in the figure.

The dignities of the Planets are found out by theſe means eſpecially:

1 Houſes of Planets.
2 Exaltation.
3 Triplicity.
4 Termes.
5 Starres.
6 Houſes.
7 Freeneſſe from Combuſtion.
8 Directions.
9 Velocity of courſe.
10 Sazimi.
11 Some aſpects of other Planets.

Theſe toyes be ſo fooliſh, that a reaſonable man would not vouchſafe to refute them: yet a word or twaine. If the houſes of the Planets ſhal be battered and puld downe, all the reſt of their worſhip and dignity will lie in the duſt. Aries and Scorpius are appointed the houſes of Mars; Taurus and Libra, the houſes of Venus; Gemini and Virgo, the houſes of Mercury; Cancer the houſe of the Moone; Leo the houſe of the Sunne; Sagittarius and Piſces, the houſes of Jupiter; Aquarius, and Capricornus, the houſes of Saturne. What reaſon doe they give of this? Leo and Cancer, ſay they, are the houſes of the Sunne and Moone, becauſe they reſemble the nature of theſe Planets, and becauſe they come moſt neere our heads: ſuch reaſon they give of the reſt. What feeble grounds are theſe? As in the North part of the world Cancer and Leo reſemble the nature of the Sunne: ſo in the South part, in the contrarie climates, Capricornus, and Aquarius doe reſemble their natures.

Alſo in every country ſome divers ſignes be either verticall, or elſe come neere the top of the country, and ſo all ſignes ſhall be the houſes of the Sunne and Moone. Now then, the ſunne being diſplaced, I cannot finde how the reſt of the Planets can keepe their hold. To goe further, the exaltations of Planets in like manner are very dreames. They ſuppoſe Exaltations bee thoſe degrees in which the Planets were in the beginning of the world. But why ſhould thoſe places give more force than any other? And if they could give more force, yet they have falſly aſſigned them. For the Sunne was not in Aries, when it was created of God, but was placed in Libra, which I prove by this reaſon. God created man and beaſt in perfect age, giving unto them all kindes of fruits being then ripe, ſo that in the beginning was the time of the yeare, which we call harveſt. Now becauſe God never afterward changed the ſeaſons, and wee finde that in the time of ripeneſſe the Sunne is alwaies in Libra, we muſt needs alſo ſay that his place in the creation was in Libra. In the 23. of Exodus, God commanded that the feaſt of tabernacles ſhould bee celebrated in the end of the yeare, when the Iſraelites had gathered their fruits out of the fields. Wherefore it muſt needs be that harveſt was in the beginning of the yeare (the beginning and ending being both together) and ſo by counting backwards wee ſhall finde that the Sunne was in Libra in the beginning of the world. To this agreeth Ioſephus de antiquit. Lib. 1. cap. 3. Rabbi Eleazar upon Geneſ. and Rabbi Abraham, Aben Ezra upon the 7. of Daniel.

The reſt of the dignities of the planets conſiſt of Principles more weake than water. Firſt, what is more unreaſonable to a reaſonable man than this, that ſwift motion ſhould give unto a planet two dignities, and ſlow motion two debilities: it ſeemeth to be plaine contrary. For a ſwift courſe hindereth the force of the Planet, a ſlow courſe helpeth the ſame: and the ſtations of any Planet make an effectuall and ſenſible operation. A coale of fire in a mans hand if it be ſhaken about very much, it heateth very little, if it be ſhaken more ſlowly, it heateth more: but if it lie ſtill, it burneth violently. Beſide this, alſo experience confirmeth my aſſertion. In the yeare of our Lord 1513. the Sunne entring into Piſces was almoſt in trine aſpect with Saturne ſtationarie, a little while after, there was a great froſt and ſnow continuing many dayes: and when Saturne began againe to be direct, the weather was indifferent warme. In the yeare 1518. in Aprill Iupiter almoſt in ſecunda ſtatione, beholding Saturne in ſtatione prima, cauſed a great heat, conſidering the time of the yeare. In the yeare 1520. Saturne (as I ſaid before) being ſtationarie made ſuch a cold, that ſpoiled the Grapes and made Wine deare. Upon theſe examples and many other I may conclude, that the worke and influence of Planets, is moſt felt when they are ſtationary: becauſe their vertue is fixed (as it were) in one place by reaſon of the ſlow motion.

Combuſtion is in like ſort a feined thing: What reaſon can Aſtrologers give, why it ſhould give unto a ſtarre five debilities? They talk how that experience teacheth them, that Planets being under the beames of the Sunne, doe loſe a great, nay (ſome ſay) all their force. It is a manifeſt untruth. For, Mercurie being of the nature of that Planet with which hee is conjoyned, if he goe from conjunction with Saturne unto the Sunne, he getteth no debilities thereby, but rather loſing the feeble and unfortunate Nature of Saturne, receiveth a more ſtrong and fortunate nature of the Sunne. If any man ſay againſt mee that ☿ Mercurie combuſt hath no force, he deceiveth himſelfe. For if hee be not hindered, he naturally will cauſe winds, being combuſt, he not onely ingendereth winds, but cauſeth tempeſtuous winds and foule weather. In Aries, Taurus, Cancer, he maketh tempeſts, in Virgo and Scorpius, raging Seas, in Sagittarius, Capricornus, Aquarius, and Piſces, raine and ſnow. Againe, when many dayes together there hath beene faire weather, the Sunne if it come to be in conjunction or any other aſpect with Saturne, maketh very foule weather, and therefore the aſpects of the Sunne and Iupiter are called apertiones portarum pro pluvia. This could not come to paſſe if Saturne had his force diminiſhed by the beames of the Sunne. A planet alſo being in Sazimi, that is, being within 16. minutes of the Suns middle, hath thereby 5. dignities, which cannot well be, if that combuſtion give 5. debilities. For the Planet is in the middle of his combuſtion, and the Sunne caſteth his beames and force very vehemently upon it. Theſe things ſhew how abſurd a dreame combuſtion is: yet if it were a good and ſound principle of Aſtrologie, and gave unto every planet five debilities, yet it could not be proved, that liberty from combuſtion ſhould give five dignities, being only a meere abſence and privation of the other. Magnes at the preſence of the Adamant, is hindered from drawing Iron: yet if the Adamant be away, the attractive vertue of the magnes is not increaſed. Here I might with eaſe confute the triplicities of Planets, directions, aſpects, applications, preventions, refrenations, with many ſuch like, but my intent at this time is onely to ſhew thee ſome untruths of our Prognoſticators.

Thus much of the grounds of their predictions, now follow the matters, of which they Prognoſticate, and they are very many: nay, there is no matter almoſt, of which they will not give their verdite: but how they doe this I will briefly make it manifeſt unto thee, that their lies and their unchriſtian dealing may bee more loathed of thee.

1. They foretell of Comets, Earthquakes, Famines, and plagues, &c. but they doe it as the blind man which caſteth his ſtaffe hee knoweth not where. No man as yet ever knew the true cauſe causes of these. As for Comets and blazing starres, they doe not rise of the influence of any starres, neither are they any earthly things, but are in heaven, most commonly farre above the Moone, as by Geometricall and Astronomicall demonstrations may bee proved: How this commeth to passe the Lord only knoweth. And surely they doe thee great injury, that when as no doubt, God doth lighten them, and send the rest extraordinarily, as threatning tokens of his sore displeasure, yet they will rocke thee asleepe in the cradle of security, by telling that such tokens came from the ordinary course of the heavens.

2. They foretell all things which happen in civill affaires amongst men, as are these which follow:

As
- Love and hatred of kinsfolke.
- Marriages.
- Increase of farmes and livings.
- Injuries and quarrels.
- Raysing of rents.
- Exacting of subsidies by officers.
- False rumors.
- Imprisonments.
- Hard intreating of Ecclesiasticall persons.
- Buying, selling, undermining.
- The studying of sciences.
- Friends fall out for trifles.
- Solemne progresses.
- Favour of noble men.
- Men shall fall, body, and goods, into the Princes hands.
- Merchandise unprofitable, &c.

These and such like proceed onely from the will of man: the constellations of starres are neither signes nor causes of them. Some will say, Non imponere necessitatem, sed inclinare Stellas, that is, That starres doe not constraine, but onely incline the mindes of men: a most wicked saying, although most commonly spoken of and defended. For the inclining of the will of man is onely the worke of God, as the holy Scriptures doe teach us. The heart of man (saith Salomon) purposeth his wayes, but the Lord directeth his steps. O Lord (saith Ieremy the Prophet) that the way of man is not in himselfe, neither is it in man to walke and direct his steps. He speaketh this because that Nebuchadnezzar purposed to have made warre against the Moabites and Ammonites, but hearing of Zedekias rebellion, he turned his power to goe against Ierusalem, therefore the Prophet saith, that whereas hee had otherwise purposed, yet this was the Lords inclination and direction. Prov. 1.6. Ier. 10.23. Prov. 21.1. Againe, in the Proverbs we reade this: That the heart of the King is in the hands of the Lord, as the rivers of water, hee directeth it whither hee will. It will be said, that although God properly and immediately inclineth the will of man; yet also some small inclination must be given unto the Starres, and that immediately. For

Say some,
- Constellations worke upon the Elements by the foure first qualities.
- Elements worke upon, and alter the compound bodies and humors.
- Compound bodies by their qualities change the senses.
- The senses being altered, the understanding is altered.
- The understanding lastly altereth and inclineth the will of man.
- Therfore Constellations incline the will.

This reason is not much unlike that which the drunken man maketh, serving as well for the defence of his vice, as the former for approving of truth in divination.

B
He which drinketh well, sleepeth well:
He which sleepeth well, thinketh no harme:
He which thinketh no harme, is a good man:
Therefore hee which drinketh well, is a good man.

The deceits and untruths which bee in their reasons, are very many:

1. The starres worke upon mens bodies, yet so that the nature of the Countrie and soyle, the meats and drinkes have most commonly greater force. Why are the bodies of Gentlemen of England and poore labouring men of divers dispositions? are they not both in one country? doe not the starres shew their force in them alike? yes truly, but the kind of life and diet prevaileth. In the same region, why are they, which dwell upon hils, of other temperatures than they which dwell upon plaine and champion ground? why doe not the same influences of Starres make them of like natures? is it not because the nature of the soyle prevaileth? So then, when as there be many causes effectuall, and differing in altring mens bodies, to build an argument upon one cause is most unreasonable.

C

2. The starres worke upon the Elements, earth, water, ayre, by making heat, cold, moisture, drinesse. The Elements, how worke they on mens bodies? They will also say by making heat, cold, moysture, drinesse: which is most untrue: for the hotter, and drier the elements be, the colder and moyster by nature are mens bodies. According to that saying of Empedocles, Nature placed a hot body in a cold countrey, and a cold body in a hot countrie.

3. The Philosophers say that all causes are either per se or per accidens. Now the heavens being causes of the alteration of the senses per accidens, they must not be causes of the inclination of the will, either per se or per accidens, but per accidentis accidens, which is most ridiculous.

4. This long chaine by which they linke the will of man to the starres, if it shall be applied unto particulars, it must needs breake: for the actions of the will is buying, selling, travelling, lying, heaping vp wealth, murdering, spreading of false rumors, offering of discourtesies, hating of kinsfolkes, and such like, which our heaven-gazers foretell, have no coherence with the first qualities, heat, cold, moisture, drinesse: neither can they any way proceed from them, and therefore the starres cannot be causes of them, for they worke onely by these qualities.

5. This reason is nothing to their purpose: for because they grant that a man may freely resist the inclination of the starres, and he may hinder that, unto which the starres bend his will, how dare they presume to say this or that will come to passe? The heathen men gave up themselves to their owne lusts and vanities, and followed every little and vaine inclination: and of them, in this order, did ancient Astrologers among them divine that this or that time, such actions, such vices, such enterprises, such affaires should be among them. In like manner our English wisemen, speake of us as though wee were beasts, not reasonable men, as though we never had heard the blessed Gospell of God, never tasted of the grace of God, never learned what is good and what is bad, never laboured to subdue our lusts and affections, alwayes turned to and fro with the blast of any influence, working very slenderly in us.

Thus much of Civill affaires. They make mention also yearely of the diseases which shall reigne: but the way which they follow, is taken forth of the barren and uncertaine rules of the old Astrologers, who doe so ascribe unto every Planet certaine diseases, that if need shall require, they may referre the same diseases unto many significators, as in the plague, the putrifaction of humors is attributed unto Iupiter, the sharpe fever unto Mars, the madnesse which followeth unto Mercurie, the whole plague unto Mars. In the pluresie the inflammation of the bloud betweene the skinne called Pluritis, and the ribbes, is attributed unto Iupiter, the suppuration of the bloud unto Saturne, and the whole pluresie unto Iupiter: In the Jaundes the inflammation and corruption of humors, unto Iupiter; the yellow humor in the gaule, unto Mars, the obstruction of the parts unto Saturne, the whole Jaundes being white, unto Mars; black, unto Saturne. And so in every disease, they use this inconstancie and ambiguity in Prognosticating. It is a rule among the Astrologers, that if the Planets significrs of diseases be well affected, then there shal be no diseases but health: if they be evilly affected, then diseases follow. Our Prognosticators never marke this rule, but howsoever the Planets be affected, they straitwaies pronounce that such diseases shall reigne. For example; The last winter quarter it was said by one of them, that the diseases which should afflict mens bodies, were rhewmes, coughs, cold laskes, swelling of the face and throte, falling of the Colmell, sore eyes, deafenesse, the stone, gowt, dropsie, greensickenesse, madnesse, quarterne fevers, &c. And all the Planets significrs of diseases in that quarter were indifferent well affected: wherefore thou

A hast not one cause to feare their threatnings, but rather to be sorry for their continuall deceits, wishing them minds that they may one day see their owne folly.

Concerning the time when the constellations take their effects, our Prognosticators say that some take their effects the same yeare, some not the same yeare, but long after, as great conjunctions and eclipses. For they say if the Moone be eclipsed one houre, she worketh her effect a moneth after; if two houres, two moneths after; and the Sunne for every houre it is eclipsed, taketh his effect an whole yeare after. Truly this rule which they follow, must needs be against all reason. For why should not all conjunctions and oppositions of the Sunne and Moone deferre their effects, as well as those conjunctions and oppositions in which the Sunne and Moone is eclipsed? if they shew forth their power immediately after, why should not these also doe the same? Moreover Epignosticall Astrologers who have conferred the course of the heavens with histories, shew very manifestly, that eclipses doe not deferre the time of working their spite upon the earth.

B

In the yeare of our Lord 1419. the Sunne was eclipsed in Aries, & presently after shewed all his force. There was a great sedition in Prag that yeare; In Paris an uprore betweene them of the City and the University, and two thousand Schollers were slain. Then also Wenzeslaus king of Bohemia, being in a great palsie, died. In the yeare 1524. there was a conjunction of Saturne and Iupiter in Scorpius, and also a great eclipse of the Sunne in June, which tooke their effects the same yeare: Charles, king of France, driven forth of his country: warre betweene the Danes and the men of Sleswicke. There was a great plague in Germany, Civill dissention amongst the Princes of the Empire and them which tooke the part of Iohn Husse. 1452. an eclipse of the Sunne in Sagittarius, his effects began presently, and lasted a great while: Even then Constantinople was taken by the Turke. The Hungarians and Bohemians besieged Fredericke the Emperour. 1473. the 27. of Aprill, the Sunne was eclipsed in Taurus, Mars being in Aries, and Iupiter in Sagittarius. The same yeare in summer was such heat and drinesse of weather, that woods even withered, and one might wade over deepe rivers. In the yeares of our Lord 1476. 1460. 1469. 1486. 1502. 1518. and many yeares after, there were both great conjunctions and strange eclipses, which tooke their effects presently, not one, or two, or three yeares after (as our heaven-gazers beare thee in hand.) All these examples which I bring against them, I have not fained, but taken forth of those bookes which they have in greatest estimation, and could, if need should serve, bring an hundred more, all to shew their lies, when as they commonly say thus, There shal be an eclipse this yeare, marry I will not here determine his effects, but reserve them to be declared clared in my Prognostication one yeare or two yeares hence, when it will take place.

To know where the effects of the starres shall take place, they have appointed unto every signe certaine countries, as over Europe they have set the fiery Triplicity, over the Orientall and North parts of Asia, the ayrie Triplicity, the watery Triplicity over Africa, over the South parts of Asia the earthy Triplicity: and so every peculiar signe hath his dominion over some parts of those. Now therfore when a conjunction or eclipse is in any of these signes, the Cities and countries subject unto them, feele the force of that constellation especially. This is a most manifest untruth, and may be confuted by many reasons: 1. The nature of the signes is not the same now as it was in times past, and by the confession of the best learned have other effects now, than they had in the dayes of king Ptolomie: yet we see the nature of countries and people to remaine the same still, as may bee seene by reading Tacitus, Pliny, Cæsar, Strabo. 2. America which is halfe the world, hath no signes appointed over it: why? it was found out of late. True it is, but this is an argument that the Rules of Astrologie are absurd, and were the bare inventions and imaginations of idle braines. For, there is no doubt, but that America his parts and Ilands, as Brasilea, Peru, Pari, Terra Florida, Iava Major, Iava Minor, Poloania, Pavilonga, Subath: Massana, Matten, Iucatana, Cozumella, Iamaica, &c. have felt the force of those Constellations, which they attribute to some parts of the old world. Because these Countries be about the middle Zone, and have both Planets and signes ful over them, and therefore if the starres threaten any strange thing to come, they must especially feele it. 3. Experience the cause of all acts, is against them, as is manifest in these examples: 47. yeares before the Nativity of our Saviour Christ, there was a conjunction of the higher Planets in Scorpius; and then was civill warre betweene Cæsar and Pompey. And the change of the Empire was in Europe. But accotding unto the institution of Astrologers, all those troubles should have beene in Afrike, because Scorpius hath his dominion there. In the yeare of our Lord 34. there was a great conjunction of planets in Leo, and then (saith one very prophanely) was the Gospell preached through the world. But if he make this conjunction to be a signe of the preaching of the Gospell, then it should more have bin preached in the parts of Europe than Asia, which is not true. In the yeares of our Lord 331. and 1127. there were great conjunctions in Virgo, and yet the Countries subject to this signe felt no harme, but Italy was troubled with the Popes superstitions, and Arrius his heresie was broched. There was a meeting of Planets in Sagittarius 73. yeares after Christ, when as Otho, Galba, Vitellius, and Vespasian troubled the Roman Empire, yet there was no where more grievous warres than in Palestine, and no greater slaughter than of the Iewes, who are subject unto Scorpius and not unto Sagittarius. In the yeare 1464. a conjunction of higher Planets was in Pisces, under whose dominion, although Europe be not placed, yet it most felt the smart by troubles and civil warres. So 1576. and 1577. two eclipses of the Sunne, the one in Leo, the other in Capricorne tooke their effects in Germany: whenas Leo and Capricorne doe not rule that Countrey. It is vaine to shew the absurdity of this rule by moe examples, these shall be sufficient.

This shall suffice to have spoken of their generall Predictions, now follow their special determinations of the state and temperature of the weather, wherein I will set forth first of all a most manifest and absurd contradiction, which most of them make, and that is this: They use (as I have said) to set downe their judgements of the whole quarter, that it should be either moist, hot, cold, or dry: afterward judging particularly they disprove by particular dayes that which they said before. In the yeare of our Lord 1581. one said that in the Autumne quarter should be a great drought, yet I, perusing his particular judgement upon the dayes of the quarter, finde it should have plenty of raine. In the yeare last past, another said, the summer should be so hot and drie, that even wels and rivers should be dried up, and fishes be scarce, and cattell die for want of water, yet the same party in his particular judgement of the weather, maketh 20. dayes of the same quarter, at the least faine and missing, and 30. other either temperate or very cold.

In one word, the judgements which are set downe of the weather, they are more tolerable than the rest: yet as long as the world endureth, no man shal be able to prognosticate truly what weather shall be in every day of the yeare. The causes of this I have set downe before, and need not now to repeat. Wherefore they might leave off any longer to busie themselves in this kinde. And it shall be sufficient for the leading of a Christian life, to know the generall and ordinary estate of the parts and seasons of the yeare.

Their bitter reason, impieties.

BEsides all this, the impious speeches and ungodly practices, which these men use, might move a Christian man to loath their predictions. First, yearely some of them doe foretell, whether men shall study and imbrace, or forget and neglect true Religion. What a filthy and devillish thing is this, not to bee suffered in a Common-wealth, where the Gospell of Christ is preached. Every man naturally is the child of wrath, the unprofitable servant, dead in all kind of sinne, his understanding it is ennity against God, his affections are rebellious against his wil; none doth good, no not one: not one hath any faculty to receive or keepe true religion: we are as sawes in the hands of God, as the Prophe-

Esay speaketh: how then become we religious? by the onely worke of God. No man can come to me (saith Christ) except the father draw him. Iob.6.44. And as God draweth us first unto true religion, so hee also maketh us continue in the professing of the same, as S. Paul saith, hee which hath begunn a good worke in you, will finish the same, &c. By what meanes doth God doe this? by the outward preaching of the Law and the Gospell, and by the inward working of his holy Spirit: other meanes the Scripture never mentioneth. On the contrary part, if any man refuse the grace of God, and will not imbrace the true Religion, it proceedeth from the hardnesse of his owne heart, and wilfull rebellion. Seeing therefore the rebellion of man commeth from his owne will, and the imbracing of true godlinesse from God alone: why dare they presume, without great impiety, to adjoyne the constellations as adjuvants either unto man or God in this divine worke. Againe, these predictions are very perilous, for if a man be wickedly given, they hinder him from the acknowledging of his sinne, because they make him lay part of his faults upon the starres, when as all indeed come from his owne soule. And if a man be a penitent sinner, and feele the grace of God; yet being weake in faith and conscience, they make him not to put his whole trust in God, and to love him with all his soule, with all his strength; but allure him in some part to attribute that unto the starres, which is the onely worke of God, and not of any creature.

2. They use to foretell what vices shall reigne, as in these examples:

As: There shall be much unlawfull and secret whoredome.
Great robbing by high-wayes sides.
Wanton and young men shall sit in their Ladies laps, by reason of their GODDESSES will placing.
Many shall use deceit and conzening.

By these and such like, lewd and dissolute people take occasions and are stirred up to live prophanely, and to follow those vices, unto which the lusts of their nature carry them.

The fourth reason, tricks of deceit.

A Jugler which taketh upon him to doe strange things must use many sleights, lest if the stander by shall see his tricks of ligierdemaine hee be descried, and all his former cunning turne to his shame. Our Prognosticators understanding this, have thought it convenient to use in their kinde some tricks of deceiving Juglers, I can call them by no better name, for so they are indeed. First, publishing their predictions in thy behalfe, they use such absurd, unknowne, and insolent words, as (I thinke) never the like were read or heard amongst us in England. As are these which follow:

1. A Prognostication Astrologically calculated for the pole Artick, for such a city whose longitude and latitude is thus.
2. Quartill revolution.
3. Rectified for the motions and aspects of the meridian and elevation.
4. Capricorne in quality cold and drie, melancholie, in taste bitter, nocturnall fœminine, meridionall, of the earthly trigon.
5. Mercurialists, Iovialists, Martialists. Hiemal Solstice, Æstival, Vernal, Autumnal.
6. Pars fortuna coupled with the Dragons taile.
7. Taurus a signe of the earthly trigonisme naturally, cold in the signe horoscop: and Virgo of the same stampe the signe of the prevention preceding.
8. A signe of the same triangularity, Iupiter Lord of this revolution resident with Venus in domicilio deorsum ab angulo cadente.
9. Planets retrograde.
10. Cardivalor a succedent position.
11. Lunary defect.
In his dodecatimorian.
12. Names of strange authors, Proclus, Alchindus, Messahala, Zael, Albohazen, Haly, Albumacer, Albubater, Guido, Bonetus, Hispalensis, Firmius, Abraham, Avenezra, Trismegistus, with many other wondrous Doctors, having a great deale of small learning, and being farborne, as in Caldea, Persia, Arabia, Iurie.

1. Thou wilt say, what meanes all this? here is great learning no doubt it passeth my capacity: who would not have an Almanacke, if it were for nothing but for this, to see and heare how profound our Prognosticators are? Thou farre deceivest thy selfe: for they perceiving well, that their deceits and lyes may be soone espied, have invented strange termes to colour them, and to cast a mist before thine eyes, that thou maist not see their naughty dealing. For any man the more true and honest hee thinketh his matter, the more desirous is hee to speake plainly to the understanding of all.

2. It was a point of the knaverie of the Devill, otherwise called Apollo, as the Heathen men asked his counsell, to answer doubtfully, because when as he was ignorant of the event, yet would not, but seeme to know, as in this answer,

I tell thee Pyrrhus the Romanes may conquer.

It is understood two wayes, either that Æacides might vanquish the Romans, or the Romans Æacides. Our Prognosticators have chosen a very good patterne to follow, their dealing with thee is the like: when they doubt and cannot tell what to Prognosticate, then they use two wayes of foretelling, either to speake that which is true every way, or that which is true every yeare. For the first, amongst many examples, I will put one or two that thou maist see their dealing in true, not forged examples.

1. The conjunction of Mars and Saturne threaten warres, but Iupiter will mitigate the the ſame: as a man ſhould ſay, the Prognoſticator telleth true, except he tell a lye.

2 1585. We ſhall have a very dry winter, if peradventure any flouds and ſtore of raine doe fall, they ſhall proceed of former cauſes.

3 This ſummer quarter is like to be for the greateſt part drie and whole, yet it is like neither to bee too hot, or too cold, but indifferent.

4 Neither faire, nor foule, both together.

5 Faire and calme, but a little miſling.

6 Clouds portending raine and ſnow.

Examples of thoſe predictions, which may agree to every yeare, are common with them, as theſe;

1 This yeare Artificers muſt take heed of too much ſtraining their backes.

2 Take heed of venturing in ſlippery places boldly in building.

3 Old men ſhall die.

4 Death of Sheepe and other cattell this yeare ſhall be.

5 Sundry diſeaſes are like to reigne amongſt many which will ſweepe away many.

6 Falſe rumors, impriſonments, tortures.

7 Brethren and ſiſters ſhall not love one another.

8 Sundry men and women ſhall be troubled with paines in their eyes.

9 Much ſtrife amongſt men and women.

10 Small love amongſt kinsfolkes.

11 Much unlawfull luſt, this yeare, and ſecret fornication.

12 Some Eccleſiaſticall perſon ſhall bee in trouble, and ſome noble man ſhall die, this is ever at one place or other.

13 Many ſhipwracks, and other ſtirres on the ſeas.

14 Many ſhall addict themſelves to the ſtudy of Negromancie.

Againe, beſide theſe wayes there is alſo a third, and that is this: They fearing leſt their Prognoſtications ſhould not bee regarded becauſe of their lies, and that they might winne men unto the uſing of them, have adjoyned Aſtronomicall matters of the riſing and ſetting of ſtarres, of the aſpects and motions of planets, which are no profit to thee. Here alſo they have annexed tables of all the faires in the land, and of the chiefe high wayes, which being of ſome price with thee, make that which is naught of it ſelfe, to be of ſome account.

A Concluſion.

THus much (good Reader) I hope ſhall be ſufficient to perſwade thee of the vanity of Prognoſtications: if not, I beſeech thee accept of my ſimple endevour, ſerving in ſome part unto thy profit. For if thou bee a Chriſtian man, thou oughteſt only to be contented with knowing the times and ordinary ſeaſons of the yeare: not regarding nor ſearching any ſecret and ſpeciall Predictions, for which the Lord never gave any man warrant, but in plaine words hath forbidden them. Nay, they which be ingraffed into Jeſus Chriſt indeed, are ſo farre from ſearching what ſhall bee hereafter, that they lead a life which is a continuall meditation of preſent death. The which the Lord for Jeſus ſake, grant unto us, that we may in ſome meaſure behold our owne vanities.

SVRVEY OF THE RIGHT MANNER

of erecting and ordering a Family, according to the Scriptures.

CHAP. I.

Of Christian Oeconomie, and of the Family.

CHristian Oeconomie is a Doctrine of the right ordering of a Family.

The only rule of ordering the Familie, is the written Word of God. By it David resolved to governe his House, when hee saith, I will walke in the uprightnesse of my heart in the midst of my house, Psal. 101. 2. And Salomon affirmeth, that through wisdome an house is builded: and with understanding it is established, Prov. 24. 3.

A Family is a naturall and simple society of certaine persons, having mutuall relation one to another, under the private government of one. These persons must bee at the least three; because two cannot make a society. And above three under the same head, there may be a thousand in one family, as it is in the households of Princes, and men of state in the world.

CHAP. II.

Of the household service of God.

A Family, for the good estate of it selfe, is bound to the performance of two duties; one to God, and the other to it selfe.

The duty unto God, is the private worship and service of God, which must be established and setled in every family. And the reasons hereof are these.

First, because this duty standeth by the expresse commandement of God, who by his Apostle willeth men to pray every where lifting up pure hands, without wrath or doubting, 1 Tim. 2. 8.

Againe, it is confirmed by the custome and practice of holy men in their times: I know (saith

A the Lord touching Abraham) that he will command his sonnes and his household after him, that they keepe the way of the Lord, to doe righteousnesse and judgement, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which hee hath spoken to him, Gen. 18. 19. To the same purpose speaketh Ioshua, If it seeme evill unto you to serve the Lord, chuse this day whom you will serve, whether the gods whom your fathers served (that were beyond the flood) or the gods of the Amorites in whose land ye dwell: But I and my house will serve the Lord, Josh. 24. 15. And Cornelius is reported to have beene a devout man, and one that feared God with all his household, Act. 10. 2.

Thirdly, common reason and equitie sheweth it to bee a necessarie duty; for the happy and prosperous estate of the family, which consisteth in the mutuall love and agreement of the Man and Wife, in the dutifull obedience of children to their parents, and in the faithfull service of servants to their Masters, wholly dependeth upon the grace and blessing of God: and this blessing is annexed to his worship: for

B 1 Tim. 4. 8. Godlinesse hath the promises of this life, and the life to come. Psal. 127. 1. Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vaine that build; except the Lord keepe the city, the keeper watcheth in vaine. Ver. 2. It is in vaine for you to rise early, and to lie downe late, and eat the bread of sorrow: but he will surely give rest to his beloved. Ver. 13. Behold, children are the inheritance of Iehovah, and the fruit of the wombe his reward. Psal. 128. 1. Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord, and walketh in his waies.

C Ver. 2. When thou eatest the labors of thy hands, thou shalt be blessed, and it shal be wel with thee. Ver. 3. Thy wife shall bee as the fruitfull Vine upon the sides of thy house, and thy children like Olive plants round about thy Table. Ver. 6. Yea, thou shalt see thy childrens children, and peace upon Israel. 1 Sam. 1. 27. I prayed (saith Hannah) for this childe, and the Lord hath given me my desire which I asked of him.

The household service of God hath two parts; the first, is a conference upon the Word of God, for the edification of all the members thereof to eternall life. The second is, Invocation of the name of God, with giving of thanks for his benefits; both these are commended in the Scriptures. Deut. 6.6. These words which I command thee this day, shall be in thy heart. V.7. And thou shalt whet them upon thy children, and talke of them when thou tarriest in thine house, and as thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest downe, and when thou risest up. V.20. When thy son shall aske thee in time to come, saying, What meane these testimonies, and ordinances, and lawes, which the Lord our God hath commanded you? V.21. Then thou shalt say unto thy son, We were Pharaohs bondmen in Ægypt, but the Lord brought us out of Ægypt with a mighty hand. V. 24. Therefore the Lord hath commanded us to doe all these ordinances, and to feare the Lord our God. Psal. 14.1. The foole hath said in his heart, There is no God, ver. 4. They call not upon God.

The times of this service are these: The morning, in which the family comming together in one place, is to call upon the name of the Lord, before they begin the workes of their callings.

The evening also is another time to bee used in prayer, because the family hath seene the blessing of God upon their labours the day before, and now the time of rest draweth on, in which every one is to commend his body and soule into the protection of the Lord; for no man knoweth what shall befall him before he rise againe, neither knoweth any whether ever hee shall rise againe or not: it is therefore a desperate boldnesse without praying to goe to rest.

Besides this, there be other times also wherein to performe this duty, as before and after meales: For meats and drinks are blessed to the receivers, by the word and prayer. 1 Tim. 4. 4. Whatsoever God hath created is good, neither is any thing to bee refused, if it bee taken with thanksgiving: for it is sanctified by the Word of God and prayer.

Now these times, the Word of God approveth. Deut. 6.6. Thou shalt talke of them, when thou liest downe, and when thou risest up. Psal. 55.18. Evening and morning, and at noone, I will pray and make a noise, and he will heare my voice. Psal. 127.1. It is in vaine to rise early, and to lie downe late, and eat the bread of sorrow, except the Lord vouchsafe a blessing, who will surely give rest to his beloved.

To these may sometimes be added the exercise of fasting, which is (as occasion serveth) to be used both publikely and privately, especially when they of the family be thereunto called by some present or imminent calamitie. Hest. 4. 16. Goe and assemble all the Iewes that are found in Shusan, and fast ye for me, and eat not, nor drinke in three daies, day nor night: I also and my maids will fast likewise, and so will I goe in to the King, which is not according to the Law, and if I perish, I perish. Zach. 11. 12. And in that day shall there be a great mourning in Ierusalem, and the land shall bewaile every family apart, the family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart, the family of the house of Nathan apart, and their wives apart, &c.

A

Wherefore, those families wherein this service of GOD is performed, are (as it were) little Churches, yea, even a kinde of Paradise upon earth. And for this purpose S. Paul writing to Philemon, greeteth the Church that is in his house, Philem. 1, 2. And in like manner he sendeth salutations to the Church of Corinth, from Aquila and Priscilla, and the Church which was in their house, 1 Cor. 16. 19. On the other side, where this duty of Gods service is not used, but either for the most part, or altogether neglected, a man may tearme those families no better than companies of prophane and graceless Atheists, who as they deny God in their hearts, so they are knowne by this note, that they doe not call upon the name of the Lord, Psal. 14.4. Yea, such families are fitly compared to an heard of swine, which are alwaies feeding upon the Mast with greedinesse, but never looke up to the hand that beateth it downe, nor to the tree from whence it falleth.

B

The other duty concerning the house it selfe, is, That every member in the family, according to their abilitie, employ themselves in some honest and profitable businesse, to maintaine the temporall estate and life of the whole. Gen. 3. 19. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou returne to the earth; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou returne. 1 Cor. 7. 20. Let every man abide in the same vocation wherein he was called. Now if any one in the family starteth aside out of his calling, and inticeth another to idolatry, he is to be revealed, Deuter. 13. 6. And againe, their case is very fearefull that doe nothing in their houses, but goe finely, and fare daintily from day to day. This is the blacke marke that the Scripture sets upon the rich glutton, Luk. 16.19. There was a certaine rich man which was clothed in purple, and fine linnen, and fared deliciously every day.

CHAP. III.

Of married folkes.

A Family is distinguished into sundry combinations or couples of persons.

A couple, is that whereby two persons standing in mutuall relation to each other, are combined together as it were in one. And of these two the one is alwaies higher, and beareth rule, the other is lower, and yeeldeth subjection.

Couples are of two sorts, principall, or lesse principall.

The principall is the combination of married folkes: and these are so tearmed in respect of Marriage.

Marriage is the lawfull conjunction of the two married married perſons; that is, of one man and one woman into one fleſh. So was the firſt inſtitution of Marriage, Gen. 2. 21. which is expounded by our Saviour Chriſt, Matth. 19. 6. Therefore they are no more two, but one fleſh. And alſo by Paul, Eph. 5. 31. *For this cauſe ſhal a man leave father and mother, and ſhall * cleave unto his wife,* (as two boords are joyned together with glue) and they which were two, ſhall be one fleſh. Wherefore this is an eternall law of marriage, that two, and not three or foure, ſhall bee one fleſh. And for this cauſe, the fathers, who had many wives and concubines, it may bee that through cuſtome they ſinned of ignorance, yet they are not in any wiſe to be excuſed.

Marriage of it ſelfe is a thing indifferent, and the Kingdom of God ſtands no more in it than in meats and drinkes; and yet it is a ſtate in it ſelfe, farre more excellent than the condition of ſingle life. For firſt, it was ordained by God in Paradiſe, above and before all other ſtates of life, in Adams innocency before the fall. Again, it was inſtituted upon a moſt ſerious and ſolemne conſultation among the three perſons in the holy Trinity. Gen. 1. 26. Let us make man in our image, according to our likeneſſe, and let them rule over, &c. Gen. 2. 18. Iehovah Elohim ſaid, It is not good that the man ſhould bee himſelfe alone, I will make him an help meet for him. Thirdly, the manner of this conjunction was excellent, for God joyned our firſt parents Adam and Eve together immediatly. Fourthly, God gave a large bleſſing unto the eſtate of marriage, ſaying, Increaſe and multiply, and fill the earth. Laſtly, marriage was made and appointed by God himſelfe, to be the fountaine and ſeminary of all other ſorts and kinds of life in the Common-wealth and in the Church.

Now if mankind had continued in that uprightneſſe and integrity which it had by creation, the ſtate of ſingle life had bin of no price and eſtimation among men, neither ſhould it have had any place in the world, without great contempt of Gods ordinance and bleſſing.

Nevertheleſſe, ſince the fall, to ſome men who have the gift of continency, it is in many reſpects farre better than marriage, yet not ſimply, but only by accident, in regard of ſundry calamities which came into the world by ſin. For firſt it freeth a man from many and great cares of houſhold affaires. Againe, it maketh him much more fit and diſpoſed to meditate of heavenly things, without diſtraction of minde. Beſides that, when dangers are either preſent or imminent, in matters belonging to this life, the ſingle perſon is in this caſe happy, becauſe hee and his are more ſecure and ſafe, than others be who are in married ſtate. 1 Cor. 7. 8. Therfore I ſay to the unmarried and widowes, It is good for them if they abide even as I doe. Ver. 26. I ſuppoſe then this to be good for the preſent neceſſity, I meane that it is good for a man ſo to bee. Ver. 28. But if thou takeſt a wife thou ſinneſt not, and if a virgin marry ſhe ſinneth not: nevertheleſſe ſuch ſhall have trouble in the fleſh. Ver. 32. And I would have you without care.

The end of marriage is foure-fold:

The firſt is, procreation of children, for the propagation and continuance of the ſeed and poſterity of man upon the earth. Gen. 1. 28. Bring forth fruit, multiply, fill the earth, and ſubdue it, Gen. 9. 1. 1 Tim. 5. 14.

The ſecond is the procreation of an holy ſeed, whereby the Church of God may be kept holy and chaſte, and there may alwaies be a holy company of men, that may worſhip and ſerve God in the Church from age to age: Mal. 2. 15. And did not he make one? yet had he abundance of ſpirit; and wherefore one? becauſe he ſought a godly ſeed.

The third is, that after the fall of mankind, it might be a ſoveraigne meanes to avoid fornication, and conſequently to ſubdue and ſlake the burning luſts of the fleſh: 1 Cor. 7. 2. Nevertheleſſe, for the avoiding of fornication, let every man have his wife, and every woman have her husband. Ver. 9. But if they cannot abſtaine, let them marry: for it is better to marry, than to burne. And for this cauſe ſome Schoolemen doe erre, who hold that the ſecret comming together of man and wife, cannot bee without ſinne, unleſſe it be done for procreation of children. Lombard the maſter of the Sentences ſaith the contrary, namely, That marriage before the fall was only a duty, but now ſince the fall it is alſo a remedy.

The fourth end is, that the parties married may thereby performe the duties of their callings, in better and more comfortable manner: Prov. 31. 11. The heart of her husband truſteth her, and he ſhall have no need of ſpoile. Ver. 13. She ſeeketh woll and flax, and laboureth cheerfully with her hands.

Marriage is free to all orders and ſorts of men without exception, even to thoſe that have the gift of continency: but for them which cannot abſtaine, it is by the expreſſe commandement of God neceſſary. Heb. 13. 4. Marriage is honourable amongſt all men, and the bed undefiled. 1 Cor. 7. 9. But if they cannot abſtaine, let them marry.

By which it appeareth to bee a cleare caſe, that the commandement of the Pope of Rome, whereby hee forbiddeth marriage of certaine perſons, as namely of Clergy men, is meerely diabolicall; for ſo writeth the Apoſtle, 1 Tim. 4. 1. The ſpirit ſpeaketh evidently, that in the latter times ſome ſhall depart from the faith, and ſhall give heed unto ſpirits of error, and doctrines of Devils, verſ. 3. forbidding to marry.

But againſt this doctrine ſundry things are alleaged.

Ob. 1. The Apoſtle commandeth the married among the Corinths, to abſtaine with conſent for a time, that they might give themſelves to faſting and prayer, 1 Cor. 7. 5. I anſwer, that Paul ſpeaks not in that place of daily and common ſervice of God in prayer, but of the ſolemn and and extraordinary exercise thereof, which was joyned with fasting and abstinency, in common dangers and calamities.

Object. 2. 1 Cor. 7. 32. He that is unmarried careth for the things of the Lord, how hee may please the Lord; but the married person careth for the things of the world. Ans. The place is not generally to be understood of all, but indefinitely of those married persons that are carnall and fleshly. And he that is married, is to bee so carefull for the things of the world, as he ought and may have also a speciall regard of those things that concerne God and his Kingdome.

Object. 3. 1 Tim. 5. 11. The younger widdowes (saith the Apostle) will marry, having damnation because they have broken the first faith. Ans. By the first faith, Paul understandeth that promise and vow which they made unto Christ when they were baptized; and they are there said to beginne to wax wanton against Christ, by denying or renouncing that faith, and not otherwise.

Object. 4. Hee that doth earnestly and from his heart crave the gift of continency, GOD will give it him, and therefore hee need not marry.

Ans. The gifts of God are of two sorts: some are generall, some are proper. Generall gifts are such as God giveth generally to all: and these may bee obtained, if they bee asked according to Gods Word, lawfully: Jam. 1. 5. If any of you lacke wisdome, let him aske it of God who giveth to all men liberally, and reproacheth no man, and it shall be given him. Ver. 6. But let him aske in faith, and waver not. Proper gifts are those which are given only to some certaine men: of which sort is the gift of continency, and such like; which though they bee often and earnestly asked, yet they are seldome or never granted unto some men: as appeareth in Pauls example, who being buffeted by Satan, saith of himselfe, For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me; but he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee, 2 Cor. 12. 8, 9.

CHAP. IV.
Of the Contract.

MArriage hath two distinct parts: the first is the beginning; the second, the accomplishment, or consummation thereof.

The Beginning, is the Contract or Espousals; the End or accomplishment, is the solemne manifestation of the Contract, by that which properly we call Marriage. Deut. 20. 7. What man is there that hath betrothed a wife, and hath taken her? Let him goe and returne againe unto his house, lest he die in battell, and another man take her. Mat. 1. 18. When his mother Mary was betrothed to Ioseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the holy Ghost.

Betweene the Contract and Marriage, there ought to bee some certaine space or distance of time. The reasons whereof may be these:

First, businesse of so great importance as this is, would not be rashly or unadvisedly attempted, but should rather be done by degrees in processe of time, according to that saying not so ancient as true, * Actions of weight before resolution, require mature deliberation. Secondly, That during such a space inquirie may bee made, whether there be any just cause, which may hinder the consummation of Marriage: considering that before the parties come and converse together, what is amisse may be remedied and amended, which to doe afterward will be too late. Thirdly, in these cases, persons espoused must have regard of honesty, as well as of necessity; not presently upon the Contract, seeking to satisfie their owne fleshly desires, after the manner of bruit beasts, but proceeding therein upon mature deliberation.

The Contract is a mention or mutuall promise of future marriage, before fit and competent Judges and Witnesses.

The best manner of giving this promise is, to make it * in words touching the present time, and simply without any exception or condition expressed or conceived. For by this meanes it comes to passe, that the bond is made the surer, and the ground or foundation of future marriage the better laid. And hence alone it is, that the persons betrothed in Scripture are termed man and wife. Iacob speaking of Rahel, who was onely betrothed unto him, said to Laban, Give mee my wife, Gen. 29. 21. Deut. 22. 23. If a maid be betrothed to a husband, and a man find her in the towne, and lie with her, then shall ye bring them both out unto the gates of the City, and shall stone them with stones to death; the maid, because she cried not being in the city; and the man, because hee hath humbled his neighbours wife. Mat. 1. 20. Ioseph feare not to take Mary thy wife.

Now if the promise bee uttered in words, * for time to come, it doth not precisely binde the parties to performance. For example: If one of them saith to the other; N. I will take thee, &c. and not, N. I doe take thee, &c. by this forme of speech the match is not made, but only promised to bee made afterward. But if on the other side it be said, N. I doe take thee, and not, I will take thee; by these termes, the marriage at that very instant is begunne, though * not in regard of fact, yet in regard of right and interest, which the parties have each in another in deed and in truth. And this is the common opinion of the learned. Yet notwithstanding, if the parties contracting shall say each to other, I will take thee to, &c. with intention to binde themselves at the present; the bond is in conscience precisely made before God, and so the Contract indeed made * for the present time before God. True it is, that he which standeth to his promise made as much as in him lyeth, doth well: yet if the promise hath or conceiveth some just cause, why he

* Diu deliberandum quod semel statuendum.

* In futurum.

* Non de facto, de jure.

nee ſhould afterward change his purpoſe, the Contract expreſſed in tearmes for time to come, though it were formerly made, and confirmed by oath, muſt notwithſtanding give place to the Contract made for time preſent.

Thoſe eſpouſals, which are made upon condition, which is honeſt, poſſible, and belonging to Marriage, doe ceaſe or depend, ſo farre forth as the condition annexed ceaſeth or dependeth. For example; If the one party promiſeth to marry the other upon condition, that his or her kinſman will yeeld conſent to the match; or upon condition of a dowrie, that ſhee ſhall bring unto him, ſutable to her education, and the family whereof ſhee commeth; theſe conditions being kept or not kept, the promiſe doth likewiſe ſtand or not ſtand.

But thoſe conditions which are neceſſarily underſtood, or which may certainly bee kept and come to paſſe, doe neither hinder nor ſuſpend Marriage. As this: I promiſe thee marriage, if I live; or I promiſe to marry thee, if the Sunne riſe to morrow.

Againe, conditions that are either impoſſible, or diſhoneſt, are not to be accounted as promiſes annexed* in way of marriage. Of which ſort are theſe, I will be thy wife, if thou wilt take unto thee wings and flie, or if thou wilt bring an untimely birth.

*In favorem Matrimonij.

Furthermore, if the parties betrothed, doe lie together before the condition (though honeſt and appertaining to Marriage) bee performed; then the contract for the time to come, is without further controverſie, ſure and certaine. For where there hath beene a carnall uſe of each others body, it is alwayes preſuppoſed, that a mutuall conſent, as touching Marriage, hath gone before.

CHAP. V.

Of the choice of perſons fit for Marriage.

FOr the making of a contract, two things are requiſite: firſt, the choice, and then the conſent of the parties.

Choice is an enquirie after perſons marriageable.

Perſons marriageable, are ſuch as be fit and able for the married ſtate.

This fitneſſe or ability is knowne and diſcerned by certaine ſignes; which are either eſſentiall to the contract, or accidentall.

An eſſentiall ſigne is that, without which the contract in hand becomes a meere nullity. And of this ſort there are principally five.

The firſt is the diſtinction of the ſex, which is either male, or female. The male is man of a ſuperiour ſex, fit for procreation. The female is woman of an inferiour ſex, fit to conceive and beare children. 1 Corinth. 11. 7. The man ought not to cover his head: for as much as hee is the image and glory of God, but the woman is the glory of the man, 1 Tim. 2. 12. I permit not the woman to teach, neither to uſurpe authority over the man, but to bee in ſilence. By this diſtinction is condemned that unnaturall and monſtrous ſinne of uncleanenеſſe betweene parties of the ſame ſex, commonly tearmed Sodomie; as alſo the confuſion of the* kindes of creatures, when one kinde commits filthineſſe and abomination with another.

Rom. 1. 26.
* Species.
Levit. 18. 22, 23.

The ſecond ſigne, is the juſt and lawfull diſtance of bloud.

Diſtance of bloud is then juſt and lawfull, when neither of the perſons that are to be married, doe come neere to the kindred of their fleſh, or to the fleſh of their fleſh: for ſo the Scripture ſpeaketh, Levit. 18. 6. No man ſhall come neere to any of the fleſh of his fleſh: or to the * kindred of his fleſh. Where it is to be obſerved, that by a mans fleſh, is meant that ſubſtance which is of himſelfe, or whereof himſelfe conſiſteth. And by the fleſh of his fleſh, that which next and immediately iſſueth out of that fleſh whereof he conſiſteth. Whereupon it followeth that the touching or comming neere of fleſh to fleſh, is not ſpoken of ſtrangers, but of thoſe only that are of kindred.

* Ebr. Sheer Beſaro,

Kindred is of two ſorts, conſanguinitie, or affinity.

Kindred in conſanguinitie, are thoſe which iſſue from one, and the ſame common bloud or ſtocke. And there be certaine degrees, whereby kinſmen of this ſort are diſtinguiſhed one from another.

A degree is a generation or deſcent betweene two perſons that are of the ſame bloud. For one perſon cannot make a degree, unleſſe he be conſidered relatively in regard of generation.

Now many degrees continued or derived from one and the ſame head, doe make a Line. And a Line is twofold, the Right line, or the Overthwart, commonly tearmed collaterall.

In the right Line, looke how many perſons there are, ſo many degrees there be, that onely excepted, which upon occaſion offered, is in queſtion, and from which we begin the account.

Abraham.
|
Iſaac.
|
Iacob.
Ioſeph.

Here Ioſeph is diſtant three degrees from Abraham, Iacob, two, Iſaac one, or the firſt.

The Right line is either aſcending, or deſcending.

The Right Line aſcending, is the race of all the anceſtors; and it hath ſundry degrees. Of the firſt whereof is, the father and the mother: of the ſecond, the grand-father both by the father & mothers ſide, that is, the father of my father, and the father of my mother; & the grand-mother, that is to ſay, my fathers and my mothers mother. Of the third, is the great grandfather, or the father of my grandfather; and the great grandmother or the mother of my grandfather. Of the fourth, is the great grandfathers father, and the great grand-fathers, or grandmothers mother. Of the fifth is the great grandfathers grandfather, and the great grandfathers or great grand-mothers grand-mother. Of the sixth, is the great great grand-fathers grand-father and the great great grand-fathers, or great great grand-mothers grand-mother.

The right line descending, is the race of a mans owne posterity. And that also hath sundry degrees. The first whereof is, the sonne and the daughter; the second, the nephew, and the neece; the third, the nephewes sonne, and the neeces daughter. The fourth is the nephewes nephew, or the sonne in the fourth degree of lineall descent, and the neeces neece, or the daughter in the same degree of descent. The fifth, is he and shee that are three lineall descents from the childes childe. And so are the rest in their order, by what meanes soever they be called and knowne.

Now in this right line, whether ascending or descending, the person, of whom the case or question is moved, commeth neere to the kindred of his flesh. And therefore marriages in this line are prohibited infinitely without any limitation; so as if Adam himselfe were now alive, he could not marry by the law of God, because he should come neer to the kindred of his owne flesh, as Moses speaketh. The reason hereof is, because in the right line, superiours and inferiours are to each other as parents and children, and the kindred between parents and children, being the first and neerest of all other, their conjunction in marriage must needs bee most uncleane, and repugnant unto nature.

The collaterall or crooked line, is that which walketh by the sides of the right line, whether ascending or descending, in the row of the kindred. And it is either unequall, or equall.

The unequall is that whereby the person in question and his kinsman, are unequally distant from the common stocke, or head of the kindred.

And in this line, looke how many degrees the kinsman that is furthest off from the common stocke, is distant from the same, so many is hee and his kinsman in question distant one from the other.

For example,

Thare.

Abraham —— Nachor

Laban.

Here Laban being removed furthest off, to wit, three degrees from the common stocke Thare; is likewise three degrees distant from Abraham, his great uncle, and Abraham so many from him.

Furthermore, kinsmen in this Line are of two sorts; some are Superiours to the person in question, some are inferiours to him.

Superiours are such, as are a kinne to his father, and mother, of some side; and that either neerer, or further off.

Those that are of neere kinne to them, bee these. I. The uncle of the fathers side, or the fathers brother; the aunt of the fathers side, or fathers sister. The uncle of the mothers side, or the mothers brother; the aunt of the mothers side, or the mothers sister. II. The great uncle, or grandfathers brother; the great aunt, or grandfathers sister. The great uncle or grand-mothers brother, and the great aunt, or grandmothers sister. III. The great uncle by the fathers side, or great grand-fathers brother, and great aunt by the fathers side, or great grandfathers sister. The great uncle by the mothers side, or the great grand-mothers brother; and the great aunt by the mothers side, or the great grand-mothers sister. IV. The great grand-uncle by the fathers side, or great grandfathers fathers brother: and the great grand-aunt by the same side, or the great grand-fathers fathers sister. The great grand-uncle by the mothers side, or the great grand-mothers mothers brothers: and the great grand aunt by the same side, or the great grandmothers mothers sister.

Now these in regard of their inferiours, are in stead of parents, and therefore doe come neere to the kindred of their flesh.

Those superiours which are of kindred to parents on the one side, a farre off, are these. I. The son and daughter of the great uncle or aunt by the fathers side; or of the great uncle or aunt by the mothers side. II. The nephew and neece of the great uncle or aunt by the fathers side, or of the great uncle or aunt by the mothers side, neere to the cozen germane.

And these as they stand in comparison with their inferiors, doe not come neere to the kindred of their flesh. Sobrino proprior.

The equall collaterall line, is that whereby kinsmen are equally distant from their head.

Kinsmen of this line are, I. whole brothers, that is, brothers by the same father & mother, or halfe brothers, that is, brethren by the same father, but not by the same mother. Again, whole sisters by the same father or mother, or halfe sisters by one of them and not by both. II. The brothers children or cozen germans; that is, the uncles sonnes or daughters, or the aunts sonnes or daughters. The sisters children, or cozen germans: that is, the aunts sonnes or daughters, which are the children of two sisters. III. The cozen german, the sonne of the great uncle by the fathers or mothers side, and the cozen german the sonne of the great aunt, by the fathers or mothers side. The cozen german the daughter of the great uncle, by the fathers or mothers side, and the cozen german, the daughter of the great aunt by the same sides.

In

In this line, look how many degrees the partie in queſtion is removed from the common ſtocke, by ſo many twice told, is hee removed from his kinſman in queſtion. Put the caſe betweene Bethuel and Iſaac, as in this example:

Thare

Iſaac. Bethuel.

Here Bethuel being two degrees removed from Thare, is foure degrees diſtant from Iſaac.

Now hee that is in the ſecond degree of this line, comes neere to the kindred of his fleſh; and for that cauſe the marriages of brethren and ſiſters are unlawfull, and forbidden.

But againſt this ſundry things are alleaged.

Ob. 1. The ſons of Adam who were the firſt brethren in the world, married their ſiſters; marriages therefore in this degree may ſeeme to be lawfull. Anſ. The caſe of thoſe perſons in thoſe times, was a caſe of neceſſitie, which could not be avoided, and thereupon was warranted by divine diſpenſation. For God had given them his owne expreſſe commandement in this behalfe; Beare fruit and multiply, Gen. 1. 28. Beſides that there were then no other women in the world, by whom they might have iſſue and poſteritie, but onely by their ſiſters. Whereupon it is manifeſt, that Gods will was to permit them to take even their ſiſters to their wives. But now out of this ſpeciall diſpenſation from God, ſuch matching is utterly unlawful, being an apparant breach of another expreſſe commandement given afterward by God himſelfe, Levit. 18. 9. 11.

De civit. Dei. lib. 15. cap. 16. To this purpoſe ſaith Auguſtine, in way of anſwer to the example propounded: The practice of thoſe firſt times, then backed by urgent neceſſitie, the more ancient it was, the more damnable to proved afterward, when it was reſtrained by Gods commandement.

Object. 2. Sarah was Abrahams ſiſter, and yet Abraham tooke her to wife, Geneſ. 20. 12. Yet in very deed ſhee is my ſiſter: for ſhee is the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother, and ſhe is my wife, Geneſ. 11. 29. Abraham and Nahor took them wives, and the name of Abrahams wife was Sarah. Anſw. Touching this inſtance, there are ſundry opinions. The Jewes doe grant thus much, that ſhee was called by a name common to all kins-folke of that ſex, to wit, a Siſter; yet indeed ſhee was Abrahams neece, the ſiſter of Lot, and the daughter of Haran, Abrahams brother, which Moſes elſwhere calleth Iſca, Geneſ. 11. 29. Others thinke that ſhe was daughter in law to Thare, Abrahams father; becauſe Abraham himſelfe ſaith, She is the daughter of my father, not of my mother. Others are of opinio, that ſhe was Harans daughter in law, and after his death was tranſlated into the family of Terah her grand-father; who was alſo in ſtead of her father being dead, and thence ſhee was tearmed his daughter. Now howſoever in this variety of judgements, it is hard to find certainty of truth, yet this is out of doubt, that God in thoſe dayes toleratedmany things, which notwithſtanding he did not altogether approve.

Object. 3. 2 Sam. 13. 13. Thamar ſayes to her brother Amnon: Speake I pray thee to the King, and hee will not deny me unto thee. Anſw. The ſpeech of Thamar is not ſimply to be taken as if ſhee deſired that which ſhee ſaid, or as if it were lawfull to be done, which ſhe wiſhed him to doe; but only that ſhe ſought to put him off, by giving him this counſell, in reſpect of her owne deliverance from that preſent danger wherein ſhe was. Or at leaſt it may be ſaid, that ſhe erroneouſly ſuppoſed it was lawfull for the King to grant ſuch a ſuit, if it had beene made unto him by her brother Amnon. Whether way ſoever this ſpeech bee taken, there can no ſuch thing be gathered thence, as is pretended.

Now out of the ſecond degree of the equall collaterall line, it ſhould ſeeme that thoſe who are joyned one to another in marriage, doe not touch the kindred of their fleſh: and therefore the Law of God forbiddeth not conſobrines or cozen Germanes, that is, brothers and ſiſters children to marry.

Yea, if examples be of force for this purpoſe, the Scripture approves ſuch marriages. For thus it is written, that Iacob married Rahel the daughter of Laban his mothers brother, Geneſ. 28. 2. Againe, that Mahla, Tirza, and Hoglah, Milcah, and Noah, the daughters of Zelophchad, were married unto their fathers brothers ſonnes, Num. 36. 11. And Othniel the ſonne of Kenaz the cozen of Caleb, took Kiriath-ſepher; and he gave him Aſſah his daughter to wife. Joſ. 15. 17.

Howbeit in this caſe, the rule of the Apoſtle is to be followed; That nothing be done, even in things that are otherwiſe lawful, whereby a mans brother may ſtumble, or be offended, or made weak, Rom. 14. 21. Wherefore it is convenient, that ſuch marriages ſhould not be, becauſe ſomtimes they may give offence in regard of the Law of the Magiſtrate; and becauſe they come ſomewhat neere to the bonds and tearmes of bloud and ſtocke, which God hath ſet downe in his word. Auguſtine in his 15. booke De civitate Dei, chap. 16. ſaith to this purpoſe, Experti autem ſumus, &c. that is, We have found by experience, that in regard of that neernes of bloud, which cozen germans have unto the degrees of brothers and ſiſters, how rarely cuſtome hath admitted thoſe marriages, which were warrantable by laws, becauſe the law of God hath not forbidden them, nor as yet the law of man. Never heleſſe, the practice lawfull in it ſelfe, was forborne the rather, becauſe it came neere to that which was unlawfull, and therefore marriage with the cozen germane, ſeemed in a manner to bee marriage with a mans owne brother or ſiſter, &c. Howbeit there is no queſtion, but in theſe times it hath beene well provided by lawes, that ſuch marriages ſhould not be undertake. For as the multiplication of alliance is hindred therby, ſo this inconvenience alſo grow- eth from them, that friendship and love which is procured by affinity, betweene men that are strangers; cannot be inlarged and increased, where men goe not out of the limits, and tearmes of their owne bloud. Yea, there is naturally in man a comendable measure of shamefastnes, wherby upon consideration of the neerenesse in bloud, he acknowledge: h a due debt of modesty and honour to his next kindred, and consequently restraineth himselfe in regard of them from the occasions and actions of concupiscence, wherunto he is inclineable in respect of others. And hence it is, that generally the modesty that ought to be in those which intend marriage, avoideth as much as may bee, these and such like conjunctions. The same is the judgement of Ambrose in one of his Epistles to his friend Paternus, wherein he dissuadeth him from marrying his sonne with his cozen Germane, upon the grounds before alleaged by Augustine, adding this withall, that though it were in it selfe lawfull, being no where forbidden by God, yet in sundry respects being inexpedient, it ought not to be done, according to the saying of the Apostle, All things are lawfull for mee, but all things are not expedient.

Epist. Lib. 8. Epist. 66.

1 Cor. 6.

But it is avouched to the contrary, that God by expresse law forbiddeth marriage with the aunt, the fathers sister, Levit. 18. 12. and with the mothers sister, vers. 13. and with the fathers brothers wife, which is also the aunt, verse 14. therefore by the law of proportion, hee forbiddeth matching with the children of these persons. For in nature it is a ruled case: If a man may not marry the mother, much lesse may hee marry the daughter.

Ans. The argument is faulty, and concludes nothing to the purpose. For there is not the same reason of both. In the right line of consanguinitie, those which are sisters to father and mother, stand in place and stead of parents; and their nephewes and neeces are to them as children: therfore marriages among them can stand by no law, either of God, of nature, or by the positive lawes of nations. It is not so with cozen germans. For having no such relation, there is not in their marriages by the law of Moses, any discovery of shame or breach of civill honestie. The blessing of God upon some of them mentioned in Scripture, as upon Iacob and Rachel, and such like, doe evidently shew that they were lawfull in themselves, and pleasing unto him. And thus much touching kindred by bloud or consanguinity.

Kindred in affinitie is that, wherby the tearms of two kindreds, are brought into the societie of one and the same family; or whereby persons that are not of bloud, are by marriage alied each to other. Hence it is tearmed affinitie, because it maketh an unitie of tearmes in kindred which before were distant.

Affinitie or alliance groweth by mixtion or participation of bloud, in the coupling of man and wife together in lawfull marriage. For a bare and simple contract, maketh not alliance A betweene party and party properly, but marriage after the contract finished and consummate.

Againe, the same alliance ceaseth and determineth upon the death of either partie espoused or married; yet so as the prohibition of conjunction remaines and stands in force, for the preservation of publike honesty.

Now there is a kinde of resemblance and proportion betweene kindred of bloud, and kindred by marriage, not onely in regard of degrees and line, but also in respect of the prohibition of degrees.

Those that are of alliance, are commonly reduced to these heads. I. The father in law, or the husbands or wives father. The mother in law, or the husbands or wives mother. II. The mothers husband or step-father to them that come by another man. The fathers wife, or step-mother to those that come by another woman. III. The wives fathers father, or grand-father and the wives mothers mother, or grand-mother; or the grand-father and grand-mother of the wife. IV. The sonne in law, or daughters husband, and the daughter in law, or sonnes wife. V. The neeces husband, and the nephewes wife. VI. The step-sonne, or sonne in law, that is, the sonne of a man by another wife, or of a woman by another husband. The step-daughter, or daughter in law, that is, the daughter of a man by another wife, or of a woman by another husband. VII. The step-sonnes sonne, or his sonne who comes of a man by another woman, or of a woman by another man. And the step-daughters daughter, or her daughter who comes of a man by another woman, or of the woman by another husband. VIII. The husbands or wives brother, and the husbands sister, or brothers wife. IX. The sisters husband, and the brothers wife.

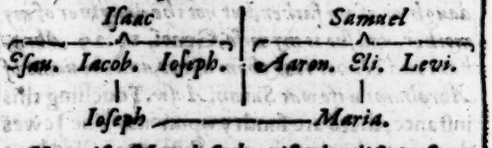
Concerning affinity, I propound these rules.

I. Looke in what degree a man is of consanguinitie to ones wife, in the same degree of affinitie he is to the wives husband. And contrariwise: for example,



D

Here, if Mary Iosephs wife, be distant from Esau Iosephs uncle by the fathers side, two degrees, then also is Ioseph himselfe distant from Aaron the brother of Eli his father in law, two degrees. If Mary the wife, be distant from her own father Eli one degree, and from her grand-father Samuel two; then also is her husband distant from Eli his father in law, one degree, and from Samuel his wives grand-father, two.

Another example,

Here Herod being in the first degree of con-conſanguinitie with his brother Philip; Herodias his brothers wife is in the firſt degree of affinitie to him.

II. Rule. Coſins by marriage within the degrees, both of the right and collaterall line, doe come neere to the kinred of their fleſh, in the ſame manner that coſins by bloud doe, in the ſame lines; and the like degrees in both are forbidden. Therefore in the right line of affinitie it is as well unlawfull for the father in law to marry the daughter in law, or the ſonne in law to marrie the mother in law, as it is for the father to marry the daughter, or the ſonne the mother. Againe, in the collaterall, it is as unlawful for the uncle by the mothers ſide, to marrie the wife of his ſiſters ſonne, and ſo in other degrees, as it is for him to match in the ſame degrees of conſanguinitie. The reaſon is, becauſe in theſe lines, as well as in thoſe of conſanguinitie, ſuperiours and inferiours, are each to others as parents and children.

From hence amongſt other things it may be gathered, that it is in no ſort lawfull for a man, when his wife is dead to marrie her ſiſter: Lev. 18.16. Thou ſhalt not diſcover the ſhame of thy brothers wife; for it is thy brothers ſhame. And Levit. 20.21. The man that taketh his brothers wife, committeth filthineſſe, becauſe he hath uncovered his brothers ſhame.

Againſt this doctrine it is objected. Firſt, that God commandeth not to take a wife with her ſiſter, during her life, Levit. 18.18. in which place, he doth not ſimply forbid a man to marry two ſiſters one after another, but to marrie them both together, and therefore after the wife is dead, a man may marry her ſiſter.

Anſw. The place is a flat prohibition of the ſinne of Polygamie. For to take a wife to her ſiſter in the Hebrew phraſe, is nothing elſe but to take two wives one to another. The like forme of ſpeech is uſed otherwhere by Moſes, as Exod. 26.3. Five curtains ſhall be coupled together, [the woman to her ſiſter] that is, one to another; and the other five curtains ſhall be coupled, [the woman to her ſiſter] that is, the one to the other. Ezech. 1.9. The foure beaſts were joyned with their wings, [the woman to her ſiſter] that is, the one to the other. Againe, Moſes himſelfe there alleageth two reaſons againſt Polygamie: the one is, becauſe the man is to love, cheriſh, and comfort his wife; whereas, if he ſhould take unto him another beſides her, he ſhould greatly vex his firſt lawfull wife. The other, becauſe by that meanes he ſhould uncover the ſhame of his wife; that is, he ſhould play a very diſhoneſt part with her, to whom he was before lawfully married.

Object. 2. The Lord commanded by a ſpeciall law, that the brother in caſe his brother died without iſſue, ſhould take his wife, and raiſe up ſeed unto him, Deut. 25.5.

Anſw. The words of Moſes are a ſpeciall exception of a generall law propounded in Levit. 18.16. Thou ſhalt not diſcover the ſhame of thy brothers wife; for it is thy brothers ſhame. And they are peculiarly directed to the Iſraelites, upon ſpeciall cauſe; that, when the elder brother died without any ſeed, the name of the firſt-borne might not be extinct, but the family might be preſerved in that name, by raiſing up of ſeed unto him; which being a privilege proper to the Iſraelites, upon that ſpeciall conſideration, it muſt not be inlarged to any other ſort of men whatſoever. Neither is the text to be underſtood of coſins removed onely, as ſome thinke, but alſo of the line of the kinred by bloud; as appeareth plainely by the hiſtory of Ruth, chap. 1. verſ. 11. in theſe words of Naomi to her daughters in law, Turne againe, my daughters: for what cauſe will you goe with me? Are there any more ſonnes in my wombe, that they may be your husbands? Turne againe, my daughters, goe your way, for I am too old to have a husband, &c.

III. Rule. The wives kinſman by bloud, is of affinity to her husband only; but unto his kinred by bloud, the ſaid kinſman hath no affinitie at all. So on the contrary it is true, that though the husbands kinſman by bloud, be allied to his wife, yet he hath no alliance to thoſe that are kinſmen of bloud unto her. The reaſon is, becauſe betweene the kinred of bloud on the mans ſide, and the kinred of bloud on the womans ſide, there is no affinitie. For the prohibition of the degrees of affinitie, hath force in thoſe onely which are the cauſe thereof, and goeth no further. Now the cauſe being onely in the married perſons themſelves, the effect may not in reaſon be inlarged, to them that are of the ſame bloud with either of them.

From this rule it followeth, that the kinred of both married perſons by bloud, may lawfully match together. The ſonne in law may match with the daughter of his mother in law. The father and ſonne by another wife, may marry the mother and the daughter. Two brothers may lawfully match with two ſiſters.

IV. Rule. Kinred of affinitie to the wife, are alſo kinred of affinitie to her husband; but how? not properly, but onely after a ſort, and as it were, of affinitie. So on the contrary. Kinred of alliance to the husband, are as it were of alliance to his wife. For example. The wife of my father in law, which is not my wives owne mother, but her ſtep-mother is, as it were my mother in law: for ſhe is (as it were) of affinitie to me, becauſe ſhe is indeed of affinitie to my wife.

Beza de repudiis. 82.

Thoſe which are of affinitie onely after a ſort, cannot conveniently match one with another. And therefore the ſonne in law may not marrie with his wives ſtep-mother; becauſe being of affinitie to his wife, ſhe is in ſtead of a mother in law to him. Neither may the daughter in law match with her husbands ſtep-father, becauſe he is (as it were) a ſtep-father to her. Againe, my ſiſters husband may not marrie my brothers wife; for they are after a ſort brother and sister each to other. The reason hereof is, because the wife is holden in law a * part of her husband, and therefore if affinitie hinders marriage with one of the married couples, it hindreth as well in the like case and respect, marriage with the other.

* Cujus nuptias inire non licet, ejus nec conjugis licet.

And thus much touching the distance of bloud, which in the choice of persons fit for marriage is most necessary to be observed. For in the 18. chap. of Leviticus there are sixteene severall sorts of persons with whom marriage is forbidden. The first is the mother. The second is the step-mother. The third, the sister by the same father and mother. The fourth, the halfe-sister, by one of the parents onely. The fifth, is the neece by the sonne. The sixth, the neece by the daughter. The seventh, the fathers sister. The eighth, the uncles, that is, the fathers brothers wife. The ninth the mothers sister. The tenth, the daughter in law, or sonnes wife. The eleventh, the brothers wife. The twelfth, the wives mother. The thirteenth, the step-daughter, or the wives daughter by another husband, or husbands daughter by a former wife. The fourteentch, is the step-sonnes daughter, that is, his daughter who was the wives son by another husband. The fifteenth, the step-daughters daughter. The sixteenth, is the wives sister. And not onely these, but all other answerable to them, either in the same or like degree, are by equall proportion forbidden to be had in marriage.

It is alleaged, that the prohibitions mentioned in that chapter, are meerely Mosaicall, that is, Ceremoniall, and therefore doe not bind us now in the new Testament.

Ans. It is a flat untruth; as shall appeare by these reasons.

First, the Cananites long before these lawes were given by Moses to the Israelites, were grievously afflicted for the breach and contempt of the same, as may be gathered by that which is written in the same chapter of Levit. ver. 3. According to the works of the land of Canaan, ye shall not doe, neither walke in their ordinances. And ver. 24. You shall not defile your selves in any of these things; for in all these the nations are defiled, which I will cast out before you. ver. 25. And the land is defiled; therefore I will visit the wickednesse thereof upon it, and the land shall vomit out her inhabitants.

Chap. 18.

Secondly, the Prophets themselves after Moses, are wont to count these prohibitions not Ceremoniall, but Morall: Ezech. 22. 10. In thee have they discovered their fathers shame; in thee have they vexed her, that was polluted in her flowers. Amos 2. 7. A man and his father will goe in to a maid, to prophane the name of my holinesse.

Thirdly, the same lawes are also urged in the new Testament, wherein Legall Ceremonies were determined, and had their end. Mark. 6. 18. Iohn said to Herod, It is not lawfull for thee to have thy brothers wife. 1 Cor. 5. 1. It is heard A certainly, that there is Fornication among you, and such Fornication, as is not once named among the Gentiles, that one should have his fathers wife.

Fourthly, Nature it selfe by proper instinct, abhorreth such kinde of conjunctions, and the prohibitions of them, have sufficient ground, even from her principles. For to this purpose it is, that not onely the lawes of the Romane Emperours, but also the civill Canons, and constitutions of men, very skilfull in that kind, have in all ages expresly been made against such persons as have offended in those societies forbidden by the Law of Moses.

Fifthly, the Lord himselfe hath denounced many and great punishments to be inflicted upon the breach of the same lawes. Levit. 20. 11. B The man that lieth with his fathers wife, because he hath uncovered his fathers shame, they shall both die, their bloud shal be upon them. ver. 12. The man that lieth with his daughter in law, they both shall die the death; they have wrought abomination, their bloud shall be upon them. v. 14. He that takes a wife and her mother, committeth wickednesse; they shall burne him and them with fire. ver. 16. The man that taketh his sister, his fathers daughter, or his mothers daughter, and seeth her shame, and she seeth his shame; it is villanie: therefore they shall be cut off in the sight of their people. ver. 20. The man that lieth with his fathers brothers wife, and uncovereth his uncles shame, they shal beare their iniquity, & shall die childles. Deu. C 23. 2. A bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord even to his tenth generatiō. Deu. 27 20. Cursed be he that lieth with his fathers wife.

The third essentiall Signe of a person marriageable, is abilitie and fitnesse for procreation. And this in an holy and modest sort is alwaies supposed to be in the party contracted, unlesse the contrary be manifestly knowne, and discerned by some apparent infirmity in the body.

Hence I gather, that it is unlawfull to make a contract with such a person, as is unfit for the use of Marriage, either by naturall constitution of body, or by accident. For example; in regard of sicknesse, or of frigiditie, or of the palsie uncurable, or lastly of the deprivation of the parts belonging to generation. These and such like impediments are of force, though a contract should already be made, yet to make it a meere nullity, considering that God maketh knowne his will in them, that hee approveth not of such espousals, but would have them to be dissolved. D

Againe, that which is made betweene two persons that are * under age, is to be holden and accounted as unlawfull. And though it should be done by consent, or commandement of Parents, yet it is of no moment. This alwaies remembred; except it be ratified by a new consent of the parties after they be come to age; or that they in the meane time have had private and carnall copulation one with another.

* Impuberes.

Againe, put the case two be espoused, where-

of the one is under age, the other of full age; the partie that is of full age ought to tarry and expect the time, wherein the iſſue of the eſpouſals formerly made may be manifeſted. And the under-aged may not breake off conſent, either before, or when they be come to perfect yeares, but muſt reſt in expectation of the accompliſhment of the contract when he or ſhe ſhall be out of their minoritie.

The fourth eſſentiall Signe, is a ſound and healthfull conſtitution of bodie, free from diſeaſes incurably contagious.

Whereupon it followeth, that a promiſe of marriage made between thoſe, whereof the one hath a diſeaſe ſo loathſome, as that the other upon good ground cannot poſſibly endure familiar ſocietie and company with him, though it doe not wholly hinder the uſe of the body, is utterly unlawfull.

Of this ſort is the Leproſie, the French pox, and ſuch like. For ſeeing there cannot bee any matrimoniall uſe of them that are tainted with ſuch contagious diſeaſes, without apparent danger of infecting each other, and thoſe alſo, which have ſociety with them, and others; yea and by this meanes the iſſue of their bodies, growing of a corrupted ſeed, are even borne to perpetuall miſerie, and to great hurt and hinderance of the Common-wealth; the caſe is plaine, that ſuch marriages cannot be undertaken with good conſcience.

Now if the one party have a diſeaſe, though not contagious, yet either incurable, or ſo *loathſome, as the other hath juſt cauſe to abhorre his company; for example, if he be ſicke of a Lethargie, of the falling ſickneſſe, or ſuch like diſeaſes; then, though it bee lawfull to match with him, becauſe ſuch a contract is not expreſly forbidden, neither is it apparently hurtfull to the Common-wealth, yet it is not expedient, becauſe the diſeaſe being loathſome to the ſound partie, the marriage will alſo become unprofitable, and the party in danger of breaking the commandement of the Morall law, wherein God forbiddeth to commit adulterie.

*Turpi.

The fifth eſſentiall Signe of a perſon marriageable, is freedome from marriage; whereby both the parties which enter contract, are ſo at libertie, that neither the man hath in preſent another wife, or is promiſed to another; nor the woman hath another husband, or is promiſed to another. The reaſon is, becauſe God himſelfe eſteemeth that marriage only lawfull, wherein one man is ioyned to one woman, and they both into one fleſh; and conſequently judgeth it unlawfull, as for one man to have more wives; ſo for one woman at the ſame time to have more husbands.

Hence it followeth, that it is againſt the law of God, and the firſt inſtitution of Marriage, that a contract ſhould be made betweene ſuch perſons, whereof the one is formerly betrothed to another. For ſo long as the firſt promiſe ſtands in force, the man can no more be betrothed to two women, than he may bee the husband of two wives; becauſe the ſpouſe by the bond of her promiſe to the man, becomes a wife; and the man by the bond of his promiſe to the woman, becomes an husband, Deut. 22. 23, 24.

Againe, there can bee no ſure-making, and conſequently no marriage with ſuch an one, as either hath beene divorced without a ſufficient cauſe, or hath wrongfully forſaken and rejected a lawfull mate before. To this purpoſe ſaith our Saviour Chriſt, Matth. 19. 9. I ſay unto you, that whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, except it be for whoredome, and marrieth another, committeth adultery; and whoſoever marrieth her which is divorced, committeth adultery. And S. Paul 1 Cor. 7. 11. But and if ſhe depart, let her remaine unmarried, or be reconciled unto her husband, and let not the husband put away his wife.

Hitherto I have treated of eſſentiall markes, which belong to the being of marriage. Now I come thoſe that are accidentall.

An accidentall marke of a perſon fit for mariage, is that; which belongeth not to the being, but to the well being, that is, to the holineſſe and purity of that eſtate. And of this ſort, there be three that are the principall.

The firſt is parity or equality, in regard of Chriſtian religion; For in marriage, there is a ſpeciall care to be had, that beleevers be matched with beleevers, and Chriſtians with Chriſtians; not beleevers with Infidels, or Chriſtians with Pagans. For the former ſort are onely and alwaies to be made and kept, and the latter to be avoided, yea, inhibited by poſitive lawes and conſtitutions, the breach whereof in ſuch caſes is ſeverely to bee puniſhed. The neglect of this point was one principall cauſe of the deſtruction of the old world by the flood. Gen. 6. 2. The ſonnes of God ſaw the daughters of men, that they were faire, and they tooke them wives of all that they liked. Abraham obſerved it in the marriage of Iſaac his ſonne, and for that purpoſe tooke an oath of his ſervant. Gen. 24. 3. I will make thee ſweare by the Lord God of heaven, and God of the earth, that thou ſhalt not take a wife unto my ſon of the daughters of the Cananites among whom I dwell. And in imitation of that holy example, Iſaac alſo gives a charge unto Iacob his ſon, that he ſhould not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan. Gen. 28. 1. Afterward there was an expreſſe Law of God given by Moſes, touching the Gentiles that lived in that land. Exod. 34. 15. Beware that thou make not a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, &c. verſ. 16. And take of their daughters unto thy ſonnes, and their daughters goe a whoring after their gods; and make thy ſonnes goe a whoring after their gods. And the ſame law was urged by Ezra the Prieſt in his time. Ezra. 10. 11. Separate your ſelves from the people of the land, and from the ſtrange wives. Laſtly, S. Paul exhorteth the Corinthians, 2. Cor.

Cor. 6. 14. Be not unequally yoked with the Infidels. And Titus 3. 10. Reject him that is an heretike, after once or twice admonition.

But suppose it falleth out, that the espousals be past, & that both parties at the first were beleevers, or one of them only; or that at first both were unbeleevers, and yet afterward one of them is converted to the faith, or further, admit that both were beleevers at the contract, yet within some time after, the one becomes an Infidell, that is to say, a Jew, a Turke, or an obstinate Heretike, that denies the faith, and raseth even the very foundation of Religion; in this case what is to be done? Surely even such espousals once made and ended, if there be no other impediments but these, are to stand and continue firme and unchangeable; so long as the unbeleeving party doth willingly yeeld & submit him or her selfe to the performance of mariage duties, properly belonging to man & wife. My reason is, the speech of Paul, who saith, If any brother have a wife, that beleeveth not, if shee be content to dwell with him, let him not forsake her. Againe, The woman which hath an husband that beleeve h not, if he be content to dwell with her, let her not forsake him, 1 Cor. 7. 12, 13.

If it be here alleaged, that the sinne of adulterie dissolves the bond both of contract and marriage, and therefore much more doth Idolatry or infidelity, which is a sinne farre more detestable than adultery: I answer, that the question is not, whether of these is the greater sin, or more heinous in the sight of God; for Infidelity in both respects farre exceedeth the other; but whether of them is more pregnant to the nature and condition of wedlocke. Now the sinne of adulterie is that alone, which breakes the bond, and renounceth the troth plighted in marriage, and is the proper cause of a divorce, and not Idolatrie or Infidelitie.

The second note, is parity or equalitie in regard of age and condition.

First of Age; because though the marriage of persons, whose yeares are farre unequall, is not expresly forbidden in the word; yet it is agreeable to the rules of expediencie and decencie, that the aged should match with the aged, the younger with the younger.

Reasons are these. First, because the comforts of this societie in likelihood will by this meanes alwaies be equall, and consequently bring the more contentment to either partie. Secondly, these unequall marriages are oftentimes offensive to others. Thirdly, they cannot but in some cases prove offensive even to themselves. For when a man of great yeares matcheth with a woman very young, or a young stripling marrieth an aged woman; the elder partie growing weake and impotent, may the sooner come to be unfit for marriage duties; and the younger being of greater strength and ability, the more in danger being exposed to incontinencie, and that in the highest degree, unlesse hee be restrained by Gods speciall grace.

A For this cause it was a great fault, wherewith one Apuleius was justly charged, that being but a very young man, he was married to a wife of sixtie yeares of age.

Secondly, of condition and estate. For this also is answerable unto the Apostles rule, who exhorteth men to thinke of, and to doe those things which are true, just, commendable, and of good report, Philip. 4. 8. Thus it is a seemely and commendable practice, that the Prince, the Noble man, the freeman, the gentleman, the yeoman, &c. should be joyned in societie with them, that are of the same or like condition with themselves, and not otherwise. For this cause are the ancient Romans greatly to bee commended, who (as wee read in the stories) B had such a carefull respect of their marriages in this behalfe, that they made lawes and constitutions for the restraining of inequalitie of worldly estate in such societies; by this meanes preventing much confusion and disturbance in families, and other orders of men. Whereunto agrees that of Tertullian. who saith, That if a free-woman had affianced her selfe to him that was a bond-man to another, and being thrice admonished thereof by him that had authoritie, over her, did notwithstanding persevere in her purpose, shee should according to the law, lose her freedome. Tertull. ad uxor. lib. 2.

The third note is, publike honesty and credit, whereby the contract made becomes a matter of good report, well thought and spoken of C abroad. Whatsoever things are of good report, thinke on them, Philip. 4. 8. From hence I gather,

I. That it is an unseemely thing for a man to make promise of marriage to such a woman, as hath beene formerly deflowred, or hath and is, or may be convinced of adulterie, and uncleanesse. Nay, I adde further, that a contract made with such an one, as himselfe hath before defloured, is by the Law of God unlawfull. For the adulterer and the adulteresse, by divine law should be put to death, and be cut off from humane societie, Levit. 20. 10.

II. It is altogether inexpedient that a woman should be married to such a man, as hath a concubine, unlesse he formerly renounce her, and D testifie the same by true and unfained repentance. The reason is plaine. Such a marriage cannot be undertaken in the Lord. And the partie himselfe, being before polluted with his concubine, becomes now by marriage to another, an adulterer; & she that is married unto him, by this her act yeelds consent unto his adulterie.

III. That no man professing Christian religion, much lesse a minister of the word, ought to take to himselfe in marriage an harlot, a defamed woman, or one that comes of infamous parents, though she be repentant. Levit. 21. 7. The Priest shall not take to wife one that is a whore, or prophaned; that is to say, which hath an evil name, or comes of ignominious parents. Which law, though it was in part Ceremoniall and and Leviticall, and ſo farre forth abrogate; yet having in it ſome Moralitie, in as much as the reaſon thereof (to wit, becauſe it is reproachfull to a Chriſtian, but ſpecially to a Miniſter) is ſtill in force, it is to bee holden perpetuall. For Chriſtian profeſſion, and the Eccleſiaſticall Miniſtery is principally to be reſpected, and whatſoever may prejudice the dignitie and credit thereof, to be avoided.

Object. 1. The Prophet Hoſea was commanded to take unto him a wife of fornication, that is, an harlot, Hoſea 1. 2. Anſw. Hoſea did it not indeed, but in type and reſemblance. For God commanded him in his prophecy, to take upon him (as it were) the perſon of a fornicator, that by this meanes hee might the more effectually charge and convince the Iſraelites of their uncleane and unchaſt converſation.

Object. 2. The Lord alſo forbiddeth the Prieſt to marry a widow, Levit. 21. 14. it may ſeeme therfore unexpedient for a Miniſter ſo to doe. Anſ. The law concerning the marriage of a virgin, and not a widow, was not injoyned to all Prieſts, but onely to the chiefe Prieſt, Levit. 21. 10. And hee alſo might Marrie a widow, but ſuch an one onely, as hath beene the widow of a Prieſt, and not any other, Ezech. 44. 22. Now this was commanded them upon ſpeciall conſideration. For the high Prieſt was a type of Chriſt, and Chriſt was in time to come to call his Church the elect, among the Gentiles, and to marry them as a virgin eſpouſed unto himſelfe. Yea, hee was alſo to marry his Church as a widow, but the widow of a Prieſt onely, becauſe he was to gather to himſelfe the remnants of the Church of the Jewes; Howbeit, not all of them, but ſuch onely as came of the holy Fathers, and were Iſraelites, not according to the fleſh, but according to the promiſe.

IV. That it is not meet for a man to be contracted to the ſiſter of her that is already affianced unto him.

And ſo much of the firſt point, required to the making of a contract, namely, the choice of a perſon fit for marriage.

Chap. VI.

Of Conſent in the Contract.

THe ſecond thing required to the making of a contract, is the free and full conſent of the parties, which is indeed the very ſoule and life of the contract. And this conſent ſtandeth in the approbation, or (as we commonly call it) the ſure-making of the parties contracted.

Conſent in this caſe is two-fold, either of the man and the woman, or of their parents.

Touching the firſt: That a man and the woman may yeeld free conſent each to other, it is neceſſarie that, in reſpect of underſtanding, their judgement ſhould be ſound; and in regard of will, their choice ſhould bee free. And here ſundry caſes are to be reſolved.

I. Caſe. When the contract flowes not from the will and good liking of the parties, but is forced and compelled, what is then to bee done?

Anſw. If the eſpouſals have beene made through force or feare; I meane, ſuch as may befall a conſtant, and reſolute man, and which hath beene wrought upon good knowledge, and conſideration; then are they of no moment, and in truth meere nullities; becauſe there is wanting to them the free and voluntary accord and aſſent of both parties. Nevertheleſſe if afterward they ſhall grow to a new conſent, or both yeeld to an after-acceptation of that which was formerly made, the eſpouſals ſhall then ſtand in force; without further exception, or contradiction.

II. Caſe. But how if conſent bee paſt, and in proceſſe of time it appeares to the eſpouſed perſons, that they have erred; either in choice or conſent: or both?

Anſw. There is a threefold errour in conſent; the one of the perſon, the other of the abilitie, or eſtate of the perſon, the third of the qualitie.

Errour in reſpect of the perſon is, when one perſon is taken for another; or when the contract is made betweene two, whereof the one was taken to bee ſuch a party, as afterward hee proved not to bee. Now where this errour is committed, it is a plaine caſe, there was no conſent; and therefore the contract, upon certaine knowledge thereof is quite fruſtrate. For the knowledge of the party is the ground of conſent, and belongs conſequently to the very ſubſtance of marriage.

Nevertheleſſe, if the errour being once knowne, the parties have had ſecret ſocietie one with another; and have either againe conſented, or growne to an after-acceptation of the conſent before made, the contract may and doth ſtand in full force. For example; Iacob by the deceit of Laban, had taken Leah for Rachel, to his wife: ſo ſaith the text, When the evening was come, Laban tooke Leah his daughter, and brought her to him, and he went in unto her, Gen. 29. 23. But when the morning was come, behold it was Leah, 25. Now by the judgment of the beſt Divines, Iacob might juſtly have renounced Leah, if hee would, becauſe Laban had given her unto him for Rachel, and ſo deceived him; yet hee would not uſe extremitie, but kept her as his wife.

If it bee ſaid, there was an errour in the perſon, therefore no conſent, and ſo Leah was not his lawfull wife, but Rachel: I anſwer, that Iaacob did renew his conſent afterward, and that renewed conſent following upon their knowing one of another, made her his wife though in extremitie, and rigour ſhee was not. Againe, Rachel was indeed the partie tie to whom hee was espoused, by the former contract: and therefore upon their mutuall agreement afterward, shee also became his wife. So saith the holy Ghost, verse 27. Fulfill seven yeares for her, and wee will also give thee Rachel for thy service, &c. v. 28. Then Iacob did so, and Laban gave him Rachel his daughter to bee his wife.

Errour of the ability or estate is, when one of the parties to whom consent was given by the other, being taken for rich and wealthie, in the issue proves to have beene very poore, and not sufficient to maintaine that state of life.

Touching this errour, it is to bee considered, whether the cõtract was made absolute, for the time present, and so for ever afterward, or conditionall for time to come only. If it were absolute, that is, conceived in tearmes of the present time then, though the deceit be very offensive to the party deluded, & upon his complaint ought in equity to be punished by the Magistrate; yet it is not of force to breake the contract: because the abilitie of either, or both parties, belongs not to the essence of marriage. But if it were for time to come and conditionate, then hee or shee that made promise upon this condition, is free and not bound in conscience to fulfill the promise; unlesse the condition expressed aforehand be kept and performed.

Errour of the quality of the person is, when shee which was in the espousals taken to bee a virgin, is afterward found to be with childe by another before they come together. By this errour the Covenant is made void, and becomes a meere nullity; for as the man cannot be compelled upon true and certaine knowledge thereof, to matry the woman; but may renounce her, unlesse both parties come to a new agreement, or have privately knowne each other upon mutuall consent. For first, God did in expresse tearmes command the Jewes, that such a woman should bee stoned to death: Deut. 22. 20. If the maid (that was given to wife) bee not found a virgin, vers. 21. then shall they bring the maid to the doore of her fathers house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones to death, because shee hath wrought follie in Israel, by playing the whore in her fathers house. Therefore it was not the will of God, that she should be retained as a wife, but utterly rejected and forsaken. Againe, this was so usuall a practice in Israel, upon Gods Commandement, that godly and righteous men, upon the discovery of this error, would not in conscience bee perswaded to marry them to whom they had beene betrothed, Matth. 1. 18. Ioseph her husband (having found, before Mary and hee came together, that shee was with childe) being a just man, and not willing to make her a publike example, was minded to put her away secretly.

III. Case. What shall wee thinke of the espousals of such, as are furious, and franticke?

Ans. We must distinguish of the diseases.

For madnesse is either perpetual, or by fits onely with intermission.

If it bee perpetuall, the case is cleare, that whether one of the parties onely, or both bee franticke, the contract made betweene them, is altogether unprofitable and vaine. For such know not what they doe when they make a promise, and the consent which passeth betwixt them cannot be free, full, and perfect, but must needs bee hindered and prejudiced by the heat and violence of their disease.

Now although perpetuall madnesse be a just impediment of marriage, and a sufficient cause to dissolve a contract, yet it is meet that there bee a convenient space of time agreed upon, wherein all meanes may be used for the curing of this disease, to the end that Gods will touching their amendment may bee the more evidently known; and both the parties themselves and their friends may give testimonie to the world, that they have had a carefull respect of the contract before made.

Againe, if it bee not continuall, but by * fits, so as they have some good dayes, and quiet intermission, the case is otherwise. For the contract shall be ratified, and stand in force: provided, that it was manifestly knowne, that the said parties were both in their right wits, before they plight their troth each to other; and themselves bee willing afterwards to confirme their promise formerly made, by renewing their consent.

* Dilucida intervallo.

A Consent of the Parents, is that act whereby they give their word and promise, to bestow their children in Marriage; and in regard of right, doe indeed presently bestow them.

Therefore private contracts, that are made without free and lawfull consent of parents, are not onely unprofitable and unlawfull, but even by the law of God meere nullities. Reasons. I. they are contrary to the expresse will and commandement of God: Exod. 20. Honour thy Father and thy Mother. II. They are flat repugnant to naturall equity: which teacheth, that hee who hath not power, nor right over himselfe, cannot binde himselfe by promise to another. Now children have not power over themselves, but are under the government, and at the disposition of their parents; therfore the covenants which they make, are not made and appointed of God; and those which God maketh not, are in deed and truth none at all.

Gal. 4. 1.

Chap. 7.

Of Rejection, or Refusall of the Contract.

Contrary to the compleat and lawfull contract is Rejection, whereby the Contract is dissolved, or broken off.

Repudium.

A lawfull Contract is then dissolved, when some ſome great and heinous fault followeth immediatly upon it, in either of the parties eſpouſed. And from hence ariſe divers and ſundry caſes to be ſet downe and reſolved.

The firſt is this: What is to bee done, when ſome diſeaſe befals one of the parties immediately after the contract made?

Anſ. Thoſe diſeaſes which take away the uſe of the bodie, and altogether diſable the partie from the performance of the promiſe made in reſpect of marriage duties, are very juſt impediments of marriage, and conſequently do break off the Contract. Of which ſort are incurable palſies, frigidity, and ſuch like, whereof I have ſpoken before.

Nevertheleſſe a covenant once made is not ſuddenly to be renounced for feare of breeding offence. And therefore ſome longer reſpite is to bee taken from the time of the Contract, in which they are to reſt in expectation of amendment, before the ſaid diſeaſes be publikely and ſolemnly declared to bee incurable, and conſequently that the covenant made is become void.

Now if the diſeaſe doe not for the preſent take away the uſe of the body, and yet in time proves incurably contagious, and ſo loathſome that the one may juſtly feare to keepe and converſe with the other, as it falleth out when one is tainted with leproſie; then the Contract is utterly to bee diſſolved, as if God himſelfe ſhould have commanded it, though the promiſe was formerly made, and the parties themſelves ſhould bee unwilling. God hath ordained Matrimony to helpe, not to hurt, either the perſons themſelves, or others. Where therefore theſe diſeaſes be, which may infect, hurt, or deſtroy others, there God hath, as it were, teſtified from heaven, that the act done is not pleaſing unto him, and that preſently it ought to bee fruſtrate.

The contract being thus once diſſolved, the ſounder partie ſhall bee at his or her liberty to marry againe. But the diſeaſed is by the Magiſtrates authoritie to bee forbidden ſocietie with any other in way of marriage, and commanded to leade his life, where he may conveniently from company, for feare of infection. And withall he is for his owne part, to ſue unto God by prayer in faith for the gift of continencie. For certain it is, that he to whom God hath denied the power of uſing marriage with good conſcience, is thereby even called to continencie and ſingle life.

But if the diſeaſe bee not contagious, yet either incurable, or ſo naſty, that either of the eſpouſed hath juſt cauſe to be afraid of the others company; then both are to bee adviſed, not to claime their right, but willingly to ſurrender it each to other by mutuall conſent, that they may be free againe, and not bound by any former promiſe to live together as man and wife; conſidering that they have no hope mutually to converſe together, with comfort and contentment, while they ſo remaine.

Upon this advice given by their lawfull Paſtor, or ſome in his ſtead; if they both yeeld, or one of them at the leaſt deſires to bee at his owne liberty, the eſpouſals are forth-with to be broken off. But if neither will conſent to a ſeparation, but rather proceed as they had begun, and in probabilitie the one have no juſt cauſe to hold the other in ſuſpicion, in reſpect of contagion; they are not to bee hindered from the conſummation of their marriage.

Furthermore, though one of them ſhould have a diſeaſe, which is continuall without intermiſſion, and yet curable, or any other inconvenience ſhould befall either of them, after the ſure making whereby they become lame, deafe, or dumbe, &c. yet this is not a ſufficient cauſe to move them to renounce, and diſſolve the Contract.

A ſecond Caſe. What if it falleth out that after the finiſhing of the contract, one of the eſpouſed perſons bee long abſent from the other, ſo as the abſence be prejudicial to the marriage, that ſhould enſue upon the contract.

Anſ. Inquiry muſt be made, whether this abſence bee voluntary, or againſt the will of the party.

If it bee voluntary. For example; if the man upon an honeſt and juſt cauſe, the woman alſo being privy thereunto, ſhall goe beyond ſeas, and being admoniſhed of his dutie before-hand, ſhall notwithſtanding ſtay a whole yeare or more, and will not returne, but further wilfully abſent himſelfe; then may it be lawfull to the woman, to crave of the publike Magiſtrate a diſſolution of the covenant made, and conſequently marry another man, unleſſe the former to whom ſhee was contracted, be heard of. If he be, then ſhall it be lawfull for him to plead for himſelfe, and rendering no juſt cauſe of his refuſall, hee ſhall bee forced by the Magiſtrates authority to ſtand to his promiſe, and take the woman for his wife. And the ſame order is to bee taken in the wilfull abſence of the woman, after ſhe is contracted.

If againe, the man or woman ſhall upon an evill minde, and with purpoſe to deceive each other, abſent themſelves, and depart; meanes muſt be uſed, that they may be admoniſhed of their dutie. That being done, or at leaſt undertaken, and yet the partie offending will not appeare, if the other that is preſent, upon certaine knowledge of his or her want in reſpect of continency, ſhall ſue to the Magiſtrate; after publike and ſolemne notice given, the contract may be broken.

But if on the other ſide, either of them bee abſent againſt their wil, and intendeth no fraud or deceit, but is violently detained, by captivity, impriſonment, ſickneſſe, force, baniſhment, tranſportation, and ſuch like; then the partie preſent being deſirous of the conſummation of the Marriage, ought either to make meanes unto him, and expect his returne, or have certaine taine notice of his death, before she promise, or have to doe with any other in way of marriage.

A third case. What if after the contract, one of the parties becomes furious, or mad?

Ans. If the disease be continuall, without intermission, in all equity and likelihood, the espousals are to bee dissolved, unlesse both parties after knowledge and experience of the disease, have knowne one another: yet in this, and all such like cases, it is fit that good meanes bee tried and used, and sufficient time bee given for the restoring of the diseased, to their former good estate, and for the accomplishment of the marriage lawfully begun, as before.

Chap. VIII.
Of Marriage.

MArriage is that, whereby the conjunction formerly begun in the contract, is solemnly manifested, and brought to perfection. Marriage is consummate by three sorts of actions; one of the Parents of the Bride and Bridegroom, the other of the Minister in publike, the third of the persons coupled together.

The action of the Parents is upon the Marriage-day, to bring the Bride, and deliver her to the Bridegroome, that they two may become actually man and wife, and performe each to other all matrimoniall duties.

And where the marriage is complete, in any other manner, so as the Parents upon sound judgement and deliberation, shall deny their full and free consent, either in expresse words, or by connivence and silence, and that upon just and lawfull cause; there though in the civill Courts of men, it may stand, and the children borne therein be legitimate before men, yet the truth is, before God it is of no force, but a meere nullity.

And because this doctrine, touching consent of Parents in these cases, is of great use, and availeth much to the supporting and maintaining of families; I will first open the truth thereof, and then prove it by reasons.

Under the name of Parents are comprehended; First, the Father and Mother. Secondly, all Tutors and Guardians, who have the proper and sole charge of wards, or others under years of discretion. Thirdly, all such as are kindred of bloud, who are instead of parents to children; as the uncle by the fathers side, the uncle by the mothers side, and such like.

Now touching the consent of parents, that is of father and mother, I hold it requisite of necessitie to marriage; for the authority of parents must not be resisted, or violated. As for Tutors, and such as have the place of Parents, their consent is not required of necessity, but of honesty at least, because the power and authority of the Parent, though it be not taken away, yet it is lessened, when it is either transferred to an other person, or in part resteth in the childe al-

Secondly, by parents consent, I understand that which they give, not rashly, unadvisedly, or foolishly, but out of good and wise consideration, and upon true and sound judgement of the businesse in hand: for otherwise, as much as in them lieth, they make the marriage void and of none effect. And they are then thought to carrie a right judgement of the thing, when they be able to yeeld a just cause of yeelding, or denying their consent. For example: if a father denies to bestow his daughter Iulia upon Sempronius, because hee knowes him to be an Arrian, a Pelagian, or of any other sort of Heretikes: hee with-holdeth his consent upon a good ground, and hee doth that which hee doth, of judgement.

Yet further I adde, that where the Parents doe dissent, and can yeeld no probable cause thereof; the marriage consummate without their consent, ought to be confirmed and ratified by the authoritie of the Magistrate, who is Pater Patriæ. And this seemes to bee the most equall course, both for the avoiding of greater scandals, and for the preventing of wrong, that may otherwise be done in some particular case, as to a woman that is deflowred and rejected.

Thirdly, consent of parents is either expressed, or implyed: expressed, when it is given by word: Implyed, when it is yeelded by silence. For it standeth with most equity and indifferencie, to thinke that those Parents doe give consent, who doe not by word expresly deny the same.

Fourthly, children are either subject to the authoritie of their parents in the family; or at their owne liberty, and out of their parents subjection. Those that are at liberty, are tied necessarily to subjection in respect of marriage; but the other being still of the familie, and under jurisdiction, are bound to bee ordered by their parents in the bestowing of themselves.

This is briefly the meaning of the question in hand. Now, for proofe of this point, I will propound three sorts of arguments, whereof some are drawn from the law of God, some from the light of nature, and some from the judgement of the ancient Church.

For the first sort. According to the law of God, marriage is not onely a civill and politike, but also a divine and spirituall conjunction, the author and ordainer whereof, upon speciall cause was God himselfe: this our Saviour Christ witnesseth, when he saith, those whom God hath joyned together, let no man separate, Mat. 19. 6. That therefore marriages may bee soundly ratified and confirmed; the authoritie and power of God himselfe is necessarily to be interposed.

If it bee asked, How God that is in heaven, should bring and joine together man and wife upon earth;

I answer, that he doth it not immediately by himselfe, as he brought Eve unto Adam, but in and by some solemne and lawfull meanes.

And

And this meane, is that great and ancient power and prerogative of Parents. And the law of God hath given them this power, not in civill contracts and in compoſitions alone, but even in the beginning and accompliſhing of marriages. Deut. 7.3. Thou ſhalt not give thy daughter unto his ſonne, nor take his daughter unto thy ſonne. Jerem. 29.6. Take wives for your ſonnes, and give your daughters unto huſbands, that they may beare ſonnes and daughters. 1 Cor. 7.36. But if any man thinke that it is uncomely for his virgin, if ſhe paſſe the flower of her age, and need ſo require, let him doe what he will, he ſinneth not, let them be married.

Hence it was, that Abraham by right of this authoritie, gave order what wife his ſervant ſhould provide for his ſonne: Thou ſhalt not take a wife unto my ſonne of the daughters of the Canaanites: But thou ſhalt goe unto my Countrey, and to my kinred, and take a wife unto my ſonne Iſaac, Geneſis 24.3,4. Samſon, though he was inflamed with the love of the woman in Timnath, whom he ſaw to be beautifull in his eye, yet he durſt not take her to his wife, till ſhe was given him of his parents, Judg. 14. It was an expreſſe law of God, that if a man inticed a maid that was not betrothed, and lay with her, he ſhould endow her, and take her to his wife: But how? marke in what manner the holy Ghoſt proceedeth, If her father refuſe to give her to him, he ſhall pay money according to the dowrie of virgins, Exod. 22.16,17. Deut. 22.28,29. In which Text, Moſes plainly teacheth, that the conſent of the two parties is not ſufficient, no not though they have had ſocietie together, unleſſe they have the free conſent of their Parents alſo. In like manner it was ordained by God, Numb. 2.4.5,6. That if a woman vowed a vow unto the Lord, being in her fathers houſe, and her father hearing it, holdeth his peace concerning her, that is, approveth her vow by winking at it, her vow ſhall ſtand. But if her father diſallow her, that is, give no approbation or conſent unto the vow made, it ſhall be of no value, and the Lord will forgive her, becauſe her father conſented not. Now, if the vow of children made unto God, and pertaining to his worſhip, cannot bee ratified without the Parents approbation; of how much leſſe force ſhall any private contract or marriage be, without their allowance.

The ſecond argument is taken from the light of nature, and it is gathered by proportion, on this manner. A ſonne privily alienateth and ſelleth away his fathers lands, either in whole or in part. The queſtion is, whether this alienation be good in Law, yea, or no? Anſwer is, No. And why? Becauſe the land did not belong to the ſonne, but was part of his fathers ſubſtance. In like manner, a ſonne alienates himſelfe, and is betrothed to a woman, to marrie her without his parents knowledge: Is this act of the ſonne warrantable and ſound? By no meanes: for the ſonne in reſpect of his body is part of the fathers goods, and may not be alienated from him without conſent. A notable reaſon hereof we finde in Job 1. For when God had given Satan power to deſtroy and ſpoile all Iobs goods, and whatſoever he had, the Devill doth not onely touch the wealth of Iob, but his children alſo, as a part of his ſubſtance. In this reſpect the Jewes were permitted by God to ſell their children, Exod. 21.7.

Againe, for the accompliſhment of marriage, there muſt needs be a mutuall donation, betweene the Spouſe and the eſpouſed. And what is that which is mutually given? Surely their perſons, or rather their bodies each to other: for ſo Paul ſaith, 1 Cor. 7.2. Let every man have his wife, and let every woman have her owne huſband. But by whom is this donation to be made? by ſonnes and daughters that are in the family, under the juriſdiction of their parents? It may not be: For nature her ſelfe taketh it for granted, that he which is not at his owne libertie, cannot yeeld to the giving of himſelfe. The donation therefore remaines in the gift of the Parent, in as much as the will and conſent of the childe ought to depend upon his will and conſent, to whom God hath given power and authoritie in this behalfe.

In the third place, let the judgement of the ancient Church be obſerved. Ambroſe in his firſt booke of the Patriarch Abraham, Chap. 9. requires this conſent in marriages, which he ſaith is ſo equall and agreeable to nature, that even the Poets acknowledged the ſame. For which purpoſe he reciteth two verſes out of the Grecian Poet Euripides, in his Tragedie called Andromacha, wherein when Oreſtes deſired to marry Hermion, ſhe frames him this anſwer: That the matter of her marriage wholly depended upon the pleaſure and authoritie of her father, and was not in her owne power or libertie. Innocentius, who was both a Pope and Martyr, in his decretall Epiſtles, ſo ſtrictly requireth conſent of Parents, as where it is wanting, he concludes that marriage to be void. In the Councell of Lateran it was decreed, that clandeſtine contracts and ſecret marriages, made and undertaken betweene parte and parte, ſhould be holden as unlawfull, as marriages in thoſe degrees of conſanguinitie and affinitie, which are forbidden by God. Tertullian ſaith, That in this world the ſonne cannot * rightly and lawfully marry without the allowance of his father. Baſil in an Epiſtle to Amphilochius Biſhop of Iconium affirmeth, That marriages whiles are made without them which have power over the parties, are fornications, and therefore that they which are joyned together in marriage while their parents or maſters live, are in no ſort free from imputation of ſinne, untill they have approbation from them: for then marriage is ratified and confirmed, when they have yeelded allowance thereunto.

The ſecond Action touching the conſummation of Marriage, is the action of the Miniſter. And that is the bleſſing or ſanctification thereof, which is a solemne worke, whereby the Minister pronouncing the parties contracted to be man and wife before the whole congregation, commendeth them and their estate unto God by solemne prayer.

This solemne sanctification is grounded upon the practice of God himselfe, who having given Evah to Adam, blessed them, saying, Increase and multiply, Gen. 2.22. & 1.27. For that which God then gave, the Minister standing in his roome, now prayeth it may be given to the man and wife. Yea, it is agreeable to the generall rule of the Apostle, Let all things be done decently and in order, 1 Cor. 14.40.

Now that this action is to be approved and used in the Church, appeares by these reasons. I. Marriage as it is a publike action, so it is after a sort a spirituall and divine ordinance, whereby it differeth from the contract: For the contract being meerely civill, as it standeth by the consent of men, so by the same consent, it may be broken and dissolved, but with marriage it is otherwise. II. Marriage is the seminarie of the Church and Common-wealth. III. It was the practice of the Primitive Church. Tertullian speaking of marriage of Christians with Christians, acknowledgeth himselfe not to be able sufficiently to declare the happinesse of that conjunction which is made by the Church, consecrated by prayers and solemne service, witnessed by the Angels, and ratified by God himselfe. Nicephorus reporteth of one Synesius, who avouched, That God, and the Lawes, and the holy hand of Thesphylus had given him a wife. Ambrose saith, That marriage ought to be sanctified with the vaile wherewith the Priest was wont to cover the Bride and the Bride-grome in the publike Congregation, and with his blessing.

Lib. 2. ad vxorem.

Oblationem sic exponit Beatus Rhenanus. Nicephorus l. 14. c. 55. Ambros. Epist. l. 9. Epist. 70. ad Vigil.

The third and last action belonging to the accomplishment of this estate, is that of the parties themselves, whereby the Bride is in decent and modest manner, brought unto the house and home of the Bride-grome. It is the Law of this estate published by God himselfe in Paradise, that the man, even in respect of habitation, should leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife, Gene. 2.24.

Here question is moved, whether marriage is to be solemnized with mirth and feasting. Answ. I. It is lawfull and warrantable to use feasting and mirth at marriages, because these be things indifferent, and we have examples thereof in the Scriptures: Laban made a feast at the wedding of Iacob and Rachel, and invited all the men of the place to it, Gene. 29.22. Christ himselfe did approve the resort of people to the marriage at Cana in Galilee, both by his presence, and by that honourable gift of six water pots of the best wine, John 2.2.7,8. II. It is not onely lawfull, but convenient and fit to be done, if there be abilitie; according to the commendable custome of the place and countrey wherein men doe dwell; so as in the use thereof, these cautions be observed. First, that in mirth and merrie-making, there be care had that nothing be done which is dishonest, prophane, or of ill report. Philip. 4.8. Whatsoever things are honest, pure, of good report, thinke on these things. Secondly, that joy in them be mixed and moderated with the feare of God, without which, Laughter and rejoycing is meere madnesse, Eccles. 2.2. Thirdly, that it be performed in a moderate and sober use of the creatures, without riot and excesse, Thus we reade that at the great feast of Ahashuerosh, it was appointed by the King himselfe, that they should drinke orderly, that none might compell another to drinke more than hee thought convenient, Esther 1.8. And where weddings are kept contrarie to these directions, they are not feasts celebrated unto God, but unto the Devill; which also may bee said of all other festivall meetings.

And so much touching the point of marriage, in which this is to be remembred for a conclusion, That where there is generally a nullitie in the contract, or a separation following upon it, there is also a nullitie in regard of the consummation of marriage.

CHAP. IX.

Of the duties of married persons.

THus farre have we proceeded in the doctrine of marriage; and now we come to the duties which they who be married are to performe each to other.

These are principally two: Cohabitation, and Communion.

Cohabitation is their quiet and comfortable dwelling together in one place, for the better performance of mutuall duties: 1 Cor. 7.10. And to the married command I, not I but the Lord, let not the wife separate her selfe from her husband: Verse 12. But to the remnant I say, not the Lord, If any brother have an unbeleeving wife, and she be content to dwell with him, let him not forsake her. Verse 12. And the wife which hath an unbeleeving husband, which is content to dwell with her, let her not forsake him. 1 Peter 3.7. Likewise let the men dwell together, as becommeth them that have knowledge, giving honour to the woman as to the weaker vessell, even as they which are heires together of the grace of life, that your prayers be not interrupted.

This dutie must be kept especially the first yeare of marriage: Deut. 24.5. When a man taketh a wife, he shall not goe on warfare, neither shall be charged with any businesse, but shall be free at home one yeare, and rejoyce with his wife which he hath taken. And the ground of this commandement no doubt, is, that they might learne to know one anothers conditions, and that they might worke a setled affection one towards wards another, which afterward upon no occasion might be changed.

Yet they may be absent each from other in two cases: First, upon mutuall consent for a time, for the performing of some businesse, that is requisite for the family. Proverbs 7.19. For mine husband is not at home, he is gone a farre journey: at the appointed time will he returne againe. Secondly, the like absence is allowed, when some great and weighty affaires either in the Church or Common-wealth are in hand. Samuel 11.9,10. But Vriah slept at the doore of the Kings Palace with all the servants of his Lord, and went not downe to his house. verse 11. Then Vriah answered David: The Arke, and Israel, and Iudah dwell in tents, and my Lord Ioab, and all the servants of my Lord lie in the open field, shall I then goe into my house to eat, and drinke, and lie with my wife? by thy life, and by the life of my soule, I will not do this thing.

Hence ariseth a question: What if after marriage consummate, there grow upon one of the parties a contagious disease that cannot be cured, but is so loathsome, that the other whole partie cannot endure cohabitation at all?

Answ. Both the marriage it selfe, and the dutie of dwelling together, ought to continue firme and sure notwithstanding: yet so as the partie neither may, nor ought in good conscience to desire conjunction with other, whereby he or she may bring infection upon themselves, consequently hurt their children, and indanger the Common-wealth.

But if either of the parties have not the gift of continencie, nor cannot abstaine, they must sue for it unto God in earnest prayer, who will give it unto them.

For there God hath called a man or woman to continencie, where they be necessarily hindred from the use of the ordinary and lawfull remedy of the Contract.

The contrary to Cohabitation is Desertion to Desertion is, when one of the married folkes, upon a wilfull and obstinate minde of their owne head, departeth from the other, without a just and necessary cause.

Touching this point, there be sundry cases expounded.

I. Case. Suppose that an husband which is an unbeleever, or an heretike in the foundation, of his owne accord, upon detestation of true religion, quite forsakes the beleeving wife, and denies any more to dwell with her: what is to be done?

Answ. All good meanes must first be used to bring the infected partie to repentance; and when none will succeed, but the case remaineth desperate, then marriage is dissolved on his part, and the beleeving wife is free to marry another. So saith the Apostle, 1 Corinth. 9.7.15. If the unbeleeving partie depart, let him depart: a brother or a sister is not in subjection in such things: but God hath called us unto peace.

A In which words observe a two-fold reason: 1. He that is at libertie may marry another: now the beleeving partie forsaken is at libertie, because she is not in subjection in such things: therefore hee may marry another. 11. God hath called us unto peace, saith Paul, and this peace cannot be kept, if the beleeving partie forsaken cannot containe unlesse hee marry: Ambrose upon the place saith, That marriage cannot stand firme, which is separated from the worship and service of God, and therefore it is no sinne in the partie that is forsaken for Gods cause, to be married to another: and the unbeleever departing, sinneth both against God, and against the law of wedlocke, because he desireth to remaine in that estate, in regard of religion. Therefore he breaketh the covenant of marriage, and the other is not bound in this case to keepe touch with him. Lombard, the Master of the sentences saith, That the beleeving partie in this case, is not bound to follow the unbeleever when he departeth, but rather he ought marry another. Augustine affirmeth, that even the wife which is joyned to her husband in lawfull societie, if she will not abide with her Christian husband, because he is a Christian, may be forsaken and left, without sinne. And it is farre better that the covenant should be dissolved, that man and wife have made each with other, than that the covenant which man hath made with God. The people of Israel being in affliction, were constrained to breake the former made with strange women, that they might keepe the latter, Ezra 10.11.19.

It is alleaged, that the unbeleeving partie may haply repent, and then to make a dissolution is in vaine. But I say, that it is as likely that he will never repent, and therefore there is cause that the knot should be dissolved.

Againe, it is lawfull (say some) to make a Divorce out of the case of Adulterie. Answ. The beleeving partie which is forsaken, is not the cause of the Divorce, but is a patient of the separation, wrongfully made by the unbeleever. And Christ where hee mentioneth the case of Adulterie, Matthew 19. speaketh of an equall marriage, whereas Paul speakes of an unequall.

D II. Case. What if there fall out a desertion between two married folkes, which are both beleevers.

Answ. The faultie person, who is the cause of this desertion, is to be forced by course of Civill, and Ecclesiasticall censure, to performe his, or her dutie. Upon which proceeding, if he remaine obstinate and perverse in will, the other must in patience, and earnest prayer unto God, wait the time, untill his minde may bee changed, and hee made to relent by the order of the Magistrate. But if the one of them, by just occasion of feare, be compelled to depart from the other, and cannot returne againe without apparent danger of life; in this case they are not bound to returne; but the delinquent linquent partie is to remaine solitary, till they be instructed and made willing to doe their duties: and in the meane while, the partie innocent must be resolved that God hath called him or her to single life.

Againe, be it that the one is resolutely unwilling to dwell with the other, and thereupon flies away without any fault of the other: if the thing after a long space be sufficiently knowne before-hand, and all possible meanes have beene used, to reclaime the guiltie person; yet, being called, he doth not personally appeare before the Judge, to yeeld a reason of the fact; after publike and solemne declaration made, the Minister upon such desertion, may pronounce the marriage to be dissolved. For he that upon malice flieth away from his mate, is to be holden in the same termes with an unbeleever, who departs upon detestation of religion, and the service of God, 1 Tim. 5.8.

Howbeit if the place whither he is fled, be unknowne; and upon his flight there be found some fault in the Plaintiffe, shee is not to be heard, or set at libertie by the Judge in this case, though shee pretend want of the gift of continencie.

But suppose hee that fled come againe unlooked for, and requires his Sponse: then in case the former course hath not beene taken, nor judgement given against him, they may be reconciled, and come together againe. If it hath, and matters be concluded, he is not upon his returne to bee heard, but rather severely punished.

Like unto Desertion, is malicious and spitefull dealing of married folkes one with the other. Malicious dealing is, when dwelling together, they require each of other intolerable conditions; and when the one doth not regard nor releeve the other, being in danger or extremitie, as is meet. For this is as much as to hee may one another's estate and life to their utter enemies.

Here it may be demanded, what a beleever should doe, when is in certaine and imminent danger, either of losse of life, or breach of conscience, if they both abide together.

Answ. 1. This certaine danger hath his originall, either from one that is a stranger, or from one of the parties: If from a stranger, then the husband either takes upon him the defence of his beleeving wife, or not; if he doth, then she ought to abide with him. If not, she may depart and provide for her owne safetie. II. Againe, if the husband threatneth hurt, the beleeving wife may flie in this case; and it is all one, as if the unbeleeving man should depart. For to depart from one, and drive one away by threats, are equipollent.

Neither may this seeme strange unto any, that the beleever in such case is allowed to depart. For a husband that is a Christian is married two wayes: First, with Christ; and secondly, with his wife. The former marriage is made in Baptisme, and is a more holy conjunction, than is the latter. Therefore when these two cannot stand together, but one of them must needs be dissolved; the latter must rather be left than the former. Againe, if the beleever should remaine with the unbeleever, shee should haply be urged sometimes, in case of danger upon infirmitie, to deny Christ, and make shipwracke of faith and good conscience; which may in no sort be done of either partie: and therefore separation is to be made rather in this societie, than that the conjunction with Christ should not stand firme, and continue.

It is alleaged, that if this be so, then the beleeving wife forsakes the unbeleeving husband, which she may not doe.

Answ. She forsakes him not finally, but leaves him for a time. Againe, the desertion is not made by the person, which giveth place for the time, but by him in whom is the cause of the desertion; even as he is not to be termed a schismatike, which separateth himselfe, but he in whom is the cause of the Schisme.

Againe, it is objected, that he which flieth, leaves his calling; and every man must abide in his calling, according to the rule of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 7.20.

Answ. There is a double calling: The generall, standing in the worship of God: The particular, as the calling of marriage, or of single life. When these two callings cannot stand together, the latter must give place to the former: Luke 14.26. If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his owne life also, he cannot be my Disciple.

III. Case. When the husband is perpetually absent from the wife, what is to be done?

Answ. If he be absent either because he is in captivitie, or upon malice, or feare, or any such like cause; the wife must rest in the expectation of his returne, till she hath notice of his death, either by sufficient testimonie, or by apparent likelihoods. Now in the want of testimonies, and conjectures in this behalfe, if the party forsaken cannot certainly determine, that the absence was made upon an evill minde; some have thought that it behoveth her to expect his comming againe for the space of foure yeares; others of five, some of seven, some of ten yeares; after which time, she is free, and may marry another man. And if the party doe haply returne againe after some long space of time, who was probably thought to have beene dead, the latter marriage undertaken upon necessary ignorance of such an event, may be dissolved; and it shall not be imputed to either party, considering it fell out not by their fault, but onely by accident.

Now if the question be of wilfull and affected absence, the same is to be determined concerning that, which hath beene said before touching the point of Desertion.

CHAP. X.

Of the Communion of married folkes, and of due benevolence.

THe Communion of man and wife, is that dutie, whereby they doe mutually and willingly communicate, both their perſons, and goods each to other, for their mutuall helpe, neceſſitie, and comfort: Epheſ. 5.28. So ought men to love their wives as their owne bodies: he that loveth his wife, loveth himſelfe.

This dutie conſiſteth principally in the performance of ſpeciall benevolence one to another, and that not of courteſie, but of due debt: 1 Cor. 7.3. Let the husband give unto the wife due benevolence, and likewiſe alſo the wife unto the husband.

Due benevolence muſt be ſhewed with a ſingular and entire affection one towards another; and that three wayes principally.

First, by the right and lawfull uſe of their bodies, or of the marriage bed, which is indeed an eſſentiall dutie of marriage.

The marriage bed ſignifieth that ſolitary and ſecret ſocietie which is betweene man and wife alone.

And it is a thing in it owne nature indifferent; neither good nor bad: and ſo Paul numbreth it among indifferent things, 1 Cor. 7.27. Art thou bound unto a wife? ſeeke not to be looſed: art thou looſed from a wife? ſeeke not a wife. Wherefore the Church of Rome erreth two contrary wayes. First, in that it maketh marriage to be a Sacrament, and ſo every action of it, to be of it owne nature good. Secondly, in that they prohibite marriage of certaine parties, and the reaſon of the prohibition may ſeeme to be this; that they thinke this ſecret comming together of man and wife to be filthineſſe. This was the ſentence of Syricus, that filthy Pope of Rome; who determined that marriage was the uncleanneſſe of the fleſh, and to that purpoſe abuſed the words of the Apoſtle, Rom. 8.8. affirming, that they which are in the fleſh, that is, in the ſtate of Matrimonie, cannot pleaſe God. Yea, and after that marriage was condemned by them, ſome began to deteſt and hate women, as Ephraim the Syrian, of whom Eccleſiaſticall ſtories make mention. And the Councell of Trent is of the ſame judgement. For whereas it oppoſeth marriage and chaſtitie; it plainly determineth that in marriage there is no chaſtitie.

Sozom. l. 3. c. 16. Seſſ. 8. cap. 9. 10.

This comming together of man and wife, although it be indifferent, yet by the holy uſage thereof, it is made a holy and undefiled action: Hebr. 13.4. Marriage is honourable among all, and the bed undefiled. And it is (as all other creatures and ordinances of God are) ſanctified by the word and prayer: 1 Tim. 4.3. --- Forbidding to marrie, &c. verſe 4. --- And nothing ought to be refuſed --- for it is ſanctified by the word of God and prayer. In which place is to be

A obſerved, how the Apoſtle applieth the point of ſanctification directly to marriage.

The word of God giveth direction to married folkes two wayes. First, by giving them warrant, that they may lawfully doe this action; becauſe whatſoever is not done of faith (which faith muſt be grounded on Gods word) is a ſinne: Secondly, by preſcribing the right and holy manner of doing the ſame.

The holy manner ſtands in theſe particulars.

Ambroſ. lib. de Philoſop. citat. ab Auguſt. contr. Iulian. lib. 2.

First, that it be done in moderation. For even in wedlocke exceſſe in luſts is no better than plaine adulterie before God. This is the judgement of the ancient Church, that intemperance, that is, immoderate deſire even betweene man and wife, is fornication.

B Secondly, that it be uſed in a holy abſtinence.

Abſtinence from this ſecret ſocietie, muſt be uſed in two caſes.

First, while the woman is in her flowers: Levit. 18.19. Thou ſhalt not goe to a woman to uncover her ſhame, as long as ſhe is put apart for her diſeaſe. And it is made one of the properties of a good man, not to lie with a menſtruous woman, Ezekiel 18.6.

Secondly, in the time of a ſolemne faſt, when ſome grievous calamitie is imminent. Then they are to give themſelves (by mutuall conſent) to faſting and prayer: 1 Cor. 7.5. Defraud not one another, except it be with conſent for a time, that you may give your ſelves to faſting and prayer; and againe come together, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinencie. 2 Samuel 11.11. Then C Vriah anſwered David, The Arke, and Iſrael, and Iudah, dwell in tents; and my Lord Ioab, and the ſervants of my Lord abide in the open fields; ſhall I then goe into mine houſe to eat and drinke, and lie with my wife? By thy life, and by the life of thy ſoule, I will not doe this thing. Zach. 12.12. The family of the houſe of David ſhall mourne apart, and their wives apart; the family of the houſe of Nathan apart, and their wives apart, &c.

Next unto the word, this action may be ſanctified by prayer, for a bleſſing upon it. Children are the gift of God, and therefore married folkes are not onely to uſe the meanes, but alſo to pray for the obtaining of them: Pſal. 113.9. He maketh the barren woman to dwell with a D family, and to be a joyfull mother of children. Pſal. 127.3. Behold, children are the inheritance of the Lord, and the fruit of the wombe his reward. Examples for this purpoſe are theſe, Gen. 25.21. Iſaac prayed unto the Lord for his wife; becauſe ſhe was barren, and the Lord was intreated of him, and Rebeccah his wife conceived. 1 Sam. 1.26,27. And ſhe ſaid, Oh my lord, as thy ſoule liveth, my lord, I am the woman that ſtood with thee here, praying unto the Lord. verſe 27. I prayed for this childe, and the Lord hath given me my deſire which I aſked of him.

Now the fruits which are reaped and enjoyed by this holy uſage of the marriage bed, are three. I. The having of a bleſſed ſeed. Deut. 28.1. If thou ſhalt obey diligently the voyce of the Lord thy God, &c. blessed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground. Which also is called the seed of God, being begotten in an holy manner, Malac. 2.15. And did not he make one? yet had he abundance of spirit: And wherefore one? because he sought a seed of God; therefore keepe your selves in your spirit, and let none trespasse against the wife of his youth. II. The preservation of the body in cleanneſſe, that it may be a fit Temple for the holy Ghost to dwell in: 1 Thes. 4.3.4. This is the will of God, even your sanctification, that every one of you should know how to possesse his vessell in holinesse and honour, and not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles that know not God. III. The holy estate of marriage is a lively type of Christ and his Church; and this communion of married persons, is also a figure of the conjunction that is betweene him and the faithfull: Hos. 2.19. I will marry thee unto me, for ever; yea, I will marry thee unto me in righteousnesse, in judgement, in mercy, and in compassions: I will even marry thee unto mee in faithfulnesse, and thou shalt know the Lord. Eph. 5.23. For the husband is the wives head; even as Christ is the head of the Church, and the same is the Saviour of his body.

Here some questions are to be resolved.

I. Case. Whether may marriage be dissolved in the case of barrennesse?

Answ. No: For barrennesse is an hidden infirmitie for the most part, and which God hath many times cured, even when it seemed to be desperate, as in Sarah. Againe, the fruit of the wombe is Gods blessing, and wholly dependeth upon him. He therefore that in want of children, rejecteth his wife, whom he hath received at the hands of God, offereth wrong even to God himselfe.

II. Case. What if either of the married folkes commit fornication, or any sinne of the same kinde greater than fornication, as Incest, Sodomie, lying with beasts, or such like?

Answ. Adultery and fornication are most grievous and open crimes, which doe breake the very bond and covenant of marriage. Prov. 2.17. and therefore when they are certainly knowne by such persons, they are at no hand to be winked at, but the Magistrate is presently to be informed of them. Howbeit, if the innocent partie be willing to receive the adulterer againe, in regard of his repentance, lest hee should seeme to favour and maintaine sinne, and to be himselfe a practicer of uncleanneſſe, hee is to repaire to the Congregation, and declare the whole matter to the Minister, that he may understand the parties repentance, and desire of forgiveneſſe.

And if the adulteresse hath conceived and is in travell, the husband to avoid the imputation of having an heire in bastardy, is to make relation to the Church of the repentance of the adulteresse; or to acquaint some certaine persons therewith, not to the end that she should be punished for the fact, but that they may take notice of a childe conceived in adultery, whom afterward he may lawfully put off, as none of his.

The matter being knowne, the innocent partie may require a divorcement. For adultery is such a sinne as doth quite breake off, not onely the use, but the bond and covenant of marriage. Matth. 19.9. I say therefore unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for whoredome, and marry another, committeth adultery, &c. And yet the same bond may be continued and grow up againe by the good will and consent of the party innocent, and consequently they may be reconciled, and dwell together still. 1 Sam. 25.14. Now Saul had given Michal his daughter Davids wife to Phalti the sonne of Laish, which was of Gallim. 2 Sam. 3.14. Then David sent messengers to Ishbosheth Sauls sonne, saying, Deliver me my wife Michal, which I married for an hundred fore-skins of the Philistims. The same course may be taken in like cases by the innocent, specially upon the repentance of the guiltie person. But yet every man must be left to his owne conscience, and none is compelled to take another, from whom he may justly be separated, against his will.

Now in requiring of a divorce, there is an equall right and power in both parties, so as the woman may require it as well as the man, and he as well as she. The reason is, because they are equally bound each to other, and have also the same interest in one anothers body; provided alwayes, that the man is to maintaine his superioritie, and the woman to observe that modestie which beseemeth her towards the man.

After the divorcement made, it shall be lawfull for the harmelesse partie, not having the gift of continencie, upon leave obtained of the Church, and the Christian Magistrate, to marry againe.

But what then shall become of the partie offending?

Answ. If upon the hazard of his conscience, any libertie of second marriage be to be granted to the partie offending, by the Church, or civill Magistrate, (as indeed here in England there is not) divers restraints must bee observed. First, no libertie is to be granted him for marriage so long as the matter remaines uncertaine, whether they may be reconciled: specially while the partie innocent liveth in single life. Secondly, it must evidently appeare, that he hath earnestly repented him of his sinne, before he can either be received into the Church, or admitted to a second marriage. Thirdly, this libertie is not to be granted him either presently or unadvisedly; but upon frequent and serious admonition, rather to give himselfe to mourning and lamentation, and still to remaine alone, than to desire againe to enjoy the benefit of that estate, which he hath already so shamefully abused.

So much of the first way of performance of due benevolence.

The second way is, by cherishing one another:

other: Epheſ. 5.29. No man ever hated his owne fleſh, but nouriſheth and cheriſheth it, as Chriſt alſo doth the Church. This cheriſhing is the performing of any duties, that tend to the preſerving of the lives one of another. Wherefore they are freely to communicate their goods, their counſell, their labours each to other, for the good of themſelves and theirs.

The third way is, by an holy kinde of rejoycing and ſolacing themſelves each with other, in a mutuall declaration of the ſignes and tokens of love and kindneſſe: Prov. 5.18. Rejoyce with the wife of thy youth: verſe 19. Let her be as the loving Hind, and pleaſant wild-goat: let her breſts ſatisfie thee at all times, and delight in her love continually. Can. 1.1. Let him kiſſe me with the kiſſes of his mouth, for thy love is better then wine. Gene. 26.8. So after he had beene there a long time, Abimelech King of the Philiſtims looked out at a window, and loe, he ſaw Iſaac ſporting with Rebeccah his wife: Then Abimelech called Iſaac, and ſaid; Loe, ſhe is of a ſurety thy wife. Eſay 62.5. As a young man marrieth a virgin, ſo ſhall thy ſonnes marry thee: and as a Bride-groome is glad of the Bride, ſo ſhall thy God rejoyce over thee.

This rejoycing and delight is more permitted to the man, than to the woman; and to them both, more in their young yeares, than in their old age.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Husband.

MArried folkes are either husband or wife. The husband is he which hath authoritie over the wife; hereupon in Scripture he is called the guide of her youth, Prov. 2.17. and they twaine being but one fleſh, hee is alſo the head over his wife.

The duties of the husband towards the wife, are theſe:

I. To love her as himſelfe: Epheſ. 5.33. Let every one love his wife even as himſelfe. Geneſis 24.67. Afterward Iſaac brought her unto the tent of Sarah his mother; and he tooke Rebeccah, and ſhe was his wife, and he loved her: ſo Iſaac left mourning for his mother. Note how the love of the husband to the wife mitigates ſorrow for the death of the mother.

He is to ſhew this love in two things; Firſt, in protecting her from danger, Gen. 20.16. And unto Sarah he ſaid, behold I have given 1000. ſhekels of ſilver unto thy brother: behold he is the covering of thine eyes amongſt all that are with thee. Let it be knowne amongſt all, and be thou inſtructed. 1 Sam. 30.5. Davids two wives were taken priſoners alſo, Ahinoam the Iſraelite, and Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite: verſ. 8. Then David asked counſell of the Lord, ſaying; Shall I follow after this company? ſhall I overtake them? And he anſwered him, Follow, for thou ſhalt ſurely overtake them, and recover all. Secondly, in regarding her eſtate as his owne, and providing maintenance for her, both for his life time, and as much as he may, for time to come after his death. Epheſ. 5.28. So ought men to love their wives as their owne bodies: he that loveth his wife loveth himſelfe: verſ. 29. For no man ever yet hated his owne fleſh, but nouriſheth it, &c. Exod. 21.10. If hee take him another wife, he ſhall not diminiſh her food, her raiment, and recompence of her virginitie. Ruth 3.9. Unto whom he ſaid, Who art thou? which ſaid, I am Ruth thine hand-maid, ſpread therefore the wing of thy garment over thine hand-maid: for thou art the kinſman.

II. To honour his wife: 1 Peter 3.7. Giving honour to the woman.

This honour ſtands in three things; Firſt, in making account of her as his companion, or yoke-fellow. For this cauſe, the woman when ſhe was created, was not taken out of the mans head, becauſe ſhe was not made to rule over him; nor out of his feet, becauſe God did not make her ſubject to him as a ſervant; but out of his ſide, to the end that man ſhould take her as his mate. Secondly, in a wiſe and patient bearing or covering of her infirmities, as anger, waywardneſſe, and ſuch like, in reſpect of the weakneſſe of her ſex: 1 Pet. 3.7. Giving honour to the woman as unto the weaker veſſell, ſeeing ye are heires together of the grace of life, that your prayers be not hindred. Thirdly, by ſuffering himſelfe ſometimes to be admoniſhed or adviſed by her. It was Gods commandement to Abraham concerning Sarah his wife; Let it not be grievous in thy ſight, for the childe, and for thy bond-woman: in all that Sarah ſhall ſay unto thee, heare her voice: For in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called. Gen. 21.12. Thus Elkanah was willing to ſubſcribe unto his wife Anna's advice for her tarrying at home till the childe was weaned: 1 Sam. 1.22. And Elkanah her husband ſaid unto her, doe what ſeemeth thee beſt: tarry untill thou haſt weaned him: onely the Lord accompliſh his word. Hereupon the Heathen Philoſopher ſaid, That the Maſter of the family exerciſeth (after a ſort) a power tyrannicall over his ſervants, a power Regall over his children, becauſe Kings are fathers of their Common-weales: but in reſpect of his wife, he exerciſeth a power Ariſtocraticall, not after his owne will, but agreeable to the honour & dignitie of the married eſtate: and conſequently, that he ought not in modeſtie to challenge the privilege of preſcribing and advertiſing his wife in all matters domeſticall, but in ſome to leave her to her owne will and judgement. Ariſt. Ethic. lib. 8.

Here queſtion is moved, whether the husband may correct the wife?

Anſw. Though the husband be the wives head, yet it ſeemes he hath no power nor libertie granted him in this regard. For we reade not in the Scriptures, any precept or example to warrant ſuch practice of his authoritie. He may reprove and admoniſh her in word onely, if he hee seeth her in fault. For thus we reade, that Iacob censured his wife, being impatient, even in anger, Gen.30.2. Am I in Gods stead, which hath with-holden from thee, the fruit of the wombe? And Iob reproved his wife, Job 2.10. Thou speakest like a foolish woman. What? Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and not receive evill? But he may not chastise her either with stripes or stroakes. The reason is plaine: Wives are their husbands mates, and they two be one flesh. And no man will hate, much lesse beat his owne flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, Ephes.5.29. Againe, it is the commandement of God, that man should not trespasse against the wife of his youth, Malach.2.15. Chrysostome saith, It is the greatest reproach for any man that can be, to beat his wife. Plutarch in the life of Cato the Censor, affirmeth, That he which smiteth his wife, doth all one, as if he should lay violent hands upon the sacred images of the gods, which was counted an high degree of offence among the Heathen.

In 1. Cor. 11. Hom. 26.

It is alleaged, husbands are commanded so to love their wives, as Christ doth his Church; now Christ chastiseth his Church with strokes; and therefore so may the husband his wife. Ans. As Christ doth entirely love his Church, so he may also chastise the same, because he is not onely the husband, but absolute Lord and King of his Church; so is not the husband absolute over the wife.

But his authoritie over his wife, is after a sort civill, as is the authoritie of the Magistrate over his people. Ans. It is not so. For the Magistrate hath in his hand the power of the sword, by which power hee inflicteth punishment in case of offence. But the husband can challenge to himselfe no such power: yea, it is flatly forbidden in the civill law, that he should scourge or strike his wife.

L. Consensu. C. de divortiis.

Nevertheless, if she grow to extremities, and be desperately perverse, so as there be no hope of amendment, then the Magistrate may be informed; who to prevent scandalls, and to provide for publike peace, both ought and may assigne unto her necessary correction, and punishment according to her desert. Now the husband that hath a wife so stubborne and peevish, must beare it, if it may be borne, as the portion of his crosse laid upon him by God. And in this case if he be impatient, he may in some sort be pardoned and pitied, but he is not wholly to be excused.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Wife.

THe wife is the other married person, who being subject to her husband, yeeldeth obedience unto him.

Touching the subjection of the Wife, the word of God mentioneth it in sundrie places. Rom.7.2. The woman which is in subjection to the man, is bound by the Law to the man while he liveth. Ephes.4.24. As the Church is in subjection to Christ, even so let the wives be to their husbands in every thing. Colossians 3.18. Wives submit your selves unto your husbands, as it is comely in the Lord. 1 Tim. 2.12. I permit not a woman ---- to usurpe authoritie over the man. And it was a law established by God immediately after the fall, Gen. 3.16. Vnto the woman he said, I will greatly increase, &c. and thy desire shall be subject to thine husband, and he shall rule over thee. Indeed the daughter according to the Civill law, even when she is married, is * in the power of her father, and not of her husband. But this is directly against the Law of Moses, and crosseth the law of nature, Levit. 22.12,13. Numb.30.13.

* In potestate patris.

Now the duties of the wife are principally two.

The first, is to submit her selfe to her husband, and to acknowledge and reverence him as her head in all things. Gen. 20.16. Likewise Abimelech said unto Sarah, Behold thy brother, that is, thy husband whom thou callest thy brother, is the vaile of thine eyes to all that are with thee. As if he should say, Thy husband is thy head, and hath power over thee, and thou oughtest to reverence him. For of ancient times, the wife was covered with a vaile in the presence of her husband, in token of subjection unto him. Thus Rebeccah at the sight of Isaac tooke a vaile, and covered her head therewith, Gen.24.65. 1 Cor. 11.3. The man is the womans head. Ephes.5.22. Wives submit your selves unto your husbands, as unto the Lord: for the husband is the wives head, even as Christ is the head of the Church. The reason hereof is good. For the wife enjoyeth the privileges of her husband, and is graced by his honour and estimation amongst men. His Nobilitie maketh her noble, though otherwise she is base and meane; as contrariwise, his baseneese and low degree causeth her, though she be by birth noble and honourable, to be by estate base and meane.

The second dutie is, to be obedient unto her husband in all things; that is, wholly to depend upon him, both in judgement and will. For looke as the Church yeelds obedience to Christ her head, and yeelds her selfe to be commanded, governed, and directed by him, so ought the woman to the man. So Sarah is said, to obey Abraham, and to give him the termes of obedience, She called him Lord, or Sir, 2 Peter 3.6. Hence it followeth, that the woman is not to take libertie of wandring, and straying abroad from her owne house, without the mans knowledge and consent. 2 King.4.22. Then she called to her husband and said, Send with me, I pray thee, one of the young men, and one of the Asses for I will haste to the man of God, and come againe. Againe, that she is to follow her husband when hee flitteth or departeth from place to place, unlesse he forsake either her or Christ. To this purpose Paul saith, he had power to leade about bout a wife, being a ſiſter, as well as thereſt of the Apoſtles, 1 Cor. 9.5. Thus Sarah went with Abraham into Ægypt, Gen. 12.11. and out of Ægypt, Gen. 13.1. and to Gerar to ſojourne there, Gen. 20.1,2,3. Thus the wives of Iacob departed with him from their father Laban, Gen. 31.17.

Contrary to theſe duties, are the ſinnes of wives: To be proud, to be unwilling to beare the authoritie of their husbands; to chide and braule with bitterneſſe; to forſake their houſes, &c. Pro. 27.15. A continuall dropping in the day of raine, and a contentious woman are alike. ver. 16 He that hideth her, hideth the wind; and ſhe is as the oyle in his right hand, that uttereth it ſelfe. Exod. 4.26. Then Zipporah ſaid, O bloody husband; becauſe of the circumciſion. It was the fault of the Levits Concubine, Judg. 19.2. Who played the whore, and went away from him unto her fathers houſe to Bethlem Iudah, and there continued the ſpace of foure moneths. It was the ſinne of Queene Vaſhti, who refuſed to come at the Kings word, which he had given in charge to the Eunuches: therefore the King was very angry, and his wrath kindled in him, Esther 1.12. Lastly, to be a cauſe of griefe to their kinred. Thus the proud wives of Eſau, the daughters of the Hittites, were a griefe of minde to Iſaac and Rebeccah, Gen. 26.35. & 27.46.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Parent.

HItherto hath beene treated of the firſt couple, whereof the family conſiſteth, namely of married folkes. Now follow the other; and they are of two ſorts; either ſuch as whereby the family is increaſed, and multiplied; or ſuch as are helps thereunto.

Thoſe whereby the family is inlarged, are alſo of two ſorts; Parents and Children.

Parents are they which have power and authoritie over children.

The duties of Parents are eſpecially two; One to bring up their children: The other to beſtow them when they have brought them up.

Touching Education or bringing up of children, the Parents care muſt be, both that they may live, & alſo that they may live wel, Eph. 6.4.

Touching the preſervation of the life of the childe, there are many duties required of the Parents, ſpecially foure. Firſt, the Mother is her ſelfe to give the infant ſucke, and to wrap it up in ſwadling cloaths. Paul commends it for the note of a good wife, to nurſe her owne children, 1 Tim. 5.10. Thus Sarah gave ſucke to Iſaac, Gene. 21.7. Anna nurſed Samuel, 1 Sam. 1.22. David in likelihood was nurſed by his mother, Pſal. 22.9. Thou gaveſt me hope even at my mothers breſts. And our Saviour Chriſt was alſo nurſed by Mary his mother, Luke 11.27. and ſwadled, Luke 2.7. Now the reaſon hereof is plaine. God hath given milke to women that beare children, and hath ſo appointed, that no meat is more naturall to the childe, than the mothers milke. And nature it ſelfe teacheth this in the courſe of other creatures. The earth nouriſheth that which it bringeth forth. The fruit which the tree beareth is fed by the ſap that comes from the root thereof. Yea, amongſt the braut beaſts, even thoſe that be moſt ſavage, as the Tigres, doe give ſucke unto the yong ones which they bring forth.

Yet in caſe of want of health, or abilitie, or any other juſt impediment, the mother may in equitie be forborne, and the childe committed unto a Nurſe. And ſo we reade that Rebeccah the daughter of Bethuel, and afterward the wife of Iſaac, had a Nurſe, Gen. 24.59. whoſe name was Deborah, Gen. 35.8. And Pharaohs daughter in a caſe of neceſſitie, committed Moſes to be nurſed of an Hebrew woman, whom ſhe tooke not to be his mother, but a ſtranger: and her fact was allowed by God, Exod. 2.7,9.

The ſecond dutie of the Parent is, to provide for his childe meat, drinke, and cloathing. Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, that Parents even by the light of Nature, though they be evill, will not denie or with-hold neceſſary foode from their children: Matth. 7.9,10. What man is there among you, that if his ſonne aske him bread, will give him a ſtone, or if he aske a fiſh, will give him a ſcorpion? And Paul ſaith, If there be any that provideth not for his owne, and namely for them of his houſhold; he denieth the faith, and is worſe than an infidell, 1 Tim. 5.8.

The third dutie is, when God giveth abilitie and meanes, to lay up ſomething for the future maintenance of the childe. 2 Cor. 12.14. — for the children ought not to lay up for the Fathers, but the Fathers for the children. Prov. 19.14. Houſe & riches are the inheritance of the fathers.

The fourth is, to obſerve both the inclination, and the naturall gifts of body and minde that are in the childe, and accordingly to beſtow it in ſome honeſt calling and courſe of life: Prov. 20.11. A childe is knowne by his actions, whether his worke be pure and right. In the Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtorie, written by Ruffinus, it is recorded, that Alexander Biſhop of Alexandria, ſaw a farre off, in a place neare to the ſea, a company of children playing together, and in their play imitating himſelfe in ſundry miniſteriall actions. And when he had a while viewed them, he perceived that they examined and baptiſed one another, according to the ſolemne order uſed in the Congregation: which thing, when hee had made ſome of his Clergie acquainted withall, and taken order that the children ſhould be ſent for, and brought before him, he demanded of them, what ſport they uſed, and in what manner they played one with another. The children at firſt for feare, denied what they had done, yet upon further examination they confeſſed, that they had made Athanaſius (who afterward became Biſhop of the place) their Biſhop, and that he inſtructed and baptized ſundry of their company.

Ruffin. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 14.

company. He further asked both Athanasius himselfe, and those which were said to have beene baptised, what questions he asked them, and what answers they gave; and perceiving by their speeches, that they had framed themselves, though in sporting manner, to the Church-proceedings in those actions; upon conference had with his Clergie, hee determined, that those which had first beene asked, and had given answer fully, according to the forme used in that Church, and thereupon baptised, should not be rebaptised; And for Athanasius and the other children, which had done the part of Ministers in their kinde, he sent for their parents, and gave them great charge that they should be brought up in learning and religion, that so they might in time be fit for the publike Ministerie. The like course we reade to have beene taken by the Heathen, for judgement of the inclination and towardnesse of their children. The Athenians made a law, that before children were bestowed in any calling, they should be first brought into a publike place, where instruments belonging to all sorts of trades were laid; and looke in what kinde of Instrument any of them tooke most delight, the childe was thought to be most fit for the trade, whereunto that Instrument belonged, and afterward applied to the same with good successe.

Nazian. Epist. ad Eudox.

Now the parents first and principall care must bee for the Church; that those of their children which have the most pregnant wit, and be indued with the best gifts, be consecrated unto God, and brought up in the studie of the Scriptures, to serve afterward in the Ministery of the Church. Thus Anna dedicated Samuel her sonne unto God by vow, 1 Sam. 1.11. And she vowed a vow, and said, O Lord of Hosts, if thou wilt give unto thine handmaid a manchild, then I will give him unto the Lord all the dayes of his life. And she did according to her vow, and the Lord blessed Samuel her sonne, who in processe of time became a great Prophet.

The next point of education of children, is to provide that they may live well and lead a godly life. To this purpose Parents must doe three things.

First, they are to be carefull that the childe so soone as may be, after it is borne, be admitted into the true Church of God by Baptisme, and have a fit name given unto it.

Secondly, they are to endevour to sow the seeds of godlinesse and Religion in the heart of the childe, so soone as it comes to the use of reason and understanding; and as it growes in yeares, so care must bee had that it grow in knowledge and grace. To this purpose is the vow and promise made in Baptisme, which parents are bound to call upon the childe to remember, when it comes to yeares. It was the godly care of Timothies parents, 2 Tim. 3.14. But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned, knowing of whom thou hast learned them, verse 15. And that thou hast knowne the A holy Scriptures of a child, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through the faith which is in Christ Iesus. This was the commandement of God to the Parents of his people, Deut. 6.7. Thou shalt rehearse these words which I command thee continually to thy children, and shalt talke of them when thou sittest in the house. And ver. 20. When thy sonne shall aske thee in time to come, saying, What meanes these testimonies, and ordinances, and lawes, which the Lord our God hath commanded you? Then thou shalt say unto thy sonnes: We were Pharaohs bondmen in Egypt, &c. This was observed by the Israelites in the ages succeeding: Ps. 44.1. We have heard with our eares, O God, our fathers have told us the workes that thou hast done in their dayes, in old time.

B Thirdly, the first instruction of children in learning and religion, must be so ordered, that they may take it with delight. For which purpose, they may be sometimes allowed in moderate manner to play and solace themselves in recreations fitting for their yeares. And if they doe amisse in either, they are to be restrained by the bridle of discipline. First, by reproofe in word; and when that will not helpe, by the rod of correction. Zach. 8.5. The streets of the citie shall be full of boyes and girles, playing in the streets thereof. Prov. 29.15. The rod and correction give wisdome, but a child set at libertie makes his mother ashamed. verse 17. Correct thy sonne and he will give thee rest, and give pleasures to thy soule. Heb. 12.9. We have had the fathers of our bodies which corrected us, and we gave them reverence.

C Yet in this point two extremes are carefully to be avoided; That the Parent be not either too severe, or too indulgent to the childe. For severitie Paul gives this rule, Ephes. 6.4. Parents provoke not your children to anger, that is, by too much austeritie in government. For lenitie, we have old Eli his example: 1 Sam. 2.23. And he said unto them, Why doe ye such things: for of all this people, I heare evill reports of you. Doe no more my sonnes, &c. So much for Education.

The second generall dutie of Parents, is the bestowing of their children. This bestowing is, when they knowing their children fit for marriage, not to have gift of continencie, doe use their best indevour to provide matches for them D in time, or at least, doe advise them thereunto by themselves, or by their friends: 1 Cor. 7.36. If any man thinke it uncomely for his virgin to passe the flower of her age, and need so require --- let them be married. verse 38. he that giveth her to marriage, doth well. Jere. 26.6. Take ye wives --- and take wives for your sonnes, and give your daughters to husbands, &c. Gen. 28.1. Isaac called Iacob and blessed him, and charged him, and said unto him, Take not a wife of the daughters of Canaan; Arise, get thee to Padan Aram --- and thence take thee a wife of the daughters of Laban thy mothers brother. Judges 14.1. Samson came and told his father and his mother, and said, I have seene a woman of the daughters of the Philistims; now therefore give me her to wife.

This

This dutie is now adayes carelesly neglected of Parents; and the fruit thereof is dangerous. For hence it comes to paſſe, that their children oftentimes doe either commit whoredome, or undertake wicked and ungodly marriages.

In the choice of a husband or wife, the Parents ought to have a greater reſpect unto pietie and wisdome, than unto beautie and riches, or any other outward bleſſings. Yet where they all concurre, the partie ſo qualified is the more thankefully to be entertained. Upon theſe grounds the Prieſt or Prince of Midian, gave his daughter Zipporah to Moſes, and Moſes agreed to take her: Exod. 2.19. A man of Ægypt delivered us from the Philiſtims, and alſo drew us water enough, and watered the ſheepe. — And Moſes agreed to dwell with the man, who gave unto Moſes Zipporah his daughter. Joſhuah 15.16. Then Caleb ſaid, Hee that ſmiteth Kiriath-ſepher, and taketh it, even to him will I give Achſah my daughter to wife. Yea, it is a ſinne to marry onely for beautie, without conſideration of the better things. Thus the old world ſinned, when the ſonnes of God ſaw the daughters of men that they were faire, and tooke them wives of all that they liked, Gen. 6. 2. and Samſon, who onely upon the ſight of the woman in Timnah, of the daughters of the Philiſtims, without further inquirie, deſired that ſhe might be given him for his wife, Judges 14.2.

Againe, it is meet that Parents ſhould deale moderately with their children in this caſe, and not undertake at any hand to force and compell them to marry this or that partie. This was the juſt commendation of Rebeccahs parents, who though they were Idolaters, yet had that regard of equitie, that they firſt called her and asked her conſent, before they ſent her away with Abrahams ſervant, to be married to Iſaac, Geneſis 24.58. Now in caſe the Parents faile in their duty in this regard, the ſonne or daughter may lawfully declare the matter firſt to their kinsfolke, and afterward (if need be) to the Miniſter or Magiſtrate, and ſue for redreſſe by their meanes and direction.

CHAP. XIIII.

Of the Sonne.

THe Sonne is he who is in ſubjection to his Parents.

The duties of a Sonne to be performed to his Parents, are principally two.

Firſt, to yeeld them obedience, whether they be his naturall Parents or otherwiſe, as his ſtepfather and ſtepmother, and that while he liveth. Eph. 6.1. Children obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right. Luke 2.51. Then he went downe with them, and came to Nazareth, and was ſubject to them. Exod. 18.19. Moſes father in law ſaid unto him, Heare now my voyce, I will give thee counſell, and God ſhall be with thee. Ruth 3.5 And Ruth ſaid unto Naomi her mother in law, All that thou biddeſt me, I will doe. Job 1.5. And when the dayes of their banquetting were gone about, Job ſent and ſanctified them.

This obedience muſt ſhew it ſelfe in two things.

Firſt, in the choice of a lawfull calling, wherein the childe is to be ordered and appointed at the diſcretion of the Parent.

Secondly, in marriage. For in that, the parent is the principall agent and diſpoſer of the childe. Now although his authoritie be not ſo great as that the childe is to be forced and compelled by him; yet the reverent and dutifull reſpect which the childe ought to beare towards him, ought to be a ſtrong inducement, not to diſſent, or renounce his advice, without great and weightie cauſe. Yea, the child muſt indevour by all manner of dutifull carriage to overcome, or at leaſt to mittigate his parents ſeveritie in that behalfe.

Now for the daughters: They muſt yeeld obedience to their Parents in all Domeſticall labours, that they may be skilfull in houſhold affaires. Thus did the ſeven daughters of the Prieſt of Midian, accuſtome themſelves to draw water, and fill the troughes to water their fathers ſheepe, Exod. 2.16. Thus Rebeccah was ſeene to come out of her fathers houſe, with her pitcher upon her ſhoulder, and ſo goe downe with it to the well to fill it, and give drinke to her fathers Camels, Gen. 24.16, 17.

The ſecond dutie of the ſonne, is to recompence his fathers love, and care over him, by relieving him in caſe of want, if God give ability, with food and raiment, and other neceſſaries. Herein children muſt deale with their parents, as the brood of the Storke is reported to doe with her, by feeding her when ſhe is old; wherein they do no more but what ſhe before hath done unto them. It is Pauls counſell, that children and nephewes ſhould recompence the kindneſſe of their kinred in the firſt place, 1 Tim. 5.4. and therefore to their parents, the head and foundation of their kinred. When Joſeph was in proſperity, and his father Iacob in want, he firſt gave him comfortably, and afterwards ſent for him to Ægypt, and there provided for him; in ſo much as the Text ſaith of him, that he nouriſhed his father and his brethren, and all his father's houſhold with bread, Even as the mother puts meat into the childes mouth, Gen. 47. 12. When Naomi the ſtepmother of Ruth was of great yeares, and her ſtrength ſpent, Ruth gathered corne in the harveſt for releefe of them both. Yea, when Boaz gave her to eat and to drinke, ſhe reſerved part of her victualls, and brought it home with her gleanes, to refreſh her mother, Ruth 2.14, 18.

The neceſſitie of the performance of theſe duties is ſo great, that if the ſonne neglecteth them, and doth the contrarie, by ill uſage of his Parent, either in word or deed, he is worthy of death, even by Moſes law: Exod. 21.15. He that ſmiteth his father or his mother, ſhall die the death.

The

The law of the first borne of a mans children, that he should have a greater portion of his fathers goods, than any of the rest of his brethren, is perpetuall, and admits no exception, but onely in the case of notorious wickednesse. Deut. 21.17. Hee shall acknowledge the sonne of the hated for the first borne, and give him a double portion of all that he hath: for he is the first of his strength, and to him belongeth the right of the first borne. This was the law; yet we reade that Reuben lost this prerogative, by reason of his incest, and Iudah the fourth sonne of Iacob, had the dignitie of the first borne: Genesis 49.8. Thou Iudah, thy brethren shall praise thee — thy Fathers sonnes shall bow downe unto thee. In the Church of the old Testament, the privilege of the first borne was threefold; the first of government and royaltie, the second of Priesthood, the third of the double portion. And it is probable that this was for the most part Ceremoniall, and was accomplished and determined in Christ, who was the Image of the invisible God, and the first borne of every creature, Colossi. 1.15.

Here two questions are propounded.

Quest. I. Whether is it lawfull for the sonne to make a vow belonging either to religion, or to civill conversation, without the consent of the Parent?

Ans. A vow so made is of no force to binde the childe, but by the law of nature and common equitie, is to be made void. For it is a ruled case, that he which is not his owne man, that is to say, at his owne libertie, but under the power of another, cannot bind himselfe. Againe, the authoritie of the Parent by the Law of God is great: For it allowes the Father to make void the vow of the childe pertaining to Gods worship, Numb. 30.6.

Quest. II. Whether is the consent of the parents to be required in the second marriages of their children?

Ans. I. Of ancient times, both by [a] Civill Lawes, and also by Imperiall constitutions, it was provided that no widowes, though made free by their former marriages, should make any contract againe, without the good will of their Parents. II. Consent in this case, though it be not absolutely necessarie, yet it is to bee thought fit and convenient, because children in some regards exempted from Parents authority, doe owe notwithstanding the dutie of honour unto them, by Gods expresse commandement, Exod. 20.12. and consequently ought to testifie the same by being ordered and advised by them in some sort, even at the after-bestowing of themselves. Hence it is, that [b] later Divines have holden upon good ground; That the espousalls of widowes, who have some more libertie, than the childe first married, being made without their Parents knowledge, cannot but incurre just reprehension, howsoever they may stand in force without it.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Master.

NExt unto Parents and children, whereby the family is increased, is a second sort of couples, which are helps thereunto. And they are masters and servants.

The Master is a member in the family, which hath power, and beareth rule over the servant. And his dutie stands principally in three things.

First, to make a good choice of his servants; which is then done, when he inquireth first after such as feare God, and be willing to serve him. Paul makes the service and feare of God the maine ground of true obedience in servants, Ephes. 6.5,6,7. Colos. 3.22. It was the rule of Davids choice, Psal. 101.6. He that walketh in the perfect way, he shall serve me. Abrahams chiefe servant of his house, was a man that feared God, as appeareth in that he made conscience of his oath, Gene. 24.2,3. and prayed also for successe in the businesse whereabout he was sent, Gen. 24.12. O Lord God of my Master Abraham, I beseech thee send me good speed this day, and shew mercie to my Master Abraham. Cornelius of Cæsarea, the Captaine of the Italian band, had a Souldier that daily attended on him, who feared God; and servants also beside him, to whom he made knowne the heavenly vision which he saw, Acts 10.7.

Secondly, to enjoyne them labour, and not to require more of them than their strength will beare. The Master is to rule over the servant in justice. And then is his commandement unjust, when it will not stand with the course of nature, with the abilitie of his servant, or with the word of God. Therefore hee is to require labour at their hands proportionable to their strength, and yeeld them sometimes intermission and rest. Levit. 25.46. Over your brethren the children of Israel, ye shall not rule over one another with cruelties. 1 Peter 3.8. Be pittifull, be courteous, one beare with another. And for the furtherance of businesse, it is convenient that the Master bee oftentimes present with the servants in their workes. Prov. 27.23. Bee diligent to know the state of thy flocke, and take heed to thy herds. The good Matron overseeth the wayes of her household, Prov. 31.27. A man of Libya being asked, what it was that might make a horse fat, he answered, The masters eye. Arist. Oeco. 7.

Thirdly, to recompence the diligence and paines of his servant, and that three wayes.

First, by giving him his due of meat and drinke for the present. The good Matron giveth the portion to her household, and the ordinary to her maids, Prov. 31.15.

Secondly, by paying him his hire in the end of his service. The labourer is worthy of his wages, Luke 10.7. Well done good servant and faithfull; thou hast beene faithfull in little, I will make make thee ruler over much, enter into thy Maſters joy, Mat.25.21.

Here three caveats are to bee obſerved. I. that the wages be proportionable to the worke. II. That it be paid in due time, without deferring. So the Maſter of the vine-yard, when even was come, called his ſervants together to give them their hire, Mat.20.8. III. That the ſervant be not defrauded of any part of his due. For this is a crying ſin: Deut.24.15. Thou ſhalt give him his hire for his day, neither ſhall the Sunne goe downe upon it——leſt he cry againſt thee unto the Lord, and it be ſin unto thee. Jam. 5.4. Behold, the hire of the laborers which have reaped your fields, which is kept backe by fraud, crieth, and the cries of them which have reaped, are entred into the ears of the Lord of hoſts.

Thirdly, if the ſervant in time of his ſervice be ſicke, the maſters care muſt be by all meanes poſſible to procure his recovery. Equity muſt be the rule in theſe caſes; and maſters are to doe to their ſervants that which is juſt and equall, Col.4.1. Now the ſervant haply fals ſicke, by and in his ſervice, and his health yeelds not only profit to his maſter, but incouragement alſo to himſelfe. The good Centurion in caſe of his ſervants ſickneſſe, tooke the beſt courſe to have him reſtored, Mat.8.6.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Servant.

THe Servant is a perſon in the family ſubject unto his Maſter.

The duty of a ſervant is, faithfully and diligently to demeane himſelfe in the affaires of his maſter, and to doe ſervice unto him, as unto Chriſt, though he be froward and hardhearted. Tit.2.9. Let ſervants be ſubject to their Maſters, and pleaſe them in al things, not anſwering againe, Eph.6.5. Servants, be obedient to them that are your maſters according to the fleſh, with feare and trembling, in ſinglenſſe of your hearts, as unto Chriſt, Col.3.22. Thus Iacob ſerved Laban, Gen.31.38. This twenty yeares have I beene with thee; thine ewes and thy goats have not caſt their young, and the rams of the flocks have I not eaten, &c.

Contrariwiſe, the ſervant muſt take heed that he doe not his maſters buſineſſe negligently or for faſhion ſake, or with eye-ſervice as a man pleaſer; that in caſe of rebuke or controlement, he anſwer not againe: laſtly, that he be truſty, and with-hold his hands from picking, and his heart from deceiving his maſter.

Servants are of two ſorts; either free, or bond-ſervants.

A free-ſervant is he, whom his maſter hireth for wages to doe him ſervice. To him belongs the juſt paiment of his hire; and in caſe of offence the maſter hath authority to cenſure and correct him, provided that in the execution thereof reſpect be had unto his age, and the correction be uſed with moderation, as if hee were his ſonne.

A bond-ſervant, is a ſervant bought for money, and is commonly called a ſlave. Touching this ſort, a queſtion is moved, whether a Chriſtian may with ſafe conſcience, have and uſe a man as his ſlave.

Anſ. The power and right of having bond-men, in thoſe countries where it is eſtabliſhed by poſitive lawes, may ſtand with good conſcience, if it be uſed with moderation, wherein theſe ſeven caveats be obſerved.

I. That the maſter have not over his ſervant the power of life and death; for this takes away the lawfull power of the Magiſtrate, to whom onely the Lord hath committed the ſword of juſtice.

II. That there be not liberty granted him, to uſe his ſervant at his owne will and pleaſure in al things; for this was not granted by the law of God to his owne people: Exod.21.26. If a man ſmite his ſervant or his maid in the eie, and hath periſhed it, he ſhall let him goe free for his eie: Alſo if he ſmite out his ſervants or his maids tooth, he ſhall let him go forth free for his tooth.

III. That the power be not enlarged to the commanding of things againſt piety or juſtice: for in theſe caſes a man muſt rather obey God than man, Act.4.19.

IV. That maſters doe not take liberty to make ſeparation of thoſe their ſervants that be married, the one from the other, or of thoſe that be parents from their children: conſidering that God himſelfe hath made theſe ſocieties, and joyned ſuch perſons together, and therefore man may not ſeparate them.

V. That the maſters doe not take liberty to put over their ſervants to ungodly and unbeleeving maſters: for that is an unkind and cruell liberty, and may bee an apparent occaſion to make the ſervant fall away from religion, and renounce the true God.

VI. That they doe not bind them to perpetuall ſlavery, and never make them free. Exo.21.5. But if the ſervant ſay thus, I love my Maſter, my wife and my children, I will not goe out free.

VII. That the ſervitude bee not procured and retained by force; for it is a more grievous crime to ſpoyle a man of his liberty, than of his riches.

Now that the ſame power limited with theſe cautions, is lawfull and warrantable in conſcience, it appeares by theſe reaſons:

I. God hath ordained and allowed it, even by warrant of his owne law: The poſterity of Cham was curſed by Noah, and condemned to ſlavery, Gen.9.25. And hee ſaid, Curſed bee Cham, a ſervant of ſervants ſhall hee be to his brethren. So were the Gibeonites by Ioſhua, Joſ.9.22. Now therefore ye are curſed, and there ſhall none of you be free from being bond-men, and hewers of wood, and drawers of water, for the house of my God. So was the theefe, Exo. 22. 3. If he had not wherewith to make restitution, then he shall be sold for his theft. Againe, those that are overcome in warre may bee held captive, and it is lawfull for the conqueror to kill them, and therefore to make them slaves; and if being taken, they bee saved from death, they owe all that they have to them by whom they are saved.

II. The law of God gave liberty to any man that would, to make sale of himselfe to another. Levit. 25. 45. Of the children of the strangers that are sojourners among you, of them shall yee buy, & of their families that are with you, which they begat in your land, these shall be your possession, Deut. 15. 12. If thy brother an Hebrew sell himselfe to thee, or an Hebrewesse, and serve thee six yeares, even in the seventh yeare thou shalt let him goe free from thee: and v. 17. Thou shalt take an awle, and pierce his eare thorow against the doore, and he shall be thy servant for ever.

III. The man that is ransomed from his enemy, is bound to serve as a slave in liew of thankfulnesse.

IV. The examples of the godly in the Scriptures. Abraham had servants whom he bought for silver, Gen. 17. 12. Every manchild of eight daies old among you shall be circumcised in your generations, as well hee that is borne in thine house, as hee that is bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed. Gen. 34. 35. The Lord hath blessed my Master Abraham wonderfully--for he hath given him sheepe, and beeves, and silver, and gold, and men-servants, and maid-servants, and camels, and asses.

V. The Apostles doe not disallow of such servants, but command them being servants, and called to the profession of Christianity in that state, not to change, but to abide in their calling. 1 Cor. 7. 21. Art thou called being a servant? care not for it.

It is alleaged, that such servitude is against the law of nature. Answ. It is indeed against the law of entire nature, as it was before the fall, but against the law of corrupted nature since the fall it is not.

But Christ hath purchased liberty to beleevers, Col. 3. 11. Ans. Onely a spirituall liberty in this life, and a corporall onely in the life to come. For though the servant in regard of faith and the inner man be equall to his master, because in Christ Jesus there is neither master nor servant, bond nor free, yet in regard of the outward man, and civill order amongst men, the master is above the servant, and the servant is and must be subject to the master. Nevertheless where this kinde of servitude is aboliſhed, it is not to be againe received or entertained among Christians, specially considering it is a far more mild & moderate course to have hired servants.

Theodor. Orat. 8.

If it be said againe, that the heathen Philosopher holdeth servitude to be naturall, whereby some are by birth bond, and others free; I answer, That servitude proceedeth not of nature, but hath his originall from the lawes of Nations, and is a consequent of the fall. For all men by nature are equally and indifferently free, none more or lesse than others.

CHAP. XVII.

Of the Master of the Family, or Good-man of the house.

THus much touching the divers and severall combinations or couples belonging to the state Oeconomicall. From which doe arise two persons of a mixt or compounded nature and condition, commonly called the Goodman and the Goodwife of the house.

The Goodman or Master of the Family, is a person, in whom resteth the private and proper government of the whole household, and he comes not unto it by election, as it falleth out in other states, but by the ordinance of God, setled even in the order of nature. The husband indeed naturally beares rule over the wife, parents over their children, masters over their servants: but that person, who by the providence of God, hath the place of an husband, a father, a master in his house, the same also by the light of nature, hath the principality and soveraignty therein, and he is Pater familias, the father and chiefe head of the Family: to him therefore the true right and power over all matters domesticall, of right appertaineth. The duties of the master of the Family are specially five:

I. To beare the chiefe stroke, and to be the principall agent, directer, and furtherer of the worship of God within his family. Jos. 24. 15. I and my household wil serve the Lord. And this he doth, partly by praying for and with his household, and partly by instructing them in the holy Scriptures, and in the grounds of religion, that they may grow in knowledge, and reape benefit by the publike ministery. Thus God commanded the men of Israel to walke in their families. Deut. 6. 7. Thou shalt rehearse them continually unto thy children, and shalt talke of them when thou tarriest in thine house, ---and when thou liest downe, and when thou risest up. Againe, vers. 20. When thy sonne shall aske thee, --What mean these testimonies, and ordinances, and lawes, which the Lord our God commanded you? Then shalt thou say unto thy son, We were Pharaohs bond-men in Ægypt, but the Lord brought us out of Ægypt with a mighty hand. This testimony God gave of Abraham before the Law was given. Gen. 18. 19. For I know Abraham that he will command his sons, and his household after him, that they keep the way of the Lord. And this household of Abraham was very large, for the holy Ghost sayes long before, that he had three hundred and eighteene, that were born and brought up in his house*, Gen. 14. 14. It was in likelihood the course of Salomon, which which he had learned of his father David, and given for a rule to all maſters of families, Prov. 4. 1. Heare, O children, the inſtruction of a father, and give eare to learne underſtanding. —For I was my Fathers ſon, deare and tender in the ſight of my mother, when he taught me, and ſaid unto me, Let thine heart hold faſt my words. The company of the Diſciples were the houſhold of Chriſt, and he himſelfe did adminiſter all parts of the ſervice of God with them, and among them, Luk. 22. 15. To this purpoſe Auguſtine ſaith, That the Maſter of the family doth after a ſort, and in his meaſure, performe the duty of a Church-man or Biſhop within his houſe.

In Ioan. tract. 51. in fine.

II. To bring his family to the Church or Congregation on the Sabbath day, to looke that they doe religiouſly there behave themſelves, and after the publike exerciſes ended, and the Congregation is diſmiſſed, to take account of that which they have heard, that they may profit in knowledge and obedience, Act. 10. 24. The day after they entred into Cæſarea: Now Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinſmen and ſpeciall friends. V. 33. Now therefore (ſaith Cornelius to Peter) are we all here preſent before God, to heare all things that are commanded thee of God. Job 1. 5. And when the daies of their banqueting were gone about, Iob ſent and ſanctified them, and roſe up early in the morning, and offered burnt offerings, &c. 2 King. 4. 23. And hee ſaid, Wherefore wilt thou goe to him to day? It is neither new Moone nor Sabbath. For this very cauſe the fourth Commandement is given firſt of all and principally to the maſter of the family, that he might ſee the Sabbath kept, and be a principall doer in all parts of Gods worſhip therein, Exod. 20. 10. In it thou ſhalt not doe any worke, thou, nor thy ſonne, nor thy daughter, thy man-ſervant, nor thy maid, nor thy cattell, nor thy ſtranger that is within thy gates.

Neither is this his care tied only to the Sabbath, but upon other daies beſides it, he ought to cauſe them of the houſhold, as much as in him lyeth, to repaire to places where the Word of God is preached. Commendable was the practice of Mary the ſiſter of Martha, in this caſe, who when Chriſt came to her houſe, is ſaid to ſit at his feet and to attend unto his preaching, Luk. 10. 39.

III. To provide for his family meat, drinke, and cloathing, and that they may live a quiet and peaceable life, 1 Tim. 5. 8. Prov. 27. 26. The lambs are for thy clothing, and the goats for the price of the field. V. 27. And let the milke of thy goats be ſufficient for thy food, for the food of thy family, and for the ſuſtenance of thy maids. 1 Cor. 9. 9. Thou ſhalt not muzzle the mouth of the Oxe that treadeth out the Corne: doth God care for Oxen? either ſaith hee it not altogether for our ſakes? Matth. 13. 52. Every Scribe which is taught unto the Kingdome of Heaven, is like unto an houſholder, that brings forth out of his treaſury things both new & old.

IV. To keepe order, and to exerciſe diſcipline in his houſe, and that in this manner:

In caſe of offence, when a capitall crime is committed, which incurreth publike cenſure, he is not to puniſh it himſelfe, but to bring the offender to the civill Magiſtrate, to informe of his fault, that he may have his deſert: It was a courſe eſtabliſhed by the Judiciall Law, which God gave unto Moſes for his direction in cauſes criminall among the Iſraelites, Deut. 21. 18, 19, 20. If any man hath a ſonne that is ſtubborne and diſobedient, which will not hearken unto the voice of his father, nor the voice of his mother, and they have chaſtened him: then ſhall his father and his mother take him, and bring him out unto the Elders of the City, and unto the gates of the place where hee dwelleth, and ſhall ſay to the Elders of his City: This our ſon is ſtubborne and diſobedient, and he will not obey our admonition: he is a rioter, and a drunkard. Againe, Deut. 13. 6. If thy brother the ſonne of thy mother, or thine owne ſon, or thy daughter, or thy wife that lieth in thy boſome, or thy friend which is as thine owne ſoule, entice thee ſecretly, ſaying, Let us goe and ſerve other gods, (which thou haſt not knowne, thou, I ſay, nor thy fathers) thou ſhalt not conſent unto him, nor heare him, neither ſhall thine eye pity him, nor ſhew mercy, nor keepe him ſecret. Zach. 13. 3. And when any ſhall yet propheſie, his father and mother that begat him ſhall ſay unto him, Thou ſhalt not live; for thou ſpeakeſt lies in the name of the Lord: and his father and his mother that begat him, ſhall thruſt him thorow when hee propheſieth.

If the fault be of an inferior nature, and leſſer in compariſon; the maſter of the Family ought to proceed by private cenſure upon the delinquent party, ſometimes by admonition, otherwhiles by correction and chaſtiſement, according to the quality of the offence, and the condition and ſtate of the perſon: Levit. 19. 17. Thou ſhalt plainly rebuke thy neighbour, and not ſuffer him to ſinne. Matth. 18. 15. If thy brother ſinne againſt thee, goe and tell him his fault betweene him and thee alone: If he heare thee not, take yet with thee one or two. Prov. 29. 17. Correct thy ſonne, and he will give thee reſt, and will give pleaſures unto thy ſoule.

When admonitions and corrections will not prevaile, the party muſt be brought before the Miniſters and Governours of the Church, that they may cenſure him. Matth. 18. 17. If he will not heare them, tell it unto the Church. And the Apoſtle Iames giveth order that the Miniſters of the Church ſhould come to thoſe that are ſicke, and pray for them, James 5. 14. which if they doe in caſe of infirmity, then they are alſo to be ſought unto, in caſe of error and offence committed, for redreſſe.

But when none of all theſe meanes will doe good, if the party be a ſervant, his maſter may and ought to remove him: Pſal. 101. 7. There shall no deceitfull person dwell within mine house; he that telleth lies shall not remaine in my sight. Joh. 8.35. The servant abideth not in the house for ever.

V. To give entertainment to those that are strangers, and not of the family, if they be Christians and Beleevers: but specially to the Ministers of the Word. Rom. 12. 13. Giving your selves to hospitality. Heb. 13. 2. Be not forgetfull to lodge strangers: for hereby some have received Angels into their houses unawares. This duty the woman of Shunem and her husband performed unto the Prophet Elisha, 2 King. 4. 10. Let us make him a little chamber, I pray thee, with walls, and let us set him a bed there, and a table, and a stoole, and a candlesticke, that he may turne in hither, when he commeth to us. These are the duties.

Here if it be demanded, whether the Master of a family is alway, and necessarily bound in his owne person to doe all these things;

I answer, that if there be just and necessarie cause, either in respect of his owne inability, or in regard of publike imployment, upon a lawfull calling, whereby he is hindred, so as he cannot doe any of them himselfe at some times; it is lawfull for him to have and use a deputy. This our Saviour Christ teacheth in effect, when hee saith, Who then is a faithfull servant, and wise, whom his master hath made ruler over his houshold, to give them meat in season? Matth. 24. 25. Thus Abraham had a steward of his house, Eliezer of Damascus, Gen. 15. 2. and he performed the weightiest matters that concerned the establishment and continuance of a Family, not by himselfe, but by his Steward, as namely, the choise of a wife for his sonne Isaac, Gen. 24. 2. Therefore Abraham said unto his eldest servant of his house, which had the rule over all that he had: Put now thine hand under my thigh, &c. Thus Pharaoh King of Ægypt had Ioseph, Gen. 39. 5. So Ioseph found favour in his sight, & served him, and he made him ruler of his house, and put all that he had in his hands.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the Mistresse of the Family, or Good-wife of the house.

THe Good-wife or Mistresse of the house, is a person which yeeldeth helpe and assistance in government to the Master of the family. For he is, as it were, the Prince and chiefe Ruler; shee is the associate, not only in office and authority, but also in advice and counsell unto him. 1 King. 17. 17. *And after these things, the sonne of the woman, which was wife or * mistresse of the house, was sicke.*

* Bagnaath babbajith ) Domina domus.

Her duty is two-fold:

First, to governe the house, as much as concerneth her, in her place. 1 Tim. 5. 14. I will therefore that the younger women marry and governe the house. And that shee doth three waies. I. By exercising her selfe in some profitable imployments, for the good of her charge: Prov. 31. 13. Shee seeketh wooll and flax, and laboureth cheerefully with her hands. II. By appointing her maids their worke, and overseeing them therein. Ver. 15. She riseth whiles it is yet night, and giveth the portion to her houshold, and the ordinary to her maids. III. By ordering her children and servants in wisdome; partly by instruction, partly by admonition, when there is need. Vers. 26. She openeth her mouth with wisdome, and the law of grace is in her tongue. ver. 28. Her children rise up and call her blessed, &c. Tit. 2. 5. That they bee discreet, chaste, keeping at home, &c. Act. 18. 26. Priscilla in her house, with Aquila, instructed Apollos, in that wherein hee was wanting, expounding unto him the way of God more perfectly. Gregory Nazianzen in an Oration made for his father, saith, That his mother was not only an helper, but also a teacher or instructer, and guide unto his father in matters of religion and godlinesse.

The second duty is, to give the portion of food unto her family, or cause it to be given in due season. Prov. 31. 15. She riseth whiles it is yet night, and giveth the portion, or meat to her houshold. Thus did Rebecca in her house, Gen. 27. 6. Get thee now to the flocke, and bring me thence two good kids of the goats, that I may make pleasant meat of them for thy father, such as he loveth.

Quest. Whether may the good-wife, without the consent of the good-man, give and bestow the goods belonging to the family?

Ans. I. There are some things which are proper to her selfe, and not part of her dowry which shee brought unto her husband. And these shee may claime as her owne, because either they were reserved upon the match made betweene them, or else are peculiar unto her by their mutuall consent; and of them she may lawfully give, without her husbands knowledge. II. The goods which are common to them both, are of another nature; and these shee may not bestow, without his allowance, either expresse or at least generall and implicite, specially when the giving of them doth or may grow in likelihood, to the hinderance and prejudice of the state of the Family.
